It's been no secret that big things are happening at Warner Bros. But not 'til now has it been so increasingly apparent how big the things are and how much is happening. Yes, MUNI'S 'ZOLA', ERROL FLYNN'S 'PERFECT SPECIMEN', AND BRIAN AHERNE AND OLIVIA DE HAVILLAND IN 'THE GREAT GARRICK' mean a lot more than the delivery of three sensational attractions in October. Actually they stand for the sweeping new production policy that commits Warner Bros.' studio and personnel to a steadfast schedule of continuous big-show shipments absolutely without precedent in this company or any other! And again and again and again to the end of the new year, more exhibitors than ever before will know that the one film studio ready with the stories and the casts and the producing power to completely satisfy their 1937-38 needs for consistently successful programs is the studio of Warner Bros.!

Great because every man and woman who sees "Lancer Spy" will shout its praises to every one with ears to hear! No picture ever deserved a more enthusiastic, big-production campaign. ON THE BIG SCREEN

WILLYNILLY, the motion picture industry of America is ever concerned with and often involved in affairs of empire and the politics of a troubled world. Army-bossed Japan, engaged in war of aggression to relieve economic and population pressures, being much concerned about both cash and propaganda, has forbidden importation of all films except newsreels, under special permits. Red propaganda for the red leftist government of Spain appears on the fringes of the American screen, along with the kindred offerings of Moscow. Meanwhile England, the most genuinely socialistic nation in the world, and all the world's history, is sending us a most ambitious entertainment feature which is also a message of empire, a reiteration of conservative British tradition, with an included Abraham Lincoln role and reminder of hands across the sea in the days of the War between the States.

And the while, this last week-end, out of two roads from ancient Rome the Mussolinis emerged, Benito, father and dictator of Italy bound for Germany and rendezvous with Herr Hitler, Vittorio, son, understudy, flying into Hollywood to observe the making of motion pictures. There was a touch of cinema for father, too, when the Führer gave him a party at Munich with a command attendance of four hundred stars and beauties of the German screen, all Aryan, one would assume. The party, according to press cables, was a great success but marred slightly by reason of the preference of the beauties for Herr Max Schmeling as the lion of the occasion.

The Munich party, just incidentally, might also irrelevantly remind one of an episode of some years past in Rome that could with rare accuracy be described as a Hollywood titbit.

HOLLYWOOD has had Italy on its mind for a long time. The government there has been playing fast and loose with changing import regulations and changing restrictions on the export of earnings, with many, many dickerings and promisings. Also there has been much official and unofficial American going back and forth. A few years ago Mr. Charles C. Pettijohn was over and was given audience by Mussolini. Audience is about all he has really given so far. Then more recently Mr. Will Hays went over and had a meeting of minds at a dramatic conference in Mussolini's office—"big as a football field"—returning with an arrangement for American pictures, regarding which rather presently Italy had a change of notion. Meanwhile several American producers visited Italy, among them Mr. Walter Wanger, who, so the cables said, had a grand production project that was to make a Hollywood in Italy. Not so much has been heard of that lately. Now comes young Mr. Mussolini, twenty-one, tight lipped, with eyes and ears open. He was accompanied on the voyage over by a Mr. Charles C. Pettijohn who was identified by a New York newspaper's shipnews reporter as "a British journalist," and Mr. Hal Roach. It seems now that there is to be a Roach-Mussolini production project in Italy after the young man has completed his observations in Hollywood. He is scheduled for a two-week stay, indicating he is a "quick study."

Italy is the only one of the dictator states with which the American motion picture industry has been able to maintain even the semblance of relations. It is plain enough that Mussolini wants for Italy a motion picture machine such as that employed and enjoyed by Berlin and Moscow. What the American motion picture industry can make out of that is yet to be discovered.

UNLIKE Moscow and Berlin, there is a shade of admission in Italy that if the people are to be kept attending the cinema there is a requirement of entertainment film of a quality that so far is obtainable only in the Hollywood output. Russia has seen some part of the necessity for diluting its propaganda-educational screen with sheer amusement, and so we have had Comrade Boris Shumiatsky and his commission of observers over to look at Hollywood and buy equipment.

Meanwhile the motion picture industry of America has been perhaps even more internationally minded than even munitions. Ever since the World War, which gave the American picture world dominance of the screen, our studios have drawn upon the stellar talent of all the world, taking stars conspicuously from Scandinavia, Britain, Germany, France and Austria. The American public has been more than abundantly supplied with imported personalities in behalf of Hollywood's world trade. France just the other day decided that had been going on long enough and took up plans to prohibit the escape of talent.

The American industry, long keyed to a program of operation that requires the profits of foreign markets, is much concerned with overseas conditions and prospects. Mr. Roach, who has been to Mussoliniland to bring one of them back alive, is rather in a sense an outrider for the Schenck-Mayer institution, which just now is represented in Europe by Mr. Louis B. Mayer, who possibly is over there for something besides his health. In this instance Mr. Roach says M-G-M is not participating. Meanwhile we have with us yet the British-Gaumont, Ostrer-Schenck—not to say Blumenthal—situation in a state of status quo, or status quo ante, maybe. And we have a pending internationalization deal in the Korda-Goldwyn United Artist option. Also Paramount, long powerful in the international field, has been sending over a remarkable succession of high executives, including Mr. Barney Balaban, Mr. Stanton Griffis, Mr. Adolph Zukor and several others who seem by extraordinary coincidence to have required a British vacation.

The motion picture map is as full of "ifs" as the night before election.

DETROIT DEMONSTRATES

THE elaboration of hoop-la in all American industry grows apace, or maybe by bounds and leaps. Anyway it will be accurate to say that it shows acceleration in the motor trade. So those of us who have a smile at the motion picture's trans-continental convention excursions, its banal whimsies of Joe Blutz sales drives, its positively stupendous blowing on the embers of lukewarm product at previews more marvelous than the wares proclaimed, can have at least a dry little chuckle at what goes on with the opening of the new season in the Detroit zone.

Hudson Motor Car Company assembled more than two thousand dealers and salesmen to hear about the power and

Official Attention

The fall season's promise of optimism and industry prosperity brought also a return of wide agitation over and discussion of trade practices on which the attention of the United States Department of Justice, several federal courts, distributors and exhibitor organizations was focussed for various reasons. Developments of the week were led by a federal court decision in Dallas which held that distributors and two Texas circuits violated the law by conspiring to fix admissions in subsequent run theatres.

Various and nationwide news of the subject is consolidated in the story starting on page 13.

Cameramen Bombed

Eric Mayell of Fox Movietone; Arthur Menken, Paramount News, and H. S. Wong, News of the Day, escaped unhurt from an attack by two Japanese airplanes which bombed and machine-gunned them while they were accompanying Chinese officers to the front, said a United Press cable from Shanghai on Wednesday.

Sex and Censorship

Four films distributed by independent companies, including a short starring the wife of John Barrymore, called "How to Undress in Front of Your Husband," attracted news treatment because of court arguments or clashes with censorship bodies.

Action, taken and intended, is recorded on page 55.

German Cocoon

Completing its transition, the German film industry plans to offer 195 films during the new season, continuing its curtailed film policy adopted in 1933 with the rise of sound and the advent of the Nazis. In that time production and distribution have been changed drastically with exhibition aspects left relatively unaffected. The 195 films planned for exhibition in German houses during 1937-38 compares with 560 in 1928.

A review of recent German film history together with current significances, is found on page 48.

Paul Rotha, English writer and director of documentary films, arrived in New York this week to spend five months as special assistant to John E. Abbott, director of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library. During his stay, Mr. Rotha will cooperate in the production of a film on the technique of motion pictures.

Mr. Rotha's plans are disclosed on page 20.

Projector Change

The Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has recommended a change in the projector aperture, extending it to dimensions more closely approximating those of the camera aperture as a means of preventing elimination of significant pictorial and dramatic material from the projected picture.

A description of the proposed change, with illustration, appears on page 33.

Settled

Labor troubles, which threatened to result in a strike, have been settled by major American producers doing business in Mexico as a result of their signing agreements with organized employees. The exact amount of wage increases granted was not revealed but they are understood to be substantial. Gabriel Soria, head of a new Mexican producing company, is planning to expend 1,000,000 pesos (about $280,000) on a picture. It will be the largest amount spent for a Mexican made picture.

James Lockhart, writing in Mexico City, tells of the developments on page 28.

Shanghai Newsreels

Something of a controversy has arisen within and outside of the ranks of the newsreels in London with the showing of the newsreel shots of the air raids on Shanghai and of the streets littered with mangled bodies. Proponents of the public exhibition of the newsreels point to a duty to give the news and to the lesson in the horrors of war. Opponents say the function of the theatre is to entertain and that the reels should instead be shown privately to government officials.

This and other developments of the week on the British scene are recorded on page 61.

the glory. Studebaker had a rally of dealers for another two thousands at South Bend. Buick decided to be regional, with meetings for a total of twenty-eight hundred salesmen in twenty key cities. Chevrolet called in fourteen hundred. This week the Cadillac Motor Division of General Motors will be having fourteen hundred in for the unveiling of the LaSalle. And the most super colossal of all motor conventions, in serial fashion covering the last two weeks of September, is in progress with Oldsmobile at Lansing. Forty-three special trains, with 584 air conditioned sleeping cars, are being used to gather in the employed guests of the company.

Every industry seems to contain its own brand and quota of Hollywood commercial persiflage. And every product appears to require a spray of balloon juice just as it steps out. They are all in the show business, because the customers go for it.

Detroit and Hollywood might be expected to have a certain sympathy of technique, being in a way in the same business. The motor car is a device for taking the customer past the scenery and the movie is a method of taking the scenery past the customer.

Air Shows

The relationship between Hollywood and radio, strengthened last week by MGM's arrangement for placing its stars on General Foods broadcasts, stands to be extended even further, through new radio activities said to be planned by RKO, Paramount and Warners.

Exhibitors, however, apparently do not propose to allow the arrangement between studios and air advertisers to proceed without attacks, the Ohio Independent Theatre Owners already publicly going on record against MGM's new tieup, as explained on page 13.

Anti Double Bills

While polls are being conducted at various points throughout the country to determine the public's sentiment toward double feature programs, two Nutley, New Jersey, men have decided to take the matter into their own hands. They have organized the Anti Double Feature League of America and plan to promote boycotts and picketing of theatres that do not meet the organization's demand for single feature bills. The organizers, William R. Clay and George H. Siegel, decided upon the movement after visiting a theatre where "the seats were particularly hard."

The story of the league's birth, its aims and purposes is told on page 25.

Dignity

From a source outside of the motion picture industry, came a recommendation this week that film executives adopt a more dignified air. The proposal was contained in a report submitted to the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut by Bernard A. Grossman, New York City attorney. Dignity in the motion picture industry, Mr. Grossman contends, would aid attorneys when they appeared before legislative, administrative and banking bodies in behalf of picture interests. At present, the report states, the industry is looked upon with an attitude of scorn.

An article on the report is on page 58.

Columbia on Stage

Columbia Pictures will enter the legitimate stage producing field on Broadway, the company announced Wednesday, adding that it had set aside a "substantial" budget to cover a number of productions and was seeking vehicles for early presentation.

Officers of the company reelected by the board of directors last Friday were: Harry Cohn, president; Jack Cohn, vice-president; A. Schneider, treasurer; Charles Schwartz, secretary; L. J. Barbano, assistant treasurer, and T. J. Elias, assistant secretary.

Universal Changes

In sequel to executive meetings and conferences on plans and policies, Universal Pictures Corporation this week set about revisions of the home office staff affecting some 20 persons, some departmental heads. J. Albert Hirsch, advertising manager, resigned, is to be succeeded by Lew Pollack, former assistant in the department. Changes extended into various departments, including publicity and distribution. From Hollywood came reports of extensive studio changes.

In Conference

Union forces making their bid for control of all film production and the creative talent groups which oppose them retired into conference to consider the clearly defined issue and means, on the one hand, to accomplish an announced purpose and on the other to prevent it. From the star chamber discussions emerged only one statement, an open letter from the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees in which it was declared the union was not interested in the high salaried workers but was seeking to protect the interests of employees in the lower brackets.

Developments are reported on page 28.

Italian Ram

Vittorio Mussolini, 21-year-old son of the premier of Italy, began his motion picture career by writing a film column in his father's newspaper, Il Popolo d'Italia. In partnership with Hal Roach he now heads RAM Pictures, the initials of which signify Roach and Mussolini and the announced purpose of which is to produce films in Italy for the Italian market only, at least until one is made of sufficient quality to make it acceptable for American exhibition. Mr. Roach explained preliminary details of the project when he arrived in New York from Rome accompanied by the premier's son who will study production methods in Hollywood.

Passages from some of Signor Mussolini's contributions to his father's newspaper in Italy, which may or may not indicate the trend he will follow in his new venture are quoted and Mr. Roach's plans for the company, as told to the press, are reported on page 21.

Rental Prices

Increased rental prices are claiming the attention of Chicago exhibitors, now that a ban on children attending theatres has been lifted. The ban was put into effect by order of the health department as a result of an epidemic of infantile paralysis. Other problems confronting Chicago theatremen include the possibility of an increased theatre license fee and the need of working out a new contract with the projectionists' union.

William Crouch discusses the Chicago situation in an article on page 48.

Admission Taxes Up

Clearly reflecting the generally acknowledged upturn in motion picture theatre grosses, income accruing to the United States Government from seat taxation increased some $2,628,000 in 1936-37, over the $17,112,175 collected in 1935-36.

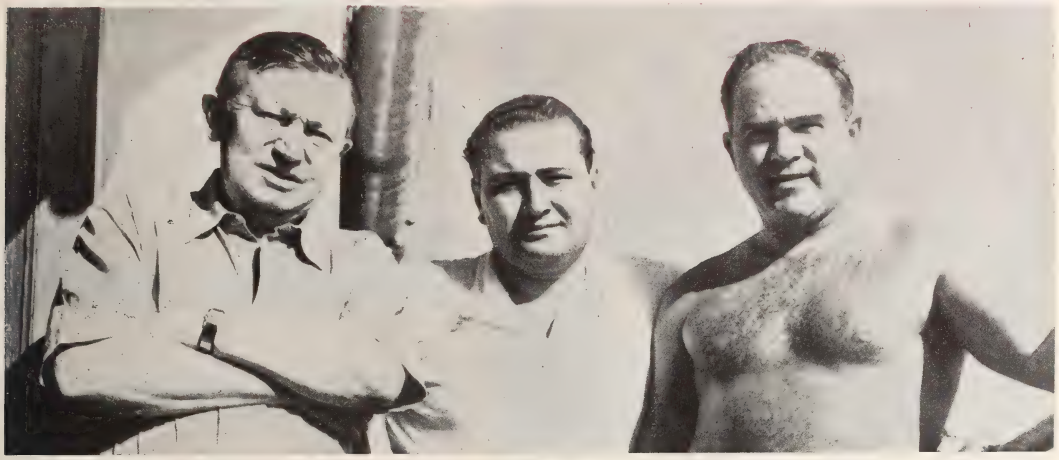
This Week in Pictures

IT'S an allegory: The staff of the 20th Century-Fox studios went a-picnicing at Verdugo Woodlands, Glendale, California, and here's Harry Brand's selection of a pictorial recording to epitomize the event and symbolize Hollywood.



One of Gloria Swanson's first assignments under her new Columbia contract was to award wrist watches and traveling bags to members of the company's baseball team, winners of the Motion Picture Athletic League title. Jack Cohn, vice-president, makes it official by his presence, right.

In the wide open spaces of the executive office Herbert Griffin, center, vice-president of the International Projector Corporation, announced that A. E. Meyer, right, has been appointed sales manager and that John Brozek, left, has succeeded to the export managership.

The virile figure on the right is Hal Roach, who, to simplify one of the week's better news stories, went to Mussoliniland and brought one back alive. In the center, with the disarming smile, is Vittorio Mussolini, son of the premier of the new Roman Empire, who with Mr. Roach as his mentor and partner, will produce motion pictures in Italy. Charles C. Pettijohn, left, of the MPPDA office, was also a passenger on the Rex on which Mr. Roach, his new partner and the news arrived in New York from Rome. Story on page 21.

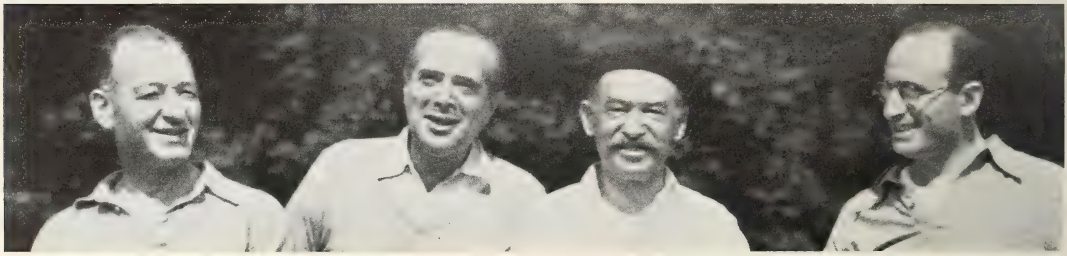
Adolph Zukor, in spite of a pre-sailing assertion that he intended to avoid the Continent and remain in England for a vacation, was entertained at luncheon with Stanton Griffis by Paramount executives in Paris. Pictured in the usual order are Andre Ullmann, director of Paramount theatres in France; Ike Blumenthal, manager of the Joinville studio; Mr. Zukor; Fred W. Lange, general European manager, and Mr. Griffis.

Buck Jones, Universal's western star, and Ewins Scott critically examine the script on location for "Hollywood Round Up," but Helen Twelvetrees and Leonard Goldstein, interested spectators, get it read to them.



Leo Fields, left, half of the Fields Brothers Theatre Enterprises, of Baltimore, Md., on a recent trip to Hollywood met Ida Volmer and Richard Lane of RKO.

No matter how you slice it, it's still a picture of the Warner Club golf tournament, held last week at the Old Oaks Country Club, Rye, N. Y. Left to right are Jacob Wilk, Harry Charnas, Stanleigh P. Friedman, 'worst dressed golfer' and as such the only winner in the exhibit, and Joseph Hazen.

Albert D. Lasker, right, famous advertiser and president of Lord & Thomas, passed pleasant words with Frederic March, costumed as Jean Lafitte, on the Paramount set for "The Buccaneer" which he visited with Christopher J. Dunphy, left, director of studio advertising and publicity. The feminine visitors are Miss Francis Lasker, Mrs. Gene Sarazen and Miss Peggy James.

DISTRIBUTORS CAN FIX ADMISSIONS, COURT HOLDS

Federal Judge Concedes Rights of Distributor to License Exhibition of His Product "In Such Manner" as Appropriate, When Done Individually

The federal courts this week conceded that a motion picture distributor has the legal right to individually fix the admission prices at theatres for his pictures and to license the exhibition of his pictures otherwise "in such manner" as may seem appropriate. The practice becomes illegal, however, when done in conspiracy with others to force such admission or other contractual restrictions.

Clarification of the distributor's position came when Judge William H. Atwell, in the District Court for the Texas northern division, at Dallas, last Saturday found for the United States Government in the Sherman anti-trust suits against Interstate Circuit, Inc., Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., Karl Hoblitzelle, president of the two companies, operating 125 theatres, and R. J. O'Donnell, general manager of the circuits, together with Paramount Pictures, Vitagraph, Inc. (Warner Brothers), RKO Radio, Columbia Pictures, United Artists, Universal Film, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox.

Permissible Individually

Basically, the court charged that the defendants violated the law by conspiring to require Dallas subsequent run theatres to charge a minimum admission of 25 cents at night, and by monopolistically denying the subsequent run theatres the right to play double features.

The distributors, however, point out as significant the court's admission that such minimum admission and other contractual restrictions may be imposed by a distributor individually; the idea being that under individual conditions such restrictions are legal, becoming illegal only when there is a conspiracy between two or more to force the restrictions.

Appeal Expected

Appearing in the formal complaint for the government were Homer Cummings, Attorney General; Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General; Berkeley W. Henderson and Paul Williams, special assistants to the Attorney General, of Washington, D. C.; Clyde O. Eastus, United States Attorney, and John A. Erhard, assistant United States Attorney of Dallas.

For the defendants appeared Thompson, Knight, Baker, Harris and Wright, law firm of Dallas. Louis Phillips, of the Paramount legal staff of New York, and Sidney Schreiber, of the legal staff of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, New York, attended as "observers."

"Welcomed Clarification"

While the judge's decision was written, the formal decree will not be written and entered for several days. At that time, the defendants are expected to file an appeal. However, they have 60 days in which to take such action.

Karl Hoblitzelle declared that Judge Atwell's decision clarified "long-mooted" questions in the making and carrying out of film rental contracts. He said his Interstate and Texas Consolidated circuits, "will, of course, bow to the ruling of the court."

Before leaving for Hollywood to resume a vacation interrupted by the trial, Mr. Hoblitzelle explained, "It must be understood that we welcomed both the trial and the court opinion to clarify the questions. Whether the decision will be appealed or not will be decided by our attorneys after the decision had been studied. In the meantime, we will operate our theatres without change of policy."

Judge Atwell's decision of last Saturday came after two days deliberation following a three-day trial. Some 80 per cent of the evidence had been agreed to by both sides in stipulations filed at the opening of the trial.

Through B. W. Henderson, of the Attorney General's staff, the government charged that in 1934 the defendant distributors and Interstate circuit interests acted as an illegal monopoly when they contracted to fix the minimum prices of subsequent runs at 25 cents with no double featuring permitted.

The defendant theatres and distributors claimed they had a right to protect their copyrights by saying what admission prices should prevail. The court conceded this right, if done individually without any action in concert.

"The sharp issue—the battleground in this case," Judge Atwell ruled, "is whether the respondents conspired together to bring about the fixing of a minimum 25c charge by the subsequent exhibitor.

"The conviction is inescapable that there was such an agreement. Beyond even the citing of testimony is the irrefutable fact that such contracts as the exhibitor respondents made with the distributor respondents were themselves a violation of the Sherman anti-trust laws.

"One of the respondents, Mr. Karl Hoblitzelle (president of Interstate) is one of the city's finest characters," the decision continued. "He sought legal advice before he began crusading for these contracts. By his life he has evidenced a deep interest in those who do not have. The conclusion that this court reaches is not a criticism nor a condemnation of him. Nor is one's desire to have one's business prosper a defense.

"The result of this transaction was to take from others that which they have the right to believe and to know shall not be taken from them. It is certainly theirs."

See Individual Action

There was seen by many in Dallas an opening for the continuance by individual action, of the old practices, however, in the judge's closing remarks. Interstate officials and attorneys for both sides would not comment on what escape might be had in the last paragraph of the court's decision, which said:

"The distributor respondents have the legal right to contract for exclusive exhibition of their copyrighted pictures to their respondent exhibitors. If they should do that as a result of a common understanding, that, too, would be illegal. But if they do that without any such common agreement or understanding, it is free from condemnation, so far as the law is concerned."

Distributor's Rights

"Contract agreement conspiracy is merely the meeting of minds," the decision observed. "Such a meeting may be evidenced by a written instrument or by identical action. The case exhibits unanimity of action at a given time with reference to an identical matter. We recognize the moving picture is the greatest school people have. We must not by any contract or law keep away from them (the poorer classes) that which they should have and we enjoy.

"That one seeks amusement in a hovel, a badly smelling and poorly seated, cramped hall is no insuperable obstacle to furnishing amusement that is not also ill-odored or of a character that is debasing."

On several occasions Judge Atwell repeated

Other Actions on Trade Practices

Highlighted by the federal court decision in Texas conceding the right of distributors to individually fix admission prices on their pictures, the week brought several developments involving trade practices in distribution-exhibition, as follows:

The Department of Justice, continuing its nation-wide investigation of motion picture practices, opened another probe, at Los Angeles.

Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, Kan., asked Will Hays and the MPPDA for aid in obtaining earlier showings for the public in that city.

The anti-trust action in the Frels vs. Jefferson Amusement matter starts in Dallas, October 4th.

Allied States of New Jersey, in convention at Atlantic City, formally resolved for federal motion picture regulation of trade practices, and heard Abram Myers, Allied's national counsel, report that Congressmen had asked for a program for action at the next session.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, placed responsibility of threatening federal regulation on major distributors.

Chicago independent exhibitors were setting out for a solution to and a readjustment of that city's present clearance system.

North and South Carolina's MPTO was protesting against distributors' reputed "forcing" of accessory sales with films.

SAYS NRA CAUSED CONTROL PLAN

clearly the rights of distributors in his 23-page decision.

"It must be conceded," he said at one point, "that since films are copyrighted, the owner thereof has the right, under our laws, to exhibit them, or to license their exhibition, at such prices, or, in such manner, as to him may seem appropriate."

He warned, however, that "this well-defined right will not justify his (the copyright owner, or distributor) agreeing, or combining with another person in order to deprive a third person of a complete freedom of contract. The copyright statute and the anti-trust statute are both in effect and vitally necessary."

Further, the court declared that, "The owner of the copyrighted article may contract with the exhibitor, without the intervention of any third mind, for full and free protection, both as to price and manner of use, but when the outside mind, with an interest to serve, steps into the picture—into the contracting room—and interjects, persuades and coerces the copyright owner to join with it in its protection, as against the party to whom the copyright owner is selling or contracting, then and in that event there are two or more persons engaged on the side of the copyright holder, when the law gives only one privileges and immunities. Such a unity of minds, if it be in restraint of interstate commerce, is illegal. The copyright privileges do not save it from illegality."

The government action was brought against the circuit and distributor defendants last spring and went to trial September 20. The hearings lasted only three days, the bulk of the evidence having been supplied in advance by the stipulations covering approximately 80 per cent of the essential facts involved.

No distributor home office sales officials were subpoenaed for the hearings, the witnesses being confined to local exhibitors, Interstate Circuit officials and distribution representatives.

The contracts involved in the government action were made with several of the Hoblitzelle first run Dallas houses and provided that films shown in them at a designated minimum admission could not be shown in any other theatre in the territory for less than another designated minimum admission. The contracts likewise prohibited the use of "bargain" attractions, such as double features, in connection with the showing of the selected films.

The government charged that the contracts were discriminatory and in restraint of trade and produced witnesses who testified that their patronage would not pay the minimum prices prescribed in the contracts. The defense stressed the right of copyright owners to control the use of their material and its marketing.

Distributors' Letters Introduced

Overruling the objections of defense attorneys, Judge Atwell permitted letters between various distributor defendants in the anti-trust suit to be introduced as evidence.

Witnesses admitted writing them, but contended the agreement between distributors and the Interstate Circuit for the maintenance of subsequent run admissions was fair.

Among the letters introduced was one passing between J. H. McIntyre, Memphis RKO manager, and Jules Levy, general sales manager. The letter requested Mr. Levy to decide whether the plan proposed by Interstate was justified and in accord with RKO's sales policy, and whether it would interfere with sales elsewhere in the United States.

On cross examination he said "United States" was a typographical error and what he had meant was Texas. He said the letter had been written before the plan went into effect, but since it had been inaugurated he believed it sound and fair to all.

Several neighborhood exhibitors were put on the stand by the government. With little variation they told the story of how they were compelled to charge 25 cents admission for Class A pictures and how they got no patronage.

"I tried to charge 25 cents for these pictures," Sam Kirscheimer, typical of several, said. "My people would not pay it."

Cites NRA as Cause

Some said they operated in the poorer sections of town and that their patrons preferred westerns and melodramas not under the Class A rule, but all agreed that their patrons would not pay over 15 cents.

George Wright, defense attorney, under cross examinations made them admit there were no restrictions on westerns and melodramas and that there were companies offering such pictures with no restrictions. They admitted, too, that they were operating profitably on such pictures.

Mr. Wright pointed out at the opening of the trial that owners of copyrights were permitted to protect their property.

The NRA was among the causes of setting up a price control plan, Mr. Hoblitzelle said, as the defense took up its side of the case.

He said, too, that a number of show houses in the chain had been taken during bankruptcy and put on their feet. He said he was placed with the alternative of cutting prices to a destructive degree or devising a scheme where all might survive and the public be served.

"At that time the government was encouraging moves to stabilize industry of all kinds," he said, "and I tried to work out a plan fair to all."

Hoblitzelle said the advertising he gives first runs gives him an interest in subsequent showing in addition to his interest in protecting the copyright.

Argentine Court Orders Distributors To Pay Fines or Go to Jail

Although a court of appeals has entered an order for their "preventive imprisonment", motion picture distributors, recently convicted of maintaining a monopoly, expect to escape through payment of fines, according to a United Press dispatch from Buenos Aires.

The term, "preventive imprisonment", the dispatch explained, is a near-translation of "prision preventiva embargobienes", and means "pay your fines or go to jail". The fines, however, have not yet been assessed. The order was issued against members of the board of directors of the Argentine Association of Film Distributors, which includes Guy P. Morgan of United Artists, Harry Novak of Warner Brothers, Sigfried Bauer of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, John Nathan of Paramount, Charles Margen of Columbia Pictures, Monroe Eisen of Universal, Adolph Wilson of Terra, Charles Glucksmann of Radio Lux and Julius Joly of Joly Company.

The lower court, which convicted the motion picture men July 20th, issued an order placing an "embargo" on 15,000 pesos of the property of each defendant, thereby preventing each man from transferring that much of his valuables during the time the courts deliberated the penalties to be imposed.

The judge said that the association was proved to be an illegal monopoly because it fixed ticket price at theatres for certain films, and imposed penalties on members of the association who did not abide by its rules.

The film men's appeal came before Justice Artemio Moreno Monday. He upheld the lower court and issued the imprisonment order.

Second Dallas Federal Suit Starts on October 4th

Dallas takes the spotlight again next week when the case of Ruben Frels against Jefferson Amusement Company and several distributors is to be tried in Judge William H. Atwell's Federal court.

The suit is one brought under provision of the Sherman anti-trust act and it is the second time the case has been tried, the first trial having resulted in a "hung" jury.

First tried some months ago, Judge Atwell kept the jury out for two days and over a week end in an effort to reach a verdict but the jury was finally discharged and the case set down for retrial on October 4th.

Mr. Frels and his attorneys were said this week to be optimistic following the decision brought in against the distributors and Interstate Circuit in which Judge Atwell ruled the companies operated in violation of the trust laws.

Chamber of Commerce Asks Hays' Aid in Kansas

The municipal fight being conducted in Kansas City, Kan., to obtain feature releases at the same time as Kansas City, Mo.—a "comtitive" city for civic honors—was carried this week to Will Hays and his Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in New York.

Backed by city officials and local theatre owners, the Kansas City, Kans. Chamber of Commerce asked Mr. Hays to intercede "for the purpose of removing the discrimination" against Kansas City, Kan., in the matter of the clearance which Kansas City, Mo. first run theatres are said to have over the first-run Electric and Granada theatres in Kansas City, Kan.

Although the Granada obtained a 14-day clearance, compared to the previous 28 days or

Federal Investigators Start on West Coast

The Justice Department's virtually nationwide "under-cover" investigation of motion picture practices, in full swing for months, again broke into the open this week, in Los Angeles, where A. J. Law and Harold Collins, special assistant attorney generals, launched a probe of the distribution and exhibition end of the industry at a conference with David O. Decker, M-G-M counsel.

Mr. Law said James Findlay, Federal Bureau of Investigation agent, had been assigned to him. The probe will take in Fox West Coast and independents, he said. One of the matters to be investigated is a complaint that F. W. C. is paying less for films than independents and is getting all the breaks, he added.

Jersey Allied Petitions For Federal Regulation

In Atlantic City, N. J., a proposal for a federal regulatory act for the motion picture industry along the lines of the Guffey-Vinson coal act was advanced before the Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, gathered for their 18th annual convention at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, September 22nd to 24th.

Abram F. Myers, of Washington, D. C., general counsel and chairman of the national board of Allied, said that Congressional leaders had advised him at the last session to crystallize a program among exhibitors and to present it at the next session. He declared that past legislative proposals, such as anti-block booking laws and the "divorce" of theatres from producer ownership would not solve all the "evils" of the industry. He suggested the regulatory law be administered by "a board of disinterested experts."

"If further progress is to be made, Congress says, 'bring us something concrete and let us put it in the hopper,' he added.

"The majority of Congress understands the motion picture business requires legislative attention," Mr. Myers said.

"A government board, not of reformers, amateurs or politicians, a board selected for experience in the business but with no present connection or investment in any branch of the film industry, and with no axes to grind. A code of fair conduct. A tax of 25 or 30 per cent of gross receipts (the Guffey Bill tax is for 19½ per cent.) and a provision as in the Guffey Bill that the tax is to be imposed unless business is a member of the code and obeys it. There you will find the teeth so sadly lacking in the late NRA," Mr. Myers declared.

He asserted that "one intelligent independent tells me that for protection against invasion he pays yearly tribute of $35,000 to $50,000. The taxed independent says he pays when he signs up for more pictures than he needs, to keep producers' and distributors' circuits out."

"Lesser of Two Evils": Yamins

Nathan Yamins, of Fall River, Mass., president of national Allied, advised the New Jersey group to consider possible government regulation as "the lesser of two evils." He said he was not in favor of the government's further entrance into business, but "it might be a lot better than the onerous terms forced upon theatre owners now by the industry itself."

IRVING DOLLINGER, new president of Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey

The Atlantic City sessions also were in the nature of an eastern regional conference of Allied exhibitors, and Mr. Myers voiced criticism of Paramount for its alleged failure to deliver six pictures which he said rightly belonged to last year's Paramount program.

At the opening session, members of the group were told that there was a definite recession in business. Sidney Samuelson, a director of New Jersey Allied and a past president, asserted that the upswing which theatre owners anticipated after Labor Day had thus far failed to materialize. Mr. Yamins concurred in this appraisal. Mr. Samuelson further warned theatre owners to take cognizance of moves in New Jersey to promote legislation legalizing horse-race betting. He charged gambling as unfair competition with amusement places, and asserted slot machines and other forms of gambling crippled the motion picture industry in Florida during winter seasons.

On a motion by Mr. Samuelson, a committee comprising Louis Gold, of Newark; Irving Dollinger, of Linden, and Morris Marks, of Dunellen, was authorized to "explore the possibility of mutual co-operation between the Independent Theatre Owners' Association of New York City and the Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey." Under the plan of co-operation, each organization would retain its own identity, and a joint committee of three from each group would be set up to supervise problems of mutual concern.

More than 250 theatre operators and their wives were at the banquet which marked the close of the business sessions. A button pressed by Jeanette MacDonald, in Hollywood, opened the dinner. Miss MacDonald broadcast a greeting over the NBC Red Network and sang several songs.

The organization elected Irving Dollinger, of Linden, president, succeeding Lee W. Newberry, of Allenhurst. It also extended an invitation to the National Allied States Association to hold its next convention in Atlantic City, in January or March.

Kuykendall Cites Majors On Trade Practice Reforms

Blame for any federal control that may develop was placed this week at the doors of distributors by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who declared: "Whether such a drastic measure is the only solution possible will be decided by how determined the producers and distributors are to resist voluntary modifications in policy, to refuse cooperation in adjusting exhibitor complaints and grievances and to deny reasonable requests for help in solving our trade practice problems."

The attitude of distribution companies toward a voluntary trade practice agreement which would include conciliation machinery for hearing exhibitor complaints, will be determined by Mr.

The MPTOA head said that no determined drive for concessions would be made unless distribution companies indicated a willingness to attempt to solve with exhibitor representatives some of the trade practices which he declared were responsible for the increasing litigation and governmental investigation within the industry. He added that the MPTOA "has not lost interest" in attempting to obtain specific trade practice regulations within the industry, but had no desire to force the issue at this time unless distribution executives were aware of the need for such regulation and were prepared to act immediately. This will be determined, he said, within the next few days.

Support of Allied or any other group of exhibitors will be welcomed by the MPTOA if distributors continue an attitude of non-cooperation in solving industry problems, Mr. Kuykendall indicated in a statement issued Tuesday.

That this cooperation might even lead to an acceptance of Allied's legislative moves aimed at Government control was hinted.

Mr. Kuykendall's reference to Allied support read: "MPTOA welcomes the support of Allied or any other exhibitors to a definite practical plan to regulate commercial abuses and prevent injustices.

"And it should not be necessary to place the whole industry under rigid government regulation, with its inevitable litigation, tax burdens, penalties and politics. That is the last resort, not the first. Whether such a drastic measure is the only solution possible will be decided by how determined the producers and distributors are to resist voluntary modifications in policy, to refuse cooperation in adjusting exhibitor complaints and grievances and to deny reasonable requests for help in solving our trade practice problems."

Independents Attack Release System in Chicago

Attorneys for Allied Exhibitors of Illinois this week were reported investigating grounds on which to open a legal attack on Balaban and Katz, charging monopoly. Independent exhibitors have claimed that B. & K. monopolized Chicago theatre business for years and they now plan a barrage of charges against the circuit. It is claimed that B. & K. dictates the clearance system and that releases are arranged to suit the circuit's needs regardless of the effect on small exhibitors. Allied members, additionally, are anxious to halt double bills, citing loss of business as a result of the policy since the present release system "milks" big pictures before the small theatres get them.

ROTHA HERE FOR FILM ON SCREEN TECHNIQUE

British Authority on Documentary Product Will Make Film on Technique of Pictures

Paul Rotha, author of several books on motion pictures and an authority on documentary films, arrived Tuesday in New York from England for a five months stay during which he will cooperate with the Museum of Modern Art Film Library in the production of a film on the technique of motion pictures.

The film, John E. Abbott, director of the film library, said, will be used to supplement the program notes on film technique issued by the library and written by Miss Iris Barry, curator of the library.

Immediately after his arrival on the Europa, Mr. Rotha was escorted to the library's projection room in Grand Central Palace, where he was guest of honor at a cocktail party.

In addition to his production work, Mr. Rotha will assist Mr. Abbott and Miss Barry in a course on "The History, Aesthetic and Technique of Motion Pictures," which is given by the Film Library for the department of fine arts of Columbia University. The course consists of 28 three-hour classes to be held weekly in the library's projection room.

His other activities while in the United States will include a series of lectures at several Eastern colleges and universities, and the private showing of several documentary films being sent from England. Mr. Rotha's association with the motion picture industry has been entirely in the documentary field, with the exception of a short time in 1928, when he was employed in the art department of British International.

Films Coming Next

The collection of films, due to arrive from England next week, was described by Mr. Rotha as representative of the technique and social purpose of the documentary film.

The documentary film is considered by many in England the most significant type of film now being produced there. In many respects it is regarded as ahead of the entertainment product and as holding out the best hopes of the development of a distinctive British film idiom.

The picture, on which Mr. Rotha will cooperate with the library, will illustrate technical and artistic progress in the industry. Examples of the various points to be covered will be illustrated with excerpts from films in the library. In cases where illustrative examples cannot be found, Mr. Abbott explained, they will be made under the direction of Mr. Rotha.

Most Made by Rotha

The English films, which Mr. Rotha will show and lecture on, include "The Future in the Air," a recently completed survey of air routes, sponsored by Imperial Airways; "Today We Live," a survey of the unemployment problem in British "distressed areas"; "We Live in Two Worlds," which deals with international communications; "Cover to Cover," which illustrates book production; "Air Outpost," produced on the Persian Gulf, and "Len Lye," a color film.

Most of the films were produced by Mr. Rotha but the collection also includes some produced by John Grierson and by Basil Wright.

Mr. Rotha, who was born in London, and educated at the London University, has been production supervisor of the Strand Film Company for 18 months and obtained a leave of absence to visit New York. Among the books he has written are "The Film Till Now"; "Celluloid—The Film Today," "Documentary Film," and "Movie Parade."

In 1932, Mr. Rotha produced the first feature documentary film, "Contact" for British Instructional Films. From 1933 to 1935, he produced "Rising Tide," "Shipyard," "Face of Britain," and "Death on the Road," all documentaries, in association with Gaumont British Instructional, Ltd.

Fawcett Film Magazines Centralized in New York

With the transfer of the editorial staffs of Screen Book and Hollywood from Hollywood to New York this week, Fawcett Publications now has the editorial departments of its 13 monthly magazine centralized in the Paramount Building.

Changes in editorial duties accompanying the move are Tom DeVane from Movie Story to Screen Book as editor; Llewellyn Miller to the editorship of Hollywood, and Dorothy Hosking from Romantic Magazine to editor of Movie Story. John Grandjean, art director of the Hollywood office, has been transferred to the New York art department.

Schools Featured In First Newsreel

The reopening of public, parochial and private schools in St. Louis is featured in the first issue of Fanchon & Marco's St. Louis newsreel.

Through arrangements completed with Fox-Movietone, motion picture headlines of noteworthy St. Louis events will be shown at intervals during the coming year under the Fanchon & Marco-St. Louis Amusement Company groupings.

McLeod Quits National

H. Stanley McLeod has resigned as manager of National Theatre Supply Company's Seattle office to enter the theatre equipment business for himself. Temporarily managed by Robert P. Haase, the office will be in the charge of Heaton Randall, now head of the Salt Lake City branch, after the first of the year.

Winninger, Universal at Peace

Settling differences with Universal over his role in "A Young Man's Fancy," Charles Winninger returned to the cast this week.

Releasing System Is Under Fire

Oriental, Roosevelt and United Artists Theatres play these houses for two to three weeks usually. Following this they are booked into the Apollo or Garrick in the Loop for another stay of a week or two, from there they go to the "A" houses for a week's engagement and by the time they reach the first-week-of-release theatres—10 weeks after the Loop opening—they have been "milked" dry, exhibitors claim.

It is this system that has been the reason for many of the bigger pictures being pulled after one day's engagement in the independent theatres, even in "C" week. The past few months have seen pictures, which do tremendous business in the Loop theatres and the "A" houses, fail miserably in the "C" week and subsequent run theatres.

With big pictures teamed together for dual combinations in the "A" and "B" week theatres and not available in that form for the smaller theatres, business for these small houses has been off to an alarming degree, independent theatre executives state.

The present double feature situation which was slated to be changed, according to reports, some weeks ago, is apparently in Chicago to stay. The theatres that started it can't get rid of it, having allowed themselves no way out. In the meantime the independents are seeking a change that will enable the releasing plan to be more flexible and give them a chance at all films sooner.

Carolina Owners to Fight "Forced" Sales

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina is preparing a protest against the alleged "forcing" of accessories with new season pictures in this city and vicinity.

A survey by the organization, which is headed by Charles W. Picquet, disclosed that the practice is not general throughout the exchange territory and is being opposed on the grounds that it is discriminatory against Charlotte exhibitors.

Indianapolis Pooling Pact

Following a pooling agreement between Monarch Theatres Corp. and the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, the Indiana, Indianapolis theatre which has been dark virtually all last year, will reopen shortly as a first-run house. Under the agreement, the Circle, operated by Monarch, the Apollo, Fourth Avenue property, and the Indiana will in future be operated by the newly-formed Indianapolis Amusement Company.

ATS Remains Independent

American Theatre Science, Detroit, is not contemplating any merger with Allied or Cooperative Theatres of Michigan, according to Frank E. Stuart, general manager. "No move has been made by any officer or member of this organization to any such tieup," Mr. Stuart said. "Allied, Cooperative and the ATS will stay apart and there isn't any quarrel between any of the three organizations, as far as the ATS is concerned."

"Hollywood closed down for a year . . . would be blessed"

VITTORIO MUSSOLINI
in Il Popolo d' Italia—May 20, 1937

With Vittorio Mussolini, son of the dictator, in Hollywood, acquiring an American partner and studying Hollywood technique, both in behalf of an Italian production project, special significance attaches to his prior declarations of attitude toward the United States and its picture industry.

When young Signor Mussolini came ashore in New York last week, accompanied by Hal Roach, his film mentor, friend and guide, Mr. Roach remarked with emphasis:

"He wrote the screen column for his father's paper. He was the only one to knock Italian made productions and praise American films."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD sought translations from the motion picture columns of Il Duce's paper, Il Popolo d'Italia, published in Milan, including expressions from Vittorio Mussolini and others.

In the May 20th issue of Il Popolo d'Italia Vittorio Mussolini, who "was the only one to knock Italian made productions and praise American films," wrote of the "strike move in Hollywood" as follows:

"The humoristic papers have found a new outlet for their quips at the expense of celebrated stars and cinematographic magnates with the habitual Havana cigar in their mouths, and the public are given a further proof of the lack of intelligence and seriousness to be found in the mass of people who live in the California Mecca. Is this an effect of the sun?"

Answering his own hypothetical question as to what the rest of the world would do if Hollywood closed down for a year, "a kind of flood without the ark, which would be blessed by a goodly few . . . never again to see the ears of Clark Gable, or Dietrich's legs, or Garbo's feet, or Joan Crawford's mouth, or Katharine Hepburn's nose, or Luise Rainer's eyes, or Goldwyn's and Ziegfeld's ballet girls," Mr. Mussolini considered the case of each European country and wound up with this regarding Italy:

"Perhaps in the space of five or six years we may get ahead. In any case we are equipped and ready. We are working at full swing and more enthusiastically, and we shall soon fill Cine City. Even the smallest capitalists will have an opportunity of doing their part and of making an economic film. Thousands of people will find work and thousands will work in the constructive part. Many prejudices will be done away with and the greatest liberty will be conceded from an artistic point of view. . . . New actors and actresses will be found; writers will wake up and will set to work to write original stories; the stage directors will arrange for effective scenery; the director will confine himself in nearly every case to directing the film and will not take the place of the electrical mechanic of the typist at every turn. HAL ROACH ANNOUNCES BIG DEAL AS MUSSOLINI PARTNER

Harold Eugene (Hal in Hollywood) Roach and Charles Clyde Pettijohn last Thursday escorted Vittorio Mussolini ashore in New York enroute to study production in Hollywood, to help equip the 21-year-old son of Italy's Dictator and Fascist generalissimo for his partnership with Mr. Roach in a new Italian film-making venture named RAM Pictures, from their names.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the distributor of Mr. Roach's Hollywood comedies for some 10 years, conspicuously was not participating. Mr. Roach remarked that after his arrival he had spent some time with Nicholas M. Schenck, MGM president, explaining the origin of newspaper misstatements which said that Metro would finance the new venture to the extent of $2,000,000.

"Please don't mention MGM in this deal," Mr. Roach urged ship news reporters. "MGM doesn't want to be mentioned, and, if you do so, not only will this company be sore but Italy as well," he added to Bill Ornstein, reporter for Motion Picture Daily.

Mr. Pettijohn's office in New York likewise hastened to add that he has "absolutely nothing to do with the Roach-Mussolini company," explaining that Mr. Pettijohn "met the party aboard the S.S. Rex while returning to New York." He continued with it aboard a government tug which sped the group to an unannounced landing to avoid an anti-Fascistic demonstration organized to meet Mussolini at the pier of the Rex. Mr. Pettijohn posed with Vittorio and with Mr. Roach while on the high seas and the resultant newspaper captions identified the general counsel of the Hays organization both as a "Hollywood press agent" (New York World-Telegram) and a "British journalist" (New York Sun).

While some 13 carloads of Secret Service, New York Police, Italian Ambassadorial (from Washington) and Italian Consulate (New York) operatives whisked Il Duce's son off to a sightseeing tour of New York, with views from Al Smith's Empire State Building, Mr. Roach was left to the probings of two-score trade and newspaper reporters in his quarters at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's offices in Longacre Square.

On seven occasions, Mr. Roach interrupted or else answered questioning to insure MGM's non-association with his new Italian affiliation.

"He said that Nicholas Schenck was peeved at the stories which had been printed," tieing-in Metro with Mussolini, reported Mr. Ornstein in Motion Picture Daily.

"My new arrangement does not affect my American (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer) set-up," the Daily quoted Mr. Roach; but, he added, "neither MGM nor any other American company will release the pictures" to be produced by Mussolini-Roach.

And while Roach and Mussolini were riding a TWA airplane from Newark to Hollywood, Vittorio's father was arriving at Munich for a visit with Adolph Hitler.

Meanwhile, the New York Times wirelessed from Munich that Hitler's first social function for Il Duce was a Munich tea party, in the new House of German Art, where "all stage and film stars and some of Germany's prettiest girls were assembled by Leni Riefenstahl, feminine arbiter of the Nazi picture world. All were presented to Mussolini and Hitler, who each kissed the dainty hands extended to them."

In Hollywood Mr. Roach was the while concerned with the plans of a reception for his Italian guest, to which the elite of Hollywood screendom were to be invited, Wednesday night.

Of possible significance to any Italian motion picture venture or motion picture activity was the New York Times' reporting that Benito Mussolini and Adolph Hitler, during their present discussions, "would insist on cessation of attacks on their ideology." Motion Picture Herald, on page 25, April 17th, said:

"Germany fired the first salvo in an international motion picture trade 'war' this week by moving to form a film block made up of the Nazis' 'ideological' allies for propagandistic and 'cultural' cooperation to fight critic will criticize to an even greater extent. The public will flock into the cinemas where the new Italian films are being shown and will come away exclaiming, 'Now we can look anyone in the face.'"

Would Win Italians First

This forecast Mr. Mussolini qualified with these words: "Certainly without the aid of an earthquake the way will be longer and more thorny, but the victory will be even sweeter. Our orders must then be to first effectively conquer the favor of the Italian public before we upset things abroad."

Again, a week later:

"There are several persons who are interested that our cinematographic industry should proceed more vigorously on its way, learning everything that is best to be learned, squeezing the intelligence of cinema maniacs, abandoning all aesthetic dissertions and expressing in true cinematographic language of its own the new power of Rome."

In the same article, urging that "the critic should descend from his pedestal," Mr. Mussolini asserted that "readers do not pay attention to the accounts of the opening evenings in the daily papers" anyway, this evidenced by the fact that "the poorest of Italian films is supported and justified." He conceded that perhaps the authority of the Department of Motion Pictures had been abused and "certain pictures released which are enough to make one's hair stand on end and give vent to yells similar to Tarzan."

Calls Films Faulty

The Premiere's son complained, in his column on May 6th, that the Italian public pays too much attention to the players and directors of American pictures. "In reality," he wrote of "Gorgeous Hussy" and "His Brother's Wife," "these two films are faulty and rest on the popularity of the names and on that mechanical production of films which is typical of the U. S. A. and which we don't wish to see brought to Europe." So, too, of "The Charge of the Light Brigade" and "Camille": "If we observe closely it is only the sensational scenes that are really artistic in the film; all the rest appears arranged to make those scenes stand out prominently."

And again the refrain: "To succeed . . . it is necessary to . . . learn the trade and to follow the example of the Americans, to create a catapult, based on a solid commercial structure, and to acquire that continuity of cinematographic stories made in U. S. A., which has not yet penetrated the thick heads of European directors. We may then be able to speak of the Fascist cinema."

Target of Other Writers

Other writers in the Italian press in the past year have coupled criticism of American pictures and personalities with propaganda for the national product.

"The Charge of the Light Brigade" was the target of a writer in Bianco e Nero, published by the Ministry of the Press and Propaganda.

"Is it admissible," asked the author, "that the public should have to swallow an hour and a half's tiresome incidents leading up to the eight feet and three inches of film which the Charge itself represents?

"The characters have no human construction and no spiritual basis; cloth dummies which stand up only because the director of the film has need of them for a certain time, up to the moment of the charge.

". . . it would seem that the picture were suffering from paralysis." Again: "Curtiz has always been a mediocre director." Of the charge itself: "The whole thing is practically one shot of a type." And "to sum up," it is "a big success which is very unmerited."

Suggests "Sanctions"

To reports in the spring that several Hollywood stars individually had collected funds for the Spanish Loyalists, an article by Paolo Balbis in the Corriere Padano, Ferrara, on April 27th said: "It would not be a bad idea, as soon as definite information has been received on this point, to apply sanctions ourselves to the producers of American films who employ" the players mentioned, "swollen with villas and money, and full up with whisky and caviar."

"With regard to propaganda," the writer added, "we can eventually have recourse to the stars, either for at home or abroad. For that matter, the system is in full swing within the limits of the republic of stars, as also with democracy less Western."

Of the same subject the Guerin Meschino of Milan, going into personalities, said on May 2nd: "Just imagine Charlie Chaplin, famous for his miserliness, giving away a dollar to anyone! . . . Can you imagine Douglas (Fairbanks), with the big teeth, doing his best to convince the proletariat to divide with him all the millions that he has succeeded, who knows how, in pocketing by means of the cinema? Can you not see Clark Gable carrying the flag for the poor?"

Returning to the theme of Italian national production, Il Popolo di Roma urged, in the issue of May 6th, that "a vast organization of production (excluding all State or semi-State activities) is now an absolute necessity since we must maintain in complete working order the immense studios built for the purpose . . ."

Deplores "Americanitis"

"Americanitis" was the subject of an extended article in Cronaca Prealpina, Varese, on March 31st, prefaced thus:

"Whilst we, as a result of firm will-power and well-known sacrifices, are approaching the complete economic and spiritual autocracy, there is a persistent tendency to exalt everything that is of American production."

The writer, Bruno Checchi, conceded that the American companies had "sent us really excellent productions," but qualified that contribution as "half a dozen annually, where generally the director and the cast have been imported to America from Europe."

Then Mr. Checchi got down to work. "The real American productions—that is to their most powerful rival, Hollywood, and all 'liberal' and communistic motion picture influences of the world.

WON'T PERMIT PROPAGANDA IN THEIR FILMS, SAYS HAL ROACH

"Italy and Japan are the first two (ideological ally) countries to ratify the film alliance with Germany."

Mr. Roach, in New York before leaving for Hollywood with Vittorio Mussolini, said, "I'm going to spend as much time in Italy as I see fit," explaining that the Mussolini-Roach Ram Pictures "will be produced for Italian consumption."

A Motion Picture Herald story of July 10th from a correspondent in Rome said:

"The first step in an apparent move toward gradual elimination of American motion pictures from the Italian market has been taken with the publication of a four-point decree which makes it extremely difficult and costly for the American industry to remain in business in Italy."

The decree, it was said, provides for a 75 per cent increase in the tax charged for dubbing Hollywood pictures with Italian dialogue in Italy; lessening of the dubbing tax charged native Italian producers; an increase of from 2,000,000 to 4,000,000 lire in the annual awards, in cash, made to producers of Italian producers in Italy, and so on.

"It is frankly said in Italian official quarters," the article continued, "and in the Italian press that the proceeds of the (raised) dubbing tax will be used to subsidize the Italian film industry."

But, Mr. Roach—continuing the Motion Picture Daily interview — insisted that Benito Mussolini would not be allowed to influence the policies and procedure of RAM. "There will be no propaganda in the pictures, and there will be no Government interference," he asserted.

"I went over and told them that they couldn't expect to make pictures unless they expected to lose money," Mr. Roach said. "I went over on the wrong premise," he added, "and got in by mistake."

"Mussolini wants his son to go into business. Vittorio decided on the film business and I'm sort of a chaperon for him."

The comedy producer explained that he has a half interest in the new company, will serve as its vice-president, Vittorio serving as president, Mario Del Papa as business manager and Corrado Pavolini as an executive, and concluded the interview with the observation: "I think Benito Mussolini is the only square politician I've ever seen."

say, those which clearly reflect the mentality of the people who have created them —is very extensive, is scattered over all our markets, and is of profoundly poor quality.

"All those types of films starring, for instance, Joan Crawford, the woman with a mouth like a furnace, and other stars of this description, are neither the exaltation of a perfect or ideal society, but are the expression of a life of insane mentality."

Now warmed up to his subject, the writer went on to a castigation of the American public:

"This society which is the quintessence of the sublime, in which it is considered correct for girls to spend the whole night out of doors without any control being exercised by their parents (even the mothers themselves have the sacred right of arriving home in the early hours of the morning in a drunken condition), where wives submit with unselfish generosity to an exchange of their respective husbands in much the same way as though they were mere picture postcards (matrimony is only entered into for financial and economic reasons), is a society which is too inconvenient and immoral for Latin races, who will regard the conception of the family life as sacred. This does not constitute a poverty of spiritual value in the American people, but is an absolute moral perversity."

"This excessive American mania" the writer defined as "a pretence, ridiculous affection . . . not in keeping with our mentality."

In America, he charged "a film is judged according to whether the star has well shaped legs and with a total neglect of observation as to whether the same contains a spiritual thesis."

Productions "which illustrate the noble figures of gangsters, . . . these degenerates who are familiar with strangling infants and cutting up women into pieces in a most refined way, reveal the primitive and cannibal-like tastes of the Americans."

Mr. Checchi made an observation at this point that these gangsters of the films "have nothing in common with the poor brigands of Italy of the Eighteenth Century who very often obtained justice for the poor and oppressed."

Thence to his peroration:

"It is necessary to take prompt reaction against this type of the Yankee product worming its way into our markets, in order to prevent the corruption of the mentality of our masses. No kind of campaign would be too strong against this. It would be a service, moreover, to national cinematographic art, which unfortunately is still in its infancy, but which we are anxious to see expand and grow up devoid of all foreign influences, and inspired by very high spiritual ideals.

"We possess a history and traditions for which we are envied by the world. Let these be the sparks which convey life to our art, art which is essentially ours and wholly ours. We have attained and superseded the levels reached by others; we shall succeed in this field also, without our poetic nature, and warlike spirit, and talent for exploring being upset by the immodest examples to be found on the other side of the ocean."

FILM PROPAGANDA AND HANDCLASPS

A quasi-official view of the Vittorio Mussolini-Hal Roach partnership for the production of films in Italy was expressed by S. E. Fulvio Suvich, Italian ambassador to the United States, interviewed on the Italian line pier in New York after debarking from the Rex on which he accompanied Signor Mussolini and Mr. Roach from Italy.

"While I do not know much about the film industry," he said, "I think the tieup is an excellent medium for cementing Italian and American friendship. The motion picture industry is a power in presenting propaganda on the screen and I believe this approach should have been done a long time ago."

Fox Intermountain Activity at Peak

Activity of Fox Intermountain is at its peak, Rick Ricketson, operating head, said this week. Several new theatre openings are scheduled and a number of managerial shifts have been made. Of these Andy Cowan, owner of the Stadium, Caldwell, Idaho, has consolidated with Fox Intermountain, which has the American and the Roxy in that city. Mr. Cowan becomes city manager of the three houses. Verne Fletcher has succeeded Andy Samuels as manager of the Babcock, Billings, Mont. Tom Ward, formerly assistant manager at the Ogden, Denver, is now managing the Hiawatha, in that city.

Theatre openings include that of the new Fox Imperial, Alliance, Neb., seating 975 and costing $100,000, which will be ready for opening about December 15. This is said to be one of the finest theatres in western Nebraska. The Chief, Pocatello, Idaho, with a seating capacity of 1,300, will be opened the week before Christmas. The Serf, Las Vegas, N. M., was to open this week. The house, which seats 800, is said to have cost $60,000. Floyd Bender will be the manager. The Rex, Rock Springs, Wyo., has been leased to the Newberry department store.

Paramount London Session Attended by Zukor, Hicks

Adolph Zukor, in charge of production for Paramount, and John W. Hicks, Jr., in charge of Paramount foreign department, attended the two day session in London for Paramount representatives of Continental Europe and Great Britain, which was concluded on Sunday with screenings of "Ebb Tide" and several reels each of "The Buccaneer" and "Wells Fargo."

The meeting, which was held at Grosvenor House, and which was attended by more than 100 company representatives, was presided over by John Cecil Graham, in charge of Great Britain, and Fred W. Lange, in charge of Continental Europe.

BULLETS BRING DOWN SOARING CAMERAMAN

Al Mingalone, Paramount News cameraman, got more than he bargained for when he joined with other photographers at Old Orchard, Maine, in taking pictures in the air while hopping over automobiles, trees and golfers by means of clusters of balloons.

Mr. Mingalone had been experimenting by taking shots from an altitude of 40 feet when he proposed that more balloons be added to the cluster to keep him aloft. Three more gas filled balloons were attached and the cameraman again went up.

But this time the strain was too much for the quarter-inch anchor rope. It snapped and Mr. Mingalone, no longer restricted to a 40-foot flight, began soaring, much against his will.

The cameraman's colleagues and a host of spectators took up the chase as Mr. Mingalone climbed higher and higher and at the same time was being swept over hill and dale by a brisk wind.

After 13 miles of soaring, during which he reached an altitude of 2,000 feet, Mr. Mingalone's flight came to an end. The Rev. James J. Mullen, pastor of St. Margaret's Church of Old Orchard, checked the flight by dropping to his knee in a cornfield, taking a bead on the cluster of balloons and bursting several of them with rifle bullets.

Mr. Mingalone dropped to earth again, jarred but unhurt.

Ontario Epidemic Loss Estimated at $300,000

The infantile paralysis epidemic has brought an estimated financial loss of $300,000 to the theatres of Ontario over a period of five weeks. It is intimated that Famous Players Canadian Corp. alone has lost $250,000, the loss in Toronto's large downtown houses being estimated at $10,000 per week.

Many regular patrons have missed big productions which had been saved for season openings, but the neighborhood theatres are counting on a harvest in the weeks to come when they play the same pictures. There is a gradual return to normal in London, Ont., where the medical authorities have raised the ban on the admission of children to theatres.

Empire's Absorption Of Canadian "U" Is Near

Absorption of Canadian Universal Films, Ltd., has been practically completed by Empire Films, Ltd., although the Universal exchanges thus far have continued intact. I. J. Allen is now general sales manager, not only for product handled by Empire but of Universal as well. Clair Hague, Toronto representative for Universal, will continue to approve contracts.

Court's Approval Sought to Settle Paramount Suits

Litigants in an action brought by Paramount's trustee against officers and directors of the company from 1927 to 1931 have agreed upon a settlement, the terms of which will be presented to Alfred C. Coxe, federal judge, for his approval within the next ten days, according to Motion Picture Daily.

The action for accounting and damages was removed from the New York Supreme Court calendar this week while a second suit, naming former financial associates of the company as defendants, was postponed until October 29th, to permit closing of settlement negotiations.

The second suit seeks the recovery of profits alleged to have been made by the defendants through participation in a Paramount employees' stock purchase plan, and of sums said to have been lost by Paramount through such participation.

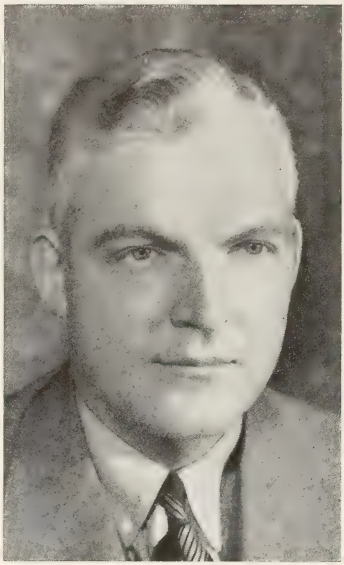
Judge Coxe, in approving the Paramount reorganization in 1935, specifically directed Charles D. Hilles, the continuing trustee, to continue the litigation to a conclusion. However, should Judge Coxe fail to approve the settlement, reported to be $2,150,000 in cash, it can be placed on the calendar again, attorneys explained.

The actions were instituted in 1933 and sought the recovery of approximately $12,000,000.

Theatre Owners Meeting in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana

Theatre owners of Ohio, Michigan and Indiana have set dates for meetings in September and October. In Ohio, P. J. Wood, secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners, has called a directors' meeting for Friday, for the consideration of some special matters in addition to the transactions of routine business.

Allied Theatres of Michigan is planning to hold its annual convention October 12 and 13 in Detroit, Ray Branch, new chairman of its state affairs committee, said. Commenting on the recent withdrawal of 60 theatres along with H. M. Ritchey, to join the Cooperative, Mr. Branch indicated that there is harmony between the two organizations and that their problems are "almost identical." The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana will hold its annual convention October 26th.



Company Meetings Planned by AMPA

Plans for a series of meetings at which each company would take over a session is being planned by the board of directors of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers. RKO virtually took over last week's meeting, except for the appearance of a former motion picture star, Olga Baclanova.

Oscar Straus, composer of the music for "Make a Wish," and Marion Clair, who sings several numbers in the picture, were on the dais with Ralph Rolan, president.

The meeting this week was cancelled, according to Mr. Rolan.

Ralph Rolan Joins RKO

RALPH ROLAN, vice-president in charge of promotion for March of Time, has resigned and Monday will take over a special executive position with the sales and advertising departments of RKO Radio Pictures. RKO's announcement said he will work with Jules Levy, general sales manager, and with S. Barret McCormick, advertising and publicity director. Mr. Rolan, president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, is a former newspaperman, having been employed on the Cleveland Plain Dealer. His career also includes serving as manager of radio station WHK, Cleveland, doing field observation work for General Motors and for seven years he was associated with Bruce Barton of Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborne. Mr. Rolan's duties at March of Time will be divided among Otis P Swift, who will handle publicity on the reel, and William Geer and John Wood.

LaGuardia at Screening Of March of Time Issue

Fiorello H. LaGuardia, mayor of New York, was guest of honor at a reception tendered him by Louis De Rochemont, March of Time director, at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria Wednesday. A special preview of the current issue of March of Time was held. It features events in Mr. LaGuardia's political career.

Mr. LaGuardia, March of Time announced, appeared frequently at the company's studios during the last month and personally reenacted significant incidents in his career.

Meeting of UA Partners Is Set; Action on Option

United Artists' partners will meet formally in November, prior to which Samuel Goldwyn and Alexander Korda are expected to file notification of their exercising options for the purchase of the company, reputedly for $6,000,000, from Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford.

Prior to leaving for Hollywood, Saturday, Dr. A. H. Giannini, president and chairman of the board, said that Mr. Chaplin is now on a cruise, Mr. Korda is due shortly from England, and Mary Pickford is vacationing with her husband, Buddy Rogers, in New York. No definite date in November has been set for the meeting, he said.

Meanwhile, from London comes word that Dr. Giannini and Oscar Deutsch of Odeon Theatres, have been elected to the board of United Artists, Ltd., in place of Arthur Kelly and Philip Guedella.

Notice of intention to exercise the options held by Samuel Goldwyn and Alexander Korda for the purchase of United Artists stock will be given Mr. Chaplin, Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Pickford shortly after the arrival of Mr. Korda from England in about three weeks, David Rose, vice-president and financial adviser of Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., said in New York before he sailed for London, last week. Mr. Rose said he would probably sail from England on the next trip of the Normandie.

Clubs Name "Ziegfeld" Best Picture in 1936

Mrs. William A. Burk, chairman of the West Coast reviewing committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, announced in Hollywood the committee's selection of the 10 best pictures of 1936, ranking "The Great Ziegfeld," MGM, as the highest.

Others, in order, are "San Francisco," MGM; "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," Columbia; "Dodsworth," Goldwyn-United Artists; "The Story of Louis Pasteur," Warner Brothers; "Anthony Adverse," Warner Brothers; "Winterset," RKO; "Fury," MGM; "Theodora Goes Wild," Columbia, and "Green Pastures," Warner Brothers.

Directors chosen as the most outstanding were Frank Capra, W. S. Van Dyke and John Ford.

The "bests" in actors, as chosen by the committee, are Paul Muni, Walter Huston and Spencer Tracy; the actresses, Luise Rainer, Irene Dunne and Gladys George. Child players selected as "bests" are Bonita Granville, Freddie Bartholomew and Shirley Temple.

Four Pine Bluff Censors; Omaha Board Considered

J. P. McGaughy, mayor of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, has named two men and two women to the city's censor board, which was created by ordinance in 1930. They are Mrs. Albert C. Ernst, Mrs. Fred V. Dickey, George C. Merkel and Andrew K. Matlock.

In Omaha, Dan Butler, Mayor, is reported to be considering the revival of the City welfare board and a board of censorship for film and stage plays.

MGM'S BROADCAST MOVE TURNING OTHER COMPANIES TO AIR SHOWS

Paramount and Warner Reported Considering Tieups; RKO Radio Signs Frank Healy as Contact Man at Studio

Loew's contractual arrangements with General Foods for a weekly one-hour air show using Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer talent was, as expected, formally announced this week, and, immediately, other major Hollywood producers—principally RKO, Paramount, Warners—were mentioned as seriously considering an extension of their activities in radio in a manner perhaps equally as formidable.

MGM's announcement immediately brought an attack by organized exhibitors, who, for a year or more, have been complaining against studios using their stars in broadcasts, or permitting their appearance, in competition described as being unfair to theatre box offices.

"We consider MGM's tieup with the General Foods radio program as decidedly unfair theatre competition in the broadest meaning of that term," P. J. Wood, secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, said at his headquarters in Columbus, Ohio. "We wired a protest against this sort of thing to Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew president, some time ago, in which we fully set forth the views of our organization, and we would like to see every exhibitor in the country vigorously protest to the MGM executives against the appearance of their stars on the air, regardless of the program, the sponsor, or the night of the broadcast," Mr. Wood continued, adding he proposed to follow up "in unmistakable terms" the protest filed in behalf of the Ohio exhibitor unit.

MGM Explains Plan

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's home office press department in New York sent the following statement to newspapers in explanation of its General Foods arrangement:

"The following story has been released by Benton and Bowles, advertising agents for General Foods:

"'Confirming recent rumors, one of the most spectacular contracts in radio's history has been signed between General Foods and Loew's, Inc., whereby Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will produce a weekly one-hour show on the air. This means that, barring previous commitments, stars, players and literary talent under contract to M-G-M will be available for a new Maxwell House Coffee program which will get under way on November 4th at 9 p. m., Eastern standard time, over the National Broadcasting Company Red network. This is the time of the present Maxwell House program. It is thought that this hour across the country conflicts least with theatre-going time, thereby enabling motion picture houses to secure the benefits of the publicity accruing from the film and radio tieup.

"'The contract provides for the first organized radio exploitation of a film company's talent by a single sponsor, and the first contractual assurance for a sponsor of a steady flow of topnotch motion picture talent for broadcast purposes.

"'The new radio series to be produced by M-G-M will probably come from a special theatre on the film company's lot in Culver City. The show will provide a weekly 'free pass,' so to speak, into movieland where motion picture and radio fans can see films in the making, rub elbows with stars, extras, script girls, scenic designers and makeup men, all the varied and glamorous population of the M-G-M lot.

"'Stars, authors, song writers, directors, orchestras and featured players of every classification will lend their talents to making the program an outstanding 60 minutes of drama, music and comedy. All of the important M-G-M pictures will be previewed with the stars playing the roles they essay on the screen.

"'With the inauguration of the new show, the present Maxwell House program, 'Cap'n Henry's Show Boat,' will be temporarily discontinued after some 265 consecutive broadcasts, one of the longest runs in radio history.'"

Radio Status of Stars

The phrase "previous commitments," in the foregoing statement, it is presumed, refers to Nelson Eddy and Jeanette MacDonald, both of whom are under contract for radio appearances to opposing sponsors.

However, it has been indicated that despite other radio contractual commitments, both of these players will be available for use on the M-G-M-General Foods show as "guests."

Nothing has been said, however, about the radio status of Greta Garbo, who has remained aloof from the air. The series will be offered over 63 stations.

Agency Expanding

General Foods' expansion in Hollywood has apparently prompted its agency, Benton and Bowles—one of the largest advertising units handling broadcasts for national advertisers—to likewise expand its California activities. William Baker, Jr., a partner in B. and B., was this week named head of the Hollywood headquarters of the agency. Herschel V. Williams, Jr., has been assigned to production responsibilities in the New York office of the agency. Donald Cope has been put in charge of radio production on the coast, Chester MacCracken and Burns Lee in charge of publicity.

Mr. Baker joined Benton and Bowles in 1933 as an account executive on the General Foods account. He was appointed vice-president in 1935.

Others Consider Tieups

RKO, Paramount and Warner Brothers were immediately mentioned in Coast reports as considering extended radio tieups.

Rubey Cowan, Paramount radio contract man, said Wednesday in New York that "Paramount is planning a return to an air program such as the "Paramount on Parade" program which was discontinued last spring, or like Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's General Food Show. "The only interest Paramount has in radio is selling players either as guest artists for air programs or with sponsored shows," he said, adding that his trip to New York was solely to engender good will between the studio and advertising agencies. He planned a return to the coast Saturday after a trip through eastern and midwestern cities which, according to a studio explanation, will have the purpose "of listening to certain novelty types of radio entertainment that can be lined up to see what picture possibilities performers might have."

RKO Signs Frank Healy

RKO also is becoming interested in a possible deal for a radio show exploiting its talent, having signed Frank Healy as studio radio contact man—Mr. Healy's initial duties, however, will be confined to getting the maximum benefit out of radio programs using RKO talent and music.

The report involving Warners said that Thomas D. McAvity had arrived in Hollywood to develop new studio-air activities for that company, reputedly made possible under the tieup with Warner Brothers consummated in New York with J. L. Warner whereby Lord and Thomas, agency, will have first call on Warner picture names with complete studio cooperation and all facilities, besides air previews of new Warner pictures.

The first show slated is for the American Tobacco Company, a new national air program to replace "Your Hit Parade," for Lucky Strike, with Dick Powell as master of ceremonies. It is tentatively titled "Your Hollywood Parade." Don Becker of Transamerica Radio Corporation, and Peter Dickson, script writer, accompanied Mr. McAvity on the trip and the trio prepared the first continuities permitting auditioning for sponsor approval within three weeks.

Columbia Artists, Inc., Active

Columbia Artists, Inc., a division of Columbia Broadcasting, has extended its managerial activities to include the contracting of talent in the writing, producing and directing fields, marking the first time that Columbia Artists has assumed as part of its regular operation the handling of talent other than performers and announcers.

Lawrence W. Lowman, vice-president in charge of operations of CBS, yesterday said that management contracts have already been signed with Brewster Morgan, Irving Reis, Earl McGill, William Robson and Nila Mack.

BILL WOULD REQUIRE ANTHEM IN THEATRE

After visiting Canada where "God Save the King" is played after each performance in motion picture theatres, Miss Dorothea Lawrence, opera singer of Plainfield, New Jersey, has announced she will petition the United States congressman from her district to sponsor a bill, making it compulsory for exhibitors to have the national anthem played after each show.

In a letter to Sam Blake, who handles publicity for Miss Lawrence, she explained that she believed the practice would arouse patriotism.

STUDIO LABOR CONTROL ISSUE IN CONFERENCE

Bioff Meets Producers; IATSE Emphasizes Interest in Low Bracket Employees

The struggle for industry wide jurisdiction of motion picture talent and labor went into the conference stage this week with the factions clearly divided and each side reiterating its stand on the issue; the bid of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees for control of all production employees, and the professional guilds' determination to speak for themselves.

William Bioff, coast head of the IATSE, and production executives headed by Joseph Schenck, began discussions in Hollywood in an effort to settle the dispute, and the IATSE, in its first public statement since its claims were announced, said it was not interested in the high salaried workers but was seeking to protect the welfare of the lower bracket employees.

A meeting of Associated Artists and Artistes of America, called in New York at the request of the Screen Actors Guild to discuss the IATSE claim, was cancelled with the intimation that the Guild would seek clarification of the union's aims and possibly carry the fight to the executive council of the American Federation of Labor.

Hearing on the Screen Writers' Guild petition for recognition as bargaining agent to the exclusion of Screen Playwrights was postponed by the California Regional Labor Relations Board from Monday to Thursday. Paramount, answering a summons to appear at the hearing with other producers, attacked the constitutionality of the Wagner Act and its applicability to the film industry.

The IATSE statement defending its claims was in the form of an open letter to Robert Montgomery, president of the Actors' Guild; Charles Brackett, acting president of the Writers' Guild, and Lewis Milestone, acting president of the Directors' Guild. It was signed by Harland Holmden, vice-president of the IATSE.

Mr. Holmden pointed out that the IATSE had obtained 20 per cent increases for its members and had assisted other organizations in the last two years to obtain closed shop conditions.

"We do not believe that you have any interest in the small salaried individual and his working conditions," the letter read. "We do believe, however, you are holding on to these people and giving them nothing. They, in turn, are greatly contributing to your protection through their combined memberships and you, better than anyone else, fully realize the value of this."

Pointing out that various leaders of the guilds had advised members to stick together, Mr. Holmden said, "You know and I know that producers can not and dare not tell you not to join the IATSE as the law of the land prevents just that. How false these leaders are to their trust in doing the bidding of employers against the welfare of those they are supposed to protect is self-evident by a glance back over the past to see what has been done to date by the so-called guild leaders for their membership. This is easily and truthfully answered by just one word—'nothing.' The memberships have received only the well known run around which is as the producers had planned it."

Mr. Holmden added the IATSE did not need additional membership but would open the door to those seeking admission.

A meeting of the Associated Artists and Artistes of America, scheduled for last Friday at the request of the Screen Actors to discuss the IATSE claims, was cancelled at the last minute, also at the request of the Guild. While the Four A's is the parent AFL organization for the talent unions it has not received any official notification from the IATSE of the jurisdiction claim. The Screen Actors' Guild, however, may proceed on its own initiative to determine from the IATSE how its jurisdictional claims affect the Guild and on what basis it is being advanced.

The Guild could then present its case to the board of the Four A's which would then be in a position to take definite steps either by interceding with the IATSE or appealing to the AFL executive board. Guild executives, discussing the situation, have pointed out that their organization is duly chartered as an accredited AFL union and has actively organized its chartered field.

Writers' Hearing Postponed

Special trial examiners for the hearing on the Screen Writers' Guild petition to the Regional Labor Board for designation as the sole collective bargaining agent for studio writers were unable to be present at the scheduled time on Monday and the case was postponed to Thursday.

In answer to a subpoena requiring the presence of studio executives at the hearing Paramount last Saturday through its attorneys filed a statement attacking the applicability of the Wagner Act to the motion picture industry and the constitutionality of the act, claiming that it vests discretionary powers in the labor board without supplying a definite set of rules for it to follow.

The statement, concurred in later by Selznick International, Major Pictures and Walter Wanger, claimed that the production of pictures per se is not interstate as required by the act and that the Wagner Act is not applicable to the film industry inasmuch as it violates the fifth amendment to the Constitution. Also set forth was the claim that the act is confiscatory without due process of law, that it is unconstitutional in that it gives discretionary powers to the board to call employees' elections without prescribing procedure, and that the studio signed an agreement for collective bargaining with Screen Playwrights, Inc., last February.

A $200,000 libel suit developed last week out of the controversy among the writers. Basis for the suit in which the Playwrights asked actual and punitive damages from the Guild was the alleged publication of a letter in which it was charged the Screen Playwrights organization was formed "by the producers and a small group of writers for the express purpose of wrecking the Screen Writers' Guild with tactics of a typical company union."

Further extracts from the letter, as given in the complaint, said, "The language of the Screen Playwrights, Inc., was and is the language of Tom Girdler and the Johnstown Citizens' Committee.

"They broke the Guild all right, but at the cost of the respect of all decent people in the industry. We are going before the National Labor Relations Board with an overwhelming majority of writers asking designation as writers' representatives for bargaining."

The letter was signed by Philip Dunne, who is one of the defendants, and was addressed to P. G. Wodehouse, British writer, according to the complaint which further charged that the document was published in circulars by the Guild.

Time Asks Newsreel Status

The March of Time was included in the Screen Actors' Guild list of approved producers last week pending further action by the company on clarification of its position in refusing to sign a contract with the Guild, demanded in that organization's drive for a closed shop in eastern studios. The company will appeal to the Guild board of directors or will seek to effect a settlement with Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary, who is now in New York. Pending such action March of Time officials informed the Guild office that it would conform with all provisions of the Guild contract, although maintaining its position that it is a newsreel and therefore does not have to sign.

Stagehand Contract Ready

A new contract between stage producers and Theatrical Protective Union No. 1, the New York stagehands' organization, restoring the 1932 wage cuts, was to be signed this week following approval by the union membership last Sunday. The two-year agreement increases the pay of department heads to $82.50 weekly from $75 and that of stagehands from $50 to $54 a week.

The Boston Stagehands' union reached a verbal agreement with Mullins and Pinanski, RKO, Loew's and several small circuit houses for restoration of pay cuts made in 1931.

ASCAP CONSIDERS LABOR UNION MOVE

Plans for seeking a labor union status for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to free it from litigation charging monopoly and to aid in combating adverse legislation were discussed at the quarterly meeting of the society's board of directors this week.

The principal proposals advanced involve application for an American Federation of Labor charter as a composers' and authors' guild or effecting an alliance with the American Federation of Musicians. No decisive action was taken.

Two Houses Acquired

Gibraltar Enterprises, Inc., has increased its number of houses to 27 with the acquisition of two theatres in New Mexico—the Pastime at Springer, and the Loma at Socorro. Both houses will be remodeled.

Ross with Bren

Frank Ross, husband of Jean Arthur and a comparative newcomer in the motion picture business, is now assisting Milton Bren, vice-president in charge of production for Hal Roach.

Lou Brown, for many years publicity man for Loew's in Washington and Baltimore, has been transferred to the home office publicity department, where he will work on press manuals with Art Schmidt.

Social Duty

It is an implied and not invariably unpleasant duty of members of this bureau to be present at an almost continual round of company picnics, golf tournaments and similar extraneous diversions. Always these events happen on Sunday, when a fellow who likes to dive into waves would prefer to be at the beach.

Since some time in May, we've been around to about a dozen of these golf tournaments, picnics and whatnot, where the elect forget their dignity for the moment and mingle with the hoi polloi. Usually the events are held some place eighty miles from nowhere, which is convincing evidence that the location-finding crews are not completely derelict in their duty. After you get to the place, meantime having gotten mad at half a dozen service station attendants who couldn't tell you where you wanted to go, you run up against a lot of people you never saw before. After wandering around a while, wishing you were at the beach and vowing never to be a sucker again, somebody from the publicity department grabs you and wants to know "where in hell you've been all the time."

But no matter how long you've been wandering around like a lost soul, you're still in time for the real fun. Somebody hands you a paper plate, cup, fork and spoon, and you get about a ton of barbecued meats, ice cream, hard boiled eggs, potato salad and, always—it never varies—two warm, ripe olives and a piece of pickle. Then you watch the entertainment. Actors do bits that they wouldn't do for producers, no matter how much they paid them. There are all kinds of races. There's a bathing beauty contest, and some stenographer or clerk who wins always looks more attractive than the most glamorous screen figure.

All the time somebody is putting a liquid refreshment in your hand. When the publicity department sends out a press release describing the event, it always tells how many were there, how much of everything was eaten, the good time everybody had. And there's always a row of statistics proving that if all the soft drink bottles were laid end to end they'd reach from here to New York or Shanghai or the North Pole. Nobody ever says anything about how far all the barrels, bottles and cans containing more volatile refreshments would reach. You get a slight idea of the span later in the evening, however, when, somewhat dizzily, you realize that you've got to go to work the next morning.

But it's all done for "business reasons." Along about Tuesday one begins to wonder why.

Production at Par

Production continued on an even keel as the summer of 1937 passed into history and autumn's bright blue days, which, oddly, are always foggy in the mornings, commenced. Nine productions started; an equal number were completed.

That there should be no lack of work for the attaches at RKO-Radio studio and, more importantly for the theatre field, that release commitments might be accommodated, three films were started. The combination of Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern, Victor Moore and Helen Broderick will function again in "She's Got That Swing." Billy Gilbert, William Brisbane and Alan Bruce also will contribute their talents. Joseph Santley is the director. For the next several weeks, Al Santell will be busy directing "Having a Wonderful Time." This romantic comedy will present Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Richard Skelton, Peggy Conklin, Eve Arden, Lucille Ball, Dorothy Moore, Kay Sutton and the company's newest dancing discovery, Ann Miller. The title indicates that it will be a comedy, and, under Howard Hawks' direction, it is the intent of Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant, Leona Roberts, George Irving and Wesley Barry that comedy is likewise what "Bringing Up Baby" shall be.

Two pictures were started at Warner studio. Another "Adventure" story arises to take its place along with the "Adventures of Marco Polo" and those of "Tom Sawyer." It is "The Adventures of Robin Hood," which is being produced in color. Principals are Errol Flynn, Olivia DeHavilland, Ian Hunter, Claude Rains, Basil Rathbone, Patric Knowles, Alan Hale (occupying the same role in which he appeared nearly a generation ago), Herbert Mundin, Melville Cooper and Una O'Connor. Directorial responsibilities were assigned to William Keighley. The second feature is "Blondes at Work," a "Torchy Blane" newspaper woman detective yarn, which again will team Glenda Farrell and Barton MacLane as stars. Frank McDonald will direct.

"Forgotten Women," which Columbia started, is a romance. Personalities to be seen, under Lambert Hillyer's direction, are: Wynn Cahoon, Scott Colton, Mayo Methot, Sarah Padden, Arthur Loft, Mary Russell, Margaret Armstrong, John Tyrell and Dick Curtis.

Some of the drama, romance and adventure of the Sino-Japanese situation moves to Hollywood as Paramount embarks upon the production of "Daughter of Shanghai." Of interest because of its subject matter, the film may be important in that it returns Anna May Wong to the screen in company with Phillip Ahn, Charles Bickford, Anthony Quinn, Larry Crabbe, J. Carrol Naish, Evelyn Brent, Cecil Cunningham, Frank Scully and Lucien Littlefield. Robert Florey is the director.

As China comes to Hollywood, Warner Oland moves over to the French Riviera to be seen in "Charlie Chan at Monte Carlo." Others making the visionary trip are Key Luke, Virginia Field, Sidney Blackmer, Robert Kent, Kay Linaker, Harold Huber and Edward Raquello. Eugene Forde is directing.

Universal's new undertaking is "Prescription for Romance," a love story. It will present Wendy Barrie, Kent Taylor, Mischa Auer, Frank Jenks, Dorothea Kent, William Lundigan and Henry Hunter. The director is S. Sylvan Simon.

NEW YORK COLUMNIST IN HOLLYWOOD

Awaiting start of the "Great Garrick" preview, New York's Ed Sullivan, latest recruit to Hollywood's regiment of resident columnists, asked Mervyn LeRoy how the picture looked.

"Dunno," was the answer, "it hasn't made a nickel yet."

Five Finish Films

With two each, three studios accounted for six of the nine finished films. Three others checked in one each.

Republic's "Manhattan Merry Go Round," a topical musical romance, will have Phil Regan, Leo Carillo, Ann Dvorak, James Gleason, Tamara Geva, Kay Thompson and her singers, Ted Lewis and his band, Joe DiMaggio, Henry Armetta, Dorothy Paige, Selmer Jackson, Max Terhune, Louis Prima, Gene Autry and Smiley Burnette on the screen. Charles Reisner directed. Important personalities in "Springtime in the Rockies," a romantic adventure story, are Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Polly Rowles, Alan Bridge, George Chesebro, Ruth Bacon, Jane Hunt and Ula Love. Joe Kane directed.

The Ben Pivar production, "Mr. Boggs Buys a Barrel," was completed for Grand National It will offer Stuart Erwin, Helen Chandler, Toby Wing, Tully Marshall, Spencer Charters, Otis Harlan, Walter Bryon, Harry Tyler, Milburn Stone, Nora Cecil and Harrison Greene. Gordon Wiles directed. "Frontier Town," an Ed Finney outdoor action story, moved to the cutting rooms. Tex Ritter, Ann Evers, Snub Pollard, Horace Murphy, Charles King, Forrest Taylor, Lynton Brent and Karl Hackett will be among those present. Ray Taylor directed.

Of the two from Warners, "Accidents Will Happen," directed by William Clements, has as principals Gloria Blondell, Ronald Regan, Dick Purcell, Hugh O'Connell, Kenneth Harlan and Sheila Bromley. The cast of "The Patient in Room 18" includes Ann Sheridan, Patric Knowles, Rosella Towne and Vicki Lester. Bobby Connolly directed.

Columbia finished "Carnival Lady." It will feature Charles Quigley, Rita Hayworth, Donald Kirk, Dwight Frye, Marc Lawrence, Arthur Loft and Marjorie Main. C. C. Coleman, Jr., directed.

"Borrowing Trouble," a further number in the "Jones Family" series, was finished at Twentieth Century-Fox. The familiar cast of Jed Prouty, Spring Byington, Shirley Dean, Russell Gleason, Florence Roberts, June Carlson, Billy Mahan and George Ernest will appear, as will Douglas Fowley. Frank Strayer directed.

The last of the completed picture is the R. N. Bradbury produced and directed feature for Monogram, "Where Trails Divide." The second Tom Keene film for the company, it will also present Tom Keene, Eleanor Stewart, Warner Richmond, Lorraine Randall, Charles French and the necessary supporting complement of western menaces, riders and shooters.

Vitaphone to Offer 128 Short Subjects

Vitaphone reopened its Brooklyn studio on Monday and during the 1937-'38 season the company plans to release a total of 128 short subjects. Of the total 68 will be one-reel subjects, 24 two-reel pictures, and 36 cartoons. Of the cartoons, 20 will be "Merrie Melodies" and 16 will be "Looneytoons."

The Great Garrick

(Warner-Mervyn LeRoy)

Comedy Satire

Mervyn LeRoy took a chance when he made "The King and the Chorus Girl" with unknown Fernand Gravet in the leading role. He was courageous when he produced "They Won't Forget." Again, with "The Great Garrick," he displays no hesitancy to step out of the beaten path. To the eye, this chapter from the life of England's greatest mid-eighteeenth century actor is a period costume play. As it appeals to the mind it is a breezy, refreshing, up-to-date satire comedy carrying a unique romantic contrast. For quick understanding "The Great Garrick" may, in many ways, be considered the same kind of a picture as "The Guardsman" was. As such it provides a lot of amusing entertainment which should be grasped readily by specialized audiences that appreciate the importance of artistry. But with experience garnered from playing or knowing about "The Guardsman," alert exhibitors easily should find within the piece ample opportunity to interest the rank and file.

While long in running time and occasionally seemingly overburdened with dialogue (it is difficult to see how any of it could be left out), the picture does sustain interest, through the combined influences of good plot and story content, expert acting, intelligent direction and quality production technique and detail. Artistry in all phases of picture making processes may not mean much to ordinary audiences, but the entertainment which the film provides should.

In the story, "David Garrick," lion of the British theatre 160 years ago, has been invited to appear with the Comedy Francaise. An egotistic popinjay, he deliberately insults the French stage and audiences, but nevertheless announces that he will proceed to Paris and show them how a real actor can act. The French troupe, made aware of his opinion, sets out to deflate his ego.

To give this fabulous man a proper hazing, the Comedy Francaise producer, "Picard," engages a French wayside inn at which "Garrick" must stop en route to Paris and installs his actors as attaches. As they proceed to the enactment of a wild and woolly melodrama, calculated to frighten their guest, a bit of chicanery which "Garrick" immediately sees through but permits to continue, the entertainment provided by the actor-flunkeys is high-class comedy satire. To one "Germaine," also a presumed guest of the inn, "Garrick" becomes romantically attached. He believes she is only one of the troupe, and not a very expert one at that. But when the denouement comes and "Ricard" et al., and not "Garrick," are the hazing victims, this master professor of all human emotions learns that "Germaine" was not part of the game. Not until he can apologize to her from the stage of Comedy Francaise, confess that she alone taught him much about emotion, does he proceed to the first scenes of the play in which he had been engaged to star.

It may be that "The Great Garrick," which we have elected to identify as a "specialized" attraction, will intrigue the critics and those artistically inclined persons who appreciate the importance of fine books, cars, educated companions, nice homes and environments. But if a combination of satirical comedy, situation comedy, character comedy, grotesque farce, sympathetic and romantic comedy means anything to the great masses of paying customers, they, too, should find "The Great Garrick" enjoyable.

Previewed in Warners' Hollywood theatre, in Hollywood. The audience, skeptical at first because it saw a lot of period costumes, quickly fell into the spirit of the story. Of course there were some walkouts, a circumstance that can be expected in many of the houses in which the film may play, but for the most part, the auditors watched the picture attentively. Particularly they appeared to appreciate the work of Brian Aherne as "Garrick." A less accomplished actor might have gone overboard many times and "hammed" the role, but Aherne didn't.—GUS MCCARTHY.

There Goes the Groom

(RKO)

Farce

Any attempt to describe fully the antics, capers and humor of "There Goes the Groom" is futile in that there are so many facets, all polished, which surround the delectably insane story of a money mad mother, her two beautiful daughters, and a wealthy young man who is returning, after a three-year gold hunting trip in Alaska, to claim his sweetheart.

Burgess Meredith, stage star whose only film appearance was in RKO's grim drama from the footlights, "Winterset," given a different, yet in some respects similar, characterization. As Mio, in "Winterset," he was a dreamer bent on a material purpose of clearing his father's name. In "There Goes the Groom," as Dick Mathews, he is still the dreamer, embarked on the somewhat dreamy purpose of finding the girl who promised to wait for him under an oak tree where he had proposed to her. In the cast are Louise Henry, the spur of his fortune hunt; Ann Sothern, her younger sister, who always has been in love with him; Mary Boland, as the girl's mother—ambitious for them and, by forcing herself into the situation, for herself; William Brisbane, as the girl's brother, interested only in retaining Mathews' friendship while he bleeds him on stock deals for which he gets fat commissions, and Onslow Stevens, as the physician friend of the family, fiance of Mathews' former sweetheart, who is called in when Mathews feigns amnesia to rid himself of his obligations to the family.

Then, too, are added the widely known Roger Imhof, as the boys' Alaska pal who attempts to steer him away from women, marriage and that particular family; and Sumner Getchell, George Irving, Lena Roberts and Adrian Morris, in more or less comedy roles.

Injected into the story is that new fashioned brand of slapstick, its effect the same as in the days of the silents, combined with situation and dialogue in such a manner that it is now styled under the general heading, erroneous as it may be, of "sophistication."

Dick Mathews, upon his return with wealth from Alaska, finds that Janet Russell has not waited for him but is engaged to Dr. Becker. Betty, her younger sister, who is in love with him, comforts him, and he proposed to her, despite the protests of Hank, his Yukon days buddy. The girls' mother, anxious that one of the girls marry wealth, proceeds with great glee in the wedding preparations, incidents of which sicken Dick, who feigns amnesia. His ruse is discovered, and while in Dr. Becker's sanitarium he is thrown into ice water through the plotting of Betty, hurt that he avoided marrying her. In the showdown she exposes her family and he and she are reunited. The final fadeout shows them embracing as they inadvertently fall into the ice water filled pool.

CHANGE IN PROJECTOR APERTURE PROPOSED BY ACADEMY COUNCIL

Dimensions More Closely Approximating Those of Camera Aperture Suggested To Prevent Elimination of Material

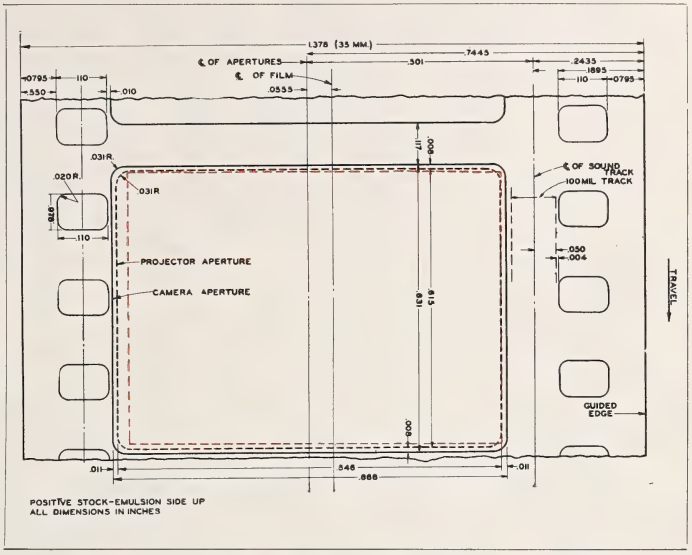
by GEORGE SCHUTZ

As a means of preventing the elimination of significant pictorial and dramatic material from the projected picture, the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has proposed a change in the projector aperture, extending it to dimensions more closely approximating those of the camera aperture.

The present standard width, adopted in 1932, of .825-inch, would become .815; the present height of .600 would become .615.

Academy's Objective

The proposal represents an attempt of the Academy to eradicate a condition which has become more of an evil as more of the camera aperture range has come to embrace critical material, placing important dramatic or contributory elements in the peripheral areas of the frame, which areas are now rather substantially cut off by the projector aperture. The Academy proposal follows a recommendation made by the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, at that body's convention in Hollywood last spring, also suggesting that action be taken to stop the elimination of peripheral critical material. The SMPE committee, however, proposed that critical material be confined to areas that would be photographed well within the camera aperture so that the existing standard aperture could be effectively retained.



Same Purpose

The Academy action, which, it is said, was taken without consultation with the Projection Practice Committee, has the same purpose as the recommendation of this committee, but definitely indicates the reluctance of the production community to consider any constriction of action areas.

The recommendation of the Projection Practice Committee last spring called for confinement of critical material in the frame to an area .005-inch smaller on all sides than the dimensions of the present standard projector aperture.

By recentering the projector aperture so that it is in line with the camera aperture, the Research Council proposal would place exactly one-half of the increase in width and height on each side of the horizontal and vertical center lines. This would result in a reduction of the vertical framing tolerance to (one half .031 minus .615 equals) .088-inch, whereas the present tolerance is .0155-inch. Side tolerances are similarly reduced from .0215 to .0115. Such reduced tolerances, particularly the vertical tolerances affecting the maintenance of the image in frame, are regarded by some persons in projection circles as highly undesirable.

It is also pointed out that with the reduction of the lateral (sidewise) tolerance, placing both camera and projector apertures on the same center might lead, in some prints, to lateral misframing because of film shrinkage, which is said to amount occasionally to as much as two per cent. The present standard camera and projector apertures are off center laterally precisely for the purpose of allowing for film shrinkage.

New Standard Projector Aperture proposed by the Academy Research Council. Dotted red lines indicate the present standard projector aperture.

Changes in Theatres

The Academy proposal, if it were to effect its purpose, would require changing the apertures of approximately 34,000 theatre projectors in the United States alone and of course would apply throughout the world, wherever Hollywood product is a dominant entertainment factor. Similarly, the dimensions of the image would be somewhat increased.

The Research Council committee submitting the new projector aperture recommendation is composed of Grove Laube, chairman; John Aalberg, Sidney Burton, Fank Cahill, Wallace Castle, Merle Chamberlain, C. Roy Hunter, Ray June, E. A. McClintock, Arthur Miller, Virgil Miller, Thomas Moulton, Emil Oster, Harry Rubin, William Rudolph, Herb Starkey, Homer G. Tasker and Ray Wilkinson.

lease presents John Wayne in the type of characterization experimented with in his previous vehicle, "I Cover the War"—that of a clean-hearted hero who is given comedy lines in an otherwise serious melodrama in order to widen the appeal of the film.

Wayne is supported by Sheila Bromley, Charles Brokaw, Billy Burrud and less known players. It contains some thrilling ice hockey stock shots, some of which stand alone and others used in composite shots showing Wayne as the mainstay of his team.

The old-fashioned hokum, used in many an action melodrama, is given a new dressing by George Waggner, who wrote the original story and, with Harold Buckley, turned out the screenplay, and by Arthur Lubin, director, who has many pictures of this type to his credit.

Wayne, as Johnny Hanson, is presented as a country lad who turns to professional ice hockey to raise sufficient money to add to his chicken farm. Becoming the mainstay of the Panthers team, he is approached by Gambler Jack Irwin to throw the final cup series. He refuses and Irwin sends Helen Dale to lure him. The plot fails because they both fall in love. Irwin then sends his henchmen to injure Hanson, but little Bobby, Hanson's pal, is the victim of the planned taxi crash. Hanson, hearing of the accident, is confused, and pretends to be injured in the second game of the series. The opponents win, and Hanson is taken to the hospital, where he is kept under covers until the second half of the final and deciding game, to come to the ring to lead his team to victory.

Thunder Trail

(Paramount)

Western Melodrama

The ways and means of notifying the populace that a Zane Grey story is on tap are among the more established box office devices of a profession to the rounding out of which these enduring documentations of the old west have contributed much. This, according to reaction of a preview audience is an occasion on which a bit of stepping up and letting out is in order, for the picture appears to have more and better action, thrills and suspense than is par for the product.

The names available are many if not mighty. Monte Blue is back in a prominent role, Gilbert Roland rides again, and William Duncan plays a brief assignment according to Hoyle. Marsha Hunt, J. Carrol Naish, Charles Bickford, James Craig and Billy Lee also merit mention. There is something to be said here, too, if not in the billing, about Karl Struss, cinematographer, whose contribution to the total quality of the production is substantial.

The story, in bare outline, recalls others in the same general vein. Brothers are separated in boyhood and grow to manhood under the varying influences of the old west, recognizing each other at last during a terrific personal encounter and joining forces to defeat the villain whose machinations have clouded their lives and to avenge the murder of their parents. In detail, however, the story departs from routine channels and bristles with spectacular incident and unusual situation.

Charles Barton directed from a screen play by Robert Yost and Stuart Anthony, the three sticking closely to the spirit and substance of the Grey original.

Madame X

(MGM)

Stage Play

Box office precedent for "Madame X" is rather too well established and defined to suggest specific reference here. The tragic role of the mother, portrayed now by Gladys George, has been taken by many ranking emotional stars of stage and screen in their ascendency and is among the fixed and possibly perpetual entertainment and commercial values. Miss George's interpretation of it brought adjectives flying from a not especially prejudiced preview audience.

Showmen who value their patrons' satisfaction equally with their attendance will want to know that the production given the play takes full advantage of modern technique and is fitted snugly to modern standards without disturbing the playwright's placement of the story in time or place. It is a Sam Wood production.

Warren William, John Beal, Reginald Owen, Henry Daniell and Lynne Carver are the supporting names perhaps most useful. Miss George, naturally, dominates the picture, endowing the stellar character with a vigorous realism in sharp and favorable contrast to the limp and lachrymal aspects of it emphasized by various predecessors.

It would seem hardly necessary to synopsize the familiar story beyond saying that again the upright son, unaware of a sinned against but also sinning mother, strives mightily to clear her of a murder charge and that again she dies at curtain fall.

Miss George's past performances and her present portrayal suggest that it may be well for exhibitors to prepare for the probability of her becoming, anon, a box office ace.

Previewed at the Uptown theatre, Los Angeles, to the evident satisfaction of all present.—William R. Weaver.

The Bride Wore Red

(MGM)

Continental Deception

"The Bride Wore Red" is an adaptation of Ferenc Molnar's play, "The Girl from Trieste." The picture tells of a daring deception into which has been woven a three-sided romance. Trieste, where the picture begins, is an Italian waterfront town. Torreno, the spot in which the denouement takes place, is an exclusive resort in the Tyrolean Alps. The locales are Continental European, as are the characters. The spirit of the picture is also Continental. Quality of production technique is superior.

The plot takes the premise that only a change of environment, money and a lot of expensive clothes are necessary to make a lady of anyone. "Count Armalia" determines to prove it to doubting "Rudi Pal." Taking "Anni," entertainer in a cheap waterfront dive, endowing her with all the supposed necessities, the girl herself seeming miraculously to have mastered all the social niceties, he sends her to exclusive Torreno. There she fools herself into believing that she is a lady. She more than convinces skeptic "Rudi," who falls so much in love with her that he is willing to jilt his fiancee. The only one she doesn't fool is "Giulio," philosophical and poetic mountain postman, telegrapher and flute player in the village band. Her two weeks are a combination of happiness and torment until she tells all. "Rudi," thankful that he was not a victim of the deception, returns to his fiancee. But Giulio," who knew or suspected all the time, is quite content that "Anni" will marry him and share his mountain cabin.

The plot, though not exactly novel, nevertheless is intriguing. It might be more interesting, might promise to hold general audience attention more strongly but for the fact that there is so much dialogue and so little action. Long speeches, prolonged conversations and discussions detract noticeably, so much so that while a certain number of the sophisticates may find the photoplay amusing, it does not seem likely that the rank and file of the customers, save those to whom any doings of Miss Crawford, Miss Burke, Franchot Tone, Robert Young and others in the cast are matters requiring their strict attention would be extraordinarily interested. As a matter of fact, it appears that the picture was made with an eye towards satisfying the fancies of the Crawford clientele. Logically the showmanship availability of the picture rests to a great extent upon the pulling power of her name. According to FAME she is the seventh ranking box office star of 1936.

Previewed at the Village theatre, Hollywood. Sitting up in the balcony, it was quite evident that the patrons wearied of the long dialogue and the sags and letdowns permitted to creep in. Yet, mingling with the crowd leaving the theatre many differing opinions were heard. Some thought it was the kind of picture that Miss Crawford does so well; others made less favorable remarks. The percentage of those who thought it worthwhile and those who thought it boring seemed about equally divided. —G. M.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

"NEWS" (publicity) from David Oliver Selznick's New York offices at United Artists informs us that 6,000 years from now, Mr. Selznick's "A Star Is Born" will be reissued to be run off before a select audience of future historians. Mr. Selznick has given a print to Dr. Thornwell Jacobs, president of Oglethorpe University, for inclusion, with other "relics" of the present period, in a crypt in the Appalachian Mountains to remain until opened in 8113 A.D.

"This plan, for the first time in world history, provides for the preservation of records which otherwise would be lost as the centuries roll on," asserts Mr. Selznick's "NEWS" (publicity.)

Here Mr. Selznick has been aware of a plan for preserving film 6,000 years, the while Eastman Kodak, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the United States Government's Department of Archives, Du-Pont Film, and others, have been searching and researching and researching and searching for a formula which would preserve film for at least 50 years. Mr. Selznick really should communicate in a hurry with either John G. Bradley, Archives building, Washington, D.C., or the SMPE's Committee on Film Preservation.

The Hollywood producer who has signed a contract with a pig is pretty slow in admitting it.

Beauty, a Duroc Jersey gilt, four months old, owned by Theodore White, in Union Star, Missouri, is the pig. Unlike most movie stars imported by Hollywood, Beauty has a pedigree.

Beauty will first appear at the Sedalia State Fair, in Missouri, getting $35 a day. Then she will appear at the American Royal in Kansas City. These engagements completed, Beauty will head westward to cash in on her Hollywood movie contract. A real ham actor.

The Department of Agriculture in Washington is in the middle of a controversy over which way pigs' tails twist. Some say they turn to the left, some say they are reactionary and swing to the right, and some say a pig whose tail turns in neither direction is a pig of low vitality. Hollywood could settle the dispute in two shakes of a pig's tail by having Beauty do a slow-movie.

MORE TRUTH THAN POETRY

Paramount's "Summer Romance" will have a song entitled: "Two Features, a Preview, a Newsreel, a Popeye, a Set of Dishes, Keeno, Screeno and You." It goes like this:

Two features, a preview, a newsreel,
A Popeye, a set of dishes,
Keeno, Screeno and you.
An organ solo during entire intermission —
And all of that for ten cents admission.

A kid of ten went to the movies,
Then he disappeared;
He stayed to see the entire show
And came out with a beard!

You get your money's worth —
The greatest show on earth —
Two features, a preview, a newsreel,
A Popeye, a set of dishes,
Keeno, Screeno and you!

The Brothers Warner will shortly release "Hollywood Hotel," but with their respective tongues carefully placed in their left cheeks. Featured in the film is Benny Goodman, styled the "King of Swing" music. Benny now is the target of attack from the region of Professor Arthur Cremin, director of the New York Schools of Music, who is driving for legislation against swing music on the ground that it is "very bad for morals."

Professor Cremin says he conducted "laboratory experiments," placing a girl and a boy in a room (probably softly lighted and comfortably appointed, and probably right in the New York Schools of Music) and peeking in at them while soft waltzes played. They became friendly, he observed. The next time he dated them he turned on a program of swing music. Professor Cremin peeked again, and reports, with horror, they necked!

Singling Goodman out for criticism, Professor Cremin says Swing is a mere caricature of jazz, and that Goodman is making a living making funny faces at jazz. Goodman, through Warner Brothers, denies this. He says he's making funny faces at Professor Cremin.

A Bride for Henry

(Monogram)

Run on a Honeymoon

For a long time picture producers have been trying to do something different with the eternal triangle situation. Monogram, with Dorothy Reid as associate producer and William Nigh as director, has taken a Liberty magazine story by Josephine Bentham which Marion Orth adapted, and has done something brightly new with the plot.

In the first place they have treated it from a comedy standpoint. The lines, situations, characterizations and action are pointed to accentuate the quality. Secondly, the company was fortunate in engaging the services of Anne Nagel, Warren Hull, Henry Mollison and Claudia Dell as principals. True, none of them has ever been known to stop traffic when their pictures were being shown, but one thing they can be depended upon to do is to give audiences who care to see the picture a good time. Incidentally, the film includes much potential exploitation material.

The amusing plot is simple, but refreshingly different. A groom fails to show up for his wedding, so the bride marries her lawyer. But the groom does show up for the honeymoon and monopolizes the bride, who is willing to be monopolized. The husband's predicament is bewildering until he discovers that all the other beautiful girls in the hotel, particularly Claudia Dell, desire his company. Then the bride gets jealous. That the interloper proves a dud in more ways than one does not add to her happiness. But the fury of a woman on the spot is a fury not to be denied. Short shrift is given Henry Mollison as the climax tosses Anne Nagel into Warren Hull's arms.

Previewed in the Forum theatre, Los Angeles. The wisdom of preshowing a picture in the class of house in which it will play the great majority of its bookings was never better demonstrated. The neighborhood audience, probably attracted to the theatre more because of the possibility of winning a part of the $1,500 Screeno bonanza than it was by the promise of a preview (some pretty poor ones are displayed here), enjoyed the show. Several times applause interrupted the dialogue. At the finish the expression of appreciation was wholehearted. So many started to rush out that an assistant manager mounted the stage to remind them that they shouldn't miss the Screeno business.—G. M.

The Westland Case

(Universal)

Melodrama

"The Westland Case" inaugurates the Universal Crime Club series for which six features, of the detective story type, are contemplated. The first was taken from the novel, "Headed for a Hearse," by Jonathan Latimer, and presents Preston Foster in a heavy drinking and comedy detective role. It has in the cast Frank Jenks, comedian whose popularity steadily is increasing, notably with the release of Universal's "100 Men and a Girl." His style of comedy inevitably calls for comparison with Lionel Stander's. Carol Hughes, Barbara Pepper and Astrid Allwyn supply eye-soothing feminine accompaniment. A group of proved character players, Clarence Wilson, Theodore von Eltz, George Meeker, Russell Hicks, Selmer Jackson, Rollo Lloyd, Thomas Jackson, Arthur Hoyt and Bryant Washburn, round out the histrionic talent, except for Alice Belcher, who, though not given screen credit, does a comedy bit, suitable to her peculiar talents, at which the preview audience roared for two minutes on her initial appearance.

The story deals with Bill Crane, a heavy drinking detective whose manner of solving mysteries is flavored by visits to bars, apartments of beautiful women and seemingly unconnected places. He and his stooge, Doc, are called upon by the attorney for a condemned man facing the gallows for a murder he did not commit. After a maze of comedy incidents in which loose threads leading to the murder are gathered up by Crane, the murderer is exposed two minutes before the condemned man is to die.

Previewed at the Pantages theatre, Hollywood, where a normally "hard boiled" audience, insofar as "whodunits" and other melodramas are concerned, was won over completely by the story and its comedy.—V. K.

Life Begins in College

(20th Century-Fox)

Campus Comedy

Clearly the thing to do with the Ritz Brothers is not to try to explain them. In no time at all they have shot up from vaudeville stage and nightclub floor to a screen eminence acknowledged here by stellar billing. They are given in this picture, therefore, expanded opportunity to display their deliberately demoniac talents. It is more or less manifestly correct procedure, not to say obligatory, for exhibitors to shout this circumstance and leave the rest to Darryl Zanuck.

It is also practicable, as the title implies, to bill the production as a campus comedy in those sectors where the boys and girls currently resuming their text book toil are in appropriate box office number and proximity. It is likewise practicable, but extremely unadvisable, to tell the collegians that Fred Stone's role and and status in the picture are precise counterparts of the University of Chicago's former "grand old man," Coach Alonzo A. Stagg. (In certain parts of the middle west this sort of billing would bring an undergraduate wrecking crew down to take the theatre apart brick by brick and stuff it down the exhibitor's throat).

The story, produced for laugh purposes only by Harold Wilson and directed with like objective by William A. Seiter, is from a screen play taken, liberally, by Karl Tunberg and Don Ettlinger from a series of stories by Darrell Ware, who started his writing career in Chicago and no doubt acquired his familiarity with collegiate causes and effects on the Midway. As dished up here, however, the Ware compositions are a loose and largely incidental framework for the Ritz frivolities.

Idle as it may be to sketch such plots as these, the serious side of this one, vaguely discernible in the stretches between Ritz Brothers didoes, has to do with an aging coach shunted to a bush league college and determined to beat his former affiliate on the gridiron by way of proving he shouldn't have been shunted. There is a dash of legitimate college coloring here and there, but most of the picture is in the musical comedy vein (circa 1900) and it is not the coach but the Ritz Brothers, and not by dint of sound coaching but by virtue of a comic-strip Dick Merriwell gag, that the little college beats the big one while Ed Thorgersen of Fox Movietone News broadcasts the game as Ed Thorgersen.

If the allotment of wordage in the foregoing indicates that the Stagg parallel is importantly offensive, that is unfortunate. Regrettable is a fairer adjective than offensive, and it is not importantly that. The whole of the production is so openly insincere and so thoroughly conditioned to the purposes of the Brothers Ritz that it would be hard for the crustiest Chicago grad to work up a good peeve about any of it.

The brotherly comics, it may be pertinent to remark, are stars of the picture only obliquely and by sheer weight of preponderant emphasis. Nat Pendleton, as an Indian fullback, all but steals the picture. Joan Davis, as the gal in love with him, gives a varied version of the characterization she contributed to the success of "Thin Ice." Gloria Stuart and Dick Baldwin play romantic leads, in considerable obscurity, and Tony Martin sings appropriately at proper intervals.

The Perfect Specimen

(Warner-F. N.)

Comedy

After posting the names of Errol Flynn, Joan Blondell, Hugh Herbert, Edward Everett Horton, Allen Jenkins, May Robson, Dick Foran and Beverly Roberts as present and active in "The Perfect Specimen," a common or hit-and-run type of showman might well consider his job well enough done to warrant a spot of trout fishing, race track or golf links. And it is probable that the cash register would jingle a satisfactory roundelay in his absence. But the more earnest and urgent type of manager will want to inform his public that this is yet another of the extravagantly comic and headlong action pictures with which Hollywood is busy overtime just now, although still fumbling for a group term by which to designate their kind. Should he choose to add that this is the best of them, he will be able to find support for his assertion in at least a few of the published critical comments on the picture.

This one is from a Cosmopolitan Magazine story by Samuel Hopkins Adams, an origin indicative of certain definite and highly favorable things to most readers, and it is directed by the veteran and versatile Michael Curtiz in the precise "groove" of the Adams humor. No less than four screen playwrights—Norman Reilly Raine, Lawrence Riley, Brewster Morse and Fritz Falkenstein—collaborated in bringing the Adams foolery from arm chair to aisle seat assimilability (whether that's a word or not).

The story, naturally in view of its genesis, has more substance than most of those used for purely ribtickling purposes. It presents the case of one Gerald Beresford Wicks, heir to forty million dollars and brought to manhood, therefore, by a grandmother intent upon preparing him for a business future in which he will excel each and all of his 10,000 employees in everything from horticulture to fisticuffs. In upon his cloistered studies barges inquisitive Mona Carter, a nice girl who likes to go places and do things, to taunt him with talk of tilting at windmills and lure him, ultimately, into the wide open world where he proceeds to tilt at them with forty million dollars worth of gusto. There are police chases, prize ring and impromptu battles, with gloves and without, before all winds up satisfactorily for all concerned.

Mr. Flynn's portrayal of the perfect specimen of the title is a most unusual and convincing performance. Miss Blondell is kept intensely busy, as are the other comics and comic reliefs, in keeping up with a scenario that gives no serious minded patron who may have stumbled into the theatre by mistake opportunity to realize that most of the things he's laughing at couldn't happen but would be nice if they could.

Danger—Love at Work

Comedy

This entry in the broad comedy sweepstakes just now dominating production goes beyond most of the others by asserting bluntly in the opening dialogue that eight of the characters in the story are crazy. Possibly an equivalent assertion is properly a part of the well ordered exploitation campaign a thorough showman will want to devise for the picture. The eight players depicting the crazy persons are, of course, permitted to play the parts that way, the result being as funny and in the same, although modernized, manner, as the characters in the always dependable "medicine show" sketches of the '90's, from which the present wave of quasi-slapstick comedies derives in direct descent.

Oldsters well know that the wholesomely raffish patterns of the period, played ad lib in town halls, under canvas, on wagon ramps and in junction depots by troupers who loved them, were soundly conceived and essentially American. The world will have changed more than normally in the past forty years if the polished, name-laden modern parallels do not please the populace mightily.

This one is directed by Otto Ludwig Preminger, who comes, oddly enough, not from Podunk, Iowa, but from Vienna—or is it Budapest?—where drama has been spelled with an upper case D for more centuries than the Indians have known about fire water. It is a tribute to him and to the fundamental character of the primitive American stage form to which he here addresses his art that man and medium are manifestly and mirthfully congenial. (George Jean Nathan could spill a quill of pretty significant ink about that, probably.) It is likewise a tribute to Harold Wilson, associate producer, as to James Edward Grant and Ben Markson, writers of the screen play from Mr. Grant's story, that the gloriously forthright hokum of a delightfully unsophisticated era is as flexible in their skilled fingers as today's most pungent Broadway smash.

The list of marketable names is rather too long and evenly balanced for individual citation, with comment, in the wordage coventionally allotted such matters at this time and place. There they are, down beyond the six-point credits. It probably is important to mention, though, that Ann Sothern and Jack Haley, the boy-and-girl of it, sing a song, from which the title is taken, and that it's a Gordon and Revel number, a circumstance that has come to have definite and positive connotation in this and other branches of the entertainment world.

The story (oh yes, the story!) is about a lawyer who sets out to get signatures from eight members of a crazy family, by way of negotiating a purchase of their property, and about his romantic attachment for the least lunatic and fairest of the lot. The lawyer and the rival who tries to thwart him are crazy too.

Previewed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, California, a typical small town Saturday night on which the payees fortunate enough to get in before the purchaseable seats were filled laughed themselves into a refreshingly bucolic hysteria over what they saw and heard.—W. R. W.

Fight for Your Lady

(RKO-Radio)

Gag Comedy

Gag comedy is the essence of "Fight for Your Lady." All of that comedy, mainly supplied by Jack Oakie, but with Erik Rhodes, Billy Gilbert, Gordon Jones and Maude Eburne doing yeoman work to match his pace, is quite funny. While they as a unit are indulging in their vocal and character antics, John Boles becomes involved in a multilateral comedy romance which brings in Margot Grahame and Ida Lupino as candidates for his affection, with Rhodes and Jones further parties. For good measure, there is also a song number, "Blame It on the Danube," which Boles sings.

As the opening sequence ended, a serio-comedy wrestling bout with a number of gags and practically a separate entity, though establishing the general tone of the production, the writer began to count the gags. Sixty minutes later there were 13 pencil marks on his tab. Applying simple division, it is found that there was a major gag and major laugh on the average of every four and a half minutes. As the film only runs 67 minutes, the laugh quota is unusually high.

For all the gagging, "Fight for Your Lady" has the required substantiating story. In it Jones double crosses both Boles and Oakie. He weds Margot Grahame, whom Boles considers his personal property, and welches out of his Oakiefield wrestling contract. Oakie takes charge of the depressed Boles, who is not depressed very long when attractive Ida Lupino appears. But she is the fiancee of Erik Rhodes, a dueling Austrian, who guarantees sudden death to anyone trespassing on his domain. That's what Boles wants, death which will remove him from this troublesome world. Preceded by a wealth of foolishness, a duel is arranged. It's a very bizarre thing, becoming more so when Oakie, dressed as an old woman, begs Rhodes to spare her son's life. The fire eater, who never killed the son of any living mother, accedes. Then follows the chase business, which has something to do with gendarmes pursuing Oakie, Boles and Miss Lupino to find out why Oakie caused Boles to be illegally jailed earlier in the show.

Sufficient sense is made as far as story motivation is concerned; all the rest is nonsense. It might be termed elemental comedy that should stimulate anyone to laughter. That can be promised.

Previewed in the Pantages theatre, Hollywood. Despite the attraction of "100 Men and a Girl" and an added preview, the house was only comfortably filled. Those who were there were not hesitant in expressing their approval of the film. If they were disappointed about anything it was that the film is comparatively short. It was easy to see that they were in the mood for more of what they had seen.—G. M.

Produced and distributed by RKO-Radio. Produced by Albert Lewis. Directed by Ben Stoloff. Screen play by Ernest Pagano, Harry Segall and Harold Kusell. Story by Jean Negulesco and Isabel Leighton. Ebb Tide

(Paramount)

Marine Melodrama

Perhaps it would be a little rash, although the idea must occur to showmen who see the picture, to exploit "Ebb Tide" as a "Mutiny on the Bounty" in color. Fortunately, it is not necessary to borrow any picture's thunder to stir up interest in this one. It has, in addition to cast names of known connotation, the far reaching appeal that is resident in the name of Robert Louis Stevenson and his perhaps just slightly less than classic story of the same name. And it has Oscar Homolka, making his first appearance before an American camera, as a new and powerful personality to exploit in terms of his notable past and probable future. There is also, and no doubt very importantly in many sectors, the first major use of color photography at sea, a thing likely to be so widely talked about after the picture gets going that it is as well for showmen to begin telling their customers about it beforehand.

It is a little hard not to send up rhetorical

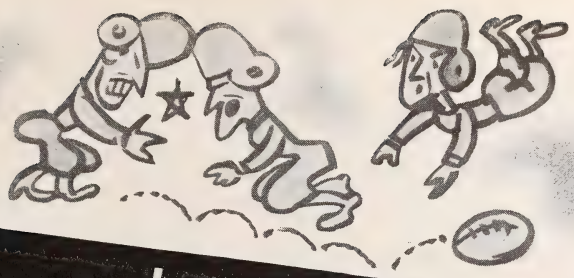
THOSE RAVING RITZES HAVE THE REVIEWERS RAVING, TOO!



"It's a whale of a lot of fun. Gags so screamingly funny that even the gloomiest onlooker might bust a gallus laughing. Crammed with the sort of melodies that whistle themselves. The audiences rewarded the Ritzes with many a belly laugh. Will do mighty well at the boxoffice."

The boys go to town . . . their own peculiar brand of insane comedy hits the high spots. There are a flock of tunes, all good. rockets about "Ebb Tide" in even such a severely comercial report as this one is ordained by function to be. But precisely that circumstance is a properly reportable factor. It would appear to indicate that "Ebb Tide" is a picture people will want to talk to people about.

There is, as readers of Stevenson's work well know, little commonplace "movie stuff" in the story. Heroics are depicted in reverse. Valor is not an outstanding virtue of any character involved. The narration is in the slow, powerful, rolling tempo of the sea. The love match which happens to be an outcome of events comprising the story is not one of the tender kind camera men used to like to shoot in soft focus. A good deal of death and a lot of persistent decay are involved in the working out of the disastrously terminated plot. Consequently, the picture is about as far off the beaten track of screen product, colored or otherwise, as anything the normal and typical showman can possibly have in mind when he sends up his perpetual cry for "something new—something different."

The story, as most will recall, is of three beachcombers who gain command of a plague-stricken sailing vessel and decide to steal it. It would be unfair to the Stevenson narrative, and to Lucien Hubbard's fine production of Bertram Millhauser's faithful screen play based upon it, to detail here the elemental and temperamental conflicts that mark the downward course of the two who die and the scant salvation of the one who lives. And it would be as unfair to James Hogan to omit mention of his deeply sensitive direction which makes island interlude and tropical typhoon, alike, measured means to a tremendous end, the complete retention of the Stevenson mood, theme and point.

Previewed at the Paramount theatre, Los Angeles, a capacity audience held spellbound by the picture broke out, when it was over, in a tornado of person-to-person comment on the power of the production, the performances of Oscar Homolka and Barry Fitzgerald, the splendor of the coloration and the all-around rightness of things in general.—W. Non-Stop New York

(Gaumont-British)

Aerial Melodrama

Most of the important action of this G-B production is staged on a London-New York passenger plane. This gives the subject a very definite value, which may still be more topical by the time many theatres are playing the film, with the approaching fact of a transatlantic air service. There is the unusual plot development that concerns a plane stowaway. The technical realism of the scenes aboard the many-cabined air liner and the thrill as the giant plane rushes, pilotless, to apparently inevitable destruction are more obvious, but none the less real, audience values.

Jennie Carr, out-of-work English chorus girl in New York, is befriended by a young lawyer, who takes her to his apartment for a meal. She discovers a starving hobo hidden there. The lawyer's apartment is invaded by a gang who turn the girl out, but not before she has seen the hobo get away. The lawyer is murdered by the gang and the hobo is held for the crime. Knowing that the girl may give them away, the crooks have her followed aboard the boat for England and plant a false accusation of theft against her. She is sent to prison in England, but is released before the condemned man is to go to the chair. She stows away on a non-stop plane from London to New York. Also on the plane are a mysterious General from Paraguay, a London bookmaker who is blackmailing him, and Jim Grant, Scotland Yard detective.

The "General"—actually Hugo Brandt, leader of the New York murder gang—shoots the blackmailer and the pilot before leaping overboard with a parachute, but is killed.

The plane is heading for a crash but the technician climbs along the wings into the control cabin. The missing witness arrives in time.

The plentiful comedy relief, provided by the cockney blackmailer, a boy prodigy and his aunt, sometimes strays rather disconcertingly into the main plot development, giving an air of burlesque, but the thrills are not reduced in value. The model work is good and well matched.

Viewed at a Phoenix theatre trade show in London. The story was not taken too seriously, but the originality and realism of the material were recognized.—Bruce Allan.

Bronze Sentries

(Fonoroma-Italy)

War Melodrama

The action takes place in the Italian Somaliland in Sud Africa, on the banks of the Uebi Scebeli River, 200 miles from Mogadiscio.

Two brothers—Elmi, enlisted in the Italian Dubbats, and Ibrahim, who still believes in his pseudo-freedom, fight for the love of a beautiful woman, Marrabò, who was kidnapped by Ibrahim from one of the tribes of the neighborhood.

The Ogaden tribe is attacked by Ras Schiffera. Ibrahim and his tribe seek refuge in an Italian camp.

During the following battle the heroic death of Elmi gives Ibrahim his place in the Italian army and Marrabò agrees to become his wife.

The picture is colorful and has beautiful and interesting background.

The acting is very good. Fosco Giacchetti, Giovanni Grasso and Doris Durant make a perfect trio. All the other actors are natives. It might be said that their performances are up to the standard of the picture, which was one of the successes at the Venice Film Exhibition.

Signor Marcellini, the director, and a newcomer, has handled skillfully the story written by Orano.

Comm. Eugenio Fontana was in charge of the production.

Excellent is the photography by Signor Terzano.—Vittorio Malpassuti.

Little Jack Horner

(Columbia)

Interesting

John Hix, who is concerned with things unusual, has unearthed a real Jack Horner who lived in the days when Henry the Eighth ruled England. One day young Horner was dispatched by the Abbot of Glastenbury with a plum pie for the king. Stopping the night at an inn, Jack offers the innkeeper's daughter a plum in exchange for a kiss. Investigation discloses that instead of plums the pie contains title deeds to six of England's largest estates. Jack takes one for himself and delivers the rest to the king. Soon after the Abbot died and Jack and his descendants have lived on the estate, located in Somerset County, ever since. Running time, 10½ minutes.

The Big Apple

New Dance Craze

For those who haven't heard of it, hardly probable, the "Big Apple" is the new dance craze that is sweeping the country judging from the amount of publicity it has received from newspapers, newsreels and radio. From whence it got its name, your guess is as good as mine. As a dance it is beyond description for it appears to be more spontaneous than prepared and seems to contain a little of all native dances and is reminiscent of the tribal dances of the American Indian. At any rate here it is as performed by Arthur Murray's "Shag" dancers, Douglas Leavitt and Mary McCormick to the accompaniment of Walter Perner and his orchestra. A timely subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Our Gang

The ever entertaining members of the "Our Gang" comedies have a try at a juvenile radio contest in this one. Spanky McFarland, as is his wont, is the boss manager of Alfalfa and an office force composed of Darla, Buckwheat, Porky and Gary. Alfalfa is the star crooner of the combine all set to capture first prize. Butch, a violin virtuoso, intimidates Spanky, who convinces Alfalfa that he has lost his voice. The disconsolate office staff listening to the contest over the radio perks up again when Spanky rushes Alfalfa to the studio. Alfalfa wins with the help of a frog, Spanky gets a black eye from Butch, but Spanky is happy for Butch has two black eyes. Running time, 10 minutes.

Simian Antics

Meany, Miny and Moe try their hand at collecting ostrich feathers in this animated cartoon. After finding an ostrich sitting on an egg, Meany and Miny devote their time to trying to capture the mother and become involved in a series of difficulties that end with the two being tied to a tree. Moe, meanwhile, watches the egg hatch, chases the baby ostrich and then returns to take the place of the baby ostrich. When the father ostrich sees his supposed offspring he engages in a battle with the mother, feathers fly, Moe picks them up and the three monkeys leave in haste. Running time, 7½ minutes.

of the larger European metropolises. In Lima there is also shown the activity centering around a club, where the more affluent Peruvians spend their leisure time, while in the outlying country the people perform the native dances. Soak the Poor
(MGM)
Very Good

In the manner of presentation and the thought it has to convey, "Soak the Poor" continues in the same vein in the interesting series, "Crime Does Not Pay." The subject here is the victimization of the poor by gangsters who force grocers to turn over relief tickets, the gangsters taking 60 per cent and the grocer 40 per cent. The grocer, to stay in business, is forced to raise his prices. The poor are unable to pay the increase for foodstuffs. An operative from the Bureau of Investigation discovers the fraud and tracks down the gangsters. The gangsters are captured and information found in the safe of an unscrupulous grocer brings them prison sentences. Running time, 16 minutees.

I Likes Babies and Infinks
(Paramount)
Popeye

An entertaining Popeye cartoon, this is unusual because of its ending or, more to the point, its lack of the expected climax. Having become accustomed to the revitalizing process that Popeye goes through after imbibing a can of spinach it is a distinct shock to find that worthy reaching for a can of onions. Swee'Pea won't stop crying so Olive calls upon Popeye. Bluto also answers the call and he and Popeye take turns entertaining the baby. When Popeye, after considerable manhandling by Bluto, reaches for his spinach and instead picks out a can of onions, the two of them are overcome by tears, which is the cue for Swee'Pea to start laughing. Running time, 7 minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction, No. 42
(Universal)
Of Interest

Six more unusual subjects are brought to light in this issue of a series of oddities spotted by the camera from all parts of the world. Pipemaking, while generally considered the work of men, is shown as the trade adopted by two New York city women. Their pipes, it is explained, sell for as much as $100. A Kansas youth displays his ability to draw cartoons with his hands, with his toes and with both at the same time. Other items are the use of the tide to generate electricity, an underwater show staged at the Paris International Exposition, a mountain of natural black glass at Bend, Oregon, and a Georgia farmer who does away with the need of a barber by cutting his own hair. Running time, 9⅓ minutes.

Bashful Ballerina
(Educational)
Comedy

Imogene Coca, mimic and eccentric dancer, is featured in this comedy on ballet dancing. Two ballet schools, under the direction of temperamental Russians, are to compete for the honor of being backed financially by a society sponsor. One ballet director wishes Miss Coca onto the other, and she ruins whatever chances the ballet had. Miss Coca returns to her original school when the ballerina sprains her ankle. To the consternation of the director, Miss Coca proceeds to make a mess of things, but the sponsor believes she is the comedy relief and agrees to back the ballet. Running time, 20 minutes.

The Big Squirt
(Columbia)
Funny

Charlie Chase, as a soda-jerker in a drug store, spends most of his free moments reading detective magazines and conjuring in his mind how he would go about capturing the more dangerous of the publicized criminals. Convinced that he would recognize any of the public enemies, Chase is mortified when his mother-in-law is instrumental in having Lapidus, public enemy No. 1, arrested, after Chase had served him at the soda fountain. Chase, incidentally, tries to have the police commissioner arrested as a criminal. When Lapidus escapes Chase disguises himself as a blind man and, carrying around all the trappings of a one-man band, he catches Lapidus. Others in the subject are Lucille Lund, Eddie Fetherston, Bud Jamison, Leora Thatcher. Running time, 18 minutes.

Will You Stop
Amusing

A burlesque on the romance of Anthony and Cleopatra features the comedy team of Tim and Irene and is one of the best this pair has made. Tim, playwright and director, is called upon by the president of a department store to stage the annual store show. Tim is Anthony, Irene is Cleopatra, the boss is Caesar and two floorwalkers provide some fun as lions. Hugh Cameron, Ed Garvie and Eddie Parks appear in the subject, with Andy Anderson's orchestra supplying incidental music. Running time, 17 minutes.

Future Stars
(Columbia)
Fair

A "World of Sports" issue here is shown athletes in the making. Boys and girls go through their paces in mass exercises, tumbling acrobatics, horseback riding, soap box derbies, rowing, swimming and flying miniature planes. Narrative by Jack Kofoed. Narrated by Ford Bond. Running time, 9 minutes.

The Boss Didn't Say Good Morning
(MGM)
Unusual

An unusual approach has been tried in making this short subject. A study in psychology, it poses the question of what happens to an employee, his family and his friends, when the boss fails to say "good morning." As the story is enacted, only the voice of a narrator is heard; the actors' lips move but the sounds are not recorded.

Jack Mulhall is a firmly established employee with a wife and child, owning his own home. Driving to his office, he plunges into his work. The boss arrives, but to Mulhall's greeting he frowns. Mulhall broods over the apparent slight, translates knowing looks of fellow employees into an impending blue envelope. He takes it out on his wife, boy and friends. Later at the country club the boss gives Mulhall a hearty greeting, and Mulhall finds that his youngster did just the right thing in forgetting to mail his letter of resignation just as the rush shipment he had not forgotten to make would have wrecked the company. There was a fair scattering of applause from the evening audience at the Capitol theatre on New York's Broadway.

Picking Pets
(Paramount)
Excellent

A most entertaining presentation on animals of the pet variety, this subject is also vastly amusing. What makes it so amusing are the animals themselves, for they go through all kinds of gymnastics for the camera. And, incidentally, it is the exceptional camera work that is responsible. Among the animals shown are a silver fox cub, a lynx, a cheetah, a badger, a wombat, kangaroos, koala bears and the ever playful baby giant panda, the only one in captivity. Running time, 10 minutes.

Swing Monkey Swing
(Columbia)
Cartoon

A "Color Rhapsody" invasion of monkeyland and the infusion of swing music arouses the jungle inhabitants to outdo each other in rhythmic dances in this cartoon. The prolific monkeys are adept at playing all instruments. In the background a chorus of negro noices sing a new arrangement of the "St. Louis Blues." Running time, 7½ minutes.

Kiko's Cleaning Day
Cartoon

Kiko, the kangaroo, finds that there is more to cleaning a house than appears on the surface, especially when a rather troublesome ostrich is around. After some minor skirmishes the real fun begins when a high-powered vacuum cleaner, going on a rampage, starts sucking in the furniture and chasing Kiko and the ostrich through the house. A pin stuck into the increasingly inflated bag of the cleaner winds up the proceedings. Running time, 5½ minutes.

Air Express
(Universal)
Cartoon Pilot

Although listed as one of the Meany, Miny, Moe cartoons, this film concerns itself only with the adventures of one of the trio, Moe. He is seen as an air express pilot, striving to deliver two packages, a baby ostrich and a bag of diamonds. The ostrich becomes hungry in midair, gobbles up everything in sight and then attempts to swallow the diamonds. Seeking to check this happening, Moe leaves the controls. The ship crashes, but the diamonds are safe. Running time, 6½ minutes.

GERMAN INDUSTRY, COMPLETING TRANSITION, TO SHOW 195 FILMS

Production and Distribution Completely Changed, but Exhibition Branch Is Little Changed; Picture Output Restricted

by J. K. RUTENBERG
in Berlin

For several years the German film industry has been in transformation. Production and distribution have been completely changed and only the exhibition branch remains steady and to a greater part unaffected by the general revolution of the industry. In former articles we have shown how the increase in production costs, the extension of the recording time, the more elaborate film planning and other reasons have led to a considerable tightening, if not to say serious crisis in the industry.

The Film Chamber introduced, therefore, quite a number of drastic laws which recreated the industry to a large degree. One of the first provisions was the prohibition against new theatre construction. Another regulated admission prices, outlawing giveaways and sliding admission prices. The decrease of unemployment led to greater income for film theatres and filled the empty safes of distributors and producers who, out of the necessity to avoid a breakdown, merged into several mighty groups such as Ufa, Tobis and Terra.

Things were entirely different in Germany a few years ago. In 1928, about 560 feature films were offered in Germany which at that time had no more than 3,000 active cinemas. This unbalanced ratio necessarily led to double features and to an unsatisfactory return in film rentals. The running of the individual picture was highly curtailed and after a few months the film was replaced with a second or third one. With the arrival of sound, the film offer was reduced by the introduction of a film quota. This quota system was necessary for Germany because the sound film led to a considerable increase in production costs and, on the other side, to a shrinking export business. In the first years of operation, Germany saw a yearly film offer of 350 feature films, and the economic crisis further severed the film business so that the yearly film offer had to be reduced even further. In 1931-32, a total of 243 feature films was released in Germany compared with 165 films in 1936-37.

The following chart gives an idea of the film offer in the most important European countries:

Country	Population (In millions)	Theatres	Film offer 1935-36
Germany	67.5	5243	185
United Kingdom	46.1	4400	670
France	41.9	4200	455
Austria	6.8	760	330
Switzerland	4.2	350	500
Netherland	8.6	310	495

(In the above chart, films of more than 3,300 feet are listed).

Film offer, cinemas and population, therefore, widely differ in the different countries of Europe. It is quite clear that the reduction of the number of foreign films admitted gives strong support to the home industry and enables a better film planning and more economical film exploitation.

According to a semi-official source, the admissibility of the German film market is 200 to 220 feature films yearly, corresponding to 100 German-made feature films under present law. The same number—200 feature films—will again be available to exhibitors this year. With this offer, the level of the 1933-34 season will again be realized after three years of considerably smaller film offers.

The chart below gives the number of feature films offered in the last four years, showing the participation of the United States and European countries, notably France, Austria and Hungary.

Season	Feature Films Number	Length in Meters	U.S.A.	Others
1933/34	216	501,342	61	30
1934/35	197	469,924	44	47
1935/36	189	457,412	34	47
1936/37	165	403,052	36	33
1937/38	195	.....	36	35

German-made films will come largely from three production groups: Ufa, Tobis and Terra. Ufa and Tobis will contribute a total of 90 to 100 films with the rest coming from the Terra group, recently merged with the Syndikat Company, and some smaller companies.

Ufa, its position recently strengthened in the German market, now distributes to all the leading first-run houses in west Berlin with the exception of a few houses in the southwestern section of the city. Ufa's two big studios in Babelsberg and Tempelhof will produce a total of 40 features, 40 shorts and two complete newsreel series during the coming year—in other words, 40 complete film programs. Except for newsreels, which it does not produce, the Tobis offer will not be much less.

In the exhibition and distribution branch of the industry some important decrees have been published recently for the regulation of the film rentals for the new season. They are expected to further encourage the economic side of the industry.

COVERING ROOF NO NECESSITY

Repairing a leaking roof covering a theatre auditorium is not a "work of necessity" when it is done on Sunday, according to a ruling of C. K. Carter, magistrate in Danville, Virginia.

Mr. Carter ruled 13 carpenters and roofers were guilty of violating the Sabbath law and fined them each $5, despite the theatre management's contention that the work could be done only on Sunday unless the theatre was closed.

The defendants are expected to appeal the decision.

Exhibitors Object To Rental Prices

by WILLIAM CROUCH
in Chicago

With theatres open again to children, after a three weeks' ban which cost exhibitors an estimated total of $800,000 in revenue, Chicago theatremen are turning their attention to other problems, foremost among which is the question of film rentals.

Independent theatremen, ranging from owners of single theatres to operators of large independent circuits, are complaining bitterly against the current rise in film prices. They point out that increases were expected but charge the rises are so great the price of films is prohibitive. In many cases they report deals for the new season's product call for a 50 per cent increase. In some cases even higher prices are being asked while others report the general average increase is 25 per cent.

Members of Allied Theatres of Illinois discussed the question at a meeting Tuesday and announced they planned to take definite action.

Theatre business for the past year has been less than during the previous year, it is generally agreed. Exhibitors attribute this to the loss of bank night and other chance games and to the adoption of the double feature policy. The dual bill policy has not proven of much benefit to independent theatremen, although the larger circuit theatres have found it an increasing source of revenue.

The ban on children attending theatres was put into effect by the health department as a result of an epidemic of infantile paralysis.

Other problems confronting exhibitors include the question of increased theatre license fees and the working out of a new contract with the operators' union. The projectionists are seeking a 20 per cent wage increase.

Three Join Monogram Staff

Three additions have been made to Monogram's staff. Rose Sager has been named secretary to Herschel Stuart, treasurer, and Linda Sheridan and Buddy Hansen have joined the contract and play-date department.

Norma Shearer Back in Films

Return of Norma Shearer to the screen was definitely set this week with the decision to make "Marie Antoinette" here and not in England, as first planned. Hunt Stromberg will produce the film for MGM and Sidney Franklin will direct.

Kallet's Regent theatre in Syracuse, N. Y., remodeled and re-equipped, reopened last week. Fred Donahue is the new manager. George H. Ketcham was the architect for the reconstruction.

DUAL ROLE OF ENGINEER EMPHASIZED IN PROGRAM OF SMPE CONVENTION

Improvements and New Equipment Share Papers' Interest; Quigley and Nizer Address First Day Luncheon

Papers on the year's added improvements of sound equipment, motion picture film, lighting and projection apparatus and the techniques for using them, will be among those read at the Fall Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, October 11th to 14th, at the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York.

Examination of the subjects to be discussed shows that emphasis is about equally divided between the further refinement of present equipment and motion picture techniques and in the development of new equipment for further enhancing motion picture entertainment.

Among the papers dealing with new equipment will be demonstrations of "Stereophonic Recording and Reproductions from Motion Picture Film Records," by J. P. Maxfield, of Electrical Research Products, Inc., and a demonstration of three dimensional motion pictures by G. W. Wheelwright, III, of Land-Wheelwright Laboratories.

The convention will open at 10 A.M. Monday, October 11th, with a business and general session followed by a luncheon, at which the principal speakers will be Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief and publisher of QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS, and Louis Nizer, motion picture attorney and secretary of the New York Film Board of Trade. Mr. Quigley will speak on "Propaganda, Education, and the Entertainment Film."

Three-Dimension Demonstration

One of the papers at the general session on Monday forenoon will be "Safeguarding and Developing Our Film Markets Abroad," by N. D. Golden, chief of the Motion Picture Section, United States Department of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Monday afternoon a photographic and laboratory session will be held, with three dimensional motion pictures demonstrated. The demonstration of stereophonic recording and reproduction will be held at the Bell Telephone Laboratories, Monday evening, during a special sound session.

Other demonstrations including recent developments in hill and dale recording by M. J. Di Toro, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and by L. Vieth and C. F. Wiebusch, Bell Telephone Laboratories, will be discussed and demonstrated. J. G. Frayne and H. C. Silent, Electrical Research Products, will read a paper on push-pull recording.

Tuesday morning's session will be devoted to engineering practices including a paper on "Air-Conditioning with Lithium Chloride," by G. A. Kelley, of the Surface Combustion Corporation, and "Vacuum-Tube Engineering for Motion Pictures," by L. C. Hollands and A. M. Glover, of the RCA Manufacturing Company.

Lighting and Studio Session

Tuesday afternoon a lighting and studio session will be held. Tuesday evening the engineers will look backward to the motion picture of yesterday when John E. Abbott, director of the Film Library, The Museum of Modern Art, will exhibit a showing of selected historical motion pictures.

A Wednesday morning projection practice session will be held under the chairmanship of Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, during which problems concerned with projection and the development of new projection equipment will be discussed and demonstrated. Dr. Goldsmith will lead the discussion with a paper on "The Practice of Projection." Another paper of interest will be "New Approaches to the Presentation of the Motion Picture Theatre," by Ben Schlanger, New York architect. There will be no session Wednesday afternoon, giving members an opportunity to visit local laboratories and other places of interest.

The semi-annual banquet will be held Wednesday evening. Presentation will be made of the Society's progress medal and journal awards.

Thursday's session will be devoted to an apparatus symposium and manufacturer's announcements. J. F. Leventhal's paper "Non-intermittent Projection," will prove of unusual interest. A second session on sound will be held Thursday afternoon with the meeting closing at the end of this session.

The Program in Detail

The complete program for the convention follows:

MONDAY, OCTOBER 11

9.00 a.m. — Salle Moderne; Registration.

"High-Speed Motion Picture Photography Applied to the Design of Telephone Apparatus"; W. Herriott, Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc., New York, N. Y. (Demonstration) (20 Min.).

12.30 p.m. — Roof Garden; Informal Luncheon.

Address by Louis Nizer, secretary of the New York Film Board of Trade. Address by Martin Quigley, president of Quigley Publishing Company, Inc.

2:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. — Salle Moderne; Photographic and Laboratory Session.

"Producing an Industrial Film"; J. A. Norling, Loucks & Norling Studios, New York, N. Y. (Demonstration) (25 Min.).
"Further Progress in Film Storage"; Capt. J. G. Bradley, National Archives, Washington, D. C. (20 Min.).
"The Effect of the Composition of an MQ Developer on its Reduction Potential"; R. M. Evans and W. T. Hanson, Jr., Kodak Research Laboratories, Rochester, N. Y. (20 Min.).
"A Modern Motion Picture Laboratory"; C. L. Lootens, Republic Productions, Inc., North Hollywood, Calif (20 Min.).
"Demonstration of Polaroid Three-Dimentional Motion Pictures"; G. W. Wheelwright, 3d, Land-Wheelwright Laboratories, Boston, Mass. (1 Hour).

8:00 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. — Auditorium, Bell Telephone Laboratories; Special Sound Session.

"Distortion in the Reproduction of Hill-and-Dale Records"; M. J. DiToro, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Orange, N. J. (20 Min.).
"Recent Developments in Hill-and-Dale Recorders"; L. Vieth and C. F. Wiebusch, Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc., New York, N. Y. (Demonstration) (20 Min.).
"Nomenclature and Specifications Including Description of the Various Types of Movietone Release"; J. K. Hilliard, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Culver City, Calif. (Demonstration) (25 Min.).
"Film Perforation and 96-Cycle Frequency Modulation in Sound-film Records"; J. Crabtree and W. Herriott, Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc., New York, N. Y. (15 Min.).
"Push-Pull Recording"; J. G. Frayne and H. C. Silent, Electrical Products, Inc., Hollywood, Calif. (25 Min.).
"Stereophonic Recording and Reproduction from Motion Picture Film Records"; Introductory Remarks by J. P. Maxfield, Electrical Research Products, Inc., New York, N. Y. (Demonstration) (15 Min.).

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 12

10:00 a.m to 12:30 p.m. — Salle Moderne; Engineering Practice Session.

"Air-Conditioning with Lithium Chloride"; G. A. Kelley, Surface Combustion Corp., Toledo, Ohio (20 Min.).
"The Activated Alumina System as Applied to Air-Conditioning and Drying Problems"; G. L. Simpson, Pittsburgh, Lectrodryer Corp., Pittsburgh, Pa. (20 Min.).
"Die Castings and Their Application to Photographic Appliances"; C. Pack, Doehler Die Casting Co., New York, N. Y. (20 Min.).
"The Use of Inconel for Photographic Film Processing Equipment"; G. L. Cox, International Nickel Co., Inc., New York, N. Y. (20 Min.).
"Vacuum-Tube Engineering for Motion Pictures"; L. C. Hollands and A. M. Glover, RCA Manufacturing Co., Inc., Harrison, N. J. (25 Min.).

2:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. — Salle Moderne; Lighting and Studio Session.

"Spectral Distribution and Color-Temperature of the Radiant Energy from Carbon Arcs Used in the Motion Picture Industry"; F. T. Bowditch and A. C. Downes, National Carbon Co., Inc., Cleveland, Ohio (20 Min.).
"Recent Developments in Background Projection"; G. G. Popovici, Bronx, N. Y. (20 Min.).
"Recent Developments in Gaseous Dis-

MOVIE ADS CALLED BLOW TO THEATRES

The movement for the booing of commercial announcement in motion picture theatres, up to this time confined to the West, received eastern endorsement last week in an editorial published by the Elizabeth (N. J.) "Daily Journal."

"The movie patron does not pay his 40 or 50 cents to see and hear an advertising program," said the "Journal." "He is there to be entertained, not to be commercialized.

"Will it never be understood that the kind of advertising that offends, in whatever manner it is presented, is unprofitable? It injures, rather than serves, the advertiser."

SPECIAL SESSION ON SOUND IS SET

charge Lamps"; S. Dushman, Research Laboratory, General Electric Co., Schenectady, N. Y. (20 Min.).

Report of the Studio Lighting Committee, R. E. Farnham, Chairman (20 Min.), "Light Control in Photography"; G. Mili, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., Bloomfield, N. J. (20 Min.).

"Modulated High-Frequency Recording as a Means of Determining Conditions for Optimum Processing"; J. O. Baker and D. H. Robinson, RCA Manufacturing Co., Inc., Camden, N. J. (20 Min.).

"Recording Tests on Some Recent High-Resolution Experimental Emulsions"; J. O. Baker, RCA Manufacturing Co., Inc., Camden, N. J. (20 Min.).

8:00 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. Salle Moderne.

Showing of Selected Historical Motion Pictures arranged by John E. Abbott, Director of the Film Library, The Museum of Modern Art, New York, N. Y. (1½ Hours).

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13

10:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Salle Moderne; Projection Practice Session, A. N. Goldsmith, Chairman.

"The Practice of Projection"; A. N. Goldsmith, New York, N. Y. (5 Min.).

"Grading Projectionists"; G. P. Barber, Government of the Province of Alberta, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada (20 Min.).

"Cooperation as the Keynote of Successful Small Town Projection"; T. P. Hover, Warner's Ohio Theatre, Lima, Ohio (15 Min.).

"A Discussion of Screen Image Dimensions"; F. H. Richardson, Quigley Publishing Co., Inc., New York, N. Y. (15 Min.).

"New Approaches to the Presentation of the Motion Picture Theatre"; B. Schlanger, New York, N. Y. (15 Min.).

"Precision All-Metal Reflectors for Use with Projection Arcs"; C. E. Shultz, Heyer-Schultz, Inc., New York, N. Y. (10 Min.).

"Perforated Screens and Their Faults"; F. H. Richardson, Quigley Publishing Co., Inc., New York, N. Y. (10 Min.).

"Commercial 16-mm. Projection Faults"; C. L. Greene, Minneapolis, Minn. (15 Min.).

2:00 p.m. Open Afternoon.

7:30 p.m. Salle Moderne; Semi-Annual Banquet.

Short addresses by eminent members of the industry; names to be announced later. Entertainment and Dancing.

Presentation of annual SMPE Progress Medal and Journal Awards.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14

10:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m. Salle Moderne; Apparatus Symposium and Manufacturers' Announcements.

"The Sound-Level Meter in the Motion Picture Industry"; H. H. Scott, General Radio Co., Cambridge, Mass. (15 Min.).

"A New Motion Picture Camera Crane"; E. H. Heyer and E. L. Fisher, Universal Pictures Corp., Universal City, Calif. (15 Min.).

"Non-intermittent Projection"; J. F. Leventhal, Leventhal Patents, Inc., New York, N. Y. (15 Min.).

"New Ideas in Mobile Sound Recording Equipment"; C. M. Ralph and J. G. Matthews, General Service Studios, Hollywood, Calif. (15 Min.).

"A Mobile Sound Recording Channel"; L. T. Goldsmith, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., Burbank, Calif. (15 Min.).

SCHOOL IN TRAILER FOR "SAWYER" KIDS

An auto-trailer school has been established in Hollywood for 12 juveniles now working on "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer", Selznick production.

Tommy Kelly, 12, who plays the title role in the film, is in the eighth grade. Other pupils enrolled are Jackie (Huckleberry Finn) Moran and Marcia Mae (Mary Sawyer) Jones.

The principal and sole instructor of the school is Fletcher Clark who conducts classes from the fourth to the ninth grades.

2:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. Salle Moderne; Sound Session.

"Reduction of Loop-Length Variations in Non-Slip Printers"; E. W. Kellogg, RCA Manufacturing Co., Inc., Camden, N. J. (20 Min.).

"Transmission Characteristics of Western Electric Re-recording Channels"; C. R. Daily and F. L. Hopper, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood, Calif. (20 Min.).

"Permanent Magnet 4-Ribbon Valve for Portable Channel Push-Pull Recording"; E. C. Manderfeld, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood, Calif. (20 Min.).

"Improvements in Noise-Reduction Circuits"; R. R. Scoville, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood, Calif. (20 Min.).

"Improved Methods in Detecting Light-Valve Overload"; C. R. Daily, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood, Calif. (20 Min.).

"Overload Limited for the Protection of Modulating Devices"; R. R. Scoville, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood, Calif. (20 Min.).

Wide interest has been attracted to the convention session because of the comprehensive agenda and the number of subjects to be discussed. The spring session of the Society, held in Los Angeles, was exceptionally well attended and an equal or greater number of delegates and guests are expected to register for next week's meeting.

Legion Secretary Broadcasts Appeal

The Rev. John J. McClafferty, executive secretary of the National Legion of Decency, issued an appeal for both Catholics and non-Catholics to aid "decent producers to produce decent films" when he spoke on the Church of the Air program over the Columbia Broadcasting System Sunday.

"Too often," Father McClafferty said, "producers striving for risque lines and action violate the true spirit and purpose of their code behind an obscene veil of moral asterisks."

He quoted statistics to show that of 1,119 features reviewed in 19 months prior to February, 1936, less than one per cent were given the classification of wholly objectionable. In the seven months of the current year, Father McClafferty said, five American made pictures fell into this classification.

Paramount News Fetes 10th Year

Celebrating its tenth anniversary, Paramount News has inaugurated a new policy of having a "voice staff" of nine commentators and radio reporters to handle various phases of the news. However, A. J. Richard, editor of the reel, stressed the point that "we are not departmentalizing Paramount News."

In a summary of the reel's activities since 1927, Mr. Richard cited four matters which he thinks will have to be met by newsreels within the near future: new personalities and ideas, color, a lengthening to two reels, and a fight to preserve unrestricted coverage of news without buying picture rights.

Letters of congratulation on the reel's tenth anniversary have been received from numerous prominent persons, Mr. Richard said. President Roosevelt forwarded a message of congratulation in which he described himself as "a constant and interested observer" of newsreels. Mr. Roosevelt's two secretarial assistants, Stephen Early and Marvin McIntyre, were taken from the newsreel field. Mr. Early was Paramount's contact man in Washington and Mr. McIntyre held a similar post with Pathe.

Mr. Richard estimated that during the ten years of its existence Paramount has covered about 25,000 stories; used about 20,000,000 feet of newsreel negative and turned out about half a billion feet of positive prints.

"Paramount News," he continued, "goes to 6,000 theatres and 28,000,000 people in this country see it weekly. It also goes to another 5,000 theatres abroad weekly."

Gabriel Heatter, Mutual Broadcasting System commentator, is chief of the new "voice staff." On general news, Frank Knight, chief announcer at WOR, will report on foreign stories, especially those from the British empire. Sidney Walton, Joseph Boley and Mark Hawley will voice the comments on spot news; Gregory Abbott will specialize on matters pertaining to war, disaster and tragedy.

The sports staff will be made up of Bob Carter of WMCA, who will handle horse racing; Bill Slater of Colonial Network, who will describe football games, and Joe Bolton, who will do baseball narratives and work at track events and college athletics.

National Decency Legion Classifies 13 Productions

Of 13 new pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week seven were approved for general patronage, five for adults and one was cited as objectionable in part. The pictures and their classification follow:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Charlie Chan on Broadway," "First Lady," "Le Juif Polonais," "Lovagyi Ugy," "Melgarejo," "Music for Madame," "Saturday's Heroes." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "Back in Circulation," "Counsel for Crime," "Forty Naughty Girls," "Partners in Crime," "Patrioten." Class B, Objectionable in Part: "Mayerling."

Radio City Music Hall . . . largest theatre in the world . . . has honored COLUMBIA anew.

A three-year contract has just been signed, giving this company the opportunity of filling one-third of the theatre's playing time during that period. FRANK CAPRA'S "LOST HORIZON" is now playing the Music Hall, inaugurating the new arrangement. It is the twentieth COLUMBIA picture to be shown at this theatre.

TO the management of the Music Hall, COLUMBIA expresses its profound gratitude for this demonstration of confidence.

ADMISSION INCOME IS UP 15% U.S. REPORTS

Total Tax Revenue from Tickets Is $19,740,191 in Year, Gain of $2,628,000

A sharp upturn in box-office admissions to motion picture theatres and other places of amusement during the fiscal year 1937, ended June 30th last, was disclosed by the Internal Revenue Bureau on Monday in an analysis of all tax collections for the year.

Total admission tax revenues during the period were $19,740,191, a gain of $2,628,000—some 15 per cent—over the $17,112,175 collected during the fiscal year 1936, and of the 1937 total, collections from box-office admissions comprised $17,367,439, a gain of $2,365,000 over the preceding year's $15,001,741, it was shown.

In addition to the taxes on immediate admissions, the bureau reported a revenue of $560,444 from free or reduced rate admissions, against $578,806 in 1936; $51,393 from leases of boxes or seats, against $59,849; $35,514 from admissions sold by proprietors in excess of established prices, against $15,379; $170,047 from ticket brokers' sales, against $117,463; and, $1,555,352 from roof gardens and cabarets, against $1,338,935.

On the basis of the tax collections, box office admissions increased during the fiscal year in all but nine of the states and territories. Generally speaking, the losses in patronage were, with one exception in the case of Delaware, in agricultural areas which were hit by drought or other adverse factors and, with a second exception in Kentucky, in which there were no large cities to build up the total.

Nine Show Decrease

The nine areas reporting a decrease in admission tax collections at the box office were Colorado, Delaware, Hawaii, Kentucky, Montana, New Hampshire, North Dakota, South Dakota and Utah, the greatest loss being nearly $17,000 in Kentucky.

Of the states and territories which registered increases, New York led with a gain of some $1,105,000, the greater part of it in the Third (Broadway) district, where box office taxes increased from $4,730,138 to $5,621,245. California showed a $229,000 gain; Illinois, $178,500; Massachusetts, $108,000, and Pennsylvania $115,000.

The motion picture business, corporately and individually, contributed, too, to the marked advance in the 1936-37 general income tax receipts, which, coupled with the sizeable revenues from the new social security taxes, accounted largely for an increase of $1,132,986,934.19, or 32.2 per cent, in federal tax receipts from all sources.

Total tax collections for the last fiscal year, as announced by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in a preliminary statement, amounted to $4,653,195,315, as against $3,520,208,381.

Largely because of the increased rates of the revenue act of 1936, which were applicable to the last part of the fiscal year of 1937, collections from income sources increased 52.1 per cent for the fiscal period, rising to $2,148,663,875, as compared with $1,412,938,303 for the fiscal year of 1936, or an increase of $735,752,572, approximating, officials said, the figure estimated when the revenue act of 1936 was passed.

Not as favorable, however, was the Treasury's additional report on admission tax revenues from the Third New York (Broadway) District in August, which reached the year's low at $393,838, a drop of more than $78,000 from the July collections of $472,497, but approximately $30,500 above the August, 1936, total of $363,362.

Primary contributor to the loss in revenue, the bureau disclosed, was the drop from $431,455 to $350,938 in box-office collections from July to August.

Night club business started on the upgrade in August with an increase in tax collections from roof gardens and cabarets from $28,324 in July to $36,205.

Other collections reported by the bureau were: Free or reduced rate admissions, $2,632 in August against $1,418 in July; tickets sold by brokers, $3,274 against $8,398; tickets sold by proprietors in excess of box-office prices, $498 against $2,696; permanent use or lease of boxes and seats, $270 against $204.

And while the Internal Revenue Bureau was reporting on the optimistic nature of the 1936-37 taxation receipts, the Treasury Department was studying a proposal which would provide, through federal law, that motion picture producers, distributors and exhibitors, along with all other employers, be made responsible for the collections and payment of income taxes of such of their employees as received taxable salaries or wages of less than $5,000 a year. The proposal was submitted during the week to the Treasury by Representative Fred M. Vinson of Kentucky and will be considered when the special House tax subcommittee, of which Mr. Vinson is chairman, meets in November to consider revision of the revenue laws.

Three Objectives

The plan, similar to one adopted with some success in England, would achieve three ends said to be highly desired by Administration officials: those of relieving hundreds of thousands of salary and wage earners of the necessity of making tax returns, reducing the burden of work on the Internal Revenue Bureau, and eliminating evasion in this class, which is believed to be rather widely practiced.

In the event that the next tax legislation reduces exemptions or lowers the existing income tax base, it is said, adoption of some such procedure as this would be inevitable, and while it is admitted that adoption of the proposal would impose an additional burden upon employers, efforts would be made to lighten the load as much as possible by the adoption of very simple forms for reporting.

The possibility of having employees' tax payments handled by employers is understood to have been suggested by the success attending a similar plan under the Social Security Act, which requires employers to deduct and account for the old-age pension contributions of their employees.

Using similar machinery for the income tax payments, it is believed, little difficulty would be encountered in having employers deduct the income tax assessments from the individual salaries and pay the proceeds directly into the Treasury at specified periods.

Carvel Films of the Midwest, Inc., has been organized in Chicago by L. M. Francisco with H. E. Bradley of Chicago and J. Rothman of New York as incorporators.

Film houses operated in Poland during 1936 numbered 741, an increase of 19 over the previous year, according to a report received by the U. S. Department of Commerce.

ADMISSION TAXES OF TWO YEARS COMPARED

The following table shows admission tax collections at the box office for 1936-37 as compared with 1935-36, by states. It should be borne in mind, however, that these figures do not give an indication of motion picture theatre attendance alone in all states and particularly with those which have race tracks, such as Florida, Kentucky, Rhode Island and the like.

Metco Acquires Theatre

Metco Theatres, Inc., Baltimore, has leased the Metropolitan, of the same city, from Warners and assumed operation last week. Warners has managed the theatres since 1930.

Starr Remains in Omaha

Murray Starr will continue as National Screen Service representative in Omaha under Chick Friedman, who will have charge of the company's new exchange at Des Moines.

Ray Coffin on Coast

Ray Coffin, formerly associated with A. H. Blank and M. Weinberg in Des Moines, is in Hollywood to handle the office of a radio promotion agency.

RCA Factory Planned

RCA is planning to build a new Radiotron factory at Harrison, New Jersey, for the manufacture and storage of television tubes.

Alex Hyde, conductor and musical director, has been signed as an associate musical director at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

1,000 IN FIRST OF NEW GROUPS TO SPONSOR BOYCOTTS OF DUAL HOUSES

Small Town in New Jersey Is the Birthplace of Anti Movie Double Feature League; Several Petitions Are Circulated

Two young men from the little town of Nutley, New Jersey, George H. Siegel, 30, and William R. Clay, 28, have organized the Anti Movie Double Feature League of America with no other motive, they say, than the elimination of dual bills, and already claim to have close to 1,000 members enrolled. Each of the members, the Nutley men explained, has signed a petition stating the "avowed purpose and aims" of the organization, which are:

1. "Through the strength of our numbers and the solidarity of our organization to appeal to the film exhibitors to curtail or eliminate such programs (dual bills).

2. "To boycott double feature bills.

3. "To spread the doctrine that one good picture is always more preferable than two second-grade ones."

Seated in Mr. Siegel's tiny office, a room in his apartment over stores on the main business corner of Nutley, the two leaders of the group amplified on the aims and purposes of the movement and told the story of its birth.

Mr. Clay, who is employed as "makeup man" on Nutley's weekly newspaper, the Sun, did most of the talking. His partner in the campaign, a real estate and insurance broker, left early in the interview for another appointment, saying that his co-sponsor was "fully conversant" with the plans.

Mr. Clay was vigorous in his protest against the practice of "foisting double features on the public," and elaborated by pounding his fist upon the desk and gritting his teeth.

Drop Plan to Ask Hays

It remains a question, even to Mr. Clay and Mr. Siegel, as to how they will employ the thousands upon thousands of signatures they expect to obtain. At first they believed that, armed with a formidable number of signed petitions, they could appeal to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, to issue an ultimatum against double features. However, as they came in closer contact with the motion picture industry they decided to discard that method of procedure.

They expressed confidence, though, that with a large membership they will be able to exert sufficient influence upon exhibitors to halt "the diabolic practice which is an insult to our intelligence."

Hamilton J. Cherry, owner and manager of the Franklin theatre in Nutley, signed the petition, Mr. Clay said.

Visualizing the growth of the organization until it has chapters throughout the country, Mr. Clay added:

"And let me tell you something. All theatres that don't play one good feature instead of two cheap pictures will be boycotted and picketed."

It was two weeks ago, the crusaders said, that the idea of taking action against the industry germinated, after they attended a double feature program:

"We had been in the—well, I guess I hadn't better mention the name of the theatre," Mr. Clay explained, "but anyway the seats there are particularly hard. There was a picture we wanted to see, but when we got there the second feature was on, and it was a 'dog' of a picture. Well, by the time we sat through the one picture we were so worn out from squirming around in our chairs that we couldn't enjoy the picture we went to see. And it really was supposed to be a good picture.

"Intelligence Insulted"

"After we came out, three and a half hours later, we got talking about double features and concluded that our intelligence was being insulted."

Anticipating the question: "Why not inquire as to the time each feature begins and just go to the theatre when the picture you want to see starts?" Mr. Clay explained:

"We just don't happen to be the type that will sit around until 10 o'clock when we want to go to the movies, and on the other hand we can't get started early enough to get in for the 7 o'clock show. Like the majority of other people we arrive at a theatre between 8:30 and 9 o'clock, and are just in time to see most of a cheap picture."

It was the intent of the Nutley men, at first, to confine their activities to communities surrounding their home town. They solicited the signatures of their friends and acquaintances and, "as a precaution against obtaining meaningless signatures," they assessed each new member 10 cents.

"But then," Mr. Clay explained, "the thing just mushroomed. Letters started pouring in on us with dimes enclosed."

This unforeseen development, Mr. Clay continued, brought realization that post office officials might look upon the venture as a "racket."

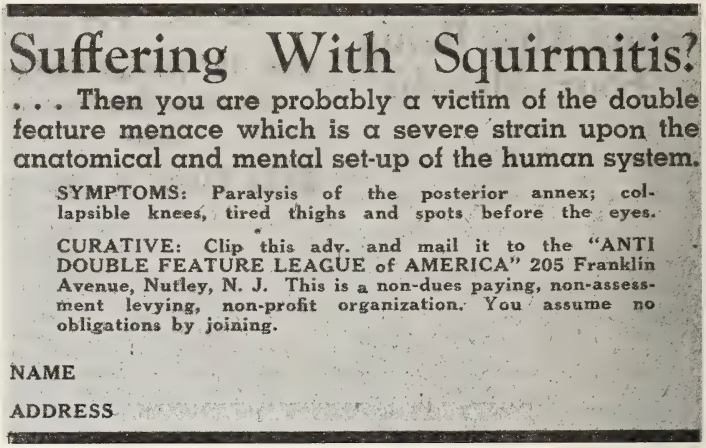
"We decided that if anyone should call the organization a racket we wouldn't be able to get very far with it," Mr. Clay went on. "You know once an organization gets a black mark like that, it's all through. So we cut out the collecting of dimes. But when you have had 300 people willing to pay 10 cents to voice their protest against double features, you know you're on the right track."

As an example of the way in which their motives might be misinterpreted, Mr. Clay told of how they were approached by a man who advised them to employ a manager, and suggested himself for the job. "We told him we didn't need a manager and weren't going to hire one because we weren't out to make any money."

Mr. Clay said that the dimes collected early in the campaign had covered the expenses to date. The only outlay was for paper on which to typewrite the petition's message and for stamps to answer the letters received. Any future expenses incurred, Mr. Clay asserted, will be paid for by himself and Mr. Siegel.

Stacked on the battered desk in front of Mr. Clay were letters received from supporters of the movement. Mr. Clay pointed out that apparently they had been sent from persons in all walks of life. Some were on expensive stationery, others were scribbled on cheap tablet paper, and one was written on the back of a restaurant menu.

The sponsors said they had not received a single letter favoring the showing of two features.



Petitions Issued

In answering the letters petitions are enclosed with a request that the recipient obtain signatures.

It was after the plan gathered momentum that its originators decided upon a nationwide organization. They prepared publicity releases and forwarded them to all New York City newspapers . Two, the Times and Post, published articles on the formation of the group. Newspapers in Newark and Jersey City carried stories on the venture.

The only actual advertising done by the league to date was a two-column piece (reproduced with this story), which appeared in the Nutley paper. On the day after the ad appeared, Mr. Clay said, about 100 letters were received.

No other advertising is planned by the league, with the exception of an ad in the personal column of the New York Herald Tribune. Mr. Clay and Mr. Siegel believe word-of-mouth publicity and news stories will suffice.

Above is a reproduction of the advertisement being used by the Anti-Double Feature League of America. It first appeared last Friday in the Sun at Nutley, N. J.

Sales Meet, Staff Changes at GB

The home office of GB Pictures in New York, headquarters for the American distribution of Gaumont-British product from London, was taken up this week by a mid-seasonal sales meeting and a series of personnel changes in the executive staff.

The sales meeting, Arthur A. Lee, head of the distributing company, explained, was in line with GB's policy of selling its pictures individually. Similar meetings will be held prior to the release of each new production. At this week's session, two new pictures, "Non-Stop New York," and "Dr. Syn," were screened and publicity campaigns for each were discussed.

Clinton M. White, newly appointed assistant general manager, presided and told the branch managers that additional men are being engaged to bolster the sales staff.

Among those who attended the meeting were Mr. Lee, Marcel Mekelburg, Boston; Charles Leach, New Haven; Herbert Given, John Schaeffer, Philadelphia; W. A. V. Mack, Joseph Kaliski, Washington; George Rosenbaum, Buffalo; Joseph Loeffler, Cleveland. Home office representatives who attended were: George W. Weeks, Arthur Greenblatt, newly appointed eastern division manager; Albert Margolies, director of publicity; Al Selig, advertising manager; Claude Macgowan, C. F. Schwengeler, B. J. Kearney and Basil Shea.

Mr. White, who had been assistant sales manager for three years, succeeded George Weeks, resigned. Mr. Weeks announced he is planning an extensive trip abroad. He will be accompanied by his wife.

Mr. Weeks' assistant, Kenneth Hodkinson, who was assigned to the west coast territory for the last few weeks, also has resigned. His successor has not been appointed as yet.

McCarthy Forms Company

A new concern, BCM Productions, has been formed in Hollywood by Leo J. McCarthy, former Republic producer, with Charles A. Browne, associate producer, and Elmer Clifton as director. The first picture, on which work has already been started, will be "Assassin of Youth," an anti-narcotic film.

Paul Jones Made Producer

Paul M. Jones, former assistant director, has been promoted to producer of "A" pictures at Paramount. After completing four pictures under Harold Hurley, Mr. Jones' first assignment in his new status will be "Things Began to Happen," to star W. C. Fields.

Desch Named GB Exchange Manager

Douglas Desch, Gaumont British booker for the last three years, has succeeded Ray Halpern, as GB exchange manager in Kansas City. Mr. Halpern has been transferred to Boston as manager and will also handle the New Haven territory.

Erwin Leaves GN

Stuart Erwin has quit Grand National, citing dissatisfaction with stories. He had just finished "Mr. Boggs Buys a Barrel." He has two picture commitments with Twentieth Century-Fox.

MEXICO LABOR TROUBLES SETTLED BY AMERICANS

Agreements Made with Organized Employees Demanding 30 to 35 Per Cent Wage Increases

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

Labor difficulties, which for a time threatened to cause serious trouble, have been smoothed over by the eight major American producers doing business in Mexico—Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Twentieth Century-Fox, Warner Brothers, Universal, United Artists, Columbia and RKO Radio.

The unpleasantness arose when distributors' organized employees demanded wage increases of from 30 to 35 per cent and threatened to strike if the demands were not met.

Following the lead of MGM and Paramount, the distributors made agreements with workers which pacified them, for the time being, at least. The amounts of the settlements were not disclosed, but it is understood they were substantial. Unionized employees of the distributors said that they were obliged to ask for more money because of the soaring cost of living. A like motive prompted organized attaches of Mexico City cinemas to demand a 25 per cent wage boost and a share in the exhibitors' income. They were appeased, to the extent of forgetting (temporarily, it is said), the share-in-profits proposition when the exhibitors yielded to the higher salaries demand.

Pretentious Program

What is intended to be the most pretentious picture made in Mexico by Mexicans is being prepared for production in the near future by Producciones Soria, S. en C., the new producing enterprise that made "Ora Ponciano" ("Come On, Now, Ponciano"), one of the best domestic movies of this season. Gabriel Soria, head of the company, who directed "Ponciano," is to have charge of the new enterprise, "The Conquest of Mexico."

For the first time in films, the picture is to trace the epic story of the fall of the Aztec empire, the most bizarre Indian confederation the world has ever known, brought about in 1519 by a handful of Spanish adventurers. Accounts of the conquest, by Spanish, Mexican and American authorities, are to be faithfully followed in the scenario which is being prepared by Marcus Goodrich, who has done much work in Hollywood.

The picture is to cost 1,000,000 pesos (some $280,000), the largest amount to be spent on a movie made by Mexicans. A large company is being recruited for the picture which is to feature many prominent Mexican players.

A Discovery on Location

The queerest of the strange things found on location by Mexican film companies was fossilized portions of a huge prehistoric animal discovered near Tlaxacal City, capital of the tiny state of Tlaxacala, which was the site of America's first republic, by the producing company of which Engineer Adolfo Espino is president. The government has allowed the movie people to exhibit the find for publicity purposes.

Mexican producers are making a stronger bid for a showing amid the avalanche of Hollywood products. Seven large Mexico City houses are showing domestic films.

The Mexican Movie Workers' Union has opened new headquarters in a building of its own at Orozco y Berra street, No. 15, Mexico City. The edifice is dedicated to John M. Anderson and George Briones, union chiefs.

Mier Forms Company

Felipe Mier, former manager for Warner Brothers in Mexico City, has organized a producing company and is planning a program of six features.

A new house, the Rex, seating 1,200, will be opened shortly in Monterrey, which is near the American border. It will be operated by a Mexican syndicate headed by Gonzalo Gaza. Another new theatre is being erected in Hermosillo, capital of the northwestern state of Sonora.

Three Films Involved In Censor Arguments

Four socalled "sex" films, all distributed by companies outside of the organized industry, this week were involved in court arguments or in tilts with censors.

The most notable attention was given to "How to Undress in Front of Your Husband," a short reel starring Elaine Barrie, wife of John Barrymore, which was banned from exhibition in New York by Frank P. Graves, head of the Commission of Education, which controls the state board of censorship. Dr. Graves upheld an earlier decision of Irwin Desmond, director of censorship. Louis Solkoff was mentioned as the producer of the film, in press reports from the hearing at Albany, which also described Mrs. Barrymore as showing in the film "how to step seductively from step-ins to nightgown."

Foy Pictures, Ltd., was expected to make a similar appeal to the Commissioner of Education for a license to show the English film, "Tomorrow's Children."

In Baltimore, "Smashing the Vice Traffic," being handled there by Duke Loenberg, was banned entirely by two women members of the Maryland Censor Board although Dr. Ben Paul Sandy did not concur in their views. An appeal has been taken.

Henry Pearlman, attorney for Jewel Productions, Inc., has applied for an injunction in New York to prevent seizure by the United States collector of customs of the film "Science of Mankind," imported last year from Austria. A special court of three judges will be convened to hear the company's claim that such seizure would be unconstitutional, he said.

To Distribute Spanish Film

Independent Film Service, Cleveland, has acquired distribution rights to "Fury over Spain" for the Ohio and Kentucky territories. Harry Lande and Nate Gerson operate the exchange.

AUSTRALIA'S PROSPERITY AUGURS THEATRE GAINS

Business Upturn Spurs Theatre Construction; National Income To Be Up $95,000,000

by CLIFF HOLT
in Sydney

Statistics recently published by the Federal Statistician cheerfully reflect Australia's regained prosperity, auguring well for theatre business in the Commonwealth for the new season.

Production in primary and secondary industries for the fiscal year ended June 30th rose $1,045,000,000 over the 1932 figure. Employment has risen 350,000 since 1932 and the recent rise in the basic wage will put $95,000,000 more into the wage earner's pocket this year. Savings bank deposits have soared to $160,000,000.

In keeping with the prosperous conditions, new theatres are being built in anticipation of an attendance boom during the new season. At the same time established theatre owners, alarmed at the threat to their profit which every new theatre represents, are agitating for stringent restriction laws.

Evidence of this attitude is provided in the opposition of the newly formed Tasmanian Exhibitors' Association to the proposed plan of Hoyts' Theatres, Ltd., to build houses in Launceston and Hobart. The Association seeks the Government's assurance that new licenses will be withheld pending inquiry.

Spokesmen for the Association charge that the influence of the Fox Film Corporation is behind the projected Hoyts enterprises and that "for the last 10 years America has been trying to get a stranglehold on the film industry of the world."

The Chief Secretary has announced that the Government will consider acting upon the Association's recommendation to set up a licensing board for supervision of picture theatres.

To any suggestion that they themselves might declare a monopoly, the Association replies that all members would be brought under the control of the licensing board. They further suggest that theatres failing to keep up-to-date or show the best product available should forfeit their licenses.

The Tasmanian press carries statements by the city management that trace the events leading up to the liquidation of Union Theatres, Fox's purchase of control in Hoyts and the formation of General Theatres Corporation.

Alarmed at the inroads made by American interests, through Fox's control of Hoyts, the statement says: "Since then, the Fox Corporation in America has been trying to obtain a 10-year option over all the major film companies' products, and has succeeded so well that it is reputed to have dealt successfully with six of the 10. If no preventive measures are adopted, the Australian industry will be throttled, and control of the motion picture business will pass entirely into the hands of America."

Despite the "dangers" of American domination, general opinion is that the Tasmanian government will welcome Hoyts and any company with the capital to build.

RKO Gets Boxing Pictures

RKO Radio has been granted the foreign distribution rights for "Carnival of Champions," held in New York last week, by Super Sport Attractions, Inc. Rights cover all foreign territories with the exception of the United Kingdom and Australasia. Richard D. Spierman, manager of RKO Radio's Japanese branch, has just completed a deal for the simultaneous first and second run of "Shall We Dance" at the Takarazuk (Toho) and Shochiku (Sy) theatres. For the first time, according to RKO, these competitors are playing the same picture day and date.

Grand National Completes Eight

Grand National has completed eight features recently and will start on five others shortly, Edward L. Alperson, president of the company, said this week on his arrival in New York from Hollywood. He added that eight additional films are in various stages of preparation.

Those finished include Stuart Erwin in "Mr. Boggs Buys a Barrel," formerly "Face the Facts," by Clarence Budington Kelland; Wallace Ford in "He Wanted to Marry," tentatively titled; Jimmy Newill in "Renfrew of the Royal Mounted"; George Houston in "Wallaby Jim of the Islands"; Eric Linden and Boots Mallory in "Here Comes Flash Casey"; Tex Ritter in "Tex and the Boy Scouts" and "Frontier Town." Frank Gay has completed "King of the Sierras," which is the last of five pictures promised by Condor.

Loew's, Saenger, Singer To Open Vaudeville House

Loew's, the Saenger organization and Mort Singer are reported to have formed the St. Charles Amusement Company to take over the St. Charles, New Orleans, for vaudeville shows.

The report, which is not denied, also declares that union stagehands have been approached on the subject of wage scales.

F&M Houses Observe Entertainment Month

"Greater entertainment month" was observed during September in the 32 theatres operated by Fanchon & Marco-St. Louis Amusement Company and Ansell Brothers.

It was the first time the F & M first run houses, the Ambassador and the Fox, had joined with the St. Louis Theatre, head of the St. Louis Amusement Company's theatres, in observing the month.

Thirteen Theatres in Combine

Thirteen Long Island theatres have formed a buying combine with Frank Moscato in charge of its operations. Theatres in the group are Verona, Long Island City; East Islip, East Islip; Kings Park, Kings Park; Roslyn, Roslyn; Howard, Howard Beach; State, Hempstead; Arcade, Lynbrook; Strand, Farmingdale; Newton, Elmhurst; Palace, Corona; Bays, Hampton Bay; Mattituck, Mattituck, and Ditmars, Astoria.

Warner Club Elects and Golfs

Warner Brothers' home office club in New York this week held its annual election of officers and its regular golf tournament, at which both employees and employers attended.

Arthur Sachson, head of the contract department and vice-president of the club last year, was chosen president. Other officers are Jules Levy, vice-president in charge of membership; Harry Mayer, vice-president in charge of entertainment; Ruth Weisberg, vice-president in charge of welfare; Frank L. Gates, vice-president in charge of claims; J. T. Holmes, treasurer; Robert Salomons, assistant treasurer; Stuart H. Aarons, secretary, and Sam Schneider, chairman of finance.

About 50 delegates from eight states attended the meeting which was followed by a luncheon at the Warner clubrooms and a dinner party at the International Casino.

For the third successive year, Leonard Palumbo took first prize for low gross at the club's annual golf tourney, which was held at Old Oaks Golf Club, Rye. Pat Marcone took second place, and Larry Golob, third.

A total of 90 prizes were awarded. Among the donors were MOTION PICTURE HERALD, Motion Picture Daily, Film Daily, Variety, Jay Emanuel Publications and the Showmen's Trade Review.

An arrangement committee for the tourney was composed of Mr. Sachson, Gene Werner and Mr. Palumbo. Major Albert Warner and Jack L. Warner participated in the tournament.

Universal Directors Vote Confidence

The board of directors of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., last week voted complete confidence in the administration of J. Cheever Cowdin and Robert H. Cochrane and in Charles R. Rogers, production head.

The Universal company and its subsidiary companies reported for the third quarter, covering the 13 weeks to July 31, 1937, consolidated net loss of $627,933, after all charges, federal and foreign income taxes and depreciation. This compares with a net loss of $579,379 in the corresponding period a year ago.

All of Universal's previous records for weekly business were broken last week when they "were topped by thousands of dollars," according to announcement from the company. The statement attributed the increase to the fact "100 Men and a Girl" was playing in more than 50 theatres.

Mr. Rogers was in New York this week.

Named to Censor Board

Richard Smith, of Georgetown, Ohio, has been appointed assistant state director of education, which makes him assistant chief of the consor board. He succeeds E. N. Dietrich, appointed state director of education.

Sign Wallington, Prof. Quiz

Columbia Pictures has engaged James Wallington, radio announcer, and Professor Quiz, radio performer, for feature roles in "Freshman Follies."

Declares Wags Strip Film Leaders of Needed Dignity

"Pants Presser" Gag and Like Attempts at Levity Make Job of "Selling" the Industry Tough, Says Lawyer Who Seeks Bar Group Action Encouraging Better Publicity for the Motion Picture Business

Reiterating the viewpoint of a MOTION PICTURE HERALD editorial in which it was stated, "Too much motion picture copy, as well as motion picture intercourse, is too damned familiar," Bernard A. Grossman, attorney, this week appealed to the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut to launch a movement for dignity in the motion picture industry. Mr. Grossman, as chairman of the association's committee on theatrical law, submitted a preliminary report, pointing out that the motion picture industry "as a whole has not devoted itself towards a sense of self respect and responsibility."

BERNARD GROSSMAN

The report, Mr. Grossman explained to a Herald representative, was drafted because of the attitude in banking circles and judicial and administrative departments, toward the theatre and its executives. This attitude, described by the attorney as one in which picture executives "are criticized and scorned and sneered at for their humble beginning," is a decided handicap to attorneys representing motion picture interests, according to the report.

It is with the ulterior motive of eliminating the handicap to the legal profession that Mr. Grossman is urging the bar association to undertake a concerted movement to correct what has been called "the evil of familiarity" in the motion picture business.

"The older American industries," the report points out, "have learned they must court public opinion and present their personnel to it in a dignified light."

Pictures Different

But turning to the motion picture industry, Mr. Grossman cited his conclusion that "the situation is different" in that field.

He summarized his viewpoint by stating:

"In size the motion picture industry is gigantic. It is international. It is one of the largest industries in the country. Its salary list tops that of any industry and is consistently higher throughout its entire rank of workers. Every angle of publicity is at its command—and is thoroughly misused. Every door for financing has been opened to it. Every family in the country has welcomed it, and now views it with concern and suspicion."

The chief cause of this, Mr. Grossman contends, originated within the industry itself.

Publicity in Other Fields

Reverting back to organizations within other industries, the report continues, "Their publicity departments aim to glorify the mind of the executive and to stress his importance in the industry, the community and the commercial progress of the country. If he started life as a poor boy, then articles and pamphlets and books are created and circulated, dignifying the humble beginning and showing its importance in the general scheme and progress and character of development. If, on the other hand, he is the scion of a monied family, the public relations counsel squeezes from this situation whatever material there may be to build up the subject under discussion.

"As a result, this publicized industry and its executives have an established valuable status, their good characteristics are known and accented. Their representatives take on the hue and color of the principal and are well and cordially received."

But Film Business Publicity!

A different picture, though, is painted by Mr. Grossman for the motion picture field.

"Many in the motion picture industry," the attorney asserted, "act on the proposition that there are many things which show off better than brains, and on this platform they are tempted into eccentricities and conspicuousness.

"Success is a powerful stimulant: taken suddenly, and in large doses, it is liable to act as an intoxicant.

"And so we have a picture that is duplicated in no other industry. The man at the bottom criticizes his superiors up the line. Those above him sneer up and down. Everywhere someone is mouthing a sentence, as a cur mouths a bone. Under the philosophy of 'anything for a laugh,' the executive under discussion is presented as a poor boy of no rational reason.

"Questionable wits twist pointless stories out of his mispronunciations or other personal idiocrasies."

Gags Become Practical Jokes

In elaborating on this phase of the report, Mr. Grossman placed particular emphasis on the term "pants pressers," which, he said, he often heard used in reference to film executives.

"The challenge of 'pants pressers'," Mr. Grossman observed, "has been forced by the industry itself so generally on the outside world that from the general conversations on the outside you would think that these head executives were not to be trusted with any other activities and, if not watched, would be engaged in their secret practice at home."

Dropping all semblance of levity himself, Mr. Grossman cited the fact that many State legislatures, during the last few years, have considered legislation directed at the theatre. This point, he believes, should arouse the industry itself and serve as an incentive to correct the condition.

"The national legislature has initiated many proposed inquiries and threatened more," the report states. "The banker has done his part to join the restrictive control. The theatrical lawyer, who approaches them, hears the echo of much of the bad gagging that originated with the wits of the industry."

Included in the report was an excerpt from a MOTION PICTURE HERALD editorial which was published August 14th, and which commented on the newspaper advertising campaign for the picture "The Life of Emile Zola." The part used by Mr. Grossman in his report follows:

"The motion picture can do with considerably more formal propriety. Too much motion picture copy, as well as motion picture intercourse, is too damned familiar. A dash of dignity is good for the morale—and the box office. Keep them looking up when they buy."

Mr. Grossman submitted the report to Henry Ward Beer, attorney and president of the lawyers' association which, Mr. Grossman estimated, has a membership of about 2,000. After its approval by Mr. Beer and by other members of the committee, copies of the report will be forwarded to all members of the organization.

Then, as a further step toward achieving his goal, Mr. Grossman plans to recommend that the membership of his committee be changed at the annual meeting in October so as to include association members who serve as counsel for motion picture interests.

New Orleans Lease Set

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and the Institute of Mental Hygiene have agreed upon all details for the leasing by the film company of a two story building, which will be erected at Cleveland Avenue and South Liberty Street in New Orleans. The building will be used as a distributing center. The lease is for 12 years at an annual rental of $8,400.

Reliance Signs Donat

Edward Small, who has returned from Europe, said Reliance will make one picture with Robert Donat. No decision has been made as to where the picture will be produced or through what company it will be released. Mr. Small will remain in New York for several weeks before returning to the coast. He recently concluded an arrangement as producer for RKO Radio.

Change "Raiders" Title

Universal has announced that the Kimball Herrick novel, filming of which was completed recently under the title "Midnight Raiders," will be released as "Trouble at Midnight."

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Finish "Mr. Satan"

"Mr. Satan" has been completed at Warner-First National's studio at Teddington. Skeets Gallagher, who makes his first British film appearance in it, is returning to New York immediately for a stage show.

Last shots of the picture showed Chili Bouchier and Franklin Dyall killed by James Stevenson, newspaper man who runs to earth an armaments plot of which the inspiring force is Zubovna, a mysterious figure of the underworld. "Skeets" provides comedy relief as a wisecracking newspaper photographer.

For their other current production, "Thank Evans," with Max Miller, Warner-First National recently used in a racing sequence four English jockeys: R. Wall, famous for surviving a broken neck in a steeplechase; W. O'Neill, J. Roach and F. Roach. A four-legged star was the racehouse Grey Carey, which won the Ascot Stakes in 1936.

Tommy Farr in Film

Tommy Farr, on the strength of the American reputation he made by his showing against Joe Louis, probably will be featured in the first of the Gracie Fields pictures for Twentieth Century-Fox, which will go on the Denham floor soon. Sam Engels, Twentieth Century-Fox producer for the unit, who arrived on the Queen Mary, will cable an offer to Farr this week if executives in London concur in the idea that the boxer has the makings of a screen player.

Richman Picture

Standard International Pictures, which produced "Make Up," have three more pictures scheduled which also, they say, will be cast and produced with a view to the needs of the American market. K. C. Alexander, the producer, is soon to visit Hollywood with a view to signing stars.

For the first subject an original, at present untitled, by the former UFA scenarist, E. Pressburger, and E. Katcher, will be used. The whole of the action will take place on a special train on which a London stage company is traveling to Glasgow for a revue "tryout." For the star part Harry Richman is being approached, and the Mills Brothers and other well known variety and radio acts probably will be signed also.

Two further pictures planned by Standard are a crime story with London backgrounds and a color feature with South Sea settings from the original story "Yacht Ky-Ky," by Hans Possendorf. This will be made practically in its entirety against authentic backgrounds.

The first MGM-British motion picture, "A Yank at Oxford", is underway at Denham, under the new Metro program for production in England. Edmund Gwenn (above) has a featured role in the film, which stars Robert Taylor and Maureen O'Sullivan.

Casting MGM's First

Casting for "A Yank at Oxford," for which Jack Conway shot first scenes at Denham a few days ago, is proceeding on lines which indicate a very definite intention on the part of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer British Studios to make this, their first picture in England, as nearly as possible a fifty-fifty Anglo-American product. Aimed primarily at the two great English speaking markets, "A Yank at Oxford" may set a pattern to which the majority of big pictures scheduled here will generally conform.

The double aim of the picture is very noticeable in its casting. Behind the American leads, Robert Taylor and Maureen O'Sullivan, will be two of the very best of young British leads in Vivien Leigh and Griffith Jones. Miss Leigh, recently seen to advantage in "Storm in a Teacup," has a number of Denham successes behind her. Jones, since his first hit in "Escape Me Never," has also been a first choice for London Films productions.

In character parts there will be the Americans Lionel Barrymore and Tully Marshall and the British Edmund Gwenn, C. V. France, Edward Rigby, Robert Coote, Peter Croft and Noel Howlett among others. Each will depict his own nationality on the screen.

In the story also, the Anglo-American appeal will be stressed by the portrayal of an American student's adventures against the ultra-English background of Oxford University,—which has an interest value as great on your side as on ours. The earnestness with which Robert Taylor is regarding his part, and the realization on the part of Conway that sport is one of the main activities of English University life are illustrated by the fact that Taylor has been undergoing a training in rowing, skating and track running which would fit him for a real appearance at the Sports at which the "Yank" is called on to do credit to his country.

With conflicting views periodically expressed by leading executives on the question of just what America does want in British films, "A Yank at Oxford" looks one of the most interesting experiments ever made in a British studio. At this time it seems that it will answer those who demand "international" appeal as well as those who clamor for "really British" pictures by proving that a story British in background can, without any violence to credibility, be made to include, without forcing, all those star values upon which the American box-office depends. And one thing it will definitely do for British production in general: it will let America see a whole lot of the most promising players in England, and let America see them in association with native topliners, through a major release. That single fact seems to answer a great deal of the current criticism of American production in England.

NEWSREELS OF HORRORS OF WAR AROUSE CONTROVERSY IN LONDON

It's Argument of Duty to Give News and Show Horrors of Shanghai Bombing Against Function of Entertainment

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Inclusion in British newsreels of scenes showing air bombardment of Shanghai and its bloodthirsty results has created enormous interest. At a West End newsreel theatre Japanese and Chinese patrons clashed and were ejected. The showings also have ventilated decided differences of opinion among newsreel chiefs of what is and what is not proper to exhibit on public screens.

British Paramount News and Universal News each included detailed scenes of the air raids. Shots showed the streets littered with mangled bodies.

The Paramount reel concluded with a grim shot of bodies and human remains being collected into lorries for mass burial. This scene was reproduced in the press and several newspapers ran special stories about the air raid scenes and their reception by the public. Warning notices that the scene was unfit for children to see and that squeamish adults should also withdraw were shown and screened. The public reaction to the scene was described by the News Chronicle as "first a shocked silence and then cries of dismay." The paper praised the commentator's discription of the scenes as showing "the full meaning of war—war that murders women and children as easily as soldiers," and quoted a news theatre manager's view that, after considering cutting the scene, he left it in because "adult cinemagoers should be given the opportunity of seeing a piece of truth."

Mr. G. T. Cummins, editor of the Paramount reel, said: "It is our duty to give the news. These things are happening and we have decided to show them. The only way to stop war is to give people a proper idea of what it means."

Mr. Jeffrey Bernerd, controlling Gaumont-British News, joined issue with this statement in a press interview in which he said that: "It is the duty of the newsreels to present news but not to put on the screen material for a political purpose." He added that Mr. Cummins should have shown his film privately to Members of Parliament.

Mr. Bernerd added: "The exhibitors of this country run their theatres with the idea of entertaining the public. The public trust exhibitors to show entertainment and therefore they take their children." He also said that it was possible to show the effects of the Shanghai bombardment in a "discreet manner" by showing the debris and devastation in long shots. "It is not going to stop war. . . . Show pictures of the Shanghai bombardment to Chamberlain, Hitler, Mussolini, Roosevelt and other leaders."

In the Gaumont-British News the panic and widespread destruction were apparent and there were many shots showing the Japanese planes dropping bombs under anti-aircraft fire, but no "atrocities." Paramount, on the other hand, claimed that the scenes in that reel were exclusive to them and that, having obtained them, they had a public duty to issue them.

Mr. Cummins asserted the same right for newsreels as for newspapers to record "the trends and events of this amazing world" and quoted theatre managers as saying that the public had highly praised the Paramount reel as a salutary proof of what war on civilians means.

Mr. Francis L. Harley, on behalf of British Movietone News, later issued a statement generally supporting the attitude of G-B, saying: "It is no part of a newsreel's function to shock or horrify any section of its audiences."

In another passage Mr. Harley said: "The privilege of conducting a newsreel carries with it considerable responsibility. We are charged with the duty of showing news faithfully and reporting it sincerely, but we have also to consider the susceptibilities of our audiences and give them their entertainment without outraging their feelings. In general our company considers itself governed by those principles which have proved efficacious in the case of feature films under a film censorship, the application of which, to news films, is not, of course, practicable."

The episode illustrates the curious position in which British newsreels stand in regard to censorship. They are not in fact censored, but a legal ruling has been given that they are subject to censorship if they include a commentary, and the fact that this power is in reserve and could be used against any offending reel has tended undoubtedly to a cautious policy on the part of the editors.

Many think that the Government is in favor of the widespread exhibition of the unexpurgated reel, as valuable propaganda for its policy of "preparedness," particularly in regard to protection against air attacks.

Theatre Strike Threat

Possibilities of certain British cinemas closing on Sunday, as a protest against the prevailing system whereby Sunday opening is dependent on the payment of a levy to charity, are foreshadowed by a discussion at the Brighton meeting of the Sussex branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association.

Brighton was one of the towns which enjoyed Sunday opening rights before the passing of the Sunday Entertainments Act. This measure made such openings dependent upon a local decision in favor of the principle and conditional upon the payment of a percentage of Sunday receipts to a Cinematograph Fund, which distributes them to various charities, incidentally taking several thousands of pounds a year for endowment of the semi-official British Film Institute.

Under the Act, Brighton exhibitors, who previously banked all their Sunday takings, were jointly assessed for a "Charity" payment of £1,050 per annum. The local Council now is proposing to revise the levy to one of 8.75 per cent of actual Sunday receipts.

The proposal that this suggestion, if put into effect, should be countered by a general closure on Sundays implies that the public would be told the reason of the exhibitor's action. Adopted in one town, the same policy probably would be followed in others, and a national campaign for the seven days license might be added to the other matters which the CEA has on hand.

This would raise in a critical form an old controversy to which the Sunday Entertainments Act provided a compromise solution, illogical but workable. That measure came into existence after Sunday opening, which was general in London and in many other places by permission of the local authorities, had been declared illegal under an Act of the seventeenth century which in fact was obsolete but in law was not.

The Government, frankly afraid of religious opinion, shifted the problem to the localities. Exhibitors accepted the charity levy, at a time when many thought a fight would have brought them greater conces-

AD LICENSE BILL FOUGHT IN SCOTLAND

An attempt will be made by film interests to obtain amendment of the Licensing of Advertisements (Scotland) bill, which will be introduced in the next Parliamentary session. The bill provides for the licensing of all sites used for advertising display and also that, in the case of place of entertainment, only one advertisement shall be displayed upon each street frontage.

The aim of the bill is the control of unsightly signs and the preservation of public amenities, but the trade view is that in its present form it may severely handicap Scottish exhibitors.

The Cinematograph Exhibitors Association probably will try to obtain amendments.

SUNDAY ISSUE REVIVED IN ENGLAND

sions. chiefly because London theatre owners were anxious not to lose the Sunday receipts they had long enjoyed under local license.

There is a tendency for the joint assessment, usually substituted for an actual percentage of Sunday receipts, authorized by the Act, to increase year by year. If the point is reached that Sunday opening becomes commercially scarcely worthwhile—there is a section of exhibitor opinion which thinks that as much money passes the box-office in six days as in seven—the Act passed to legalize Sunday opening may lead to the very opposite effect.

The further ironical situation may arise that a community poll having declared in favor of Sunday opening, the community may be denied the privilege for which it has voted at the instance of the very exhibitors who asked them to vote for it.

South African Profits

A gross revenue of £83,075 and a balance of £53,745, in the year ended June 30th is reported by Kinemas, the holding company of African Consolidated Films and African Consolidated Theatres, the two main enterment enterprises in South Africa. A final ordinary dividend of 6½ per cent makes the year's total 11½ per cent. The company's 5 shillings value ordinaries are quoted here at 7 shillings each and the 5¼ per cent debenture stock at 95½.

Kinemas received from the two companies mentioned £54,120 against £44,440 in 1936. The ordinary capital is £400,000 after a reconstruction.

Gilbert and Sullivan Films

The Gilbert and Sullivan operettas will be filmed by a special unit formed by General Cinema Finance Corp., under the supervision of Rupert D'Oyly Carte and Geoffrey Toye.

The first, to be produced at the Pinewood studio, will be "The Yeoman of the Guard." General Film Distributors will handle them.

CATHOLICS QUERIED ON FILM STANDARDS

The Catholic Herald has issued a reader questionnaire in London, asking the views of the special religious community which it serves on the moral standards of British films.

Specifically asked is if objection is taken to British produced films on grounds of: low morality, worship of material wealth, the confusion of spirituality with sentimentality, the confusion of beauty with riches. Opinions are also asked about the "crudity" of stories and publicity methods.

New Paramount Theatre

Sydney Howard has opened formally Paramount's latest British key city theatre at Birmingham. The new house, in New Road, seats 2,600. "The Charge of the Light Brigade" and a big patriotic stage show were the opening attractions.

Odeon Theatres, Ltd., opened its de luxe house at Swiss Cottage, London, on the same day. Among other theatres to be opened by this circuit in the next six months, apart from the Odeon, Leicester Square, on the famous Alhambra site, are a Leeds house to seat 3,000 at a cost of £200,000 and two other Yorkshire houses at Doncaster and Bradford. Odeon plans six theatres in Scotland immediately. A 1,700 seated Odeon at Morecambe opened last week, and its 2,300-seat theatre in Leicester Square opens Nov. 3rd.

Paramount's London Plans

Adolph Zukor, on his arrival from the Continent, reaffirmed Paramount's intention to engage in large scale production in England.

"We will start within six months and the pictures we will aim to make will be of the same quality as our Hollywood product and on a scale justifying world distribution," he said.

Paramount, selecting subjects suitable for filming against British backgrounds, would send over stars and production units from Hollywood, added Mr. Zukor.

During the next few weeks Zukor will study the British studio situation. It is Paramount's intention to lease space in one of the modern plants.

A combination of Continental scenes with others shot in England was another possibility foreshadowed by Zukor.

Up to Jack Warner

Talking to the press, Sam Morris, foreign sales chief for Warner Bros., said the decision on major production in England was up to Jack Warner, as part of the general production policy of the company. It was an entirely separate problem from production at the Warner-First National studio at Teddington, which came into the foreign field under his control.

The Warner theatre, on the site of Daly's, probably will open in May, said Mr. Morris. Warners' took over the building on September 29. The house will be a 2,000-seater, he said, and will follow a long-run policy with Warner products. Warner-British films also will be shown.

Griffiths Circuit Expands

Several additions have been made to the R. E. Griffiths Theatres and an affiliated company, Westex Theatres, in Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico. They are the White Sand at Alamo Gorda, N. M.; New State at Winters, Tex.; a new theatre at Clarksville, Tex., and remodeling of the Beltonian at Belton, Tex.

Distributing Contract Renewed

A contract renewing RKO Radio Pictures' distribution arrangement with Cia Cubana de Peliculas, South America, has been closed by R. K. Hawkinson, Latin American sales manager for RKO. The new agreement covers the company's 1937-38 product.

Oppose Sunday Shows

A petition has been presented to the common council, Belvidere, N. J., asking for the suspension of Sunday movies until a referendum can be held on the question. The request was presented by the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Lord's Day Alliance and other groups.

Court Reverses Decision In Move for Counsel Fees

Federal Judge John M. Woolsey last week reversed himself in denying an application of RKO Radio attorneys for counsel fees in the plagiarism suit brought by Allen Carruthers against RKO Radio, which Judge Woolsey dismissed with costs to RKO.

Judge Woolsey said that because the plagiarism claim involved was a common law claim and not statutory, he could not grant the fees. However, he said that the granting of costs serves as a "deterrent to wholly unfounded copyright claims of which this case furnishes a conspicuous example."

Consolidated Share Conversion Barred

A decree in conformity with the opinion handed down recently by Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott at Wilmington, Del., declaring null and void the proposed amendment to the certificate of incorporation of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., was filed by the chancellor in chancery court last week. The chancellor declared the proposed amendment void insofar as it assumes to convert the shares of $2 dividend accumulative participating stock presently outstanding, together with the right to all accumulated, accrued and unpaid dividends thereon, into one and a quarter shares of $1 cumulative dividend participating preference stock and one-quarter share of common stock.

Petition Filed in Oklahoma City Disclaims Part in Chadwick Suit

The Midwest Enterprise Company of Oklahoma City, Okla., September 20 filed a petition in federal district court in Oklahoma City disclaiming any part in the filming of a house being sawed in half there. Mrs. Fern Chadwick has claimed $25,000, naming the Midwest company, Universal Film Exchange, Warner Brothers Theatres, and the Standard Theatre Corp.

Mrs. Chadwick alleges she was humiliated by the film and by insinuation she could not pay her bills. The Midwest company asked that it be dismissed from the suit on the grounds it took no part in the action, but merely leased the theatre to Warner Brothers.

Amended Complaint Filed

An amended complaint in the action brought against J. D. Kendis in United States district court has been filed by Principal Film Exchanges, Inc. The suit is based upon the plaintiff's charge of a breach of contract for the distribution of "Crusade Against Rackets." The original complaint named the Jay Dee Kay Producers as a separate corporation. It now states Mr. Kendis does business under the corporation name.

Charging "deliberate piracies" on his story, "Paz en la Guena," Quirico Michelena Llaguno has filed suit in the United States district court for the southern district against Twentieth Century-Fox. He claims the picture "The World Moves On," released in Mexico as "Pas en la Terra," is an infringement of his work.

Cocalis-Fox Suit Settled for $10,000

A $12,400 action brought against Sam D. Cocalis, of the Cocalis circuit, by Twentieth Century-Fox for overages on several pictures has been settled for $10,000. Originally the complaint was for $9,200 but because another picture was played after the complaint was filed, the amount was increased.

The settlement was reached after the case had gone to trial and under the terms of the agreement the defendant concedes that percentage pictures sold in a group should be accounted for individually.

Negotiations are now under way to settle a similar action against Consolidated Amusements. The figures involved are to be determined by accountants who are going over the books.

Broadcast Pictures In New Offices

J. Nathan Helfat, president of Broadcast Pictures, announces that the concern has taken new offices in the General Motors Building, New York.

The company will engage in the distribution of foreign and domestic films, the first to be "Thank You, Madame," starring Jan Kiepura. Joseph Steiner, formerly sales manager for American Tobis, has joined Broadcast Pictures in a similar capacity.

Variety Clubs Planning Clambake, Golf Tourney

The Cleveland Variety Club will hold its annual clam bake on Saturday at the Allerton Hotel ballroom and the Variety Club of Philadelphia will stage its annual golf tournament and dinner dance at Whitemarsh Country Club October 1st. Frank Boyd, American Seating Company representative, is chairman of a committee in charge of the Cleveland event. Milton Rogasner is chairman of the committee arranging for the tourney and dance.

Charles Vidor Returns From Trip Abroad

Charles Vidor, director under contract to B. P. Schulberg, returned with his wife, Karen Morley, this week, after a six-week vacation abroad.

Mr. Vidor will remain in New York two weeks before proceeding to the Coast. Miss Morley is expected to remain east to appear in a Broadway play.

Judgments Not Satisfied

Execution on two judgments obtained against Amusement Parkway, Inc., and Edward Stiegel for alleged unlicensed exhibition of films, were returned unsatisfied to the United States district court in New York. RKO Distributing Corporation had obtained a $700 judgment, and Twentieth Century-Fox, one for $300.

Rex Bell Seeks $3,000

Rex Bell, former western star, has filed suit in superior court, Los Angeles, for $3,000 which he claims is due him from Normandy Pictures Corporation. He charges the money is owed under a contract.

OBITUARIES

Frank B. Arnold Dies; Exhibited Films in China

Frank B. Arnold, retired New York showman who gave to China some of its earliest glimpses of first motion pictures, died in Miami, Fla., last week after a brief illness at the age of 60.

Mr. Arnold exhibited motion pictures at Shanghai in 1915. Returning several years later to New York, he was again engaged in the theatrical business until his retirement in 1923.

Ruth Roland Rites

Funeral services were held in Hollywood last Friday for Ruth Roland, star of serials in the silent days. Genevieve Smith, who presided at the rites for Jean Harlow, conducted the services. The body was placed in a crypt. Miss Roland's estate was valued at about $1,000,000. Fifty per cent of the estate was left to her husband, Ben Bard, producer, and the other half to relatives.

Mary Blackford

Mary Blackford, 22 year old actress, died in Santa Monica last week from spinal injuries suffered in an automobile accident three years ago. Since the accident Miss Blackford had been paralyzed.

Mona Moore

Mona Moore, 25, singer, died in Chicago last week when she accidentally fell through the unbarred door of a moving elevator at her North Side hotel.

An inventory of the estate of Edward J. Grubel, theatre man who died last November at the age of 66, has been filed in Kansas City, Kan., Probate court. The valuation was placed at $584,166, mostly in bonds and stocks, with some real estate. The entire estate was left to his brother, Frank C. Grubel.

Joseph Klaw

Joseph Klaw, 49, son of the senior member of Klaw and Erlanger, former theatrical producers, was found dead in his automobile last week in New York.

Nathan Burkan Tribute

A mausoleum for Nathan Burkan, former attorney for motion picture companies and professionals, was dedicated last week in Union Fields Cemetery, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Burkan died June 6, 1936.

Frank Hunt

Frank Hunt, 65, Elk City, Okla., theatre owner, died in Polyclinic hospital in Oklahoma City on September 24 after an illness of three weeks. His death was attributed to heart disease.

John L. Russell, 62, star and producer of the silent days, died last week in the National Military Home at Sawtelle, Calif.

Virginia Earle, 62, former musical comedy actress and vaudeville headliner, died last week in a sanatorium in Englewood, N. J.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended September 25, 1937, from 65 theatres in 13 major cities of the country was $970,973, a decrease of $22,397 from the total for the preceding week ended September 18, 1937, when 66 theatres in 13 major cities aggregated $993,370.

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 87

Bluebook School Question No. 87 was: (A) What does magnetic force represent? (B) If a.c. be sent through a wire wound around and in close proximity to an iron bar, what will occur and what will govern the amount of the effect? (C) How is the density of a magnetic field considered and described? (D) What is "residual magnetism?"

The following made satisfactory replies: C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; D. H. Danielson; W. Limmroth; C. Oldham; J. R. Prater, M. and J. Devoy; J. A. Zachritz; H. B. Smith; C. Champney; R. R. After examining a great number of answers, consulting those in text books, and talking with electrical engineers, I concluded it would be an excellent thing to have some known authority answer Section A for us. I therefore called upon Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, past president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, himself an engineer of high standing. He states:

"By magnetic force I assume you mean magnetomotive force. A magnetic circuit consists of a path containing iron, air or other materials through which magnetic effects act. As we say, a magnetic flux, or flow, exists in this magnetic circuit. The magnetic flux is caused by a magnetomotive force. The magnetomotive force depends, in an electromagnet, on the number of turns in the magnetizing coil, and the strength of the current flowing through such coil.

"Accordingly, it is proper to describe, in a general way, the magnetic force in a magnetic circuit as being the pressure which creates a magnetic field or flow in that circuit. It is not so different from Ohm's law for electric circuits where current equals voltage divided by resistance. In magnetic circuits, the magnetic flow is equal to the magnetomotive force divided by the reluctance. The reluctance of a magnetic circuit depends on the materials of a circuit, the length of the circuit, and its shape."

(B) W. Limmroth says, "If a.c. be sent through a conductor wound around and in close proximity to an iron bar, a magnetic field will be induced in and surrounding the iron. The strength of this field will be directly dependent upon the strength of the current and the number of turns the conductor makes around the bar."

H. Burgin says, "Under the conditions named, a magnetic field would be induced in and surrounding the bar of iron. The amount of the effect, or strength of the field, thus created would depend upon (a) number of amperes flowing through the coil, (b) number of turns the coil makes, (c) the kind or character of the bar itself, which may be of soft or hard iron, or may be a laminated bar."

Hawkins says, "Lines of Magnetic Force: Lines assumed to exist in a field of magnetic force, tracing the paths along which magnetism acts. If a thin piece of paper be placed over a bar magnet and fine iron filings be sprinkled thereon, the particles of iron will arrange themselves in regular curves between the poles and thus map out or define lines in the magnetic field which scientists call lines of force.

(D) R. R. Lee replies, "Once a mass of iron has been magnetized, it is a difficult matter to remove all traces of the force when the magnetizing agent has been removed. The small amount remaining is termed residual magnetism."

M. and J. Devoy answer, "Residual magnetism is that amount remaining, which constitutes a permanent magnet. The amount thus retained varies from none at all to a considerable amount, according to the quality of the iron. Well annealed, pure wrought iron usually retains very little magnetic force when the magnetizing agent is removed. On the other hand, impure wrought iron or iron which has been subjected to some hardening process, also cast iron, will retain a high percentage of residual magnetism."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 92

(A) Explain, in your own words, the resistance of the electric arc and various reasons for its variation.

(B) Explain how work performed by electric power is calculated.

(C) What is the maximum permissible operating temperature of a resistance wire and how may it be roughly approximated without actual measurement?

Sound Installations Increase in Mexico

Mexican sound-equipped theatres total 500 as compared with 418 at the first of the year, according to a report to the U. S. Department of Commerce.

There have been 20 installations of the German Tobis-Klang equipment in recent months.

American sound equipment representatives are loath to push sales because of difficulties in servicing the apparatus, the attache reported.

MGM Replaces Trailers With Complete Skits

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has adopted a new system for the production of trailers. Instead of following the usual custom, the company is making separate "short subjects" to advertise each of its pictures. Complete skits henceforth will be used to exploit the pictures.

The first under the new system is titled —"Yump," in which Barnett Parker will be featured and "Double Wedding" will be the subject.

Jam Handy Leases Space

Jam Handy Picture Service, Inc., has leased 3,000 square feet of space in the General Motors Building, Broadway, New York, and a building formerly occupied by Metropolitan Motion Picture Company on East Grand Street, Detroit. Wendell P. Gayman has been appointed to coordinate the market research activities of the corporation.

MONOGRAM PICTURES

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

DEVIL IS DRIVING, THE: Richard Dix, Joan Perry—Average entertainment. Played Aug. 28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DODGE CITY TRAIL: Charles Starret, Donald Grayson—I have seen one or two unfavorable comments on this picture and I wish to come to Columbia's rescue and defy anyone who can truthfully say that this was not the best western of the year. It is a musical western and that is just what the people want, as proven by Gene Autry's success. I hope Columbia makes a dozen more like it.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. General patronage.

NORTH OF NOME: Jack Holt, Evelyn Venable—Good action feature and up to Jack Holt's usual standard. Running time, 56 minutes. Played September 9.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

ROARING TIMBER: Jack Holt—Another reason for sitting by the radio. They dress it up with scenery and forget to include a logical story.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

THUNDER IN THE CITY: Edw. G. Robinson, Luli Geste—Not very much thunder. Except for the presence of Robinson our patrons wonder why this picture was filmed. Below—yes, far below—our average weekend business. Picture turned in the poorest Saturday matinee on all-time record. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 3-6.—W. C. Lewellen, Federal Theatre, Denver, Colo. Neighborhood patronage.

VENUS MAKES TROUBLE: James Dunn, Patricia Ellis—Very lightweight but amusing withal. Played Aug. 28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE: Jean Parker, Willard Mack, Minna Gombell—We picked this picture up and would like to tip our fellow exhibitors off that it outgrossed "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Stowaway," "Wings of the Morning," and many other specials. We played it for three days and built up from the sex angle, and let us tell you it stood up to record business. It's the story of a girl's first romance. She wasn't able to recognize her dangers and had a baby. Her sophisticated mother did not have her confidence, so she committed suicide. It has possibilities. I'm sure you'll never regret playing it. Its trailer packs a real selling angle. Don't forget to get a press book. If they buy it I'll bet you'll thank us. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

Crescent Pictures

BATTLE OF GREED: Tom Keene, Gwynne Shipman—Well produced western. Tom Keene still helps bring them in.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

First National

CHEROKEE STRIP: Dick Foran, Jane Bryan—One of the better westerns. Doubled with "Fly-Away Baby," making a satisfactory Friday and Saturday double bill. Remember, the very popular song "My Little Buckaroo" is from this picture. Plug it for extra dough. Running time, 56 minutes. Played September 10-11.—W. D. White, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. Town and rural patronage.

MEN IN EXILE: Richard Purcell, June Travis—Just a program picture that I double-featured. No box office names and not much of a story. Too weak for a single feature program. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN JUSTICE: Josephine Hutchinson, George Brent—Very good feature that seemed to please. Played September 4-5.—Gladys McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

PRINCE AND THE PAUPER: Mauch Twins, Errol Flynn—Excellent picture to very good business. Played August 7.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PRINCE AND THE PAUPER, THE: Mauch Twins, Errol Flynn—Splendid performances by Billy and Bobby Mauch and very pleasing swashbuckling by Errol Flynn. However, the picture is wanting in the characteristic Mark Twain humor. Why must this type of picture be invariably too long drawn out? By the time patrons have sat through shorts, prevues and two hours of medieval costumes and scenery, you've a grand case of fidgets on your hands. Business way below average. Running time, 120 minutes. Played September 8-9.—W. D. White, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. Town and rural patronage.

SAN QUENTIN: Pat O'Brien, Humphrey Bogart—Good weekend picture. Story good and action and drama that small town patrons will support.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to —

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Rockefeller Center, New York

BACKSTAGE: Anna Neagle, Arthur Tracy—Just one of those pictures to put on an off day spot. Title and lobby display is flashy enough but the picture is peopled with unknown stars. Mild satisfaction. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 7.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

KING SOLOMON'S MINES: Cedric Hardwicke, Roland Young—This picture outgrossed many of the colossal hits from the major companies and pleased the majority of the patrons. Some good singing by Paul Robeson and convincing acting by Cedric Hardwicke. Roland Young drew many laughs and chuckles. Despite the fantastically incredulous theme the film often held a mixed audience delightfully spellbound.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., The Waldo Theatre Corporation, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

Grand National

GIRL LOVES BOY: Eric Linden, Cecelia Parker.—It sent them out satisfied, those that came. Running time, 77 minutes.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

HITTIN' THE TRAIL: Tex Ritter, Jerry Bergh—Ritter is not another Gene Autry by any means. Grand National will have to improve their sound as this picture was very spotty in that respect. Audience comment was very poor. Running time, 55 minutes. Played September 17-18.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF THE HOODED HORSEMEN: Tex Ritter—Just another western which we played to half a house the first night and to practically an empty house the second. And I feel that the show was over patronized. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 7-8.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

NAVY SPY: Conrad Nagel, Eleanor Hunt—Good action program picture. Holds up the second half of the program. Running time, 63 minutes. Played September 9.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J General family patronage.

RIDERS OF THE ROCKIES: Tex Ritter, Louise Stanley—A good singing western. Running time, 56 minutes.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BETWEEN TWO WOMEN: Franchot Tone, Virginia Bruce—A very good picture. Played Aug. 26-27.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1938, THE: Robert Taylor, Eleanor Powell—This "Broadway Melody" is not up to the standard of those in the past. The music is used from past "Broadway Melodies," and the picture seems to have the sameness throughout. The picture will do business, so don't be afraid to give extra playing time and plenty of advertising, as the "Broadway Melody" reputation of the past will bring them in. Running time, 110 minutes. Played September 12-15.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS: Spencer Tracy, Freddie Bartholomew—Superb entertainment. Everyone is sure to like it. Played Aug. 29-30.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DAY AT THE RACES, A: Marx Brothers—First there were four and now there are three. If they'd take out another next year and one more the next, we would have to bear two more of their pictures. Every time we advertise these, a howl goes up around town. Played them with Screeno this time so they did fairly well, but what a squawk went up as they left the theatre. Running time, 111 minutes. Played August 27-28. —Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb.

DAY AT THE RACES, A: Marx Brothers—This is too long for a hokum comedy and, to me at any rate, it is much more silly than humorous. And the box office result certainly does not indicate anything more than a program picture. Running time, 111 minutes. Played September 17-18.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—Two pictures will always stand out in memories of theatrical patrons as epics, "The Birth of a Nation" and "Good Earth." It is a fitting tribute to Thalberg to dedicate this masterpiece to him. Fox may have their Temples, Warners their musicals, and Paramount their out-of-doors pictures, but when it comes to sheer genius in pictures, Metro is still tops with "Maytime," "Captains Courageous," and now "Good Earth." This picture is not an exceptional draw for small towns, but let us not decry the fact that it is without fear of contradiction the finest picture of this season. Played it Sunday opening with only average business. Running time, 138 minutes. Played September 19-21.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—Don't feel that this picture is not going to do business because it is a natural for any situation. The story is very simple and it packs a punch that the audience likes. Get after this one and advertise it big, because if you feel it is too high class for your town, so will your patrons, and you will lose out. Running time, 135 minutes. Played August 22-25.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

LAST OF MRS. CHEYNEY, THE: Joan Crawford, William Powell—Not so good. Too much talking and not enough action. However, the star value drew in the cash customers, so business was good. Played August 10.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA (reissue): Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, William Powell—Still a first-class picture. About average intake. Played September 2-3. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MAYTIME: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—One of the best musicals we ever played. A little heavy for our audience but put prestige on our house. Business good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

MAYTIME: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—In case you fail to remember, this is the MacDonald-Eddy picture which Metro released last Spring (March) and has finally consented to permit me have a booking. It's a marvelous picture, but, like all Metro pictures, it has played first and second-run all about us, and the bulk of our limited clientele who like this type of picture had already seen it elsewhere and are now driving to a neighboring city to see "Firefly." Played September 12-13.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

NIGHT MUST FALL: Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell—Good acting but not very well received by our patrons. Would class it as just fair. Played September 4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

OLD SOAK, THE: Wallace Beery—Very good at the box office, and that's what counts. Played August 14.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PARNELL: Myrna Loy, Clark Gable—Gable and Loy seemed to be acting. It is very slow—and did not draw as well as these stars generally do. Would class it as fair. Played September 12-13.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PARNELL: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—Splendid production. Well made. Subject matter not cared for by the younger generation. Running time, 126 minutes. Played September 14-15.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

PARNELL: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—This picture has plenty of merit and will be sure to perfectly satisfy the more intelligent patrons. The names Gable and Loy will bring out many who would not go to see an educational picture as such. This is one of the kind we run for prestige and not for profit. The rental charged is too large for the box office result. But, if such pictures are to be made, someone must pay for them. If the public won't pay for them, it may be up to the exhibitors. Running time, 116 minutes. Played September 10-11.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

THEY GAVE HIM A GUN: Spencer Tracy, Gladys George, Franchot Tone—Three stars gave a wonderful performance, but our audience was lacking in women. Probably the title kept them away. Played September 8-9.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THEY GAVE HIM A GUN: Francot Tone, Gladys George Spencer Tracy—Swell! It was one grand picture. They don't come any better than these boys, Tracy and Tone. Gladys George did a nice job, too. Running time, 94 minutes. Played September 3-4.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hot Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THIRTEENTH CHAIR, THE: Madge Evans, Henry Daniell—Interesting but weak. Held up about normally on a Pal Night program. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 1-2.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TOPPER: Constance Bennett, Cary Grant—In comparison to the roars and guffaws that accompanied Metro's "Way Out West," "Topper" was received in silence. The picture drew well but was generally disappointing. Too much advertising as to how funny it was. Comedy is better when you least expect it. Played September 1.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., The Waldo Theatre Corporation, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

TOPPER: Constance Bennett, Ronald Young—I gave this picture my personal guarantee for something new and amusing and I was not a bit sorry. It is the first novelty we have had since Audioscopiks. This picture must be advertised as being good because if you do not make up the people's minds before they see it, they are apt to make up their own minds and call it a flop, if you just present it as a regular program picture. Played August 19-20.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. General patronage.

WAY OUT WEST: Laurel and Hardy—Personally I thought this the most tiresome and inane picture I ever saw, but judging from the comments and the roars of laughter, I was alone in that opinion. Double featured it and it brought out a lot who seldom come to a show and they all seemed to enjoy it, so here's hoping Leo gives us another Laurel and Hardy feature soon. Running time, 64 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Monogram

RIDERS OF THE DAWN: Jack Randall, Peggy Keys—Randall seems to possess possibilities, and with good stories should prove a worthy addition to the ranks of the western stars. New talent is needed and this first picture will establish him in the race. Excellent photography and new backgrounds. Songs not so hot, as they did not seem to have the proper "range" swing. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 3.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

Paramount

ARTISTS AND MODELS: Jack Benny, Gail Patrick—Subtract Judy Canova and Ben Blue, add more story and omit the Public Melody Number one episode, and it would have been an excellent show. Our patrons were not at all enthused, but evidently we are all wrong here, for all reviews give it a top rating. It's a good show, and, of course, should be played, but don't expect a wow, nor to see many models. Played August 29-30.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

BLONDE TROUBLE: Johnny Downs, Eleanor Whitney—Passable programer, nothing else. McPhee says so. Running time, 66 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

EASY LIVING: Jean Arthur, Edward Arnold—We thought this to be one of the best comedies for many moons. So did our customers and attended it in fine style. It was a little noisy and screwy, but so was "My Man Godfrey," and if you can throw yourself into the spirit of it, you'll have a swell evening. Played September 5-6.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

FORLORN RIVER: Larry Crabbe, June Martel—Certainly not up to Zane Grey standard. They used to make these Zane Grey westerns stand out, better than the ordinary star westerns, but this certainly was not. Seemed to please, however. Running time, 56 minutes. Played September 10-11.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

I MET HIM IN PARIS: Claudette Colbert, Robert Young, Melvyn Douglas—A swell picture even at the box office. We have had a host of these comedies, but the public still likes them; let them come. Running time, 84 minutes.—Maxwell L. Bothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

I MET HIM IN PARIS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas, Robert Young—The biggest laugh-getter in a long time. Positively the nuts. Even the hard-to-please patrons liked this one, and, believe it or not, every one had a big broad smile as they left the theatre, satisfied. What more is there to say? Business average against county fair opposition last two days. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 12-13-14.—W. D. White, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. Town and rural patronage.

MAKE WAY FOR TOMORROW: Victor Moore, Beulah Bondi—For those who like to use a handkerchief, good in a spot where some other attraction brings them in. Once in, they will mostly like it. Played September 8.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Martha Raye, Bob Burns—Just an ordinary program picture, but, oh boy, how it drew. Seemed like the patrons ate it up. After it was all over, couldn't find any one who liked it. One of the best drawing cards of the year. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 5-6.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Bob Burns, Martha Raye—Rather silly. Did above average business. No kicks.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ON SUCH A NIGHT: Karen Morley, Grant Richards—Did not please any one and will not. McPhee says so. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

SOULS AT SEA: Gary Cooper, George Raft—Excellent production in any spot. Big enough for extended time. McPhee says so. Running time, 90 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

TURN OFF THE MOON: Eleanore Whitney, Johnny Downs—A good musical, nicely done. Running time, 67 minutes.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

Republic

BOLD CABALLERO, THE: Bob Livingston, Heather Angel—This may be a good feature. At least we were charged for it on the theory that it is something better than a program picture. We have had color pictures flop before, but not as completely as this one. Running time, 71 minutes. Played September 14-15.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

SHEIK STEPS OUT, THE: Ramon Novarro, Lola Lane—Novarro will have to have better story and cast if he expects to get back. This one did not help him. Below average business after first day. Played September 12-14.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

BORDER CAFE: John Beal, Armida—Gets by, but hardly an attraction to boast of. Not exactly a western despite Mexican border location. Played Sept. 7.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MAN WHO FOUND HIMSELF, THE: John Beal, Joan Fontaine—Good feature. Elements of excitement and suspense combined with a little mystery. Boost it for the thrills. Train-wreck sequence most exciting thing in the picture. Worthy of all exploitation efforts you give it and it will need some. Poor titles, and the press sheets get entirely away from the possibilities the picture really has. Suggest you screen it before planning your campaign. Running time, 67 minutes. Played September 14-16.—Lewellen, Federal Theatre, Denver, Colo. Neighborhood patronage.

NEW FACES OF 1937: Joe Penner, Harriet Hilliard—Claptrap, cheap, shoddy and vulgar. In my estimation, a Z picture. Nothing behind it except wind. Running time, 100 minutes. Played September 12-14.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

RIDING ON AIR: Joe E. Brown, Florence Rice—An excellent Joe Brown comedy. Plenty of laughs in this one. Played September 4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TOAST OF NEW YORK, THE: Edward Arnold—Good picture to way below average business. Played September 15-17.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

TOAST OF NEW YORK: Edward Arnold, Frances Farmer—A picture which attracts a class of people seldom seen in a theatre. Nothing but praise from those who saw it, and despite the fact that it might be classified as biographical, it is entertainment of the sort we too rarely get. Productions of this kind are an asset to any theatre. Played September 12.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

TOAST OF NEW YORK, THE: Edward Arnold, Frances Farmer—A very well done picture with plenty of careful direction, plot, comedy and good acting. It is, however, a costume picture and we cannot sell costume pictures usually. Played September 5-7.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. Town and country patronage.

YOU CAN'T BEAT LOVE: Preston Foster, Joan Fontaine—A fair comedy-drama. Pretty Joan Fontaine chalks up another mark along the road to producer recognition. Played September 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CAFE METROPOLE: Loretta Young, Tyrone Power—Some good names give this a fair drawing power, but the picture lacks the necessary action to please our customers. Played August 28.—B. Hollenback, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

DR. BULL (Reissue): Will Rogers—Will Rogers always pleases and the Rogers admirers came, but these reissues do not draw as well as they did. Good story and good cast. Running time, 79 minutes. Played September 8-9.—Gladys McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

50 ROADS TO TOWN: Ann Sothern, Dan Ameche—A grand comedy. Play this one and please them all. Running time, 81 minutes.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

HOLY TERROR, THE: Jane Withers, Tony Martin—The usual screamingly funny performance from Jane with a very good supporting cast and plenty of action. Running time, 67 minutes. Played September 1-2.—Gladys McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

IT HAPPENED OUT WEST: Paul Kelly, Judith Allen—Did not please any one and will not. McPhee says so. Running time, 56 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

SECRET VALLEY: Richard Arlen, Virginia Grey—Good western picture that drew fairly well. The sound recording on this was poor. Played August 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SEVENTH HEAVEN: Simone Simon, James Stewart—Here's an oldtimer that has been remade. The story is good, although a little too slow moving in spots. James Stewart is excellent in his role. Simone Simon is not so good. Did just a fair business here. Played September 14.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THIS IS MY AFFAIR: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Taylor—Good entertainment. Played September 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WEE WILLIE WINKIE: Shirley Temple, Victor McLaglen—Well produced and McLaglen very good in his role. Typical Temple picture, a little gooey in spots. A little impossible that Shirley could melt the heart of the tough hombre that took the part of the Khan.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WEE WILLIE WINKIE: Shirley Temple—Grand production in any spot. Give this one all you have got, extended time and extended advertising. McPhee says so. Running time, 99 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

WESTERN GOLD: Smith Ballew, Heather Angel—Did not please and will not. McPhee says so.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

YOU CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING: Alice Faye, Ritz Bros.—This is another musical like "Sing, Baby, Sing" and "On the Avenue." Alice Faye is the best ever, but the picture does not hold up to the pictures just mentioned. The Ritz Bros. are funny, but their stuff is getting old, and they were not up to their previous pictures. The story and music is good and will do business any place. Played September 9-11.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine. General patronage.

United Artists

ELEPHANT BOY: Native Cast—Good production and the little elephants gave all the audience a big kick. But ordinary business, and then, after the picture left, with the word-of-mouth advertising that it received, they squawked that they laid off it because of the title and want it brought back.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ELEPHANT BOY: Native Cast—Excellent animal adventure play. Will satisfy most audiences. Very popular with the children, of course. Played September 4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

KNIGHT WITHOUT ARMOUR: Marlene Dietrich, Robert Donat—Fine acting by Donat, who can do this sort of thing like no one else we know. Slightly reminiscent of a film directed by the master of melodrama, Alfred Hitchcock. Drew very well and pleased everyone, as well liked as anything we played this year.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., The Waldo Theatre Corporation, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

VOGUES OF 1938: Joan Bennett, Warner Baxter—The most beautiful color ever. Takes your breath away. Trite story. Some of the women enjoyed it immensely, but most of the remarks indicated the color was three-fourths of the production. Played September 6-7 to a fair house.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., The Waldo Theatre Corporation, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

WHEN THIEF MEETS THIEF: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Valerie Hobson—An interesting photoplay but only a mild grosser. Played Aug. 31.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WOMAN CHASES MAN: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Average weekend business. Here's a picture you can truthfully call "cute." Rather slow and unexciting in parts but containing a lot of simple comedy situations that makes it A-1 for family patronage. Running time, 71 minutes. Played September 11-14.—W. C. Lewellen, Federal Theatre, Denver, Colo. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD: John Wayne, Louise Latimer—Surprisingly good. Was the redeeming feature with "Thunder in the City." Kids got a great kick out of the race between the trucks and the train. If the director could wipe that worried look off Wayne's face, he might become a drawing card after "California Straight Ahead." Good comedy situations. Good action and plot. Running time, 67 minues. Played September 3-6.—W. C. Lewellen, Federal Theatre, Denver, Colo. Neighborhood patronage.

ROAD BACK, THE: Richard Cromwell, John King—Failed at the box office. Seemed to us that a story pregnant with possibilities was, with the exception of several memorable and powerful street scenes, almost completely killed by the adaptors and by the cast. Because of his likeable personality, Andy Devine saved most of it from being a complete bust. Played September 2-3.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., The Waldo Corporation, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

ANOTHER DAWN: Kay Francis, Errol Flynn—A picture well received by all those who saw it. However, the attendance was very disappointing due to the fact that Miss Francis' roles have been too much of the sameness in the past. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 15-16.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

CHEROKEE STRIP: Dick Foran, Jane Bryan—Foran is swell, worthwhile just to bear him sing "My Little Buckaroo." Running time, 55 minutes.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

DANCE, CHARLIE, DANCE: Stuart Erwin, Jean Muir—I don't think that Erwin had a good time in this one. Pretty weak entertainment.—A. S. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery—Better than we anticipated. The patrons seemed to get a lot of fun out of it. The best picture Marion Davies has had in a long time. She sure is no drawing card. Seemed to please, howexer. Running time, 79 minutes. Played September 12-13.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

FLY-AWAY BABY: Glenda Farrell, Barton MacLane—Second adventure of "Torchy Blane." A satisfactory little programer that hinges on the round-the-world flight of Dorothy Kilgallen, which made headlines a while back. Drew some good laughs and seemed to please. Best shots I have ever seen of Clipper plane take-off. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 10-11.—W. D. White, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. Town and rural patronage.

GO GETTER, THE: George Brent, Anita Louise—Good action picture to average business. Played September 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

KID GALAHAD: Edward G. Robinson, Bette Davis—Surely not entitled to a three-day showing in a town of this size, yet on account of percentage arrangement, we were forced to play it three days. However, it was a dandy picture, swell story and nicely played by two of the screen's most wonderful players, Bette Davis and Edward G. Robinson. That Morris boy grows on you, too. Running time, 100 minutes.—Played August 29-31.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

KID GALAHAD: Edward G. Robinson, Bette Davis—Good picture, with only fair drawing power, however. Running time, 101 minutes. Played September 10-11.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

LIFE OF EMILE ZOLA, THE: Paul Muni, Gale Songergaard—No words from this pen could begin to do it justice. Paul Muni should again win the Academy Award for this, and if awards are given for slightly lesser roles, Joseph Schildkraut should receive another for his Dreyfus. When the greatest actor in Hollywood in his greatest characterization is hard pressed to top other grand moments achieved by Schildkraut and Donald Crisp, you have a truly great film that everyone should see, and having seen it, none will forget. One of those rare films that, even should it do poorly at the box office because of the general public's fear of art, would make any exhibitor deeply proud to have been honored by its presence at his theatre. The audience was completely carried away and clapped at the curtain. Played August 29-30.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., The Waldo Theatre Corporation, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

SINGING MARINE, THE: Dick Powell, Doris Weston—This is quite good. Several good songs enliven the familiar proceedings. Powell is in fine voice. Fair business for the holiday but not what we had hoped for. Played Sept. 5-6.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SLIM: Pat O'Brien, Henry Fonda—Good action picture that did excellent business. Played September 1.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

VARSITY SHOW: Dick Powell, Fred Waring and His Orchestra, Johnny Davis—I have not played this picture, but saw it at the Warner trade showing in New Orleans. The picture has many selling angles and is fine entertainment, but to me Dick Powell was not at his best. Fred Waring very good, in fact I thought much better than Powell. This picture is full of comedy, music and all it takes to make a special. The one bad feature, in my estimation, was Johnny Davis. He would have been fine if the director had not tried to include him in every scene. He became tiresome and soon got on my nerves. Play this picture and advertise it big, because it will deliver and please your customers. Thanks, Warner, and especially the New Orleans force, for a very delightful time.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Columbia

AM I HAVING FUN: Broadway Comedies—Good clean fun and worth while running. Running time, 18 minutes.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

GOLF MAGIC: New World of Sport Series—Here is a short that all golfers will get a big kick out of, and interesting to non-golfers.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

Educational

LOVE IN ARMS: Two-Reel Comedies—Very good! This is something like it.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

POT LUCK: Song and Comedy Hits—A song hit story that will be good on any program where a short of this type is needed.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre. Harrison, Ark.

RED HOT MUSIC: Terry-Toons—Nothing to it.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SONGS OF THE DANUBE: Treasure Chest—Rather poor despite its possibilities. They fell down on this one and your folks will be extremely restless if they are at all like ours.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

NO PLACE LIKE ROME: Musical Comedies—Very disappointing when you expect a musical. However, it was very good, and lavishly produced. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN GRANDEUR: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—The tops in travel talks. Beautiful scenery in color, interesting talk and some swell music. Running time, eight minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

SERENE SIAM: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—This is on a par with other MGM travel talks. All very good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

SOME TIME SOON: Musical Comedies—This is about the poorest product that Loew's have sent out this season. So poor that we put it in the can after showing it on a Sunday matinee. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

TENNIS TACTICS: Pete Smith Specialties—This was a nice subject with some interesting shots of expert tennis and the gals in their shorts didn't hurt the eyes any.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb.

Paramount

BLUE VELVET MUSIC: Headliners—Our patrons are getting fed up on these band shorts. They are all about the same.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb.

CAR-TUNE PORTRAIT, A: Color Classics—This is as good a short as has been made by any producer. Play it in a top spot. Running time, nine minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

PRIML FAVORITES: Headliners—Good orchestration. Unfortunately, something about what the lady vocalist was wearing or her gestures caused undue merriment among the audience and spoiled the excellence of the subject.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

PUDGY TAKES A BOW-WOW: Betty Boop Cartoons—Just another Betty Boop, which are getting poorer and poorer as "time marches on." Not even a laugh from the kids. Running time, seven minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

SAFETY IN THE AIR: Paragraphics—Terrible. Was of no interest to my patrons. This seemed to be simply an advertisement concerning safety of air service. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

TWILIGHT ON THE TRAIL: Screen Songs—A very good short. The cartoon part was very novel and the singing and harmony exceptional. Running time, seven minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

WHOOPS! I'M A COWBOY: Betty Boop Cartoons—A good cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

FOXY PUP, THE: Color Rhapsodies—Excellent color cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

MARCH OF TIME: March of Time Series—Think we'll forget these for a while. Thought they would bring in some extra business, but, from the expressions we hear, believe they really are driving business away. The subjects are entirely too dry and uninteresting.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb.

MARCH OF TIME: No. II—We had several walk-outs on this when it started. They don't seem to want to give it a chance to satisfy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

PUTTING ON THE DOG: World of Sports—About average for the series. Okay.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

SINGING IN THE AIR: Headliner Series—This little musical ranks with any we have had this season. The plot is clever and the little girl singer is due to go places if she gets her chance. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

TRAMP TROUBLE: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—Extra good, this newest Kennedy. Would classify it as a comedy worthy of a preferred spot. Running time, 18 minutes.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FLYING SOUTH: Terrytoon Cartoons—This is a good cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

Vitaphone

ALPINE GRANDEUR: Colortour Adventure—Good travel talk in beautiful color. Running time, one reel. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

BRING ON THE GIRLS: Edgar Bergen—A good vaudeville reel with Edgar Bergen introducing the acts and helping the fun.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberl, N. J.

DAVID MENDOZA AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters——First class entertainment. Running time, one reel.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

DAY AT SANTA ANITA, A: Sybil Jason—Excellent dramatic two-reeler in beautiful color. Sybil sings one song.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DAY AT SANTA ANITA: Sybil Jason—Excellent musical in color, featuring Sybil Jason and showing a number of screen stars. Frank McHugh is especially amusing. Good horse race. Running time, 18 minutes. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

DOG DAZE: Merrie Melodies—These color cartoons of Warners are getting better all the time. Kids and grownups enjoyed this very much. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

DOUBLE TALK: Edgar Bergen, "Charlie McCarthy"—Amusing ventriloquist act with the inimitable Charlie McCarthy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

EMIL COLEMAN AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—This is about the tops in band shorts for the season, with the possible exception of Vincent Lopez "Knock, Knock, Who's There?" a Paramount. The music is good and the dancing couple in the last selection should be in features. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

FLOYD GIBBONS' "YOUR TRUE ADVENTURE" SERIES: Saw one of these at the trade show and it's really good. Can stand plenty of advertising and it appears that Warner is doing just that for this series. This one-reeler was better than some features I have seen. They are sure to mean extra money if handled right.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GEORGE HALL AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Okay band act.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HOME RUN ON THE KEYS: Babe Ruth—The folks didn't seem to get the kick out of this the reviewers have led us to expect they would. Only fair.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HOTEL A LA SWING: Eddie Foy, Jr.—Reasonably good musical entertainment.—L. A. Lrwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

JAM SESSION, THE: Clyde McCoy and Orchestra—We raved about this before, and young folks ate it up and requested it back. We played it for two changes of pictures. The meter checker told us he never saw a better short. It's a real hot musical short in the real Clyde McCoy triumphant style. Give us more, Warners; we're with you.—Harlund Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

LITTLE PIONEER, THE: Broadway Brevities—One of the finest colored two-reel shorts of the year.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LOUISIANA KINGS: Melody Masters—An exceptional band reel. The harmony and novel settings are the tops in shorts. Play it for all it's worth. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

NEWSBOYS NOCTURNES: Broadway Brevities—Here is a good Brevity. The vaudeville is good and the black-face drummer is the tops. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

POETS OF THE ORGAN: Mr. & Mrs. Jesse Crawford—Good organ number.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PORKY'S BUILDING: Looney Tunes—Amusing cartoon, although nothing extraordinary.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PORKY'S DUCK HUNT: Looney Tunes—Very funny cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

PORKY'S DUCK HUNT: Looney Tunes—These are good Black and White cartoons. Running time, seven minutes.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

PRETTY PRETENDER, THE: Broadway Brevities—Enjoyed by all. Very good. Play it. Running time, 21 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

SPEAKING OF THE WEATHER: Merrie Melodies—One of the best, if not really the best cartoon that I have ever seen. If you don't think it's that good, play it and see!—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

STREAMLINED GRETA GREEN: Merrie Melodies—Very good color cartoon showing automobiles coming to life, etc. Would go well with "Devil Is Driving," etc. Running time, seven minutes.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

SUNBONNET BLUE: Merrie Melodies—One of the finest colored cartoons of this series and that is something. Your audience, young and old, will love it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TAKING THE COUNT: Joe Palooka—A good comedy with some slapstick to liven the parade. Running time, 18 minutes.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

UNDER SOUTHERN STARS: Broadway Brevities—Classical short telling the story of Stonewall Jackson. Quality product for your better class nights.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VAUDE-FESTIVAL: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—This was very well received. A miniature vodvil show. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VAUDE-FESTIVAL: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—Believe it is about time Vitaphone was forgetting these vaudeville reels. At first they were fine, but now the talent seems to have been all used up. It is getting worse and worse. Running time, 10 minutes. —Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb.

VITAPHONE FUNSTERS: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—Fair. Running time, 11 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

Serials

Republic

ROBINSON CRUSOE OF CLIPPER ISLAND: Mala, Mamo Clark—This serial is only fairly well made, but had average reaction.—Maxwell L. Rothman, Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J.

Universal

WILD WEST DAYS: Johnny Mack Brown—We are on the seventh chapter and it is very good. While we do not run more than two serials a year, it is the best we have run for several years.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

Miscellaneous

LOUIS-BRADDOCK FIGHT: Fight Film—Excellent fight picture but did not draw any extra business. Running time, 19 minutes. Played Aug. 19.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

BELLS AND CHEERS

Now, when the gag first started, a flock of theatremen who really should have known better participated with vigor and enthusiasm in that cute little advertising exercise known by the cognoscenti as:

"Leading with Your Chin."

It all began when newspapers and magazines broke out with a rash or less of stars the number of which were offered to tip off readers on the merits or demerits of pictures under review by the individual publications. Thus, when a single, lonesome and shame-faced star twinkled feebly, ticket-buyers were supposed to understand that when the picture so branded appeared locally it was a good time to go fishin' or clean out the cellar.

But, good people, when as many as four or even three stars burst upon the firmament, that was supposed to be the signal for a mass movement upon the boxoffice. Then the manager joined in the festivities, and many—alas, too many—did so by spreading the abundance of stars across their fronts and in newspaper ads as thick as conventioneers around a hotel bar. The only thing left to do, it was expected, was to stand out in the lobby and watch the grosses mount.

But even heaven has its drawbacks, so we've been told, and it appeared that the star-rating system wasn't going over so good. In many situations, theatremen reported that the more stars or other dinguses a picture was given by the magazines, the less business it did. And managers who continued to use the star-foolishness in their advertising found out they were sticking their chins way out and even more so when along came a picture that had no four-stars. For when the single and two-starrers were dated in, lobbies were divested of their celestial adornments which, of course, flatly informed Mr. John Q. Customer, who is far from a dope, that in the manager's opinion the picture was a weasel-in-spades.

So, finally tired of taking it big on sensitive chins, disillusioned showmen dropped the star-foolishness into the waste basket and there was peace in the land, until along came radio commentators with bells and sichlike. So many bells, blasts on a horn, toots on a piccolo, cheers, or what have you, are now supposed to determine the fate of the picture at the boxoffice. And showmen, who believe, evidently, that if one man says it loud and long enough to as many people as will listen to him it must be so, have turned from star-gazing to bell-ringing.

Comes next week and there ain't no bell-tinkling, horn-blasting nor piccolo-tooting, and missing the joyous, effervescent advertising and lobby clamor, Mr. John Q. Customer will again murmur "weasel" and turn away to buy his entertainment at the ticket-window of the opposition.

There is an old Chinese proverb that reads:

"He who is color-blind to stars and stone-deaf to bells will never stick his nose into a buzz-saw."

MIND THE DEADLINE, FOLKS

Though happily the occasions are very few, it is to be regretted that entries for the Quigley Awards must be turned down because they reach here after monthly deadline time. And it is to be regretted doubly when such campaigns are good enough to command the highest consideration from the Judges. If it may be that those so penalized misunderstand the rulings in this respect, we will endeavor to forestall any such occurrences in the future by detailing the rulings as follows:

Entries must be received no later than monthly deadline dates announced sufficiently in advance. For instance, on pictures played during September, campaigns must be forwarded in time to arrive no later than the September deadline, which is midnight of Saturday, October 9th.

To be emphasized also is that pictures played exclusively in August, for instance, are not eligible for the September Awards. However, campaigns for dates played on the last days of August and the first days of September, for instance, will be considered as September entries, providing they reach headquarters before the September deadline.

Is that perfectly clear? Please let us know if it isn't.

Many have been the "pass" quotations culled from the Bible, and to the long list of familiars can be added one new to these ears, forwarded by Miami's Hal Kopplin who credits Atlanta's "Ching" Allen for: "Though they roar, yet they cannot pass"—Jeremiah v:22.

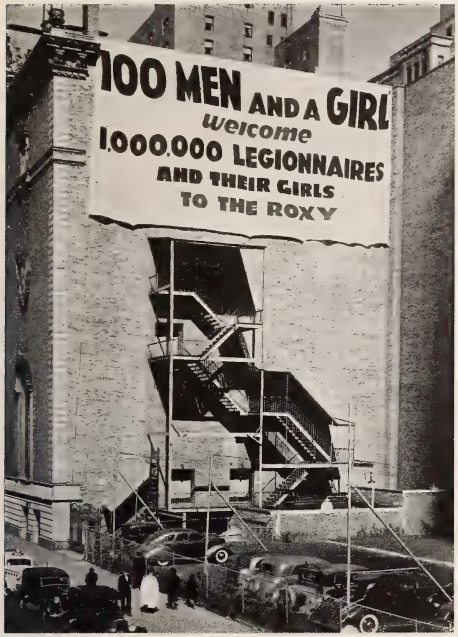
The Round Table in Pictures



Came a day when Governor Roy E. Ayres, of Montana, and division manager Bill Steege were in town together, so Manager Ted Kirkmeyer, of the Rio, in Helena, seized upon the happy occasion for the presentation of his Quigley Silver for July. That's His Excellency (center) shaking hands with Ted as Bill Steege looks on approvingly. (Above, right) Highly effective display in the lobby of the Earle, Washington, D. C., to sell the new season attractions, was planned by Frank La Falce, Warner Washington zone theatres director of advertising and publicity.

First time that tin was used exclusively for a display at the L & J Fox Theatre, in Atlanta, Ga., came about with the construction of a new modernistic shadow box, color scheme of white trimmed in light green and placed in center of lobby. Reports City Manager, E. E. "Whit" Whitaker, that artist and house crew sealed and rubbed out every seam in same manner as auto workers dress down bodies.

Seems that according to the replies, Stella would have enjoyed herself no end in the contest put over by Cleveland Loew Theatres publicity head, Milt Harris, to popularize a new hotel dance spot and of course to plug "Stella Dallas" at the State. For further publicity, Harris planted a 40 by 50 tiein sign in the theatre lobby.

The American Legion convention in New York City coming in the midst of the date on "100 Men and a Girl" at the Roxy, was reason for the giant banner hung by Universal on the theatre building tieing in the picture with a welcome to the Legionnaires. Stunt was only one of the many in the smart campaign engineered by Morris Kinzler and the Universalites.

One of the outstanders in the campaign for "Elephant Boy" put on at the Famous Players-Canadian Metropolitan Theatre, in Regina, Sask., Canada, by Larry Graburn, was elaborate display at leading department store. Stuffed elephant, tiger cub, atmospheric decorations, etc., attracted much attention to the window and the picture date.

For the date on "San Quentin" at the Palacio Theatre, in Mexico City, top exploitation stunt proved to be squad of men on the streets costumed as convicts, bearing a banner on the picture and kept under control by the "cop" in the rear of the squad. Each of the "cons" carried a sign which identified the crime for which he was supposed to be imprisoned.

To brew laughs for the picture and of course to present an unusual display out front for his date on "Topper," Manager George Limerick, at the Yale, in Cleburne, Tex., promoted a confiscated still and all the accessories, including bottles. Stills and tiein copy were used on center poster and even the famed Pallette rain-barrel voice was emphasized by the exhibit of an actual barrel.

QUICK REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Premiere

Regular Hollywood premiere was accorded opening of "100 Men and a Girl" at the Ute Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo., with Manager Ralph H. Ayer inviting the Mayor, and such visiting celebrities as Edna Ferber, Mrs. Evelyn Walsh McLean, etc. Event rated newspaper breaks on the society page with full sweep of pictures across the top of page and extra publicity on the film.

Opening was broadcast with station's program directress acting as mistress of ceremonies introducing celebs on arrival. Newspaper cameraman stationed in lobby snapped the prominents. Autographed photos of Deanna Durbin were presented to first 250 arriving at theatre and department store cooperated on tieup using fan photos of the starlet imprinted on back with copy on Durbin fashions. Store also ran large co-op ad playing up the film and Deanna clothes.

Chinese Cables

Cablegrams supposedly from Hong Kong were sent by W. Clyde Smith, Paramount, Hot Springs, Ark., to all business houses and their employees with the following copy: "We urge you and honorable members of your household to see 'The Good Earth,, to be shown," etc., and signed by Wang and O-Lan. Entire staff was dressed in Chinese attire, signs in public parks and similar prominent spots spotted with "This is the Good Earth—Keep off the grass," and Clyde planted a 60-foot banner atop new five-and-ten reading "This building was erected on Good Earth."

Special front was erected carrying out the Chinese motif; box office transformed into pagoda with bamboo effects and panels consisted of full length figure of Tillie Losch and heads of Muni and Rainer. Giant standees were also used and Chinese lanterns hung from under the marquee.

ADVERTISING APPROACH FOR "LONDON MELODY"

Reported as the first of its kind in England is the exhibitors' service campaign created by Bob Graham, advertising and publicity director for Herbert Wilcox Productions on "London Melody". Manual contains over 12 pages of indexed material with credits, publicity, synopsis, advertising and exploitation, and is offered in addition to the pressbook.

Featured is a contest on the picture in which Wilcox offers cash and a free trip to the studios for the winner. Runner-up will also be recognized.

Clergy Aids

All Detroit's clergy received letters urging them to see "Zola" at the Cass Theatre and to tell congregations about the film. Ministers cooperated by discussing the picture from pulpits.

Society editors devoted space to opening with pictures of celebrities who attended the premiere. Cards were placed in all bus stations and special cards planted in libraries. Photos of Muni were placed in important stores and counter cards used in downtown hotels. Contacts were also made with the PTA's, Junior League, Better Film Group, Superintendent of Schools, Federation of Women's Clubs and all Catholic groups in the strong campaign supervised by Mort Blumenstock and Don Nermuth.

Tabloid

To announce the reopening and complete refurbishing of the Regent Theatre, Elmira, N. Y., Bill Leggiero got out a four page tinted tabloid which was distributed house to house. Entire cost was covered by merchants ads. Paper contained welcome message from Bill, story on the sound equipment, photo of new seats, personal endorsement of opening picture and plug for coming attractions.

Newsboys' Contest

Local dailies cooperated with Charlie Crowley, Globe Theatre, Vineland, N. J. on "Headline Crasher" by featuring a contest on the first page. Passes were given to each newsboy who submitted news articles acceptable to the local editors and details were posted in the boys' rooms of each daily.

Stokowski

Since Leopold Stokowski has long been a favorite in Philadelphia, where he has conducted the famous Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Skip Weshner, with his assistant Jules Seltzer and Harold W. Seidenberg, manager of the Fox Theatre, supplemented the regular campaign on "100 Men and a Girl" with a special flash folder playing up the maestro's role in the picture.

Folder was dignified piece of work with picture of Stokowski conducting and carried telegram from him with reference to the Philadelphia opening and list of the classical selections played in the film. This was sent to all special mailing lists supplied by all local concert bureaus. Also special ads were taken on the music pages of local pages in addition to regular ads on the movie pages.

Windows

Artie Cohn, Queen Theatre, Wilmington, Del., secured cooperation of the A.M.A. for "Devil is Driving" by planting display in hotel window consisting of scene stills and miniature autos. Window was also used in Dupont building together with strong local endorsements. Police safety squad was invited to special showing, trolley car dash board cards used profusely and date further endorsed at a meeting of the Delaware Motor Club.

After regular run of the local Star-Journal, day ahead of opening of "Marked Woman" at the Ohio, Sandusky, Manager Joe J. Scholer had paper's front page mortised to make room for a four-column, two-color ad on the date. Page was then rerun and 1,000 extra copies distributed by newsboys wearing aprons imprinted with theatre credits and shouting "Racketeer gang exposed in Sandusky," etc.

Car Cards

Four days ahead of opening engagement of "Topper" at the Community Theatre, Miami Beach, Fla., George Allen planted car cards in all trolleys, window cards were also placed in best spots about town and heralds distributed by Liberty boys. George also effected tieup with book department of department store, radio announcements were made twice in advance of opening and special trailer was run ten days ahead.

QUIGLEY AUGUST AWARD "FIRSTS" SCORE HIGH ON TIEINS, CONTESTS

Theatremen in Texas and Maine Vie with Canadian Showman In Execution of Campaigns Voted First Mention Honors

Citizens of Regina, Sask., Canada, awoke one morning recently to find the sidewalks covered with elephant footprints in yellow all leading to the Metropolitan Theatre. Stunt was one of the advance teasers arranged by Manager Larry Graburn on his campaign for "Elephant Boy" which was the last he put over in that spot before proceeding to his new assignment at the Capitol in Halifax. The gag aroused plenty of interest in the date and was further coupled in the public mind with costumes worn by the house staff, floor men wearing imprinted sun helmets some two weeks in advance.

Newspaper publicity campaign topped by editorial on the feature was also set well ahead and built up to a series of contests put over with the Leader-Post reported by Graham to be difficult to crack. First contest took the form of a co-op page with some 30 merchants participating, one for each letter of the title, author of the book and theatre, as follows: "Elephant Boy, Kipling, Metropolitan." Individual letters from these three words were placed alongside of each merchant's ad and entrants were required to count the number of times that letter appeared in the merchant's copy, and place these totals in a list of the merchants and their addresses.

Second contest invited newspaper readers to write on a postcard in not more than 35 words why they wanted to see the picture. Third contest was for the best amateur posters to advertise the date. Copy stated that suggestions could be obtained from displays in front of the theatre. Posters were required to be nine by 12 and could be in color or black and white.

Ties In With Friday 13th

Since the picture opened on Friday the 13th, Larry made much of the day by distributing folders, copy leading off with "your lucky day—Friday, the 13th," following this with tiein copy. He also took advantage of another topical event wherein the Province of Saskatchewan started collection of a sales tax week ahead of the date. In order to aid the public in computing the amount of the tax, Graburn had cards distributed carrying the information with theatre credits at the bottom stressing that the tax did not apply to theatres.

Prominent stores were spotted for advance displays, featured being a Woolworth window of mechanical elephant toys with a negro lad in costume showing how they worked. Another flash found good enough for newspaper reproduction was a window in the leading department store, center of which was life-size stuffed pachyderm against a tropical background. Store thought enough of the display by running notices in all the newspaper advertisements.

Graburn also tied on a classified page promotion wherein he advertised for a live elephant, this followed by house ad in which the paper plugged the fact that, although no pachyderms were forthcoming, nevertheless the want page clicked 99 times out of a hundred. Other slants that clicked were giant invitation to the mayor, tiein with girls' soft ball tournament, kiddies parade with prizes given for the best imitations of the "Sabu," the boy in the picture, and radio plugs. Top billposting stunt was promotion of four 24-sheet stand used in teaser fashion. Board was blanked with white and theatre sign man lettered the title and theatre a few letters at a time over a period of days, adding additional letters each day until the sign was completed.

INTERSTATE CIRCUIT SPONSORS "TESTS"

MGM's search for screen talent in Texas sponsored by Interstate Theatres was tied in with showings of Universal's short "Hollywood Screen Test" in campaign supervised by Bob O'Donnell and carried through by Frank Starz and Miss Besa Short.

Special four-page folder announcing the talent search carried publicity on the date for the short at the various situations.

Wide Drawing Area Covered By Parkhurst on "Courageous"

Since "Captains Courageous" was booked to play day and date in another spot but a few miles away, Manager Pearce Parkhurst found reason to start his campaign on the picture a month ahead at the New Star, Dover-Foxcroft, Maine. He led off with the unusual offer of an invitation to patrons who desired to read the book before seeing the picture purchasing two copies of the novel for this purpose.

Hangers were placed on every door in town and heralds sent to all names on mailing list and distributed house to house in 10 towns in the drawing area. These were followed by jumbo heralds especially printed, distributed in the same manner. Additional printed literature included bookmarks and combination blotter, ruler and calendars which were left at offices and such places as postoffice, banks and at schools. Parkhurst also utilized local and neighborhood newspapers topping his ads by a personal endorsement and listing special reasons why the public should see the picture at the New Star.

Outside attention was drawn to the date by a street parade headed by members of the local boys' band in full dress uniform. Procession was headed by two boys carrying theatre banners and after marching from one end of the town to the other band returned to the theatre where concert was given out front. Boys were guests of the management to see the picture after which they were brought up on the stage for an additional musical program. To keep interest high for the second day of the showing, Pearce announced 100 colored star stills free to the first patrons requesting same.

In personal contacts and in the newspapers, Parkhurst made much of the fact that he had seen some of the picture being filmed at Gloucester and also profited from the discovery that a local girl had played a bit in the picture. To insure that everyone in town who wanted to attend would have sufficient opportunity arrangements were made with the two largest stores in town to close a half hour sooner than they ordinarily would and Parkhurst was able to interest the merchants further in devoting space in their best windows for advertising on the date. Vacant stores and buildings were also bannered and personal talks made by the manager from the stage.

Limerick Uses Jinx Prevue To Plug Date on "Topper"

Since his annual Jinx Prevue put on Friday the 13th came a week ahead of his date on "Topper," Manager George Limerick, Yale, Cleburne, Tex., found it profitable at the Jinx show to introduce the picture by a bit of business arranged with the master of ceremonies. The emsee announced that Constance Bennett and Cary Grant, stars of the picture were in town and had been prevailed upon to make an appearance. At this the curtain opened as if to allow the stars on the stage and as the emsee adjusted microphone, offstage voice spoke describing the star of "Topper" as a pair of gay ghosts and giving a further brief outline of the picture. Then the supposed voice of Cary Grant faded out in farewell and as it did, two flashpans were set off to further build the idea. Limerick reports it went over well since the trailer had been run just before.

George went for all the screwball ideas found advantageous in calling attention to his date, in addition to a classified ad contest and a treasure hunt in cooperation with an ice cream company. This was accomplished by printing letters of the title on pint ice cream carton tops. Running for five days prizes were awarded to those bringing in six tops spelling out the title.

Limerick uses a courtesy card with copy reading "It started to rain, so we thought you would appreciate our raising your windows," signed with theatre signature. Weather proving wet, he attached this tag to cars with reverse side carrying theatre plugs. He also took advantage of a trip made by one of the house staff to the west coast; the vacationer forwarded postcards on the picture to a selected mailing list from different stops.

Boy on street with apron carrying theatre cartoon copy and wearing top hat commanded attention as did a series of sidewalk stencils. In addition to imprinting menus, sales checks, napkins and such forth Limerick even went so far as to stamp leather soles of repaired shoes. Effective also was the lobby decorations featuring a large still promoted from local sheriff. This with all the rest of the manufacturing equipment was planted on the sidewalk with copy to the effect that it was being used to brew lots of laughs for the picture.

Further Football Tieins Forwarded By Round Tablers

Since Georgetown, George Washington, Maryland, Catholic and American Universities are situated in Washington and the immediate vicinity, Ray Bell, Washington Loew Theatres publicist has arranged with all institutions for varsity squads and coaches and the opposing teams to be guests at the Capitol Theatre on the eve of each local game. Cheering squads of each school will be permitted time on the stage. House orchestra will play Alma Mater of each school and there will be community singing of school songs projected on screen. Events are publicized on drama and sports pages and mentioned on radio.

Bell has also arranged with local sports editors to act as committee to select eleven outstanding players, each selection to receive a gold football from Loew's. Most valuable local played will also be honored. Above tieins are all sponsored by Loew Division Manager Carter Barron, former All American from Georgia Tech.

Miskell To Entertain Teams

At the Orpheum, in Omaha, Manager Bill Miskell has effected a tieup with the local Creighton University for publicity at scheduled night games. In return for entertaining visiting football and basketball squads at the theatre, College announces coming attractions at the Omaha over p.a. system during the games. School will also allow space on score cards for theatre advertising.

Featured tiein set by Miskell with Coach Bernie Bierman of Minnesota will have the entire squad at the theatre night before game with Nebraska. Event will be called College Night with Glee Club accompanied by organ presenting medley of school songs, plus introductions of coach and captains from the stage.

Botwick Will Film Games

Through tiein with photographer, the teams themselves and the theatre, Harry Botwick, State, Portland, Maine, is set to take short shots each week of the outstanding game for showing at the theatre. Included also will be shots of people buying tickets and seated in grandstands. Those identifying themselves on screen will receive prizes.

Last year's top stunt to be built up this year is use of small stereopticon in lobby which with typewritten slides will enable Botwick each Saturday to project on small screen scores of important games.

Warner Theatres School Rallies

Reported by Dick Wright, Cleveland Warner Theatres District Manager is a recent presentation at the Lincoln in Massillon, Ohio, of the local high school team from the stage by Manager Irwin Solomon. Regular school rally was put on to start the season. In Akron, Manager John LaDue at the Strand has arranged with the local Times-Press on a score guessing contest which Wright reports will ensure the theatre plenty of publicity during the fall season.

Perlberg Reports Miami Paramount Theatres Doings

Among the recent activities reported by Jonas (Perly) Perlberg, Miami-Paramount Theatres publicity chieftain was a football tiein with the pigskin squad of the University of Miami for the opening of "Varsity Show." Invited by Manager Austin Moon of the Colony by means of a giant size personally inscribed pass, the football squad marched to the theatre led by the University band. Feature stories and pictures were promoted by Moon in all three local newspapers.

Topper among the tieins made by Perly for "Broadway Melody of 1938" was a Greater Miami dance contest for main prize of Powell-Taylor Gold Trophy plus other awards such as boat trips, theatre engagements, etc. Papers went strong for the tiein with heads of local dance schools cooperating as judges. Contest staged well in advance of the date at the Olympia and Colony was split up into eight preliminaries and two semi-finals at leading dance spot. Final contest was held night before opening of picture.

To build up the stunt hit tunes from the picture were played nightly on radio programs, standing of the dancers listed on giant poster in front of dance hall together with announcements at all tables on the coming date. Contestants staged dance ballyhoos on prominent corners and main trophy forwarded from the studios was on display in leading store, which also tied in on the Powell dance shoes, gowns, etc. Perly also reports that on night of the finals proceedings were broadcast for a solid hour.

Float Wins Parade Prize

For date on "Artists and Models" at the Olympia Manager Al Weiss promoted a decorated float in the local Labor Day Parade with a bevy of the famed Miami bathing beauties carried for further atmosphere. Perly reports entry winning first prize with papers carrying shots of the winning entry.

An ice cream eating contest for waitresses in soda shop of the theatre building was another slant arranged by Perly to celebrate his birthday and to garner a lot of extra publicity and pictures on the event in the local dailies. Gag proved effective in blocking traffic by the curious who gathered to see what was going on.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Simons' Cardboard Football Found Effective Tiein

For football tieins in college towns, Jack Simons, Loew's Poli, Hartford, Conn., suggests one of his old favorites—a die-cut cardboard football with a long stem, the latter made so as to fit into outside breast pocket leaving the football to stick out in the same manner as a pocket handkerchief. Football is printed in local college colors with theatre tiein copy on the flap. Simons has these distributed free of charge by boys at the games, inserting the cardboards right into the breast pocket, thus giving students their colors.

WARNERS' PHILADELPHIA ZONE ADS

The newspaper ads on this page having to do with activities at some of the out of town houses in the Warner Philadelphia Theatres Zone, were submitted by Douglas George, publicist, who does his stint under the supervision of "Skip" Weshner. Art work in the ads reproduced which run two, three and four columns, is credited to Leo Weisz.

This "Topper" poster was created by Bob Ewing, Mars Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., measuring four by five foot and done in pastel crayon on compo board.

HOYT A. HOWARD

manages the Lyric Theatre, Gastonia, N. C., and he started under Robert B. Talbert as doorman at the Ritz, Columbia, S. C., worked there for three years, then left showbusiness for a year but came back as doorman at the State, Greenwood, S. C., worked there a few weeks and was transferred to the Ritz as assistant manager and then to Gastonia as manager.

up in Roxbury, Mass., manages the Warren Theatre for M. & P. Theatres Corp. Buckley started at the Codman Square Theatre there as usher, later was transferred to Fields Corner as chief usher, from there to the Shawmut as assistant manager and thence to his present job, from which point we expect to hear from him frequently.

WALTER LEAGUE

up in Jamestown, N. Y., city manager of the Palace-Winter Garden for Warners', is certainly no stranger to our pages and an old-timer, but he just joined up and we bid him welcome. Walter started in 1921 as usher in the New York Rivoli, later managed the Strand in Memphis, city manager and charge of stage shows at the Rialto, Victor in Denver, and was then transferred to Florida to produce stage shows for the district. After seven years with Paramount, League joined Fox Metropolitan Theatres and after a while here in New York went to the coast where he did a column for the Advertiser and Wilshire News and in 1935 came back east where he joined up with Warners.

out in Oklahoma City, Okla., manages the Circle Theatre for Standard Theatres, and started in Tampa, Fla., as usher in a Publix theatre. Later went to Oklahoma City and worked up to assistant at the Midwest Theatre and then accepted an offer to manage a large swimming pool. After two seasons out of showbusiness, Bob joined Standard where in addition to managing the Circle he is assistant exploitation manager of 10 of their houses.

is in Aliquippa, Pa., managing the Strand Theatre for Pennware Theatre Corp. and has followed our pages very closely. Ken tells us that he was assistant manager working for Al Sindlinger in Milwaukee when he won a Quigley Award. Lund left Wisconsin and worked in Philadelphia for Skip Weshner for a time, then back to Milwaukee and thence to his present assignment, a newly remodeled house.

is the owner-manager of the Grand Theatre, Detroit, Mich., and set out as bill poster for the Castle Theatre, then usher at the Hancock and at that spot was promoted to booker and manager. In 1930 Korman was appointed manager of the Burney Theatre, where he remained for two years before becoming part owner of the Medbury. Thence we find Saul manager and booker at the Dunbar, at which post he remained until taking over the Grand.

is the advertising manager of the Cameo, Roxy Parramatta Theatres in Sidney, Australia, for the Roxy Theatres, Ltd., and entered showbusiness in 1929 as office boy at the Prince Edward Theatre there, thence to the Roxy Parramatta in the same capacity. In 1935 he assumed his present position. Other houses he has worked in include the Royal, Ritz Concord, Jewel Theatre Bankstown, Victory Kogarah. We are always interested in the exploitation activities of our overseas brother showmen, Livermore, so let's hear from you.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are produtcion numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1937-38 season.

J. C JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Back home again. We supposed that when they knew we were coming they would have driven the cows off main street and met us with the mayor, some prominent citizens with the "Silver Cornet Band" and the Ladies' Reception Committee—but they didn't.

The only prominent citizen who met us was Bill Jones with a bill for two shirts, one pair of overalls, a pair of BVD's and a demand for immediate payment. Somehow these folks never do appreciate a "prominent citizen" anyway. Well, that's what one gets for living at "The Gateway to the West." Anyhow, we are home with the grasshoppers.

A writer in the Omaha World-Herald gives us a very vivid account of one of the stellar attractions at the Lincoln (Neb.) state fair. It was billed as "Gay Paree" and, judging from his report of the attraction, it was "Gay" all right and very suggestive of "Paree." He says in his report that the principal attraction was a fan dancer whose costume consisted of a pair of shoes and a fan, and that the dance was put on by one Nancy Miller, who claims her home to be Louisville, Ky., although we doubt if she knows where Louisville, Ky., is, and we doubt very much that Louisville, Ky., would have allowed her to stray so far away.

A pair of shoes and a fan are not considered a sufficient costume for ladies, especially by a discriminating public, such as Lincoln is, and, judging from the writer's report, the patronage of "Gay Paree" came mainly from the cornfields and the hayrack boys. We would like to suggest to Nancy that she add a smile to her costume, but discard her shoes during this hot weather. If this report is true, the Fair Board should be congratulated for giving the public an opportunity to see some "high-class entertainment." It's just our luck not to have been there, but then we never do get to see anything, anyway. Doggone the doggone luck, anyhow.

It occurs to us, however, that Omaha, before starting to throw stones at glass houses, should put shutters over the windows of some of their own houses, for we have been told that some of them are exposed to flying missiles, some large enough to break glass. Anyhow, we are still of the opinion that the State Fair Board should be congratulated and that Nancy should be done in stucco, to be placed in the "Hall of Fame" as a contribution to "Art."

The other day a fellow who is on relief went to the committee and demanded an increase in his allowance. The committee told him it was short of funds at the moment and could not increase his allowance. The fellow said it would not be necessary until he returned from his vacation, that he was going back to Michigan for three or four weeks and after he came back he would like a little more assistance. Can you beat that? Demanding an increase in his allowance after he returns from his vacation. Vacation from what? Yea, verily, he was right in his speech at Warm Springs, Ga., when he said, "No family need fear going hungry. The government will see that they are fed."

In discussing the honesty of men and women, we notice that Bob Burns rather leans toward the fair sex. It seems that, in his opinion, the conscience of the ladies is a little more acute, that they lean a little more strongly toward honesty, and he cites his Aunt Poody as an example. He says he was at Aunt Poody's for dinner one day and when they sat down to eat, Aunt Poody said she thought it would only be fair to invite in some of the neighbors to eat some of the steak the delivery boy had left there by mistake. Aunt Poody's honesty reminds us of Aunt Prunv Barnloft back on the Kankakee river in Indiana. She told Silas, her husband, that if Elmer Snodgrass should ask him if she found a five-dollar bill he dropped on the floor at the store that day to tell him she would return it that evening. Then she added, "That's in case he should ask you."

We got a letter from a fellow out in Colorado saying he was going to open a theatre and asking us if we knew where he could get a magazine that told about pictures. We answered him and told him we did, that we represented such a magazine and that "It Covers the Field like an April Shower." He wrote back and said he didn't know what kind of a magazine that was as they hadn't had a shower out there for nine years.

We recently received a letter from Gertrude Merriam of the HERALD (she is the one who wants you boys to send her some theatre passes) and she said she had received a letter from Robert L. Ripley asking her for her photograph, but didn't say what he wanted with it. We wouldn't send that guy our photograph on a bet because he would likely put it in his "Believe It or Not" column, he's so darn funny that way. We know what we'd do with her photograph; it would be framed and placed upon our dressing table.

Last night we went to the Moon theatre and saw a double feature program. The first picture was called So and So and the second one was called So and So. They were produced by So and So and company and So and So directed them. The principals in these pictures were So and So, and since we saw them we have felt rather so and so ourself, and if you should play them, if you don't say so and so you can call us so and so and we will stand for it.

Every time we get a nice, sunshiny day we think of catching fish in the ship channel down at Brownsville, Texas, with J. C. Fanning. Fanning would be an awfully good fisherman if he would learn to spit on his bait, but he won't do it, he spits in the water.

But speaking of fishing, we saw Fanning catch a fish one day as long as a——but then maybe you don't know how long a fence rail is.

You probably wouldn't start on a journey on the 13th, and probably wouldn't sleep in a hotel room 13, but if you should take two drinks of "Minnesota 13" you'd spit in a wildcat's face. It is said to be a great tonic for mild indispositions, and we will recommend some "Minnesota 13" for you before you start reading this. Without it we will assume no responsibility.

"IMPRESSION ABROAD"

WE defer, sir, to no man, in the breadth and abundance of our admiration for, and marvelling at, the genius, the scintillant versatility, the amazing virtuosity of the purposeful, professional, misunderstanders of Hollywood. The year past, marked by some recovery from the pains of decency, has afforded a number of pure, iridescent gem specimens of "miss-understanding," which, just coincidentally, appeared possibly to involve evasions of the self-disciplines which the motion picture industry found so necessary in its hour of distress about 1934.

Choice indeed was the employment, in the name of art, of a young woman who had achieved what passes for fame by taking her clothes off on the public stage. Choicer yet has been the announcement of a contract with another young woman who has won international attention because she has been pictured in her artistically authentic facial simulations of reaction to biological attentions of apparently great penetrations and vigour. There are other examples, but these are the pearly best, flawless in the luster of their quality of devotion to art.

So it came that at even-tide of last Sunday, when the editor sat at an autumn fireside a-dawdling through the publicity perfumed pages of the distinguished New York Herald-Tribune's amusement section, he fetched up at last on a piece entitled "His Job is to Censor so Well that Nothing is Left for the Censors."

SOMEONE had been intent on doing an article which should mention, with accent, a certain picture which is currently in a state of impending.

That intent was, with what some might call adroitness, not immediately disclosed. The approach was through a column about a Mr. John Hammell, described as "mild mannered," also "slender, silver topped," if you like colour details, who "puts either the Indian sign or the stamp of approval on pictures long before they reach the production stage."

The reader's pipe, a gurgling churchwarden, went out while he was looking for specimens and citations of titles bearing the "Indian sign." Maybe they have been saved for another piece. This piece was, after all, tending to its business of leading up to the publicity job for the picture in hand.

"The popular conception of censorship," The Herald-Tribune quoted Mr. Hammell, "is that it deals primarily with matters risque and in bad taste morally. But there is little of this to contend with today. The main job in censorship today is in matters international, keeping away from situations and characters which will offend censors in foreign nations."

That is really a lot of fun, while blowing rings at a mantel on a Sunday night, to think of censors, about the world from Hollywood to Helsingfors and way stations, all busy censoring for each other.

ANYWAY Mr. Hammell, who is what we used to call "the-censor-on-the-lot," seems to have it down to such a neat system "that he can delegate . . . his duties to assistants, leaving him free for the recently acquired duties, which he is gradually taking over, as general manager to Ernst Lubitsch, producer-director."

"He hastens to explain," says The Herald-Tribune, "that there is no connection between his appointment and his duties as a member of the Lubitsch staff and his censorship activities."

That, it will be discovered, is something in the nature of a hatful of fact, if not news.

"In some quarters," the quotation of Mr. Hammell continues, "the impression got abroad that Lubitsch productions might be problems for censorship, while exactly the opposite is the fact."

It is funny how notions will get around!

"Lubitsch productions," continues the quoting of Mr. Hammell, "are probably the least censorable of any film productions made. This is due as much to Lubitsch's good taste as to his skill as a director and picture craftsman."

If anything, even more, this reader would say.

Getting down to the essence of it all, The Herald-Tribune continues: "Hammell points to Lubitsch's forthcoming production 'Angel' . . . Even slapstick comedy in the hands of the wrong director can be censorable. Even a comedy cartoon can be censorable on the ground of good taste. Likewise Lubitsch's 'Angel,' with a triangle of two men in love with the same woman, that woman married to one of them, could have censorable possibilities if not handled with good taste and perspective."

What one must enjoy most, while repacking the pipe, is that word "perspective." As to "perspective," here's looking at you. The fire requires another log.

BACK to our perspective in comfort with Motion Picture Herald, our favorite screen journal, in hand. Over on page 44 of the issue, which is September 25, Mr. William R. Weaver, Hollywood editor, in a review of "Angel" seems to have hewn out a slab of perspective, in a fact-finding sort of way. Mr. Weaver, it is recorded, went to Westwood Village Theatre to a preview of "Angel" and found it introduced to that audience by a playbill stating:

> "Melchior Lengyel, the Hungarian playwright-author of 'Angel,' has . . . persistent salesmanship and a genius for writing racy Continental stories. . . . Lengyel refuses to take 'no' for an answer, bangs the desk and implores: 'Has Lubitsch seen it? Has Lubitsch said it can't be filmed?' Such is the tribute to the finesse of the Lubitsch touch."

Proceeding through Mr. Weaver's dispassionate report of the unfolding picture one reads: ". . . recording the goings on within, almost exactly like a well appointed house of assignation is popularly supposed to look . . . saying she doesn't want good advice . . . gestures in a private dining room . . . husband . . . is told it's all his fault because he hasn't been home much recently. At this point the audience is asked to believe that the gentleman who keeps England out of war tells his wife that it is all right with him if she doesn't do it again."

Let us look that last line over again. ". . . all right with him if she doesn't do it again." [See next page, bottom of column 1]

This Week

Going Up

The steady movement toward increased admission prices has gained additional supporters in widespread areas, but, for the most part, the raises have been adopted in houses with scales below the tax avoidance level of 40 cents. The public reaction to the increases has been reported as favorable by Rick Ricketson, operating head of the Fox Intermountain circuit, and by managers of Kansas City houses.

Developments are recorded on page 13.

68 Story Purchases

A total of 68 story properties were purchased by 12 producers during September, Crescent Pictures taking the individual leadership by acquiring the rights to 21 stories. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer ranked second with 15 purchases. Contrary to the usual results, published story purchases numbered more than originals. Approximately 65 per cent of the properties acquired were novels, books and magazine stories. Only one play was purchased.

A complete report on the purchases is on page 18.

ASCAP Earnings

Earnings of American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers for the third quarter ended September 30th were estimated at $984,000 by John G. Paine, chairman of the administrative committee, as against $949,000 the same period last year. This year's figure provided the largest distribution to members of any similar quarter in the organization's history. The record earnings were realized despite the fact that no revenue was received from five states where anti-ASCAP legislation has been enacted.

So we have been taken through 88 minutes of screen time to see something laid in Paris, infidelity enjoyed, condoned and blessed by the Lubitsch touch, Code seal 3399.

Picking up The Herald-Tribune again: ". . . There is no connection between his (Mr. Hammell's) appointment and his duties as a member of the Lubitsch staff and his censorship advisory activities."

He is telling us? Or would it matter?

Out of the nowhere comes a refrain from Kipling's "The Light That Failed"——Dick Heldar is talking: "There'll be trouble in the Balkans in the Spring."

Censorship Move

Cardinal Villeneuve, head of the Roman Catholic Church in the Province of Quebec, has launched a general campaign for a new system of Catholic censorship and the establishment of a Catholic Cinema League.

The purposes of the League are to insist on "morally sound" pictures from the producers; to establish a bureau of classification for all films marketed in Quebec, and to call upon the civil government of the province to enact laws complementary to present statutes "to assure adequate control of the industry."

The province of Quebec now has a legal censorship and forbids the attendance at motion picture theatres of minors less than 16 years old.

Hays on Pictures

Will H. Hays declared on Monday that the public definitely has proven that "artistically mature" pictures are acceptable as entertainment, proceeding to describe some 47 "outstanding" features for 1937-38.

Why Black Joined

At the screening of David Wark Griffith's "A Birth of a Nation" Monday night at New York University, Robert Gessner, director of the course in "History and Appreciation of Cinema," opened his remarks by saying that the "Birth of a Nation," first shown in 1915 and reissued in 1920, was responsible for Justice Hugo L. Black joining the Klan. And, he added, "the picture was the cause of a revival in the Klan's operations." In the same vein Mr. Gessner disagreed with Mr. Griffith's interpretation of the racial questions in the picture but tempered his remarks by saying that "Griffith's depiction was based more on melodrama than on racial prejudice." Because of a late start Mr. Gessner spoke only briefly on the racial question, going almost immediately into the technical aspects of the picture. He introduced G. W. (Billy) Bitzer, cameraman for the production, who described some of the methods employed in the picture to produce the effect wanted.

Cleared Air

Through a mist of rumor concerning personnel changes, minor and executive, at Universal, Charles R. Rogers, production executive leaving New York for Hollywood, cast the remark that home office discussions had "cleared the air of all the misunderstandings." J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board, countered reports of the dismissal of approximately 150 employees with "Hooey."

Fact and rumor are reported on page 58.

Sunday Afternoons

Attempts in two communities to ban Sunday openings of motion picture theatres failed, notably in Seattle, Wash., where beer parlor operators sponsored the attack. Six residents of Hogansville, Ga., were denied an injunction against the theatres and in Hartford and Willimantic, Conn., municipal ordinances were passed allowing theatres to open at two o'clock instead of five.

The reports are summarized on page 52.

Tri-State Election

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee, re-elected R. X. Williams, Jr., as president during the organization convention at Memphis. A highlight of the meeting was the criticism of producers for "indiscriminate" intermingling of whites and Negroes in motion pictures.

Details of the convention, along with news of other organizations' meetings, are given on page 52.

Mussolini, Roach Sued

The Associated Press on Wednesday reported from Los Angeles:

Film production plans of Vittorio Mussolini and Hal Roach encountered legal difficulty here today when Dr. Renato Senise of Italy filed suit declaring he originated the idea they are following.

Dr. Senise demands $30,000 of Mr. Roach and other defendants, including the Hal Roach Studios, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, two John Doe corporations and two John Does.

He charges that, although he conceived the plan to produce motion-picture operas with Italian talent and American technique, obtained a contract providing that he should receive one-sixth of any profits made by Mr. Roach, that he should be business manager for Italy, and interested Italian capital and Vittorio Mussolini in the plan, he has been eliminated from the plan.

Labor and Grosses

Important to establish the jurisdiction of the Regional Labor Board in the Screen Writers' Guild action for an election to designate the collective bargaining agency for writers, is proof of an intimate relation between the film industry and interstate commerce. To this end the board's attorneys, over protests of the producers, are calling for testimony on gross incomes and expenditures of the studios. Revealed so far have been the total annual consumption of raw film stock and gross figures of a few companies.

Hal Roach was shown to have spent $3,126,784 and to have received $2,887,174 during the period from September 1, 1936, to August 31, 1937. Grand National's gross income for the fiscal year ended April 3, 1937, was $1,205,651; Universal spent approximately $8,000,000 for production during the year and Samuel Goldwyn spent $3,460,645 on six features during the year ended July, 1937. For 42 features Republic spent $2,019,483 during the year ended September 30th and last year's gross for Selznick International was $1,760,000.

Selznick's Plans

David O. Selznick's distribution plans will be completed in New York within the next month, he announced this week when he arrived in New York from the coast. When greeted by reporters, Mr. Selznick said he had "a few definite things in mind" and then, in answer to a query as to whether he will continue to release through United Artists, added that he had "no idea of what's going to happen." During his stay in New York, he continued, he will confer with "everybody."

See page 46.

Pathe Deal

Under a five-year contract, effective Jan 1, 1938, signed by Pathe News, Inc., and Pathe Film Corporation, all Pathe News printing, negative developing and rush work will be handled exclusively by Pathe Film Corporation, which also acquires exclusive 16 millimeter and 8 millimeter rights to Pathe News' pictures of the Dionne Quintuplets and other items of interest in the Pathe News library. Material will be released by Pathegrams, Inc., subsidiary of Pathe Film Corporation. Negotiations were completed by Ned Depinet, president of RKO Radio Distributing Corporation; Frederic Ullman, Jr., vice-president and general manager of Pathe News, and O. Henry Briggs, president of Pathe Film Corporation.

Production Slower

The production line at Hollywood slowed markedly after the pressure of the last several weeks. With five completed only six were started, among them the Shirley Temple version of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

Casts of the product begun and completed and other studio notes comprise the Hollywood Scene on page 29.

"Documentary" Movement

The "Documentary Film" movement in England has expanded as a direct result of British producers' failure to show Englishmen as they really are, said Paul Rotha, a recognized authority on documentary films, who recently came to the United States from England for a five months' visit. Mr. Rotha defined a documentary picture as a "dramatization of information," often with narrative but no plot.

Other opinions voiced by Mr. Rotha in an interview are recorded on page 21.

Music Code

Representatives of virtually the entire music publishing business sat around the Federal Trade Commission in Washington, on Monday, and charged that the motion picture business is responsible for present unsatisfactory conditions in their industry, alleviation from which they seek to accomplish by a code of "fair trade practices," which was submitted to the Trade Commission for approval.

The code, as described on page 14, involves simply a ban on "song-plugging."

Dietrich "Traitoress"

International News Service cabled from Nuremberg, Germany, Wednesday, that Julius Streicher, Nazi chief, in his newspaper, Der Stuermer, branded Marlene Dietrich a "traitoress to Germany," because "the German-born Dietrich has spent so many years in Hollywood she has now become an American citizen."

Tests Bank Night

Disputes over the legality of Bank Night and other chance games have continued to arise in various sections of the country but this week particular attention is being focused upon Nebraska and Connecticut where test cases are now pending before the states' highest courts. A pastor in New Orleans has launched a drive to eliminate chance games from theatres and the district attorney's reply is that he will consider no complaint unless it is signed by at least 25 "reputable citizen and voters."

The chance game field is surveyed in an article on page 46.

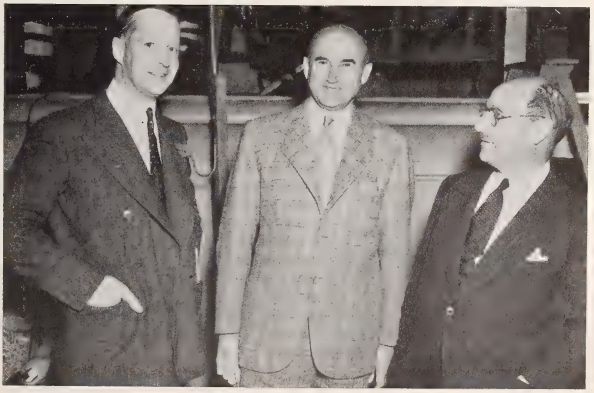
J. CHEEVER COWDIN, left, Universal chairman, and Charles R. Rogers, production executive, effusively welcomed Danielle Darrieux at the French Line pier in New York when the Normandie docked last week, a prelude to extensive cocktail parties and introductions of the French actress as Universal's newest star. Elsewhere in the news Mr. Cowdin is reported as having remarked that stories of the dismissal of approximately 150 employees were "Hooey," and Mr. Rogers as having added "The air has been cleared." Mlle. Darrieux was one of a shipload of industry notables, others of whom are pictured on this page, who arrived coincidently on the liner. Photographs by Cosmo-Sileo.

Hedy Kiesler whose most noteworthy screen achievement was as the star of "Ecstasy," was reported in the lay press to have come to America for a divorce. More tangible is the news that she has joined the MGM talent roster as Hedy Lamarr, the change of name being not without precedent for actresses whose previous publicity has followed similar channels.

Louis B. Mayer, MGM production chief, is pictured with Mrs. Mayer on board the Normandie on which they returned from a European vacation.

Vittorio Mussolini, in the news last week as the other half of Roach and Mussolini Pictures, has since been studying Hollywood methods, between times celebrating his 21st birthday. He is pictured examining a camera, guided by Norbert Brodine of the Hal Roach studios.



Deep in the Minnesota woods is a hunting lodge maintained by W. A. Steffes. The photograph herewith was taken the morning after a boat accident in which Mr. Steffes nearly lost his life.

Breaking with precedents, of political neutrality, in cinema journalism March of Time has prepared a sequence showing in minutest detail the work and accomplishments of Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia of New York. To launch the film properly a reception was held at the Waldorf Astoria hotel, where the mayor is pictured with Louis De Rochemont, producer.

"WELLS FARGO"

THREADED on the development of transportation in the country's pioneer days, "Wells Fargo" essays a broad field but, according to Hollywood predictions current since its recent completion, it will fulfill its promise. Stills from the film, which stars Joel McCrea and Frances Dee, are reproduced on this page.

PATRONS ACCEPT HIGHER PRICES IN LESSER RUNS

Higher Bracket Theatres Hesitate as Tax and Percentage Would Take Up to Eight Cents of Dime Increase

Increase of admission prices, having met with no serious opposition from patrons, is spreading rapidly to widely scattered points, although confined, for the most part, to theatres with scales below the tax avoidance level of 40 cents.

The majority of the increases have been five and ten cents, but the scale has gone up 15 cents in a few cases, such as the State Theatre in Oklahoma City, where the top admission has been boosted from 25 to 40 cents. The larger circuits have refrained from issuing any blanket order for increases, but admittedly are watching all locations where "adjustments" might be feasible.

David Palfreyman, exhibitor contact man for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, summarized the movement by declaring that an exhibitor's decision to increase prices is almost entirely governed by competition. The question of taxes, he added, is quite a determining factor.

First-Runs Average 40 Cents

Excluding cities of more than 500,000 population, the general average admission for first-run houses is 40 cents, Mr. Palfreyman said. A nickel increase in these theatres would be eaten up by the ten per cent tax on the entire admission, and so nothing short of a raise to 50 cents would increase net profits. In addition, as Mr. Palfreyman pointed out, with most of the first-run houses, pictures playing on a percentage basis, an increase in admission prices from 40 to 50 cents would result in the pictures costing more, taking as much as three cents of the additional dime. Hence, in such theatres a net of only two cents would go to the house which added ten cents to its admission charge.

As for the question of competition, Lew Preston, of the Interboro Amusement Company in Brooklyn, explained that "we can't do a thing" until the large circuits increase their prices.

Nevertheless, among the states wherein the increase movement has gained impetus are Nebraska, Ohio, Michigan, Delaware, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Washington, Pennsylvania and Oklahoma.

A citywide meeting of exhibitors was called in Milwaukee this week to discuss the possibilities of a general rise in admission prices. A similar session, summoned in New Haven, was postponed indefinitely because of a poor attendance.

The reaction of patrons to box office increases in Kansas City and in the 50 Fox Intermountain houses, where raises were adopted recently, has been good, according to Kansas City managers and Rick Ricketson, operating head of the Intermountain circuit. "There hasn't been one complaint," Mr. Ricketson said.

The Fox Plaza theatre in Kansas City and the Varsity in Lincoln, Nebraska, not only joined the list of houses putting raises into effect but, at the same time, both reverted to a single feature policy, after experimenting with double bills.

Other increases in Kansas City included C. H. Potter's Baltis, now 20 cents on Sunday and Monday nights whereas it formerly charged 15 cents straight, and the Rockhill, Fox Midwest suburban house, which advanced from 15 to 20 cents.

At Arkansas City, Kansas, the Fox Burford went from 20 and 25 cents to 35 cents on the weekend change, remaining at 25 cents for the other days.

In this same city, the Starr, formerly 5 and 10 cents, has gone to 10 and 20 cents, and the Howard has advanced from 15 to 20 cents.

The first increase in Pittsburgh in more than a year is one of the few cases above the 40 cent level. The Alvin jumped prices from 40 to 50 cents.

At Seattle, the Palomar's matinee prices of 15 cents have gone to 25 cents and the evening and Sunday level of 25 cents has been elevated to 40 cents.

Independent and circuit houses in Wilmington, Delaware, have decided on citywide increases of from 5 to 15 cents.

Ohio Circuit Raises Prices

Tracy Barham, general manager of Southio Theatres, has inaugurated a 5 cent increase at three houses in Hamilton, and four in Middletown, Ohio. The new scales range from 15 to 40 cents top. Admission for children has been raised from 10 to 15 cents on Sundays and holidays.

The Woods Theatre, Chicago, one of the Jones Linick and Schaefer circuit has moved up prices five cents to 30 cents on week days. The Oriental recently adopted a 10 cent raise.

Several neighborhood houses in Toledo have joined the movement. They include the Lyric, Avalon, State, Bijou and the World. The World raise is from 20 cents to 25 cents on Sundays only, but similar raises for the entire week were adopted by the other houses.

Operators of the suburban houses in San Francisco, after lengthy discussions, placed five cent raises in effect. A similar move has been made by Oakland subsequent runs within recent months.

Oscar Morgan, who has charge of the southern area for Paramount, does not believe any general rise will be adopted in the South. The majority of the houses, he said, are charging 35 and 40 cents. Increases, he pointed out, would run head-on into the tax question.

ITOA STARTS DRIVE AGAINST GIVEAWAYS

The 240 members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, Inc., are willing to eliminate giveaways and chance games by December 1st if other theatres in New York City will do likewise, it is pledged in the October 9th issue of the organization's official publication, The Independent.

The article says:

"From now on no one will be able to say it was the other fellow who wanted giveaways; there won't be any passing of the buck. Every exhibitor who sends in the pledge card to do away with giveaways will find his name listed in every issue of The Independent. Those whose names are not listed are the ones who display bad faith."

ANNIVERSARY DINNER PLANNED FOR BLANK

In celebration of A. H. Blank's 25th anniversary as a theatre executive a dinner is being planned for December in Des Moines, where Mr. Blank first started in show business. He is now president of Tri-State Theatres and president in a partnership with Publix in the Central States theatres.

During Mr. Blank's early days in the business the Garden Theatre, Des Moines, was his first large house. Today the theatre is the smallest in the circuit.

Tri-State has seven houses in Des Moines and 33 in Illinois, Nebraska and Iowa. Central States' theatres number 50.

ASCAP Florida Case Up for Hearing Soon

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers' petition for an injunction to restrain Florida state officials from enforcing the law barring the organization from operating within the state, which was passed at the last session of the legislature, has been prepared by Schwartz and Frohlich, ASCAP attorneys, and will be filed with the Federal court at Tallahassee next week.

PUBLISHERS CHARGE FILMS WITH PROMPTING NEED OF MUSIC CODE

"Plugging" of "Inferior" Songs to Advertise New Films Is Blamed at Trade Practice Conference

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

The music publishing business stands a chance of succeeding in its ambition to prevent or curtail motion picture producers from "plugging" the songs in their motion pictures.

Endorsed unanimously by the nearly 75 music publisher representatives present, the proposed code of fair trade practices for the music publishing industry was submitted to the Federal Trade Commission at Washington for approval on Monday by Joseph V. McKee, counsel for the Music Publishers Protective Association, former acting mayor of New York, and at one time a municipal judge.

The presentation was made at an open conference presided over by Judge George McCorkle, Trade Commission director of trade practice conferences.

Marked by a brevity of presentation and lack of opposition seldom achieved in open FTC discussions of proposed codes, the conference was featured, not by a demand for excision of proposals but the strengthening of them on the ground that the motion picture producers are responsible for reputed unsatisfactory conditions in the music industry and should be brought under federal control with respect to their "plugging" of songs advertising their new motion pictures.

As submitted to Judge McCorkle after months of preliminary conferences and trade discussions, the music code involves simply a ban on song "plugging" and application to the music publishing industry of the provisions of the Robinson-Patman anti-price discrimination act.

The price discrimination clause, said to have been incorporated at the suggestion of FTC officials, takes the place of the long list of unfair practices heretofore carried in detail in the codes and covering such matters as secret rebates, discounts and price discrimination. In its provisions against price discrimination in any form, the Robinson Patman act covers all such situations and, in fact, it is no longer necessary for an industry to have a code covering such practices, since they are illegal by act of Congress.

"Push Money" Barred

In its prohibition against song plugging, the Music Publishers Protective Association would make it an unfair trade practice for any member of the industry to give or offer any bribe to any orchestra leader, musician or performer, in the form of "push money," gift, bonus, gratuity, payment, refund, rebate, royalty, service, favor or otherwise, to sing, play or perform any piece without the knowledge and consent of the employer of the leader, musician or performer or where such plugging tends unduly to restrict the free and full exhibition of competitors' music and tends to lessen competition or create a monopoly.

With William T. Griffin of the Association, elected secretary of the meeting, John G. Paine of the MPPA delivered the first explanation of the industry's situation, declaring that without the code it was "headed for chaos," which would react also against the motion picture and radio industries, which, he said, depend primarily upon music for their raw material.

"The things that occur in this industry affect vitally other great industries and are associated with it or dependent on it as sources of raw material," Mr. Paine pointed out.

Efforts of the MPPA to control the situation, he said, have been unsuccessful because a small percentage of publishers would not cooperate in an internal "clean-up." However, he added that all the industry wants unfair practices eliminated was demonstrated under the code, when not a single wilful violation was uncovered. "The industry was almost the first to make application for a code under NRA and one of the last to get one," he commented.

Mr. Paine was followed by Louis Diamond, president of Famous Music Corporation and Popular Melodies, Inc., Paramount companies, who declared the code was necessary if the public was to have the type of music it should have.

Similar views were expressed by Edward B. Marks of the E. B. Marks Music Corporation, who told Judge McCorkle that "since the passing of the NRA, chaos is again becoming the rule." "Radio," he said, "is now the determining factor in obtaining plugs, and plugs can be bought in blocks of three, six, twelve or more. With repetition over the radio, music is becoming monotonous and unbearable."

Periods of depression in the music industry are coincident with the beginning of abuses, it was asserted by Louis Bernstein, president of Shapiro, Bernstein, an independent company. "At the present time the industry is going through a great depression, and bribery and chiseling are rampant," he said. "Hardly a music publisher in the United States is not "in the red' again for the first time in several years."

Sees Unemployment Threat

Unemployment threatens the men who contact orchestra leaders and other performers in the interest of the music publishers, the conference was told by Mose Gumble, president of the Professional Music Men, and, according to Paul Johnston, artists' representative, artists generally are opposed to plugging.

Declaring himself 100 per cent for the code, Arthur F. Fishbein of Southern Music Publishing Company, delivered an attack against the music policies of the film producers, declaring that "plugs" in themselves were not necessarily an evil, particularly as the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers distributes its royalty money on the basis of the number of public performances.

Mr. Fishbein asserted, however, that the film producers are responsible for the inferior music which is thrust upon the public by their demand for radio publicity for songs used in musicals and the practice of having songs written to titles of forthcoming shows and played on the air. The general character of the compositions coming from Hollywood is poor, he charged.

The motion picture companies are running the music publishing industry, he said, and the proposed code should be amended by inclusion of provisions placing them under control.

Mr. Fishbein's charges were answered by the MPPA's Judge McKee, who pointed out that the code had been drafted with respect to the law and while "it would be splendid if we could come down here and lay all our troubles in the lap of the United States Government, we know that cannot be done." However, he added, if the submitted code is approved and works successfully it may be possible later to take up the music-film situation.

Following presentation of the code, Judge McCorkle explained it would be given the consideration of the commission and if approved individual members of the industry would be asked to sign pledges of adherence. Some time, however, is expected to elapse before the commission can reach a determination.

New Warner Studio Publicity Heads

R. F. TAPLINGER

A. W. EDDY

Robert F. Taplinger, well known in radio publicity, and Arthur Wilson Eddy, associate editor of The Film Daily, were named this week by Warner Brothers Pictures to take charge of publicity at the studios in Burbank. Mr. Taplinger will be director, and Mr. Eddy will assist him as executive in charge of trade paper relations.

Edward Selzer is transferred from the post of studio publicity head, which he held for four years, to handle publicity and otherwise assist the Bryan Foy unit.

The long-term contract with Mr. Taplinger was consummated in New York by Jack L. Warner, in charge of production in California, and by S. Charles Einfeld, director over all Warner advertising, publicity and exploitation, at the home office.

Mr. Taplinger this week sold his publicity business, one of the most extensive in radio, to Tom Fizdale, Inc., for a reported $20,000. Some of the Taplinger air clients include Eddie Cantor, Burns and Allen, Kate Smith, Guy Lombardo, Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie, Bob Ripley, Nelson Eddy, among others.

Mr. Taplinger will arrive at the Burbank studios on November 1st. Attention will be given by Mr. Taplinger both to film and radio publicity and promotion at the Warner studio.

The Taplinger entrance into radio publicity was made in 1928, when he joined Columbia Broadcasting System's home office press department in New York, resigning in 1935 to open his own publicity offices in New York, and, subsequently, in Hollywood, Chicago and London.

Mr. Eddy went to theatrical journalism from New England newspapers, first taking the motion picture editorship of The Billboard, in New York. He was news editor of Exhibitors' Daily Review (now Motion Picture Daily), and, after handling personal publicity for a number of film stars, joined The Film Daily, some 10 years ago. Mr. Eddy is the author of several produced film and stage scripts. He was to leave New York by auto with Mrs. Eddy on Friday.

NEW YORK JUSTICES SCREEN "ECSTASY"; DECISION IMPENDS

Appellate Justices Become Audience in Courtroom Theatre for Showing of Sex Film at Albany; Decision Reserved

by RICHARD J. CONNERS in Albany

Five justices of the Appellate Division, Third Department of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, temporarily turned the staid courtroom into a motion picture house in Albany last Thursday to view the super-charged and much attacked sex picture "Ecstasy." The unprecedented action of the Appellate Division came after counsel for Eureka (Samuel Cummings) Productions, Inc., and the State Department of Education (Censor Board) had submitted their briefs and argued on the appeal by the producers against the decisions of Commissioner Frank P. Graves which upheld the refusal of the Motion Picture Division of Censorship to license the picture.

After viewing the picture, the appellate judges reserved decision, and the fate of "Ecstasy's" exhibition in New York is still unsettled.

A makeshift projection screen was hung in the back of the court-room and curtains drawn for the film, which required one hour and 15 minutes to run off.

A Non-Stop Court Case

"Ecstasy," the court pointed out, has been involved in litigation since formal application for its exhibition licensing was presented on March 14, 1936.

Attorney Henry Pearlman, representing Eureka, opened his argument by presenting the reasons for the appeal from Commissioner Graves' ruling which sustained the refusal of Irwin Esmond, director of the Motion Picture Division of Censorship to license the film for showing in New York State on the grounds that it was "indecent, immoral and of such character that it would tend to corrupt morals."

Figuring largely in the argument, pro and con, was an article appearing in MOTION PICTURE HERALD's issue of March 7, 1936, on page 18.

Charles A. Brind, Jr., counsel for the Department of Education, cited the stand of "the motion picture industry's outstanding paper" on the matter of licensing the picture, while Mr. Pearlman attempted to discredit the article, through presentation of an affidavit signed by Rose Chatham, secretary-treasurer of Eureka Productions, Inc. The Chatham affidavit asserted that "when this news item was printed, (i. e. March 7, 1936), no one had yet seen the picture in this country and the account in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD was therefore based on hearsay." (This affidavit takes no cognizance of the fact that MOTION PICTURE HERALD has extensive editorial representation covering the capitals of Europe, including the points involved in this instance, and that its reports from foreign parts and concerning foreign product are not "based on hearsay."—THE EDITOR.)

Other Allegations

Mr. Pearlman's other allegations were:

(1) That Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, wife of the Cabinet official, Herman Oliphant, general counsel of the U. S. Treasury Dept., Eli Frank, chief counsel of that office and Huntington Cairns, special advisor of the Customs Division found fault only with one scene of "Extase" (first copy), i e. the portion beginning with the engineer placing girl on couch and ending with portrayal of the girl caressing his head.

(2) That since the second copy ("Ecstasy") was admitted in the United States, it had received widespread approval as could be deduced by its exhibition for 21 consecutive weeks in both Boston and Washington; also that it was shown in New Jersey, California, Connecticut, Missouri, New Hampshire, Maine, Illinois and Oklahoma.

(3) That the Department of Education was wrong in condemning the first copy of the film, which was found obscene, when the second and relevant copy, "Ecstasy" itself, had been approved and not found obscene by U. S. authorities.

(4) That the U. S. Government exercises police power over foreign commerce to the exclusion of states. (Justice McNamee took exception, apparently, to this line of argument and quizzed Pearlman carefully on the point.)

(5) That importation of a product from a foreign country carries with it the right to dispose of that product in every state as if no state lines exist.

(6) That Section 305, Tariff Law of 1930, being an enactment of Congress has become the supreme law of the land, binding on every state therein.

(7) That statutes enacted by Congress evidence intention by the United States Government to occupy and cover the field of regular inspection to the absolute exclusion of state action upon this subject.

Rejected by State Department

Counsel Charles A. Brind reviewed the Department of Education's connection with the case, beginning with its rejection by Irwin Esmond, director of the Motion Picture Division. Concerning the appeal taken from Esmond's decision, Brind pointed out that Commissioner of Education Graves had personally reviewed the film on July 27, 1936, and heard arguments of counsel.

Chief points made by Mr. Brind were:

(1) That the motion picture "Ecstasy" was properly rejected as "indecent, immoral and tending to corrupt morals." Brind alleged that the picture is calculated to "excite in a spectator impure imagination" due to the very theme of the film wherein passion is shown as overriding decency, morals and convention.

(2) That the case is utterly devoid of any evidence that the officers charged with the duty of reviewing the picture acted in bad faith or capriciously or arbitrarily or without reasonable grounds for apprehending that public morality, decency and welfare would be in danger if this picture were licensed for public exhibition.

(3) That the United States Attorney confiscated "Extase" (the first copy) as "obscene and immoral" and that in its original form it was condemned by Pope Pius XI, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, U. S. Customs officials, ex-Governor Alfred E. Smith and the Legion of Decency.

Sees No Claim on Court

(4) That the article entitled "When Ecstasy Runs Thicker Than Water," appearing in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, evidenced the disapproval of the outstanding trade paper of the motion picture exhibitors and hence that the picture has no claim upon the court for consideration on the ground of alleged arbitrary action of the Commissioner of Education in also condemning the picture under the statute.

(5) That contention of petitioner along the line that refusal to license picture constitutes an unlawful interference in violation of Section 305 of the Tariff Act is without foundation in law or in fact.

(6) That the weight of evidence was such that the proceeding should be dismissed and order of certiorari, granted in January of this year by Supreme Court Justice Gilbert V. Schenck, should be vacated with costs.

A sidelight in the arguments was provided when Presiding Justice James P. Hill sternly rebuked petitioner's counsel, Henry Pearlman, as Mr. Pearlman started to give the picture operator the orders to go ahead.

Turning towards Mr. Pearlman, Justice Hill admonished "Now just a minute, please. Let me be the stage director here."

Sitting on the bench along with Presiding Justice James P. Hill were Associate Justices Walter A. Bliss, Leon C. Rhodes, Daniel V. McNamee and Christopher J. Heffernan.

Mrs. Lucille Hart of New York City represented the Legion of Decency at the court.

FILM'S STORMY ROAD LEADS TO WASHINGTON

Regardless of the decision made by New York's appellate court on the Samuel Cummings - Eureka Productions' appeal from the state censor board's refusal to grant an exhibition license to the sex film, "Ecstasy," Mr. Cummings is carrying his fight against the ban to the United States Supreme Court.

Specifically, the Eureka petition now before the U. S. Supreme Court appeals from a decision of the Federal District Court for the southern district of New York in a suit that had been filed against Herbert H. Lehman as Governor of New York. The District Court refused to grant an injunction against New York State and Eureka appealed to Washington.

There is no indication of the date when the Supreme Court will rule on Mr. Cummings' petition.

Joseph A. Brophy, Mayor of Elizabeth, N. J., last week acted on protests received from the Elizabeth Council for Better Films, and banned a showing of "Ecstasy" at the Broad theatre in that city.

Hedy Kiesler, Viennese star of the European-made film, "Ecstasy," was brought to New York, en route to Culver City, last Thursday, by Louis B. Mayer, MGM vice-president in charge of production, on a contract with Metro, which will present her as Hedy Lamarr.

"TOM SAWYER" POINTED

by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

WRITTEN out in full, the title reads "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer." Visually, that's what the letters spell. But as memories wander, as memories will for the millions who have read Mark Twain's saga of boyhood, no such mundane interpretation will register. Rather the letters will spell out—"Be young again. Live the hours of childhood once more, the happy days of youth when life was romance."

Frankly, we didn't pay much attention to this production when the story and details of the cast were being considered. Many things mitigated against interest. We were tired reading about the search for a "Tom Sawyer," reports of which vied with details of the Spanish revolution and the Supreme Court reorganization fight for newspaper preference. We knew that David O. Selznick usually makes pictures entertaining to those who see them and profitable for those who play them. We remembered that Paramount had made the story only a few years ago with Jackie Coogan, Mitzi Green and Junior Durkin as the leads; that Lucien Littlefield, Clara Blandick and Tully Marshall, among others, had been in the cast. Everybody knew this picture was being made in color, that all the continually improving chromatic values would be applied.

Then it dawned upon us that it had been a long time, with all due respect to "David Copperfield" and "Captains Courageous" especially, since a 100 per cent kid, an eternal kid, picture had been produced. By that we mean a picture which had no sex or lurid love in it. That, coming with a man's remarks, widely supported by a nation's press, that the primary consideration which a nation's populace has in the screen is that it should entertain and amuse only, aroused attention for the subject under consideration.

Followed a rummaging through scrap books from the last time Twain's tale was picturized. Commented Llewellyn Miller in the Los Angeles Record: "Swarms of children packed the Paramount. . . .'Tom Sawyer' is a film that no child should be denied and one that few adults will not enjoy." In the Examiner, Jerry Hoffman, now a Twentieth Century-Fox dependable, wrote: "By all means let the children see America's greatest writer's greatest character. If you're smart, you'll do more than that . . . for no matter how much joy the youngsters may derive from Twain's characters, their pleasure doesn't amount to one hundredth of that brought to grown-ups." Leading off in the Times, Edwin Schallert wrote: "If you want to be a boy again . . . "

The foregoing probably hasn't very much to do with the forthcoming "Adventures of Tom Sawyer." No one, unless he is supremely pessimistic and impossible to satisfy from any viewpoint, will doubt that it is being produced according to the most hopeful Selznick tradition. Did not newspapers continue to give Mark Twain stories as premiums for subscriptions, it might be considered that the author was completely dead. Were it not for the fact that Norman Taurog once won an Academy Award for his direction of a cartoon of childhood, "Skippy," and for his otherwise demonstrated ability to translate child psychology to the screen in such a way that the adult attains child's appreciation, is directing, "Tom Sawyer" might just as well be consigned to the limbo of forgotten subjects.

It is not intended that this should be a sales argument for "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer." According to what we understand, the United Artists press agentry need take lessons in selling from no one. We just happened to be around when the last "Tom Sawyer" had a goodly percentage of Los Angeles standing in line to see it. We know that May Robson did very much to make "Lady For A Day" and "A Star Is Born" successful and that Walter Brennan is an improved successor to Chic Sale as a character delineator. We know that Jackie Moran, who plays "Huck," acquitted himself famously in "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie." Ann Gillis is a child playing the part of the child "Becky Thatcher" who could not deny a puppy love kiss. They are in the cast. The first time Tommy Kelly, child of the Bronx, ever saw the Mississippi was when he crossed it en route from the east to play the role of "Tom Sawyer".

Apparently, release of the production of the adventures of "Tom Sawyer" will be simultaneous with a time when consideration of the spirit of childhood and juvenile happiness dominates everything else. Along with Mr. Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," it should be on the screens throughout the country late in December when the holiday spirit is all-pervading.

PRODUCERS TURN TO NOVELS FOR BULK OF 68 SEPTEMBER PURCHASES

Originals Fail to Lead for First Time in More Than a Year; Only One Play Has Been Purchased

Crescent Pictures, independent, through the purchase of 17 magazine stories and four originals, was September's most prolific buyer of properties for film material. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, leader in August with 11 purchases, ranked second last month through acquisition of 15 properties. The purchases are intended, for the most part, to further round out 1937-38 features schedules.

Although original stories comprised 60 per cent of the purchases in August, they dropped to second position in September, only 24 out of 68—35 per cent—being unpublished properties. It was the first time in more than a year that total originals for a month were fewer than the number of published stories bought.

One Stage Play Bought

As compared with August, when 12 stage productions were acquired, September saw the purchase of a lone play, "Fanny." The play purchase was one of the 15 made by MGM, the others being five originals, five novels, two books, and two magazine stories.

The total of 68 properties were purchased by 12 producers. The sources of the stories, aside from MGM's and Crescent's, were Twentieth Century-Fox, eight magazine stories, one novel and two originals; Warner Brothers, four originals and one novel; Universal, one novel, one magazine story and one original; Sol Lesser, two novels and one original; Paramount, two originals and one magazine story; Republic, one novel and one original; David O. Selznick, one novel, and Gaumont British, RKO Radio, and B. P. Schulberg, one original each.

Titles and Credits

The titles of the 68 stories, with all available production credits, are as follows:

After Dark, a serial by Sarah Lorimer, to be published in the Saturday Evening Post, by MGM.

Boy, the Girl and the Dog, an unpublished story by Sandor Farago and Alexy Denek, based upon the Hungarian story "A Kutyas Ember," by Sandor Farago, published in 1932 by Vilagvarosi Regenyek, bought by Twentieth Century-Fox.

Crime of Dr. Hallet, the, to be published in Blue Book, by Lester Cole and Carl Dreher, purchased by Universal.

Ex-Love, a novel by Mateel Howe Farnham, bought by Republic for a Harold Shumate production.

Eye of the Needle, an original by Harold Buckley, bought by Universal.

False Witness, The, a short story by Marcel Achard, purchased by Gaumont British as a starring vehicle for Nova Pilbeam. Alfred Hitchcock will produce. Mr. Hitchcock, Alma Reville and Joan Harrison will prepare the screen play.

Fanny, a play by Marcel Pagnol, purchased by MGM.

Forsythe Saga, five novels, "The Man of Property," "Indian Summer of a Forsythe," "In Chancery," "Awakening," and "To Let," by John Galsworthy, purchased by MGM.

"DOCUMENTARY" HAS REALISM THAT BRITISH DRAMA LACKS, SAYS ROTHA

Don't Make Englishman Real, Says Authority, While American Dramatic Realism Fills Demand Here

Paul Rotha, of renown for his making of documentary pictures in Great Britain, stood at a window of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, looking down into New York's Fifth avenue, studying this America.

A truck driver far below engaged his attention.

"There, there," exclaimed Mr. Rotha, pointing. "If an American director were presenting a truck driver he would be just like that, just exactly a truck driver. But if that same truck driver were introduced in a British picture he would probably become a comedy character."

And that, Mr. Rotha explains, is really why the documentary or non-fiction picture, the motion picture of fact, has won a place of importance on the British screen, while in America there has been but little of parallel development. Americans are, Mr. Rotha holds, served with so much realism, such verity of representation, that the documentary film does not find the same wide opportunity here.

Mr. Rotha has come over to spend five months with the Modern Art Film Library, and, among other activities, to make a documentary film of the screen's technique.

In Tweed and Pipe

Mr. Rotha looks the typical Englishman, as an American pictures him. His sharp features are accentuated by a small, well-kept mustache and by rapidly thinning hair.

Attired in a gray tweed, Mr. Rotha was quite at home in his new office as he talked, with a strictly British pipe clamped between his teeth most of the time. Again seated at his desk, Mr. Rotha, who is 30 years old, kept the bowl of the pipe cupped in one hand while with the other he toyed with a package of English made cigarets. Before answering a question he would hesitate, pondering his reply. But when he did speak it was at a rapid pace, clipping his words with a rising inflection which at times strung his sentence into one long word.

Exemplifying the accuracy of Hollywood productions' portrayals, Mr. Rotha said he felt well acquainted with Americans' mode of living even before he arrived last week for his first visit to the United States.

Mr. Rotha launched into a definition of a "documentary film" and traced the history of the movement from its inception "about eight or nine years ago." First, though, he pointed out, it is necessary to look upon pictures as falling into three classifications: "one, story films, which comprise about 95 per cent of pictures; two, films of fact, three, cartoons."

Documentaries, Mr. Rotha continued, belong to the second group, which also includes newsreels and travelogues.

"Dramatized Information"

"A documentary film," Mr. Rotha continued, "is a dramatization of information," not merely the presentation of a series of facts, but "dramatization in an exciting form." "They are done in a dramatic and entertaining manner."

"In 'Today We Live' (recently produced in England by Mr. Rotha) there are very real characters—the characters found in English country villages and 'distressed areas'—and there is a narrative. But there is no plot, that is, there is no love interest or anything like that running through the picture."

"There is prestige behind a 'documentary film' "—PAUL ROTHA.

The documentary film in England, Mr. Rotha thought, has a bright future. He said last year about 30 were produced and indications for this year point to between 50 and 60.

Government Interested

The government, backer of one of three British documentary producing companies, is displaying a keen interest, according to the producer, but has given no indication whether it is planning further development. One of the greatest aids to documentaries will come from the proposed Quota act, Mr. Rotha felt. In the 1927 act, which expires this year, there was no provision for documentary films as "Quota" pictures; under the proposed act they are included.

This, Mr. Rotha believed, will be a boon to the movement because it will result in wider distribution of the product. At present, he estimated, one-third of the British theatres show documentary films. Unlike advertising pictures in the United States, documentaries are paid for by the exhibitor on a rental basis.

"Public Relations," Not "Propaganda"

To a query as to audience reactions:

"At first they were mystified, but now there is a very definite taste for them. There is prestige behind a documentary."

Mr. Rotha conceded that documentaries publicize industries but when the question of whether they contain "propaganda" arose, Mr. Rotha exclaimed: "I hate the word 'propaganda.' Public relations? Yes."

"Documentaries," Mr. Rotha related, "started off by romanticizing industries. Now they are becoming more general. They are going toward the use of actors, not stars, you understand, but very definitely actors."

Mr. Rotha first became interested in documentary productions shortly after establishment of a government department, the Empire Marketing Board, to produce pictures promoting the British empire. "They appealed to me," he explained, "as giving the producer much more freedom than story films." It was while associated with the government agency that Mr. Rotha worked with John Grierson, who also ranks as an authority in the field.

The Marketing Board, according to Mr. Rotha, operated until 1934 and produced about 50 pictures on such subjects as fishing and the handling of mail. It distributed its films through the Empire Marketing Board Film Library and through Gaumont British Distributor.

When the Film Marketing Board was discontinued its work was taken over by the Post Office, which now distributes to non-theatrical sources itself and to theatres through Associated British Film Distributors, Ltd.

Mr. Rotha left the Empire Marketing Board in 1933 and became associated with Strand Film Company. Mr. Grierson, when he resigned from the board, organized the Film Center, to serve as a consultant.

The other companies in the field now include the Realist Film Unit and the producing unit under the post office department. Despite this, Mr. Rotha emphasized that there is no competition among the companies.

Exchange Talent

"I wouldn't think of releasing a picture until after the others had seen it and had given me their advice and opinion," Mr. Rotha said, referring to Mr. Grierson and Basil Wright, Realist producer. Directors, players and even production pieces are freely loaned and exchanged.

The average documentary is of two reels but occasionally Mr. Rotha said, the subject is so wide in scope that the picture can maintain interest at greater length.

While in the United States Mr. Rotha will be special assistant to John E. Abbott, director of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, and in this capacity he is planning to help produce a picture on the techniques employed in the making of motion pictures.

Talking Motion Pictures Ten Years Young

Ten years ago Wednesday evening, on October 6, 1927, a highly-speculating audience of the great in motion pictures limousined, with Park Avenue elite and Broadway first-nighters, to the Warner Theatre on Broadway, in New York, on the invitation of the Warner Brothers, to see the first public performance of a talking motion picture. The very first scene from which voices were heard is the one above, in which Al (Mammy Singer) Jolson melodramatically burst into song for the admiring mother (Eugenie Besserer) in the story of "The Jazz Singer." In that picture with Mr. Jolson, besides Eugenie Besserer, were Warner Oland, Otto Lederer, Anders Randolph, May McAvoy, among others. As with nearly all casts of that day, merely a handful of "The Jazz Singer" players came out of the evolution of sound from silent. Mr. Jolson led the migration of Broadway talent to Hollywood to fill the vacant places.

To Alan Crosland and Hal Mohr go credits for the first direction and the first camera work of a talking film. They worked with Jack Warner on "The Jazz Singer."

"The Jazz Singer," although marking the sound milestone in screen history, contained only a few talking sequences and some songs, Mr. Jolson hitting the scales clear from sacred Hebrew cants to arm-spreading and knee-bending mammy ballads and melodies. The sound was on disc, and not until a few years later did the screen emerge with the all-talking, sound-on-film in the form that it takes today.

To Warner Brothers and their specially-created Vitaphone went the honor of making the first talking film presentation by reason of their acceptance of an arrangement proferred by the American Telephone-Western Electric-Bell Laboratories to join with them in commercializing the new form of motion picture art expression. Legend has it that the Warners jumped at the opportunity after every other motion picture leader and every other large motion picture corporation had turned down the new-sound as impractical, or something.

Eventually, though, it was many, many months after Warners had gained a substantial lead in learning the new technique and actually was benefiting by fantastic monetary returns from the new box office "novelty," the industry reluctantly conceded that sound was the silent screen's commercial successor.

Court Denies Motion to Dismiss Fox Appeal

The United States circuit court of appeals this week refused to consider a motion to dismiss the appeals of Mrs. William Fox and Herbert Leitstein, Fox's bookkeeper, from a district court ruling that they were in contempt of court for refusing to testify at Mr. Fox's personal bankruptcy proceedings. The court announced it would consider the motion when the appeal argument was called in its regular turn.

"Victoria the Great" Opens in Ottawa Oct. 13

"Victoria the Great," Herbert Wilcox picture of England's famous queen, will receive its Western Hemisphere premiere at the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, Canada, on October 13. The showing will be held under royal patronage, represented by Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor General of Canada. Anna Neagle, the Queen Victoria in the picture, and Mr. Wilcox will attend the premiere. RKO Radio is releasing the picture.

RKO Reorganization Plan Hearing Now Oct. 28

Another postponement in the hearing of the RKO reorganization plan, as tentatively recommended by Special Master Alger, was made this week, from October 14th to the 28th. Extension of the European visit of H. C. Rickaby, reorganization counsel of Atlas Corporation, proponent of the RKO plan, caused the hearing postponement.

Following the October 28th hearing, the Alger report will have a further hearing.

FEELERS TO END BOYCOTT DRAW REPLY FROM PARAMOUNT'S KEOUGH

Conspiracy Action Against Distributors Brought by Texas Exhibitor Dismissed in Federal Court; California Exhibitors Sue

Boycott activities against Paramount for the reputed non-delivery of pictures spread to Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Boston and points in New Jersey this week as Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, appealed "for the good of the industry as a whole," for settlement of the controversy in Philadelphia.

The plea drew immediate replies from both Paramount and the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners. Austin C. Keough, Paramount vice-president, said his company was willing to discuss the question with individual exhibitors but declared it would not negotiate with the UMPTO buying combine. Lewen Pizor, president of United, declared exhibitors were willing to discuss a settlement.

Mr. Kuykendall's appeal came virtually on the eve of a hearing in Philadelphia on Paramount's appeal from the United States district court's decision dismissing the injunctive action against exhibitors. William A. Schnader, representing Paramount at the hearing Wednesday, charged the exhibitors were in error in using coercive methods of urging boycott activities. Benjamin Golder, counsel for exhibitors, argued on the various types of boycotts, quoting extensively from Judge Dickinson's refusal to grant the injunction originally. A decision on the appeal was not expected for several days.

Other trade practice activities of the week included an MPTOA announcement that it would map a new campaign to effect a ten point trade practice program with distributors at its December board meeting; the dismissal of Ruben Frels' $600,000 suit in Dallas against large distributors and the Jefferson Amusement Company; failure of attorneys for distributing companies to agree on an appeal from the Dallas decision which held the companies had conspired to fix admission prices; the determination of Allied of Illinois to press an anti-trust suit against Balaban & Katz, and an appeal from exhibitor leaders to theatre operators in Ohio to sue distributing companies on conspiracy charges if they have evidence similar to that presented in Dallas.

Mr. Kuykendall's appeal, issued from Memphis after he had conferred last weekend with Philadelphia exhibitor leaders, said that Mr. Pizor and his associates "are willing to try to negotiate a fair settlement with the Paramount sales executives or through an impartial committee of arbitration or mediation."

Mr. Keough's answer was that Paramount "is, and at all times has been, ready and willing to discuss with any of its customers any grievances they have and to try to adjust them satisfactorily. Paramount, however, is not willing to deal with representatives of a 'band' or any combine formed to 'gang up' on it."

As for submitting the question to an arbitration committee, Mr. Keough declared: "We do not feel that we have anything to arbitrate or mediate."

Calls Losses Unnecessary

"It (the controversy) is costing both Paramount and the exhibitors who exhibit Paramount pictures unnecessary losses," Mr. Kuykendall said.

He then pointed out that there are two sides to all controversies, and suggested that the exhibitors may have "failed to read the technical, legalistic clauses in fine print in the Paramount contract, or to fully realize that the pictures they think they buy from every distributor are seldom if ever actually identified in the written contract they sign, which contracts are carefully written by counsel for the distributor, not by attorneys for the exhibitor."

Mr. Kuykendall took the opportunity to urge "a simpler, fairer and more easily understandable form of exhibition contract, free from trick clauses and technicalities. . . ."

A legal battle, carried to the end, is bound to leave a trail of suspicion and ill will, Mr. Kuykendall observed.

"We must learn to settle our disputes and controversies by conference, negotiation and voluntary agreement, rather than by strikes and organized reprisals, spectacular law suits and appeals to the government for intervention and statutory regulation," he continued.

"A fairer trade practice relationship must be followed or we are headed for governmental regulation. MPTOA's ten-point program of trade practices is badly needed and we are still fighting for it."

Plans for a new campaign to obtain distributor cooperation for the ten-point plan will be drafted when the UMPTOA board of directors meets in December, Mr. Kuykendall announced.

California Exhibitors Sue

Damages of $45,000 are sought by a mass committee representing 25 theatres in Southern California and 18 individual owners. The committee filed suit in Superior Court, naming Paramount Pictures, Inc., Paramount Distributing Company, Inc., and 10 "John Does" as defendants and charging they conspired to harass, embarrass and damage independent exhibitors by failing to supply 11 pictures for which the plaintiffs had contracted.

LAWYERS DECRY SCREEN TREATMENT AS 'VILLAINS'

Lawyers too often are cast in motion pictures as the "villain of the piece" while physicians seldom are portrayed as "Frankenstein characters," Professor John S. Bradbury of Duke University pointed out to members of the American Bar Association last week.

Professor Bradbury was addressing a joint meeting of the ABA's standing committee on legal aid work and the legal aid committee of state and local bar associations, at the ABA's convention in Kansas City.

Other lawyers speaking at the session expressed similar views.

The committee's objective is to improve the public relation of attorneys by providing free legal aid to those who cannot afford it.

George P. Aarons, secretary of the UMPTO in Philadelphia, addressed the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania and later announced that 100 members of the western group had joined in giving a UMPTO committee power of attorney for buying Paramount's pictures.

At a meeting of New England Allied in Boston it was claimed that only 10 per cent of the organization's members had signed new contracts with Paramount.

Court Dismisses Frels' Action

Mr. Frels' damage suit against the Jefferson Amusement Company and large distributors came to an abrupt conclusion in federal court, Dallas, late Tuesday, when Judge William H. Atwell instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defense.

Judge Atwell issued the instruction at the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony, ruling the plaintiff had not established a prima facie case.

No immediate decision was made as to whether an appeal will be filed but Mr. Frels' attorney announced that they were considering such a step.

Second Trial

This was the second time the case went to trial. It was tried before Judge Atwell last spring but the jury was unable to reach a verdict. Mr. Frels was seeking to collect damages because, he charged, distributors had conspired with the Jefferson Amusement Company, to prevent him from obtaining pictures.

He contended that after the amusement company began renting theatres in towns where he operated, the portion of major films allowed him by the distributor companies dwindled until he was forced out of business.

The court's action in ordering a dismissal relieved the defendants of the necessity of presenting any testimony.

Dallas Appeal Discussed

A decision on whether to appeal from the recent federal court decision at Dallas holding contracts made with Hoblitzelle theatres to be in violation of the anti-trust laws, will be made by attorneys for the defendant distributing companies after the government enters its decree. The contracts regulated subsequent run admission prices.

In attempting to reach a decision on whether to file an appeal, the attorneys pointed out that many parts of the decision are confusing in their implications and do not permit a definite interpretation.

Ohio Action Hinted

P. J. Wood, secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, quoted the highlights of the decision in a notice to exhibitors to confer with him so that their complaints might be investigated and, if possessing merit, be placed in legal form for submission to federal authorities.

B&K Monopoly Theme

The legal attack planned by Allied of Illinois on Balaban and Katz would be based on the charge that B & K monopolized theatre business and dictated clearance systems and releases to suit its needs.

HAYS PROMISES 47 "OUTSTANDING" FILMS

Lists Subjects to Prove "Main Street and Park Avenue Sisters Under the Skin"

Theatre owners and the motion picture public are promised no less than 47 "outstanding" features from Hollywood this season, out of the 400-and-odd to be produced.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, "reviewing the 1937-38 picture season" after his return to New York headquarters from a visit to the Hollywood studios, tallies the new product.

"Apparently Main Street and Park Avenue are sisters under the skin insofar as appreciation of truly great pictures is concerned," said Mr. Hays in a statement reelased Monday morning.

"Artistic maturity, as well as universal entertainment appeal, is demonstrated in such pictures, among others, that have opened the new season," Mr. Hays declared, and described as:

THE LIFE OF EMILE ZOLA, "with Paul Muni's distinguished performance; DEAD END, "a saga of handicapped children;

100 MEN AND A GIRL, "which fuses music and story into a new and greater screen achievement;

PRISONER OF ZENDA, "a new treatment of this famous melodrama, which superbly illustrates the technical and artistic progress of the screen;

STAGE DOOR, "a brilliant comedy founded on the Kaufman-Ferber stage success."

"High Screen Standards"

"These are the forerunners of a great group of pictures so outstanding of their kind," he added, "as markedly to raise the standard of the screen." He said such productions include:

IDIOT'S DELIGHT, "the Pulitzer prize play which will feature Clark Gable and Greta Garbo; TOVARICH, "based on the stage success of two continents;

MADAME CURIE, "the story of the famous scientist who was the co-discoverer of radium;

THREE COMRADES, "from the post-war novel of Erich Maria Remarque; GONE WITH THE WIND, "a stirring dramatization of Civil War days from Margaret Mitchell's famous novel;

THE BUCCANEER, "a Cecil DeMille production revolving around the exploits of the pirate Jean LaFitte in the War of 1812;

THE HURRICANE, "a South Sea story of romance and adventure;

MARIE ANTOINETTE, "starring Norma Shearer;

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM, "a dramatization of this modern American classic;

YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU, "a screen version of an outstanding stage success;

EBB TIDE, "Stevenson's story of the South Sea, to be made with color;

A DAMSEL IN DISTRESS, "a Fred Astaire vehicle, with Burns and Allen and Joan Fontaine.

"Famous Stories Treated"

HEIDI, "a screen treatment of Johanna Spyri's famous story, which waited until Shirley Temple grew old enough to play the part;

BEAU GESTE, "the story of the Foreign Legion in Northern Africa, to be remade on a greater canvas and in color.

"A large number of original screen productions will be included among the outstanding pictures of the new season," said Mr. Hays, adding, "music will play a greater part on the screen than ever before.

"Dramatizations of American History"

"Themes that deal with the pioneering spirit that has made America great and dramatizations of important events and episodes in American history will be represented by pictures of the first rank in artistic and entertainment appeal during the coming months. These," said Mr. Hays, "will include such elaborate productions as WELLS FARGO, "a tribute to the courage and vision of our pioneers during the days when the railroads first united a great continent;

PANAMA CANAL, "the story of a great American achievement;

MEN WITH WINGS, "an aviation epic of man's conquest of the air to which color is expected to add extraordinary vividness;

THE PIONEERS, "taken from the pages of American history and dealing with the story of the unexplored Northwest;

IN OLD CHICAGO, "a screen original of the great Chicago fire;

MY COUNTRY FIRST, "which will tell for the first time on the screen the part played by Haym Salomon, an American patriot during the Revolutionary War.

"On an equally impressive scale," he continued, "will be such pictures as 'Hudson Bay Company,' dealing with the early trading days in Canada; 'The Wright Brothers,' which will present the story of the beginnings of aviation; 'The Barrier,' a story of the Yukon and Alaska during the gold rush, dramatized from the novel of Rex Beach; as well as 'Gone With the Wind' and 'The Buccaneer,' which belong to this classification."

Mr. Hays' survey disclosed that, "The fountain of literary classics and the stream of biographical stories will continue to run strongly. Among forthcoming productions of this character," he explained, will be:

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE, "based on Jane Austen's great novel;

WITHERING HEIGHTS, "a screen treatment of Emily Bronte's work;

TOM SAWYER, "Mark Twain's classic of boyhood, to be done in color;

KIM, "Kipling's story of India, featuring Freddie Bartholomew;

THE GAMBLERS, "a Max Reinhardt production based on the novel of Dostoievsky;

THE GREAT GARRICK, "a romance founded on the life of the great actor; CONQUEST, "the love story of Napoleon and Marie Walewska, with Charles Boyer and Garbo in the leading roles;

MARCO POLO, "the life and adventures of the famous traveler;

PERSONAL HISTORY, "based on Vincent Sheean's story;

MADAME CURIE, MARIE ANTOINETTE, REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM, EBB TIDE, "previously referred to in this review.

"The cartoon motion picture as a unique achievement of the screen will enter a new phase this year," Mr. Hays declared, "with the presentation of 'Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs,' Walt Disney's first full-length picture—a film three years in the making.

"In the field of the legendary," Mr. Hays added, "will be such outstanding pictures as 'The Adventures of Robin Hood,' a screen original done in color, and 'Arabian Nights,' a dramatization of the famous classic.

"Comedy Plays Important Role"

"Comedy promises to be a prominent part of the new entertainment fare. This is featured not only by many original scripts, but by the screen versions of leading Broadway successes," Mr. Hays continued, adding, "Among the outstanding comedy pictures will be these productions:

ROOM SERVICE, "founded on the comedy hit of Broadway;

THE AWFUL TRUTH, "with Irene Dunne and Cary Grant;

STAND-IN, "Clarence Budington Kelland's story featuring Leslie Howard and Joan Blondell;

YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU, "the screen version of another great stage success;

BLUEBEARD, "a Lubitsch production with Claudette Colbert in the leading role;

NOTHING SACRED, "a farce comedy with Fredric March and Carole Lombard; HAVING WONDERFUL TIME, "a screen version of the New York stage success with Ginger Rogers in the leading role; and others.

"Popular and Classical Music"

"Music, both classical and popular, will be a prominent feature on the screen in forthcoming pictures. Among the outstanding films in this category," it was indicated, "are 'The Great Waltz,' based on Johann Strauss' 'Waltzes in Vienna'; 'Chopin,' which will contain many of the great composer's works; 'The Life of Beethoven,' which will interweave the master's music as an integral part of his life story; 'The Girl of the Golden West,' starring Jeannette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy; 'Alexander's Ragtime Band,' an Irving Berlin musical, which will revive many popular hits; 'Ali Baba Goes to Town,' starring Eddie Cantor; 'Yellow Nightingale,' which will feature Gladys Swarthout and John Boles.

"'Radio City Revels,' a musical comedy featuring many stars; 'I'll Take Romance,' starring Grace Moore; 'The Goldwyn Follies,' a musical with an elaborate cast; 'Rosalie,' a screen original with Eleanor Powell and Nelson Eddy in the leading roles; 'Hitting a New High,' which will again bring to the screen Lily Pons, the famous coloratura; 'Bread, Butter and Rhythm,' a Sonja Henie musical; 'The Joy of Loving,' a musical comedy by Jerome Kern.

"Adding to the wide range of entertainment," Mr. Hays said, "will be mystery, detective and outdoor films, and important short subjects."

WRITERS' GUILD BARGAINING PETITION BRINGS INQUIRY INTO STUDIO BUSINESS

Labor Board Attorneys Demand Figures on Studio Expense and Grosses to Establish Interstate Commerce Connection

by VANCE KING
in Hollywood

Seated at tables in front of a judicial bench is a group of men who take frequent notes, and rummage through bulky brief cases. Facing them on the bench, raised two feet above the floor, is another man, a gavel on the desk before him. In the foreground of the room, to the left of the bench, is a table where newspapermen sit. In the spectators' section, separated from the rest by a railing, are several other men waiting to be called to the witness stand.

In these simple surroundings are some of Southern California's most brilliant legal minds, all engaged in a far reaching Regional Labor Relations Board hearing, the immediate issue of which is the petition of the Screen Writers Guild of the Authors League of America for an election to determine who shall be the sole collective bargaining agency for film writers.

As the testimony proceeds it is apparent that precedent setting revelations will be made. Although violent objections are interposed by counsel for the producers, a ruling is made that testimony concerning the companies' incomes and picture grosses is pertinent, opening the way for minute examination of finances. Before turning to such inquiry, however, figures are introduced to show the amounts expended by each company for raw film and other studio materials.

As indirect issues, yet affecting the entire business, are other questions to be settled, perhaps not finally in Los Angeles by the Board, but by the Ninth District Federal Court of Appeals, sitting in San Francisco, or by the United States Supreme Court. They include whether the film industry engages in interstate commerce, or whether it engages in business in such a manner as to affect interstate commerce, and to what degree it affects that trade; what constitutes a screen writer, and his legal definition as such; and what is the appropriate bargaining unit, by studio or industry.

The respondents, who would be termed defendants in courts of law actions, include the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, the Association of Motion Picture Producers, robust Pat Casey, producers' labor contact executive, and the production corporations of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, RKO-Radio, Twentieth Century-Fox, Selznick International, Walter Wanger, Universal, Trem Carr, Republic, Samuel Goldwyn, Columbia, Larry Darmour, Warner Bros., First National, Paramount, Major, B. P. Schulberg, Walt Disney, Grand National, Hal Roach and Monogram. They are represented by counsel, led by diminutive Milton H. Schwartz, of the law firm of Loeb, Walker and Loeb, handling the affairs of at least eight of the respondents, and Walter Tuller, of the firm of O'Melveny, Tuller and Myers, Paramount's representatives.

Presenting the labor board's case is William J. Walsh, special attorney for the National Labor Relations Board, who formerly practiced in Cleveland and Cincinnati and who is now permanently transferred to Southern California.

Leonard Janofsky is representing the Screen Writers Guild in the action. A young man, he is a veteran of such labor board proceedings, having served for ten months as attorney for the board.

Intervening in the petition of the Guild is the Screen Playwrights, Inc., another writers' organization which early this year consummated negotiations with the producers for an agreement for writers, covering credit assignments and working conditions. The Playwrights, through Attorney Neil S. McCarthy, give promise of a heavy barrage of arguments throughout the hearing.

Presiding over all is Special Trial Examiner William R. Ringer of Indianapolis, new to the complexities of the film industry. He is interested, outside of his regular duties in hearing this case, personally in learning about the industry. The only previous contact with which he had was as a paying customer at the box-office. To acquaint Mr. Ringer with the multi-faceted industry, Mr. Walsh announces his intention of calling to the stand workers in the various divisions of the production end.

Jurisdiction Questioned

Mr. Ringer, from behind his silver rimmed glasses and his bristly mustache, opened the hearing, overruled objections to proceedings by the Messrs. Tuller, Schwartz and McCarthy and took under advisement their motions to dismiss. Then he ordered consolidated the various actions against each respondent into one group, over objections, giving leave to counsel to point out and object to instances of evidence not applying to their individual clients.

Mr. Janofsky pointed out for the record that the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees had been served with notice of the proceedings, and that the labor organization which claims jurisdiction over all film production crafts was not represented in the hearing.

Jockeying for position, Mr. Tuller raised his bulk to question the jurisdiction of the board over the film industry, alleging that the industry was not in interstate commerce, that the Guild petition cited nothing to warrant the interference of the Regional Labor Relations Board, and that even should the industry fall in the Wagner Act bounds, writers were not engaged in that type of work defined by the act. He was joined in this by other counsel, and Mr. McCarthy, who declared that the Guild petition did not state definitely what writers they were representing, or presuming to represent, that writing was a mental effort, and that the Wagner Act was meant for that type of worker who does physical work. He also said the Screen Writers Guild admitted by its petition that it was a component part of the Authors League of America, and subject to decisions of the other member groups and as such did not constitute a proper bargaining agency.

He also questioned the constitutionality of the Wagner Act in this case, pointing out in his argument that forcing employees to listen to the Guild would deprive the Playwrights of their liberty and property without due process of law, for the Playwrights already have a contract with the producers.

Then Mr. Walsh, adjusting his horn-rimmed glasses, called B. B. Kahane, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, Inc., to the stand to tell the examiner what producers do. The attorneys all listened closely. Mr. Walsh attempted to introduce into evidence the annual reports of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, to point out the relation of distributor to producer, but respondents' attorneys objected on the ground that distributing companies were not parties to the action. Mr. Ringer said he would rule upon their admissibility into the record after Mr. Walsh had given counsel time to read the reports.

Heated Exchanges of Words

Mr. Kahane admitted under questioning by Mr. Walsh and by Mr. Janofsky that the script was the framework for the entire motion picture. Then John Arnold, head of M-G-M's camera department, was called to the stand to read a long prepared statement on his department's work in the making of a picture. Thus ended the first day of the hearing, Mr. Ringer still complacent after subduing heated exchanges of words between the Messrs. Janofsky and McCarthy. "I shall appreciate it if counsel addresses remarks to me, not to each other."

The Friday session started with Henry King, director for Twentieth Century-Fox, on the stand. Mr. McCarthy drew from him the statement that directors made changes in the scripts as prepared by writers. Then Maj. Nathan Levinson, head of sound recording at Warner Brothers-First National, read a long paper on sound recording and submitted photographs showing the various procedures.

Fireworks developed when Nicholas Nayfack, minor executive at MGM, was called to the stand. Asked by Mr. Walsh to describe the physical properties of MGM, Mr. Nayfack started, but was interrupted by the protests of Mr. Tuller, who said the amount of property owned by the individual companies had no bearing on the interstate commerce angle at which Mr. Walsh was apparently driving. Mr. Ringer said it had, but by stipulation of counsel, they all agreed that the companies could furnish written statements showing the amount of physical property they owned.

Mr. Nayfack was then asked by Mr. Walsh to state the gross income of MGM. Amid violent objections by the respondents' representatives, who said it was a trade secret and that source of funds did not determine or have bearing on interstate commerce, Mr. Ringer rules that the matter was pertinent, thus opening the way for the examination of every company's finances and the revelation of incomes and picture grosses. This was done after Mr.

ASIDES DURING AN INTERLUDE

When William J. Walsh, attorney for the Regional Labor Relations Board, explained the nature of testimony which he was about to present, and the lengthy, involved action necessary to lay the foundation for the case, the attorneys for the respondent companies, in the Screen Writers Guild petition for an election to determine the collective bargaining agency for writers, sighed.

Milton Schwartz, of the firm of Loeb, Walker & Loeb, said: "Well, boys, we'll be out of the trenches by Christmas."

Neil S. McCarthy, representing the Screen Playwrights, Inc., exclaimed: "And I took this case for a flat sum!"

Annual Consumption of Raw Film Stock by Producers Is Revealed at Regional Labor Board's Hearing

In an attempt to show the relation of the motion picture industry to interstate commerce, William J. Walsh, attorney for the Regional Labor Board, during the hearing in Los Angeles on a petition of the Screen Writers Guild, called representatives of raw film stock distributors to the stand. Total annual sales to various distributors made by J. E. Brulatour, Inc., C. King Charney, Inc., and Smith & Aller, as revealed on the witness stand are shown in the table below. All figures are for 1936 and represent feet of film.

U.S. Board Hears Guild Demands

Janofsky quoted from the recent Supreme Court decisions on Wagner Act cases in which gross incomes of corporations were taken into consideration.

Mr. Nayfack finally answered that he did not know the gross income figures. He said MGM submitted a program of production to Loew's, Inc., and then the studio was given the money. Mr. Walsh indicated, now that the financial evidence ruling was in his favor, that he would call studio executives who did know the amount of gross income each studio had, and would show what profits were made.

Expense Figures Admitted

Then arguments arose over Mr. Walsh's attempt to introduce questionnaires answered by some of the production companies on the amount of material, such as building lumber, cement, chemicals and the like purchased during the year. Mr. Schwartz said this had no bearing on the situation, that if a strike of writers was called the effect upon such purchases would be little. Mr. Tuller in arguing his objections said such dealings by the studios would have only indirect, not direct, bearing on actual interstate commerce, if writers walked out, and therefore such testimony was immaterial, and that such dealings were intra-state.

After listening, Mr. Ringer declared: "This offered evidence merely bears out the question. Its weight will be decided upon later." The attorneys agreed to fill out all the questionnaires.

Percy R. Guth, auditor for Walter Wanger, was the final witness on Friday. He told of the company's percentage deal with the United Artists Corp., distributors, and said Mr. Wanger's six productions cost a total of $3,500,000, of which $33,000 was spent in purchase of stories and for writers' salaries. He also said Mr. Wanger received $703,000 as his percentage on two of his releases.

That concluded the testimony for the day. Mr. Ringer rapped for order with his gavel, cleared his throat and declared the session adjourned until Monday, although earlier in the proceedings he had said he would have a Saturday morning session. It seems that Mr. Janofsky, who is young and good looking, was married to Miss Annelies Ehrlick the night before, and Mr. Ringer wanted the bride and groom to have at least a week-end honeymoon because the hearings will last several weeks or more.

Film Purchases Listed

Figures showing transactions of millions of dollars in raw film stock were introduced on Monday, an important step in Mr. Walsh's attempt to show the relations of the film industry to interstate commerce. Representatives of J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Eastman distributors; C. King Charney, Inc., Agfa distributor, and Smith and Aller, DuPont distributor, were called to the stand to reveal the exact footage of raw negative and positive film sold to each company.

Following presentation of these statistics, I. S. Brown, salesman for the E. K. Wood Lumber Company, testified the producing companies' annual purchases of lumber amounted to approximately $160,000. Later other testimony showed that yearly totals spent for hardware were $335,083; paint, $72,617, and glass, $11,583. These expenditures were with companies outside the state of California, it was pointed out by Mr. Walsh.

Fox Theatres' Half Year Loss $13,249

Fox Theatres Corporation sustained an operating loss of $13,249 for the six months period ending June 30th, it was revealed in a statement of operation filed by Milton C. Weisman, equity receiver, in United States district court.

Since the company went into receivership June 22, 1932, operating losses have aggregated $479,146. The total deficit for the corporation is $39,575,297.

Total assets, as valued by Mr. Weisman, are $8,495,313, but the book value places them at $4,561,281. He included a claim of $7,500,000 against William Fox in his estimate of the assets. Approved claims total $6,645,820 after giving credit for $291,928 for dividends paid. Claims amounting to $6,968,623 are still unsettled, including that of William Fox against the corporation.

Fox Film Corp. has a disputed claim of $2,369,914; General Theatres Corp., $1,327,389, and National Theatres Supply, $293,057. The receiver has disposed of assets with a book value of $17,182,877 for $3,233,984, or a loss of $13,948,892. Largest of the disposed assets were the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses valued on the books at $5,776,176 and sold for $150,000 and the Market and 17th St. Corp. in Philadelphia, valued at

Dabs of Paint

When "Ebb-Tide," Paramount's first color venture, is publicly released, some may note that in the early sequences Frances Farmer's complexion is quite pallid. The paleness was not caused by illness; rather, it is the result of temperament.

Viewing the early rushes, studio executives noted the wan reflection. Projector lamps were readjusted, the rushes run through again, but the result was the same.

Ensued an investigation which revealed that Miss Farmer was foregoing makeup. Not only was she so doing, but she was determined to continue along the same line. She had reasons, too. She had a good complexion naturally. Besides, she didn't think that girls wore makeup in the time of the story.

The production crew went to work, determined to convince her that makeup was necessary. Director James Hogan argued from the standpoint of color values. Others had their say, but still Miss Farmer was adamant.

Finally the matter was placed in the hands of Lucien Hubbard, who, it appears, has a way of dealing with temperamental artists.

Mr. Hubbard thought and studied. The picture had gone along quite a way. A considerable investment was tied up. Finally he hit upon a solution that made Miss Farmer a subject of makeup artist's attention. Explaining to her that in the picture she was the daughter of a seafarer and spent a great portion of her life on decks of boats under a tropical sun, and naturally could not be anything else but tanned and sunburned, he convinced the player that she would look strange if she appeared otherwise on the screen.

In the succeeding sequences Miss Farmer's complexion is considerably more colorful.

Production Easer

For the first time in several weeks Hollywood production slowed up a bit. Only six pictures started and five were finished. The decline may be attributed to the opening of the football season.

Although the quantity of newly started pictures may not be great, several promise to be of outstanding quality. At Twentieth Century-Fox, Shirley Temple started in a complete re-creation of that enduring romantic melodrama of old New England, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Her supporting company includes Gloria Stuart, Helen Westley, Bill Robinson, Phyllis Brooks, Jack Haley, Slim Summerville, Alan Dinehart and Dixie Dunbar. The troupe which Allan Dwan is directing will be augmented as shooting continues.

With C. C. Coleman, Jr., in charge, Columbia started "American Legion." It will present Don Terry, Mary Russell, Robert Warwick, Ivan Miller, Arthur Loft and George McKay.

Paramount started "The Yellow Nightingale." Gladys Swarthout, John Boles, John Barrymore, Claire Dodd, Fritz Feld and Curt Bois head the cast, which is not entirely completed. Henry C. Potter is directing.

Principals in Monogram's "Federal Bullets," which Karl Brown is directing, are Milburn Stone, Terry Walker and Helen McKellar.

IT'S ALL ABOARD THE GRAVY TRAIN

Like most fat men, Don McElwaine, important in the MGM studio publicity department, is a very considerate fellow. Some months ago, it became necessary for him to inform a youthful attache that his services no longer were required. That was too tough a job for Don to undertake, so he scurried around the lot, buttonholing all his friends, and finally landed the boy a job in the makeup department. Don broke the news to the lad by telling him he was being transferred.

Several months went by. The labor controversy broke out, an incident in which the makeup artists were importantly involved. The makeup artists, who always find that some player's eyebrows need brushing or hair needs to be combed just when director and cameraman are ready to shoot the sequence, emerged from the strike with certain definite pecuniary advantages.

On the lot, a few days ago, Don again met his protege, asked him how he was doing.

"I'm doing swell," said the boy.

"Good. I'm glad to hear it. How much are you getting now?"

"Oh, I'm getting $135.00 a week now, and haven't missed a day since you transferred me."

A couple of days later the MGM publicity department joined the Screen Publicists Guild.

Culminating a publicity campaign which continued for several months, Sol Lesser started "Tarzan's Revenge." Famous athletes, Glenn Morris and Eleanor Holm, will be starred, with C. Henry Gordon, George Barbier, George Meeker, Nana Bryant, Joseph Sawyer, Corbet Morris and John Lester Johnson in support. D. Ross Lederman is the director.

"The Ugly Duckling" started at MGM. The cast thus far lists Allan Jones, Fanny Brice, Judy Garland, Reginald Owen and Lynne Carver. Edwin L. Marin is directing.

Two of the five completed productions are credited to MGM. "Bad Man of Brimstone" will present Wallace Beery, Dennis O'Keefe, Virginia Bruce, Lewis Stone, Joseph Calleia, Bruce Cabot, Guy Kibbee, Cliff Edwards, Guinn Williams, Robert Gleckler, Arthur Hohl, Raymond Hatton, Noah Beery, Scotty Beckett, Olin Howland and Mitchell Lewis. J. Walter Rubin directed. The cast of "The Last Gangster" is headed by Edward G. Robinson, who, as a matter of history, was the first screen gangster. Others to be seen are Rose Stradney, Lionel Stander, Douglas Scott, Louise Beavers, Sidney Blackmer, Henry Daniell, Allan Baxter, Donald Barry and Moroni Olsen. Edward Ludwig directed.

RKO-Radio finished "Danger Patrol," formerly titled "Highway to Hell." The cast includes John Beal, Sally Eilers, Harry Carey, Frank M. Thomas, Richard Lane, Ed Gargan, Lee Patrick, Solly Ward, Vinton Haworth, and George Shelley. Lew Landers directed.

At Republic "The Duke Comes Back" was finished. It will present Allan Lane, Heather Angel, GenevieveTobin, John Russell, Joseph Crehan, Frederick Burton, Ben Weldon, Selmer Jackson, Clyde Dilson, George Lynn, Victor Adams, Byron Foulger and George Cooper.

For Paramount Frank Lloyd completed "Wells Fargo." It features Joel McCrea, Bob Burns, Frances Dee, Lloyd Nolan, Porter Hall, Ralph Morgan, Mark Nash, Robert Cummings, Johnny Mack Brown and Jane Dewey.

Preparation

An army, preparing for war, could not have been more completely equipped and accoutered than was the company of 300 Warner Brothers-First National actors, directors, extras and technicians which set forth for Chico, Cal., to start the filming of "The Adventures of Robin Hood."

A ten car special train carried the company from Hollywood to its location, where it will remain for six weeks. Aboard was an assortment of equipment to make the expedition self-sustaining every minute of the time. Along with the train, a small fleet of trucks rolled along the highways. They, too, like another special train of baggage and freight cars which preceded the company special, were loaded with more than 2,000 items of theatrical and scenic properties.

Along with the tons of foodstuffs, medical supplies, costumes, personal baggage, mechanical apparatus and whatnot, the loads include thousands of arrows, crossbows, quarter staves, battle axes, saddles, war clubs, lances, scores of suits of medieval armor and similar trappings necessary to equip Robin Hood and his merry men and the army of Prince John.

Itemized

Paramount has purchased from W. C. Fields five of his comedy routines with the condition, made at the insistence of Mr. Fields, that he not be credited with their authorship. The five acts, one of which will be used in "The Big Broadcast of 1938," are known as the gas station, golf, barber shop, pool room and orchestra routines.

Jimmy Fidler, radio commentator and writer, has been signed by Warner Brothers to make one picture a year. His first will be "Broadway Goes Hollywood," which will be placed in production shortly after the first of the year.

GREATER UNION WILL GO IT ALONE IN AUSTRALIA, DECLARES RYDGE

Chairman Puts Quietus on Speculation Whether Circuit Will Renew Agreement with General Theatres Next Year

by CLIFF HOLT
in Sydney

"Greater Union Theatres will not renew its association with General Theatres Corporation. On and after December 31 it will definitely operate as an entirely independent circuit."

That declaration by Norman B. Rydge, chairman of directors of Greater Union Theatres, Ltd. (the present partners with Hoyts Theatres, Ltd., in General Theatres Corporation), apparently ends the speculation as to whether the two companies would extend their five-year agreement upon its expiration at the end of this year.

Mr. Rydge's statement is neither confirmed nor denied by Hoyts, and the trade now assumes that the two companies are preparing to re-enter competition with each other with the dawn of 1938.

Speaking at a special function attended by the directors and combined staffs of Greater Union Theatres and its affiliated companies, Cinesound Productions, British Empire Films and National Theatres Supplies, Mr. Rydge amplified his statement by a definite denial to "the crafty statement that a receiver has been appointed by the bank."

"How different are the facts," he said. "Our financial standing was never better; and, what is more, the Board is assured of ample funds to break up the present combine and operate independently.

"Greater Union Theatres has always been proud of the fact that it is an all-Australian organization, owned and controlled by Australians, and working in the interests of Australia. Our policy is merely a policy of Australian independence!

"I give the lie also to the deliberately inspired rumor that Cinesound Studios will be compelled to close down forthwith. Nothing is farther from the truth. On the other hand, our Board has approved of a twelve-months' production plan, calling for an expenditure of no less than £100,000 ($500,000).

"I also refute the suggestion that we will not be operating the State Theatre, Sydney, next year.

"The true position is that in effect we own the freehold of the theatre, through our majority holding of 500,000 out of the 850,000 issued shares in Union Theatres Investments, Ltd. The State will always be part of the Greater Union circuit, which is the largest chain of metropolitan theatres operating in this country.

"It has been built up by Australian money and Australian brains, and we do not feel disposed to hand over the control to outside interests.

"We do not know who is responsible for these statements, which are damnable, despicable lies—lies calculated to harm our undertaking! All I can say is that we are endeavoring to trace their source, and if we are able to do this, we will protect the interests of our companies by the immediate issue of writs against the persons responsible."

Regulation Discussed

The suggestion that the Federal Government will give serious consideration to the advisability of regulating the distribution of available film supplies between Hoyts and Greater Union Theatres, after the two circuits end their partnership on December 31st, is a point freely discussed by Australian film men.

The chief argument in support of this contention is that the Government may foresee the possibility of a film "corner" being created by either circuit and in that event consider its intervention justified.

At the time of writing, however, the most important consideration is as to which Government is in power next year. The Lyons Government, a Nationalist administration, goes to the polls on October 23rd. Its prospects of success appear reasonably bright, but its victory is by no means assured. Should the Lyons Government be returned, one doubts very much whether it would be stampeded into taking part in the negotiations for film between Hoyts and Union and the distributing companies; but a Labour Government might take a different view of the matter. Always eager to protect local industry and local capital, Labour easily may be persuaded that the Fox influence in Hoyts represents a definite threat to the future of Greater Union Theatres, since, by reason of its American theatre circuit, it is said Fox can do much to influence those companies doing business with them on the West Coast to sell to Hoyts in preference to Greater Union Theatres.

Labour Governments especially are ever ready to listen to propaganda against American film companies, and as Greater Union Theatres undoubtedly will beat the big drum about the "stranglehold tactics of the American movie combines," the prospects of active political participation in the matter of film supplies will not be out of the question if the Lyons Government is defeated in October.

Rydge Predicts Government Aid

In a statement issued by Mr. Rydge, the Greater Union chief said that it had been hinted that if his company operates independently from 1938 onwards, adequate supplies of film would be denied to the company's Australian-owned theatres.

"Statements," he said, "have already appeared in the overseas press that all the good film has been tied up against Greater Union Theatres. I do not want to discuss this question here, but all I can say is that our Australian Governments have always protected Australian industry and will not stand by and allow such a vast organization as ours to be forced out of business. No Government, I am sure, will hesitate to introduce legislation to protect, if necessary, the jobs of our large army of men and women employees, and the interests of about 5,000 Australian investors."

Film men and others who are acquainted with the industry on this market clearly refuse to acknowledge that the influence of Fox has any real bearing on the main issues. While suggestions openly have been made that Hoyts is attempting to corner film supplies, Hoyts executives have refused to comment. But its protagonists declare that Hoyts appreciates the inadvisability of being over-bought for film as much as the desirability of being adequately-bought.

The plain fact is that whereas the two circuits are about equal in theatre strength in the capital cities, Hoyts has an expanding suburban and country circuit of some 80 theatres whereas Greater Union has practically no interests outside the city; and as the independent houses are serviced largely by Paramount and MGM and sundry British productions, a distributor selling to Greater Union must look to Hoyts to handle his product in the subsequent-run situations.

An extraordinary feature of the proceedings is that whereas Hoyts allegedly has cornered all the important film for next year, no official announcement has been made by either Hoyts or any one distributor that contracts actually have been signed.

Paul Muni (Muni Wiesenfreund) is accredited with having a deep knowledge of the historical biographical, which serves him well in his "Louis Pasteurs," "Emil Zolas," and such. But, he is really sadly lacking in an understanding of the conduct of gardening—so much so, that on the ranch he bought in San Fernando Valley, he mistook the irrigation standpipes for flower pots and planted geraniums in them. When the water was turned on the geraniums flew into the air. Muni sold the ranch.

Question No. 88 was: (A) Upon what basic law does the electric generator (dynamo) depend for its action? (B) Why does the rotation of a generator armature generate voltage? (C) Explain in detail why only a.c. can be generated by an armature.

The following made acceptable answers: S. Evans and C. Rau; C. Oldham; L. Cimikoski; G. E. Doe; J. R. Prater; H. Edwards; W. Limmroth; W. H. Edmonds; J. A. Zachritz; O. H. Schmidt; M. and J. Trilon; A. C. Grene; W. R. Matthews and J. R. Davidson; M. L. Daniels; L. E. Dodson and H. T. Todd; R. S. Welch; W. L. Morehouse; H. D. Maxwell; P. B. Marshall and S. N. Baxter; L. N. Schofield; E. M. Brown and D. Davis; V. F. Nutan and W. A. Kendal.

There were many excellent answers. From eleven of the best covering Section (A) I have selected that of J. R. Prater, who says, "The basic law upon which electric generation by a generator armature is based reads: 'If an electric conductor in the form of a closed circuit be moved in a magnetic field in such a manner that the said conductor will cut (pass through or across) a variable number of lines of magnetic force, a voltage will be built up and a current caused to flow in a direction at right angles to the line of motion of the conductor.'

"That is exactly as the law is quoted in the Bluebook of Projection. While I realize answers copied verbatim from the book are ordinarily not acceptable, this is a definite law and can hardly be correctly stated differently."

All the correct replies read almost exactly the same, hence it would be waste of space to quote further.

(B) Evans and Rau say, "When a closed coil is rotated in an electromagnetic field, it cuts across magnetic lines of force which are less dense at the edge of the field than at its center. Thus, in accordance with Faraday's law, it passes through a varying number of lines of force and a voltage will be generated therein, which same will cause current to flow.

D. M. Stinson says, "Voltage is generated because since the armature coil sides are continuously moving either from a less dense part of the magnetic field to a part less dense, they must and do cut a variable number of lines of magnetic force. Therefore, except at the instant of time (twice each revolution) they move in a direction parallel with the lines of force, voltage is generated in accordance with Faraday's law, which may be examined by turning to page 10 of your Bluebook. The fact that current moves in a direction at right angles to the line of motion of the conductor causes direction of current flow to reverse at each half revolution of the armature."

(C) H. Edwards supplies what seems to be the best answer, as follows:

"Assume a simple generator to be so constructed that the lines of magnetic force flow horizontally between two field poles. The armature shaft also is horizontal, but at right angles to the lines of force. Assume one side of an armature coil to be directly over the other, starting from which position the coil sides rotate practically horizontally, hence cut no lines of force (of course they do not really move exactly horizontally, but sufficiently so for our purpose). Then no voltage is generated. But instantly one coil side starts downward and the other side upward, each cutting across lines of force in increasing number until they are in the same horizontal plane with each other, they cut a maximum number of lines of force and generate maximum voltage. We thus see that during the first half revolution a constantly increasing number of lines of force are cut, hence both voltage and current flow is raised to maximum, the current flow being in a direction at right angles to line of coil movement.

"However, when this point is reached, each coil side passes gradually into a less dense part of the magnetic field, hence voltage and current flow drops until the coil movement and movement of the lines of force are again parallel, whereupon voltage generation and current flow entirely ceases for an instant of time.

"Then, however, each coil side again starts cutting an increasing number of lines of force as before, but, viewed as coil sides, in an opposite direction, hence since current flow is always at right angles to line of motion of the conductor, we see that current movement in the second half of the coil movement or rotation will be reversed in the circuit being served."

Wally Edmonds, projectionist of the Park theatre in Dexter, Me., has been an earnest, consistent Bluebook School "student" for many months. In a footnote to his answer to one question he pays what I think is a very high tribute to the "school." He says:

"To the end that I may examine discussions of subjects having the same general or direct bearing, I keep all Bluebook School questions and answers on file. It was recently brought home to me forcibly what the school really means to those who follow it carefully, submitting answers to the various questions.

"This occurred when some trouble happened and instantly I knew exactly what to do. To my surprise the knowledge was as a part of myself. It did not seem as though it had been learned out of a book or had been taught to me. This really surprised me! Thinking it over I realized that the Bluebook School had so driven that piece of information home that it had become a part of my own knowledge."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 93

(A) What is a crystal speaker? In what manner does it differ from other types of speaker, and in what manner does it operate.

(B) Why are flexible arrangements necessary in transmission line to loud speakers? (As a hint, see page 592 of Bluebook.)

(C) Does a magnetic speaker have a field coil?

Survey of 16mm. Field Undertaken by Golden

Nathan D. Golden, chief of the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce, in an effort to determine the extent of the non-theatrical motion picture field for 16mm. and 8mm. film, is contacting manufacturers of cameras and projectors, laboratories, film manufacturers, producers and libraries.

The survey takes the form of a comparison for the years 1932 and 1937 and embraces footage, both silent and sound, also color, employment, capital investment and a breakdown into industrial, educational and advertising subjects produced, besides the manufacturing of equipment.

MPTO Seeks Colorado Cuts

A. P. Archer, president of the Colorado Motion Picture Theatre Owners, has launched a drive for lower fire insurance rates for theatres. He is having a survey made of all the theatres in Colorado, Wyoming and Mexico for the purpose. It is understood the exhibitor unit is seeking a reduction of 40 per cent in insurance premiums. Mr. Archer said that theatres are paying premiums on theatre equipment which should be included as part of the building and not as a separate premium.

Stand-In

(U. A.—Wanger)

Hollywood Document

Where other recent pictures revealing Hollywood at work as well as play have prospered, the quick, simple thing about this is that it's another and different one. Where films in kind have languished, if anywhere, there are the names of Leslie Howard, Joan Blondell, Humphrey Bogart and Alan Mowbray to place athwart a broad marquee. Combined, these factors afford the most painstaking or headlong exploiteer plenty of ammunition.

The Wanger presentation of Hollywood is indeed different. His approach is by way of the Wall Street banker, his address largely in the tell-all vein, and his off-to-Buffalo is what a given beholder elects to consider it. But the treatment is fundamentally, insistently and constantly humorous. Mr. Howard dumps his dignity overboard at the start and Miss Blondell never displays any. Mr. Bogart is found on the right side of the ethical equation for a change, as the honest producer, and Alan Mowbray on the wrong side of it as an unscrupulous but comic director. It is, generally speaking, a topsy-turvy but traditional Hollywood Mr. Wanger sets before his guests.

Mr. Howard plays "Atterbury Dodd," banking expert, sent to Hollywood to find out whether Colossal Pictures should be sold to one "Nassau" as a bad investment or continued in operation. "Dodd" is taken in tow by "Lester Plum," wisecracking stand-in, who becomes his secretary and ultimately his bride. "Dodd" discovers that "Cheri," the company's ace star, and "Koslofski," her director, are in a conspiracy with "Nassau" to make the company's last-chance picture a flop. He involves her in a scandal by way of invalidating her contract, and his home office sells the studio out from under him, discharging all hands forthwith. "Dodd" persuades the 3,000 employees to seize and hold the plant for the forty-eight hours it will require to remake the picture, becoming their champion, and avowedly the stockholders', and presumably pulling the enterprise out of the red in due time. (This closing episode would look almost exactly like a sitdown strike if certain lines of dialogue did not mitigate against that conclusion pointedly; and maybe it will look like that to some anyway.)

It is probable, in view of the sustained emphasis on the comedy side and the occasionally extremely comic results obtained, that few if any will dig into the picture for traces of social philosophy. Nor will many seek to identify beneath the fictional names given them individuals who live and breathe in the environs of Hollywood and Vine. The accent is on laughter throughout and there is lots of it.

Public Cowboy No. 1

Western

Substantially the outdoor melodramas of the West have not changed. With each passing year innovations have been tried and discarded when they served their purpose, infusing new life into an old mode. In the vanguard, when a list of new innovations are considered, are these Gene Autry westerns.

"Public Cowboy" goes further than most of them, employing, as adjuncts to a most modern story, short wave radio, an airplane and a system of rustling cattle that is as novel as it is effective. Western fans, and particularly those who make it a point to be present when a Gene Autry picture is screened, should find this much to their liking, for as westerns go it is pretty near the top.

A story that allows for plenty of action sequences has the additional asset of a very fine cast. Autry's performance is all that one has come to expect of him. He is in good voice and he has that admirable foil, Smiley Burnette, along with him to perk up the proceedings with his special brand of comedy. Then, too, there is that old favorite of another decade, William Farnum, in a sympathetic portrayal of a sheriff of the old west. As the romantic interest, Ann Rutherford, editor of the local gazette, does very well and is lovely to look at.

Diversion

The fame or infamy of New York's 52nd street, as the word for it may chance to be in a given cinema sector, is dished up without glorification or denunciation and fitted out with selling angles appropriate to the purposes of both the metropolitan and the provincial showman.

Showmen who elect to capitalize the glamour and glitter with which New York's street of hot spots and hoopla has been coated by newspaper columnists, radio chatterboxes and visiting firemen, can fill his marquee with names of performers experienced in the floorshow technique and known so to be by readers and listeners across the country. Among these are Jack White, Georgie Tapps, Al Norman, Dorothy Saulter, Maurice Rocco, Jerry Colonna and Pat Harrington. They do in the film what they have done on the street, plus a number of things they haven't.

Showmen who take the other tack will choose, perhaps to emphasize the serious story of the street's transformation during the last quarter century from a hyper-aristocratic 1912 to a gilt and giddy 1937. Names in this type of appeal are Ian Hunter, Leo Carrillo, Zasu Pitts, Pat Paterson, Lila Logan, Sid Silvers, Al Shean, Dorothy Peterson and Wade Boteler. (Kenny Baker, perhaps one of the most suitable names for either side of the exploitation question, has both a serious and a singing role.) The serious story, incidentally, is treated seriously, and given equal prominence with the song and dance numbers which, perhaps, occupy a little more footage.

Of course showmen with no exploitation restrictions will be able to shoot both barrels and, perhaps, bag both types of audience, plus the miscellaneous and the in-betweens. And of course it is important for him to know that the picture is clean, singularly so in view of its subject, and brisk and bright and vivid and varied. Director Harold Young, screen playwright Grover Jones, song writers Walter Bullock and Harold Spina and dance director Danny Dare have seen to this.

The story is essentially of the "Rondells," aristocrats of the street in 1912, whose fortunes are swept away in the crash of '29 and recouped out of speakeasy profits. One thread deals with a "Rondell" daughter kept in supposed ignorance of her father's occupation, another with the son of one "Samarelli," his partner, schooled for the concert stage but determined to be a crooner. A dozen other characters have direct relation to the working out of the story, at the end of which, of course, boy and girl find happiness.

Previewed at the Uptown theatre, Los Angeles, where an audience in which payees predominated, seemed to enjoy the picture thoroughly.—W. R. W.

PARAMOUNT NEWSREEL

Celebrates 10th Anniversary

Inaugurates New Departure in Screen Reporting with "Voice Staff" of Nine Nationally Known Radio Commentators, headed by Gabriel Heatter.

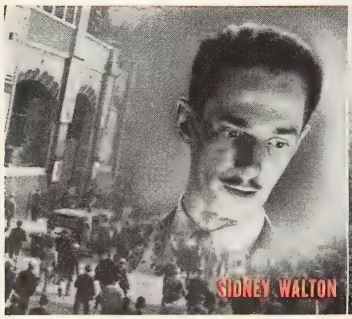
GABRIEL HEATTER, Chief of Paramount Newsreel "Voice Staff." Vibrant, dynamic personality. No one better than he at mixing big news with colorful human-interest stories. Selected by Women's National Radio Committee of 20,000,000 club women as Radio News Commentator No. 1. Commercially sponsored by more evening advertisers than any other news commentator on the air.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

My dear Mr. Richard:

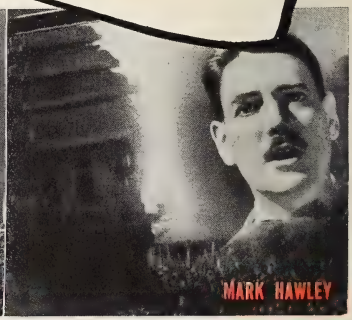
I learn with pleasure that your newsreel is celebrating its tenth anniversary.

Since the inception of newsreels, I have been a constant and interested observer of them. Their function has become more and more important.



Only through accurate and fairly presented news, regardless of its presentation on paper in print, or depicted upon the screen, can the public decide the questions of the day.

Efforts of the newsreel industry to meet these higher requirements are an asset to our country.

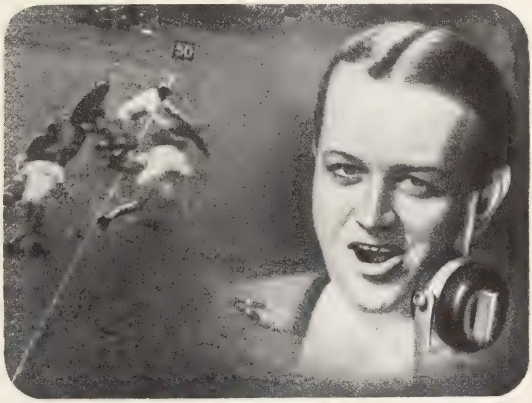


Very sincerely yours,

Franklin D. Roosevelt

Mr. A. J. Richard,
Editor, Paramount News,
New York, N. Y.

Triumvirate to Cover Spot News. Trio of well known radio commentators will be the voices behind spot news for the Paramount Newsreel. These keen-voiced gentlemen are Sidney Walton, Joseph Boley and Mark Hawley. Walton at one time was identified with WBAL (Baltimore) as news editor and commentator. Later joined WHN (New York) where he wrote and presented his own news program. Boley was staff announcer for WJAS (Pittsburgh) and later at KQV. Hawley, with considerable experience as announcer on some of America's greatest stations, is now transatlantic news commentator over WOR, with largest local audience in the country.



BOB CARTER covers horse racing. Started life as an aviator. Did about ten years of newspaper work. Has announced sports, special events and news at WODA, WNJ, WOV, WIP. Now assistant chief on WMCA.

FRANK KNIGHT owns the "voice" that will report foreign stories, especially those from the British Empire. Handles important air programs for WOR and the Mutual System, and is a keen student of international politics.

GREGORY ABBOTT will specialize on disasters, war and tragedy. Has been with the Paramount Newsreel since 1931. Has also been announcer on radio stations WOR and WMCA. When he's not describing events for the newsreel, he spends his time singing and composing songs in connection with his work as a church soloist.

BILL SLATER owns the "voice" behind the football games. Has been doing sports broadcasting for more than seven years, and is rated as an expert commentator on track and field events, baseball, hockey, boxing, football, basketball, polo, swimming and tennis. For past three years has broadcast all major football games over NBC.

JOE BOLTON will cover baseball, track events, college athletics. Is sports announcer for WCAU (Philadelphia) and staff announcer at WOR (New York). Has large following for his own program—"The Man About Town." Varies the monotony of life by Mc-ing nationally sponsored radio programs.

"PARAMOUNT NEWSREEL, as always, concentrates on service"...

A. J. RICHARD
Editor of Paramount Newsreel

"Service above everything else," states Paramount Newsreel Editor A. J. Richard, as his organization starts second decade of achievement.

"We believe exhibitors and the public want news presentation to be the primary function of a newsreel. We are not departmentalizing the news. We have selected these nine specialists from radio because we feel that their voices will lend added impetus and audience interest to photographed news happenings.'

Life Begins with Love

(Columbia)

Comedy

Comedy showmen expert in the technique of exploitation understatement have in this modestly cast comedy a subject on which to whet their talents. Offered without ostentation as on the occasion of this inspection, it may well be expected to reap a similar harvest of health laughs. Presented with glittering promises, it might conceivably do less than satisfy thus acutely sensitized critical perceptions. Possibly the simple billing is best. A lot of wee tots who act like wee tots do important things unimportantly and comically in the story.

The share-the-wealth idea, which gets quite an airing at first in the picture, is tossed overboard near the end of the proceedings in favor of an old-fashioned happy ending.

On the other hand, there is the fact that the Edith Fellowes of "These Three" has in the role of third importance a part of decidedly similar pattern.

Douglas Montgomery and Jean Parker are the two whose affairs the youngster first complicates and then unsnarls. The story is about a young heir to great wealth whose way with a bottle gets him on to the front pages as championing the share-the wealth idea and pledging himself to apply it to his own case. He flees when the hungry march upon the parental mansion, and hires out as janitor in a day nursery. The young lady in charge of the place falls in love with him and he with her.

Then the impish orphan of the piece learns his identity and proceeds to tangle everybody's interests into such knots as only she can unravel, which she does.

The humor generated is that of incident and portrayal rather than situation or development.

Candid Camera Comedy

Pretty obviously the thing here is that the production presents the candid camera clicker at work and play, neither sponsors nor spoofs him but shows what happens—or could—to one of his kind. "Flash Casey" is played by Eric Linden. Boots Mallory is the feminine name. There is also a newspaper side to the matter, and a gangster angle, but these have been somewhat more extensively energized with respect to public reaction than the camera aspect which therefore, no doubt, warrants first attention.

In the story "Flash Casey" is an honest if headlong young man whose cunning with a candid camera has earned him enough money to get through college. Trying for a job on a newspaper, he submits a photo which happens to show the publisher's son welcoming an actress, a little fervently, to his fair city. The publisher employs "Casey" forthwith. Equally forthwith the young man and "Kay Lanning," sob sister, commence romantic negotiations which terminate in the indispensable clinch. Meanwhile there have been complications with blackmailers, gangsters, a murder, a kidnaping, and of course the usual comic interludes, all of which have been unsnarled appropriately.

The picture is based on the story, "Return Engagement," by George Harmon Coxe, which John Krafft uses as a starting point for his screen play. Alfred Stern, associate producer, contributed adequately for the purposes of Lynn Shores' amiable and effective direction.

Breakfast for Two

(RKO Radio)

Farce

The current epidemic of that particular brand of comedy not so long ago known as slapstick and at present designated as sophistication, which had its regeneration from the silent days in such pictures as "My Man Godfrey" and "It Happened in Paris" (mentioned in this instance merely as two of the films of this type which met with favorable box office response), has its latest manifestation in RKO-Radio's "Breakfast for Two," a hodge podge story of a rich, headstrong girl, a wastrel son of a long line of steamship company owners, and the girl's efforts to save his company and marry him.

Exhibitors have names of Barbara Stanwyck, whose place in the box office scale will be greatly enhanced, it is indicated, by her recent picture under other colors, "Stella Dallas," and Herbert Marshall, the aloof-seeming gentleman actor who appears destined to be more popular than ever, through a series of well played roles. Supporting them are Glenda Farrell, a top comedienne in her own right on the Warner Brothers' lot and borrowed by RKO Radio for this occasion; Eric Blore, whose opening lines of his butler's role see him greeted as "Butch"; Donald Meek, in a small role, but nevertheless a meaty one, as the justice of the peace, and Etienne Girardot, a reliable character actor, whether it be villainy or comedy to deliver.

The story is by David Garth, who also supplied the basis for RKO Radio's "There Goes the Groom," another farce of recent production. Charles Kaufman, Paul Yawitz and Viola Brothers Shore wrote the screen play.

"Valentine Ransome" meets "Joanathan Blair" while he is making a round of the night clubs. She falls in love with him, but finds out that he is a wastrel and in danger of losing the shipping line, ownership of which has been vested in the "Blair" family for years. She buys the controlling stock in the company to force him to stop squandering his money. He admits his defeat and plans to marry a showgirl, "Carol," but "Valentine" breaks up the wedding through a plot. The second attempt at the wedding also is broken up by "Valentine." Finally, Blair makes a move which will put the company on its feet, and proceeds again to marry "Carol." "Butch," his butler, working with "Valentine" to bring "Blair" to his senses, forges a wedding certificate proving that "Blair" married "Valentine" the first time they met. Finally discovering her attempts to show her love for him, "Blair," in a scene distinguished by a rough and tumble fight and gooey cake tossing, as well as falls of the old style formula, clinches with "Valentine."

Previewed at the Alexander Theatre, Glendale, where the audience indicated heartily that it still loved slapstick, no matter what it was called nor under what guise it was hidden.—VANCE KING.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Produced by Edward Kaufman. Directed by Alfred Santell. Screenplay by Charles Kaufman, Paul Yawitz and Viola Brothers Shore. Story by David Garth. Over the Goal

(Warner-First National)

Football Heroics

The title identifies the production, a purely studio conception of college football and much of the stunt, legitimate and illegitimate that goes along with it. It holds to pattern. If anything included is different, it is the exaggerated manner in which the subject and its amplifications are treated. It is evident that an attempt to handle the topic from a more serious standpoint was made, but the audience was inclined to consider the characterizations and much of the dialogue, action and situations as more amusing than meaningful.

The production does not provide any outstanding names for marquee, lobby and newspaper publicity purposes, or which may otherwise be used to attract customers, leaving for emphasis the fact that "Over the Goal" is a topical, seasonal film.

This time the hero's sweetheart makes him quit playing football. That's not so good for the team or for college pride, but the gang who would like to see the university's colors humbled look upon it gleefully. Ensues familiar stuff. But when things look darkest the hero decides to forego personal or romantic considerations, and plunges in to win the big game.

Previewed in the Forum theatre, Los Angeles. The audience, which sees quite a bit of actual football around Los Angeles, seemed to think that the picture's sponsors did not get to see much of the real article. In fact, it was inclined to kid the film.—GUS MCCARTHY.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Bryan Foy, associate producer. Screenplay by William Jacobs and Anthony Coldway. Story by William Jacobs. Marshall Hagerman, assistant director. It is a matter of record that war stories, as a general rule, have proved to be money makers. The lot of the straight spy story has not always been so favorable. Yet it seems that "Lancer Spy," which, although only a little actual war is concerned, is much of a war theme, as the menace of war is implied, and is a 100 per cent novelly conceived and developed spy story, should be accepted with more than ordinary enthusiasm by the masses. There are incidents in the piece, in some characterizations, juxtapositions and action and accented dialogue, that may grate upon students of screen drama or those who insist that the line must be hewn to without deviation. But they are only incidents, and, inasmuch as nobody yet has succeeded in producing the perfect picture, they must be both accepted and discounted in proportion to the relationship which they bear to the film as a whole.

George Sanders plays a dual role. British Intelligence officers are amazed by the close resemblance which "Lieutenant Michael Bruce," British officer, bears to the captured German, "Von Rohbach." A daring plan is conceived. "Bruce" shall study "Von Rohbach" until no one can detect the difference. He is sent to Berlin and arrives at a time when German morale is at a low ebb, to be acclaimed a national hero.

Ensues thereupon a battle of wits, courage, deception, spying and counter spying. Interwoven, but never rising to a point where it dominates the basic premise, is a trace of romance involving the spy and "Daria," an agent of the German espionage service. A trap is laid for "Bruce" by "Hollen" and "Gruning," but the spy, who is feted everywhere, circumvents it. A second plot is hatched. This, too, fails. Meanwhile, as "Bruce" has insinuated his way into the most secret cirles to learn the plans of a great German offensive, his patron, "Von Meinhardi," dies. "Gruning" thereupon identifying himself as a French spy, it is their business to get the plans to Allied headquarters immediately. Disguising himself as "Von Meinhardi," "Bruce" escapes. The enemy plans known, "Bruce" returns to his wife and daughter and is commended by the government.

Previewed in the 20th Century-Fox studio projection room to a press audience. As is usual among such gatherings, there were differences of opinion, but the consensus was that the film should prove an above average attraction. While commending the work of Sanders, Dolores Del Rio, Peter Lorre, Sig Rumann, Joseph Schildkraut, Maurice Moscovitch and Fritz Feld as a whole, there seemed to be a belief that some of the characterizations had been overdrawn and that in certain sequences it would have been better had the action been seen rather than described.—G. The Awful Truth

Modern Comedy

It appears to be in the not altogether explainable nature of things that showmen are to receive under Columbia label at certain indefinitely stated intervals comedies of proportions and character not precisely paralleled in product from other sources. There was "It Happened One Night." Then there was "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town." Now there is "The Awful Truth." The second was not patterned after the first, nor is the third fashioned in the structural or thematic image of the second. Yet it would be a most extraordinary and illogical showman who would not manage to link the three titles together with this triumphant reassertion of Columbia's prime place in the currently overrun domain of the feature comedies.

Reaction of a by no means handpicked preview audience in Hollywood was of a kind and volume to warrant use of loud pedal and tympani in such a campaign. Comments of the press folk, professionals, and payees in attendance, coming on the echo of laughter and applause beyond the power of claque or sound crew to simulate, dealt with the two previous blue ribbon productions as standards to compare to but by no means with this year's entry. It is well within the bounds of showmanship license to let that sort of opinion leak out, even to underwrite it.

But all this is not to suggest that "The Awful Truth" requires any other picture's shoulders to stand on, either in advertising copy or as a production. It is an extraordinarily successful adaptation by Vina Delmar of a play by Arthur Richman which has its own substantial place among the footlight favorites. It stars Irene Dunne and Cary Grant in what may be set down with reasonable immunity from contradiction as their best performances to date, and it features Ralph Bellamy, Alexander Darcy and Cecil Cunningham in a cast in which Joyce Compton and Esther Dale are also to be quite emphatically noted. It is directed by Leo McCarey, and this would be a good time to start posting his name and that of associate producer Everett Riskin in the type size and prominence reserved for top ranking names in kind. Naturally it is obligatory to bill the picture as a comedy.

If the succession of feature comedies lately loosed upon the public in seeming concert by Hollywood analysts of the public mood have dulled the edge of comedy exploitation technique, probably the expedient is to label this one the best of the lot and stand by. No arguments encountered will be more important than as generative or oral publicity of definite box office negotiability.

As to scope, latitude and scale of exhibitor activity generally, it is a rather obvious suggestion that appropriations for the other box office successes be checked against the mean average ticket sales level, and the outlay for this one be stepped up proportionately.

In common with all good comedies, this picture resists synopsization. It's a story about two wealthy young married folk who get a 90-day interlocutory divorce decree while in a huff, but manage after amusing complications to invalidate it by mutual consent and cooperation, a split second before midnight of the 90th day.

It is no more properly the function of exploitation to tell the story than it is of this report. It may be pertinent, however, to indicate that the story, although lively, modern and dealing with adults and adult affairs, is as clean in this handling as some in general kind have been unclean in other handlings.

Previewed at the Pantages Theatre, Hollywood, to a response seeming to indicate beyond question that this is one of the year's outstanding productions.—W. R. W.

Texas Trail

(Paramount-Sherman)

Hopalong Cassidy

Holding to the tradition of earlier numbers in the Hopalong Cassidy Series, "Texas Trail" is outdoor action adventure entertainment, maintaining the standard of production quality, story telling technique, and acting ability previously established. The film includes all basic elements expected in such screen entertainment; the thrill and excitement are contrasted with romance, comedy and human interest.

The film introduces several novel twists which make it somewhat different from other episodes in Hopalong's experiences, as the familiar trio of William Boyd, George Hayes and Russell Hayden again function.

The locale this time is Texas, the time being during the Spanish-American War. Soldiers in Cuba need horses. Hopalong and his pals are engaged to round them up. So doing, they encounter many adventures, some of which are dangerous and others comic.

As the action maintains an even, fast pace, the trio find themselves up against a mysterious rustling gang, but the three, with the assistance of Judith Allen and young Billy King, succeed in outwitting the rustler, played by Alexander Cross in the suspense-packed and exciting finale.

Previewed at the California Theatre in Huntington Park. Patrons of this theatre, who are afforded an advance look at practically all big pictures but seldom see a Hopalong, gave the film respectful attention, appreciative of its entertainment quality and the work of Boyd, Hayden and the others in the large cast. The crowd seemed particularly interested in George Hayes and juvenile Billy King. Reaction indicated the film should satisfy in its market.—G. M.

Quadrangle

Leon Errol evokes sympathy and amusement by his efforts to extricate himself from a series of circumstances which, if his boss discovers them, will cost him his job. His surprise and distress, expressed in his not entirely inimitable manner, touch off the laughs at the proper moments. To conceal from his boss the fact that his wife is working in the office as a secretary Errol enlists the aid of a co-worker and his wife. All five principals meet for an evening business conference, and the ensuing farce situation ends with Errol finding himself in bed with the boss. Running time 20 minutes.

CHANCE GAMES' FATE IN TWO HIGH COURTS

Decisions Awaited This Month in Nebraska and Connecticut; Litigation Elsewhere

The fate of Bank Night in Nebraska and Connecticut now rests with the state's highest courts, but, while exhibitors in Nebraska are prohibited from using the game until a final decision is handed down, operators in some parts of the New England state are permitted, under an agreement with authorities, to conduct drawings pending a ruling.

The game, meanwhile, has continued to breed litigation at other points. In Milwaukee, Hugo Schranz, police inspector, issued an utlimatum to six exhibitors that they must discontinue operation of the game. At the same time, the city attorney's office indicated it was prepared to prosecute any who failed to comply with the edict.

A. I. and Bertha Latts, operators of the Royal Theatre, Ashland, Wis., are to face trial in municipal court on charges of promoting a lottery in connection with weekly chance game drawings at their house.

In the south, action against Bank Night has been instituted in New Orleans, Jacksonville and Tampa. In the Louisiana city the complaint came from Norman Maunz, pastor of the First Evangelical Church, but, despite the fact the courts have ruled chance games are lotteries, the district attorney's office has taken the stand that it will not consider any complaint unless it is signed by at least 25 "reputable citizens and voters."

The Jacksonville city council now has under consideration a bill which would prohibit all chance games on the theory that they are in violation of the state lottery laws.

The Hillsborough county grand jury struck the blow at Bank Night in Tampa by submitting a report stating:

"Bank Night is, through the congregation of crowds surrounding theatres, a menace to the public safety and an expense to the city police department and is further a form of amusement which justly should pay an extremely high license, if not prohibited. We recommend that the city and county officials take immediate steps to correct this condition."

Conviction Appealed

The test case in Connecticut was brought against Ernest Dorau, manager of the Palace, Middletown, and the superior court is expected to hand down its decision this month. Original hearing in the town court resulted in conviction on charges that Mr. Dorau had violated statutes on lotteries, club and gift enterprises. A fine of $13 was levied upon the defendant.

In Fairfield, New Haven and Litchfield counties permission has been granted to continue the games, but in Moosup, Windham county, John Hess, operator of the Moosup, was arrested when he attempted to give away several cash prizes from the funds accumulated under the former Sweepstakes system in his theatre. He has been placed under $250 bond.

Lifting of Writ Denied

Nebraska's decision also is expected to be rendered this month. W. P. Wright, attorney for the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Omaha, sought to have a temporary injunction against chance games lifted pending the outcome of the test case, but the supreme court denied his motion.

The test case is against the Beatrice, in Lincoln, and the lower court decision was handed down by Fred Messmore, who now is a supreme court judge. He held that any person who took the time to register or wait outside a theatre during a drawing was giving a consideration whether he purchased an admission ticket or not. Thus, he ruled, the state lottery law was violated.

Prosecution Dropped

Proponents of the games scored in Marion, Ohio, when Ralph E. Carhart, city solicitor, dropped further prosecution of George E. Planck, manager of the Palace, who was acquitted recently of operating a lottery in connection with Sweepstakes. Mr. Carhart acted upon a motion unanimously adopted by the city council.

Roy Heffner, Bank Night distributor in Boston, instituted suit against Harry Bloomberg and Meyer Gruber, of the B-G Film Company, charging them with infringement, unfair competition, violation of copyright, and with combination and conspiracy to injure or destroy Bank Night.

Edith Alper, Boston Office manager for Bank Night, and Hannah Brand, booker for Specialty Pictures, both Roy Heffner enterprises, resigned. Mrs. Roy Heffner took over Miss Alper's work and Louise Buckly succeeded Miss Brand.

At Estherville, Idaho, the Grand Theatre dropped one of its two weekly bank nights and at Watertown, Wis., the game was discontinued entirely.

Lists Gameless Theatres

The New Yorker started publication of a full page listing of first-run and "a selected number of neighborhood houses where patrons are not too much barassed by Bank Nights, Screeno or chinaware."

A unique action against chance games was started in South Bend by Mrs. Agrette Lecam, who charged drawings at two houses were "injurious and demoralizing" to her two children. She sought a permanent injunction against Paramount Publix and Publix Indiana Corporations.

Jack Warner Sails To Discuss British Production Plans

Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production for Warner Brothers, sailed on the Normandie Friday to spend six weeks in Paris, Budapest, Vienna and London. "My trip" Mr. Warner said, "will be in the form of a vacation, but while I am in London I will discuss British production plans with Irving Asher."

From London Sam Morris, foreign sales executive, said the decision on major production in England was up to Jack Warner, as part of the general production policy of the company. It was an entirely separate problem from production at the Warner-First National studio at Teddington, which came into the foreign field under his control, he added.

Selznick to Talk With 'Everybody' On Distribution

David O. Selznick, producer, arrived in New York from the Coast this week and promptly checked all reports on his future distribution plans by announcing that he has "no idea what's going to happen." He added "I have a few definite things in mind and I will talk to everybody."

Among those with whom he will confer are George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager of United Artists, and John Hay Whitney, chairman of the Selznick International Board. Mr. Selznick's agreement with United Artists will end this winter with the release through UA of four pictures, two of which, "Tom Sawyer" and "Nothing Sacred," have been completed.

"I will get straightened out before I return to the coast in a month," Mr. Selznick said, but he declined to say whether the "everybody" with whom he will confer includes Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Another conference affecting United Artists is scheduled to be held on the coast within the near future when Alexander Korda arrives from England with David Rose, vice president and financial adviser of Samuel Goldwyn, Inc. They will confer with Samuel Goldwyn on the consummation of a transaction whereby Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Korda will purchase the interest of Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford in United Artists for $6,000,000.

Mr. Selznick on his trip to New York was accompanied by George Cukor, who will direct "Gone With the Wind," Myron Selznick and Bobbie Keon, production secretary of Selznick International.

In addition to conferring on distribution plans, the producer and Mr. Cukor will talk with Sidney Howard, playwright and writer, on a second draft for "Gone With the Wind."

Mr. Selznick also announced that he and Mr. Cukor will continue their search for a player to take the role of Scarlett O'Hara and, at the same time, denied that Paulette Goddard had been cast for the part.

At Philadelphia Tourney

New York was well represented at the Variety Club of Philadelphia-Philadelphia Exhibitor golf tournament at the Whitemarsh Country Club, Friday. They included: Wally Howes, Trans-Lux; Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; H. J. Hovey and E. M. Hartley, RCA Manufacturing Company; T. J. Sullivan and Ray Gallagher of Quigley Publications; Ed Finney, Grand National; Ben Grimm, RKO; Harold Rodner, Warners; Pete Sheridan, Electrical Research Products, Inc. A group of Washingtonians also were among the 100 golfers.

Lew Wertheimer has been named executive assistant to Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox.

IN THE CUTTING ROOM

A Damsel in Distress

(RKO Radio)

Comedy Romance

Surveying this forthcoming production from the viewpoint of latent exploitation contents discloses much that is valuable and of interest. The title is meaningful. It is a terse synopsis. A girl—she happens to be a little British miss (the entire locale is England)—must get married. There are several candidates for her hand. None appeals to her. She resents efforts to have her declare for any one. A dashing singing-dancing American resolves her predicament.

All the action of the story follows a comedy premise.

The picture is Fred Astaire's first solo starring appearance. First with Joan Crawford and later with Ginger Rogers, Astaire heretofore has shared star billing. George Burns and Gracie Allen also will be in the show as friends and allies of Astaire. Astaire will be given ample opportunity to sing and dance as well as make love in the American way, which is sometimes difficult for Britishers to comprehend, while Burns and Allen naturally will be at the bottom of all comedy contrast.

Another bit of casting to be noted in the matter of new names is the fact that Joan Fontaine, whom RKO Radio considers the cream of its new crop of personalities, is the girl in the case. Further name value is represented by Constance Collier, Ray Noble, Montagu Love and Reginald Gardiner.

That P. G. Wodehouse is the author of the story completely establishes its comedy quality. That Pandro S. Berman is producing is evidence that the story will be given the benefit of quality backgrounds and settings. Such pictures as "Quality Street," "Annie Oakley," "Swing Time" and several Wheeler and Woolsey films attest George Stevens' ability as a director.

Release date: Approximately November 25, 1937.

Murder in Greenwich Village

(Columbia)

Murder Mystery

Inasmuch as it may be expected that the story trend of this production will follow the formula of melodramatic mystery through which is woven a thread of desired and repulsed romance, possible entertainment and commercial values depend to a great extent upon how differently the theme is expounded, quality of production technique and the names of the featured and support players. Additionally there are the past credits of those responsible for the production from the point of view of writing and directing.

A poor young man, a rich girl and a conniving business man are the ones principally involved. There's a murder. Suspicion points to the girl. The young man shields her. She, in turn, endeavors to assist him. Naturally, love, sometimes suspected, sometimes not, is born. The romance complicates the fundamental melodrama. But, just as always, the conniving business man is revealed as the culprit, and as the law of revenge takes precedence, for the moment, over the established code, for him the wages of sin is death.

Robert Shannon, recently credited with participation in "Racketeers in Exile" and "Moonlight Murder," wrote the original story. Michael L. Simmons, similarly a specialist in melodramatic material, did the screen play. Among Director Albert S. Rogell's many earlier credits are "Grand Jury" and Roaming Lady."

Richard Arlen and Fay Wray are listed as the principal performers and Leon Ames is the heavy. The cast also will present Raymond Walburn, Wyn Cahoon, Scott Colton, Thurston Hall, Marc Lawrence, Gene Morgan, George McKay and Barry Macollum.

Release date: November 4, 1937.

She Married an Artist

(Columbia)

Comedy Romance

The last two pictures in which John Boles has appeared, "Stella Dallas" and the comedy, "Fight for Your Lady," seem to have given him a new interest in things cinematic. Grace Bradley is favorably known to a great many theatre-goers. So are Helen Westley, Alexander D'Arcy and Franklin Pangborn. Jacqueline Wells is not exactly a novice. Albert Van Dekker and Marek Windheim are unfamiliar names. But listed before all others in the cast of characters is Hollywood's newest foreign importation, Luli Deste, whom Columbia caught more or less on the rebound from B. P. Schulberg.

The story chosen for her American debut is a comedy romance. It's about an old love that flames and results in marriage, but there are complications, all innocent yet contriving to add to the dramatic and comedy character of the premise. All ends well when the sparks of jealousy and mistrust are quenched.

As two or three in the cast are comparatively unknown, so also is the story's author, Avery Strakosch. None of our many files reveals him as having done anything previously in which Hollywood took an interest. On the other hand, the collaborators on the screen play, Gladys Lehman and Delmer Daves, are known quantities. Miss Lehman's long list of credits includes "Slave Ship," "Reunion," "Poor Little Rich Girl" and "A Message to Garcia." Daves was long associated with Warner Brothers. Recently the director, Marion Gering, has done "Thunder in the City," "Lady of Secrets," "Rose of the Rancho" and "Rumba."

Release date: Late November, 1937.

A Prescription for Romance

(Universal)

Comedy, Mystery, Romance

Such pictures as "Double Wedding," "Fight for Your Lady" and "The Perfect Specimen," revealing producers' belief that the theatre-going public is in a mood for comedy entertainment, Universal's contribution to the cycle of the moment has the earmarks of becoming a respectable character, situation, dialogue and action comedy.

For a primary motivation, in story, the mistaken identity premise is adapted. A crook flees America to Hungary. The pursuing detective, mistaken for him, is arrested. A rascally native contributes to the detective's embarrassment. A girl who wants to repay a debt to the embezzler further complicates the situation. But with the coming of romance, the story becomes a complicated chase, in which the various participants encounter many laughable experiences, with all ending happily for everyone but the crook.

Besides the character of the story and the production technique there is the marque value of the small cast featured. Probably the most important name is Mischa Auer. He is the scamp who succeeds in mixing up everything. Mr. Auer's adaptability to that type of role is recognized, "It's All Yours" having been the latest demonstration. The detective will be Kent Taylor, the girl Wendy Barrie, the scoundrel Henry Hunter, and the girl who isn't going to let him get away with anything is Dorothea Kent. Frank Jenks and William Lundigan also will have opportunities to contribute to the fun.

The story is an original by John Reinhardt and Robert Neville. James Mulhauser, Robert Shannon and Albert R. Perkins combined to develop the screen play. S. Sylvan Simon is the director.

Release date: November 4, 1937.

Danger Patrol

(RKO Radio)

Romance and Peril

Despite the possibility of interpreting it as such, this is not a prison, prison farm or road gang story. Actually it is romance in the shadow of death. The general locales are a Texas oil field, an explosives plant, an airport and aboard a plane bound for Mexico. Probably for the first time in screen history, the hazardous careers of men who make and handle nitro-glycerin are used as a story background.

Regardless of thematic quality and production technique, the primary showmanship potentialities of this forthcoming production are found in the acting, writing, producing and directing credits.

"Danger Patrol" is melodrama similar to "Without Orders" and "Flight from Glory." The fact that many producers have used "Flight from Glory" as a text book to be studied by writers, producers and directors, is significant of the regard which Hollywood has for that film.

This picture will be directed by Lew Landers, who was the director of the others mentioned. Although John Beal, currently in a comedy role in "Double Wedding," is starred, many players who were in both the pictures also will be seen in "Danger Patrol." Included are Sally Eilers, Solly Ward, who won much praise for his work in "Flight from Glory," Vinton Haworth and Paul Guilfoyle. Others are Harry Carey, now in "Annapolis Salute," Frank M. Thomas, Richard Lane, Ed Gargan, Lee Patrick, Walter Miller, Crawford Weaver and George Shelley.

Oddly, the melodramatic story was written by two women, Helen Vrelland and Hilda Vincent. The screen play was developed by two specialists in suspenseful material, Sy Bartlett, credited with participation in preparation of "Boulder Dam," "The Murder of Dr. Har-

Williams Again Heads Tri-State; 3 Set Meetings

Reelection of R. X. Williams, Jr., as president, and criticism of Hollywood's "indiscriminate" intermingling of whites and Negroes in motion pictures highlighted the annual convention this week of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee, held at the Chisca Hotel in Memphis.

Annual state exhibitor conventions were set this week by Allied States of Michigan, for October 12th and 13th, at the Hotel Statler in Detroit; by Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, for October 26th, at the Variety Club headquarters in Indianapolis, and by the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, for December 7th and 8th at Columbus, Ohio.

An October 12th meeting scheduled by the Independent Exhibitors, Inc., of Boston, will be held instead on October 19th.

Richey Successor Is Up

Appointment of a general manager to succeed H. M. Richey, who recently resigned to become director of public relations for Co-Operative Theatres of Michigan, will be among the most important matters discussed at the Allied of Michigan meeting.

Ray Branch, president of Allied four times and now chairman of its state affairs committee, issued a pre-convention statement in which he said:

"Allied of Michigan is far from being a passing organization, but rather than that it is much strengthened from the standpoint of its state personnel. I firmly believe by the time we hold our annual meeting we will have a greater number of members than we ever had before."

The discussion on the intermingling of races in films was started by W. H. Baker, Macon, Mississippi, vice-president of Tri-State. Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, promised to present the question to producers in the near future. Several members of the organization declared they were prepared to cancel films in which intermingling was shown.

Mr. Kuykendall, in an address to the convention, warned the exhibitors that should a special session of Congress be held this Fall it would probably consider measures which would affect the motion picture industry.

Speakers included O. C. Lam, Rome, Georgia, and L. C. Griffith, Oklahoma City, who are both MPTOA board members.

Y. D. Moore, McKenzie, Tennessee, was chosen secretary and treasurer. Others elected were W. H. Baker, J. F. Norman and W. F. Ruffin, vice-presidents, respectfully, of Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee; M. A. Lightman, chairman of the board of directors.

Arkansas directors: Henry Sanders, Little Rock; Cecil Cupp, Arkadelphia; L. F. Haven, Forrest City; W. L. Landers, Batesville; M. S. McCord, North Little Rock; Ray Morrow, Malvern and Sidney Wharton, Warren.

Mississippi directors: W. S. Tyson, Water Valley; W. A. Rush, Houston, and H. J. Williams, Grenada.

Tennessee directors: E. L. Drake, Jackson; Tom Ballas, Memphis, and Colonel Cecil Vogel, Memphis.

The recently organized Motion Picture Exhibitors Association at Fort Wayne, Indiana, has elected Harvey G. Cocks, of the Quimby Theatres, president; George Heliotes, vice-president, and A. H. Borkenstein, secretary-treasurer. On the board of directors are Pete Mallars, chairman, John Micu and the three officers.

College Follies of 1938

Topical Comedy

The production, to be sure, will have a story, but, in line with the present trend of picture making, it is quite likely that, as it slides from one comedy situation to another, the primary motivation will be occasionally ignored in the desire to create another laugh.

The story is about a motion picture college star who wins football games the way a motion picture football star does when he actually goes to college.

Albert S. Rogell is directing. Corey Ford thought up the original story, and comedy specialists Eugene Solow, Phillip Rapp and Richard Wormser combined to develop it into screen play form. Music and lyrics are credited to eight or nine composers and writers.

Some idea of what to expect of the film may be gained from an examination of the cast, among them Walter Connolly, Jimmy Durante, Raymond Walburn, The Three Stooges, Joan Perry, Charles Starrett, Gertrude Niesen, Virginia Dale, Hal LeRoy, Ernest Truex, Broderick Crawford, Chaz Chase, Romo Vincnet, Gene Morgan, Thurston Hall, Arthur Hoyt, Minerva Urecal, Charles Halton, Jeni LeGon and the Four Blackbirds and Johnny Green and his orchestra.

Al Rogell says the only thing he is trying to do is make the picture funny. A few looks at the film in work creates an impression that it should be funny.

Release date: Mid-November, 1937.

Having Wonderful Time

(RKO Radio)

Summer Camp Romance

This will be the picturization of a stage play of the same title now running in New York. It was adapted by Arthur Kober, author of the original play. In theme and treatment it is the story of a flirtation at a summer camp and the romance that ensues.

The plot is simple, human interest, comedy romance. As such, it claims a certain showmanship value and that value is accentuated when the casting is considered. The girl, Ginger Rogers, showed in "Stage Door" that she needs neither dancing shoes nor a dancing partner to claim a place in the screen sun. The boy is Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., returning to RKO-Radio for the first time since he was seen in "Morning Glory" with Katharine Hepburn. Presently he is in "The Prisoner of Zenda." The principal supporting roles are occupied by Peggy Conklin, last seen in "The Devis Is a Sissy," and a newcomer, Richard Skelton, vaudeville and radio celebrity. Among the many character players to be seen are Lucille Ball, Eve Arden, who was in "Stage Door," Donald Meek, Grady Sutton, Etienne Girardot, Harlan Briggs, whose presence indicates much comedy. Inez Courtney, Dean Jaggar, Juanita Quigley, Ann Miller, the star of "New Faces of 1937," Dorothy Moore and Margaret Seddon of "pixillated" renown. Pandro S. Berman, maker of "Stage Door" and many other top films, is producing, and Alfred Santell, who did "Breakfast for Two," "Winterset" and "Internes Can't Take Money," is directing.

Release date: December 16, 1937.

Four Communities Rule in Favor of Sunday Pictures

Theatre operators this week won the right to exhibit motion pictures on Sundays in four of eight localities where the question has been presented to legislative bodies. In three communities, moves to legalize showings were defeated while in the remaining city the matter is still pending.

A list of the cities and towns with a summary of the action taken in each one follows:

CAMBRIDGE, OHIO—Vigorously opposed by church and religious groups, an ordinance was tabled by the city council at its final reading. It had been passed by a four to three vote at two previous readings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO—A fight to force the closing of theatres along with other places of business on Sundays is threatened by the Retail Confectioners' Association.

GLASSBORO, N. J.—Legalization of Sunday motion pictures was defeated at a referendum.

GOLDSBORO, N. C.—The Board of Aldermen has ruled against the showing of pictures on Sundays.

HARTFORD—Theatres, which formerly opened at 5 P. M. on Sundays, will be permitted to open at 2 P. M. under a new regulation. The bill also permits vaudeville on Sundays.

HOGANSVILLE, GA. — Six residents of Hogansville have been denied an injunction against the operation of theatres on Sundays.

SEATTLE—B. Gray Warner, prosecuting attorney of King County, has refused to take action on the attempt by beer parlor operators to force theatres to close on Sundays.

WILLIMANTIC, CONN.—An ordinance similar to the one adopted in Hartford has been approved by the board of aldermen.

Monogram To Launch Eddie Golden Drive

A sales drive, to be known as the Eddie Golden Drive, will soon get under way at Monogram, with money prizes totaling $9,000 being awarded to quota filling exchanges. Monogram will donate $4,500 with each office contributing specified proportionate amounts whose total will also be $4,500. Offices which reach their quota will receive an equivalent to the sum they contributed to the pool. Branches reaching their quota will receive, in addition, varying amounts of the remaining funds, their awards being based on the position the branch holds at the end of the drive in respect to its quota.

John L. Franconi and Ed Blumenthal have acquired a half interest in the Monogram franchise for the Texas territory to be served out of Dallas.

Ambassador Pictures has appointed Charles Reed Jones as publicity and advertising head in the east. Maurice Conn, president, is in New York and plans to return to the Coast in two weeks.

IN THE COURTS

Paramount Suit Awaiting Court

The petition of the Paramount trustee for leave to settle for $2,150,000 cash the 1934 recovery action against former officers and directors of the company has been completed and is expected to be filed with Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe in New York the latter part of this week.

The petition was prepared by Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, trustee's attorneys, and is now being studied by attorneys for the numerous defendants in the action. Judge Coxe will set a date for a hearing on the petition and, if approval is granted thereafter, the trustee's suit, which has been taken off the New York Supreme court calendar, will be formally withdrawn.

Trust Case Denial Filed by Electrics

American Telephone and Telegraph, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc., filed joint denials in the United States District court in New York this week in answer to the $6,000,000 anti-trust suit of Stanley K. Oldden, as assignee of the Pacent Electric Company.

The plaintiff alleges that the violations involve the manufacture of sound film apparatus and parts. The defendants assert that more than six years have elapsed since the alleged act and claim that the statute of limitations bars the present action. Dismissal of the suit with costs is asked.

Bartholomew Contract Valid, California Court Rules

Upholding the validity of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's contract with Freddie Bartholomew, Judge Emmett Wilson of the Superior court of California, granted a temporary injunction restraining Bartholomew from working for any other studio. The writ is effective until trial of the studio's demand for a permanent injunction.

Colonel William Neblett, attorney for the child actor, announced that Freddie has been offered back to MGM at his former salary of $1,100 and that he already has returned to work, according to a United Press dispatch. However, the press service reported, at the studio it was said that if the actor has returned to work "he must be sleeping under a sound stage."

Hart Suit Shifted To Federal Court

The suit of William S. Hart and Mary Hart against United Artists for $185,000 which was started in the New York Supreme court has been shifted to the United States District court.

Mr. Hart's suit is based upon an alleged wrongful block booking by United Artists of his 1925 picture, "Tumbleweeds," with a dog picture "Wild Justice." Mr. Hart's picture is said to have cost $302,000 to produce and grossed $300,000, while "Wild Justice" cost $15,000 and grossed $100,000.

$2,808,505 Profit By GB in Year

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Gaumont British made a net profit of £561,707 ($2,808,505) from its theatres and investments last year, according to the company's annual report which was issued this week. The financial statement shows the profit was increased by a balance brought forward of £147,021 ($735,105) and the transfer from reserve of £435,278 ($2,176,390), making a total of £1,144,001 ($5,720,005) available. The annual meeting will be held October 15th.

Deductions include provision for production losses amounting to £766,809 ($3,834,045), which are reduced by £200,000 ($1,000,000) from a special reserve created last year; income tax, debenture sinking fund and interest reserve for amortization and depreciation plus the preference dividend paid last March, for a grand total of £1,112,047 ($5,560,235), making a net balance of £31,953 ($159,765), carried forward. The balance compares with £196,756 ($983,580) last year.

No dividend on the ordinary shares is provided for.

BOOK REVIEWS

MOVIE MERRY-GO-ROUND, by John Paddy Carstairs. London: Newnes. 240 pp. Price 7s, six-pence.

The title sets the tempo and the direction. Ostensibly intended to give motion picture fans who can read English (not necessarily the King's) some slight acquaintance with the technical mysteries of the medium which brings them their beloved screen personalities, this helter-skelter dissertation upon matters "filmic" (to use an adjective much favored by the author) tells at least something about every department of motion picture fabrication.

The author, according to a biographical note, has been a sort of jack-of-all-trades around studios both in his native England and in Hollywood, but he turns some affairs over to others whom he judges more expert; as, for example, costume designing to MGM's Adrian, art direction to Paramount's Hans Dreier, animated cartoons to Walt Disney, sound recording to Douglas Shearer.

Additionally from other minds than the author's are chapters in which Jessie Matthews tells how it feels to be a star, and Joan Crawford describes how a star lives. Also, for some reason, there is an elaborately statistical discussion of the "Decline of the German Film Trade," written by Ivor Montagu. And England's Madeleine Carroll, now of Hollywood, contributes a Foreword.

Incidentally, in referring to actual persons of the studios, which he does a great deal, Mr. Carstairs likes to add a word or two in friendly criticism, and in this some studio folk might have a curious interest. The criticism is never profound, however, and is almost always favorable.—G. S.

ASKS $125,000 BOTTOM COST FOR BRITISH FILM

Lord Strabolgi Says He Opposes Discrimination but Would Aid Home Studios

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Lord Strabolgi, mouthpiece in the House of Lords of the policy of the British Films Advancement Council, gave an indication of the sort of Films Act which that organization would welcome when he was guest of honor at the London Cinema Luncheon Club's monthly gathering, at the Cafe Royal.

Emphasizing that he was speaking for himself alone, Lord Strabolgi nevertheless underlined the essential policy of the Council in asking for:

A minimum cost of £25,000 ($125,000) for Quota films, instead of the £15,000 suggested in the White Paper, in which the Government's provisional plans were stated.

Provision for "real" reciprocity with the motion picture industry in the United States.

The Advancement Council is generally understood to champion the policy, first put forward by Isidore Ostrer of Gaumont-British, of compelling U. S. companies to spend, on the purchase of British films for American distribution, a definite percentage of their receipts in the British market.

Opposes Discrimination

Lord Strabolgi did not definitely identify himself with this policy, saying generally that he and his friends did not want discrimination against American films, but that they did want a flourishing British production industry. He referred to the fact that an Anglo-American Trade Treaty was being negotiated, and expressed the hope that it might mean the end of "American isolationism." He also repeated the statement, frequently made by Mr. Ostrer in advocating his form of reciprocity, that the U. S. film companies draw nine to ten million pounds sterling yearly from England.

That the film industry was "the most international of all industries" also was emphasized by the speaker, who said, however, that he saw no signs of conscious propaganda in American pictures. "The fact that the industry is located in Hollywood does not make it American," he said, in urging the necessity of obtaining the same propaganda for things British as was secured for America and American goods by the worldwide distribution of American films.

Discussing the White Paper, Lord Strabolgi commented "with confidence" that the Shorts Quota would be found to be increased when the draft of the actual Films Bill was published.

He also said that, as a departmental measure, the bill would be liable to other alterations as a result of the debates on the various stages of its progress through the House of Commons and House of Lords.

This was particularly likely to happen, he suggested, in grand committee of the House of Commons, which would reflect on a smaller scale the different political views of the whole House.

That the Government had not yet decided whether to introduce the Bill in the House of Lords or the House of Commons first was a disclosure made by Lord Strabolgi. Whatever course was taken, it would be brought in early in November and would rank as one of the major measures of the new session, he added.

His chief criticisms of the Board of Trade proposals in the White Paper were:

The board had "fallen between two stools" in its decision for a minimum cost policy mitigated by a viewing clause.

An out-and-out viewing policy was impracticable. It would place on the shoulders of the viewing panel a "terrible responsibility" and ask them to perform a task practically impossible in view of the wide variations of public taste that are found in different areas and at different times.

The minimum cost of £15,000 was not high enough and should become £25,000.

There should be provision for "real" reciprocity, presumably on "Ostrer lines."

There was no discussion on Lord Strabogli's speech, which indicated a view obviously hostile to the official advocacy by the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association of a viewing test, but J. F. X. Prendergast, the chairman, commented that reciprocity so far had been "a lovely dream," and expressed the hope that if Lord Strabogli and his friends succeeded in bringing it about it would not be "over the bodies of exhibitors."

Mr. Prendergast also made a plea for some attempt to restore the industry to "the commercial basis on which it was before the first Films Act."

A number of Members of Parliament were present, as guests of exhibitors.

Loudon Attacks Plan

Norman Loudon, chairman and managing director of Sound City, Ltd., attacked various proposals in the White Paper announcement of Government Films Act plans, in his speech for the annual meeting of his company.

An advance copy of the speech revealed Mr. Loudon as objecting to the reciprocity plan on the ground that it should apply not only to £3 a foot film but to producers working on economical and efficient lines. He also objected to the minimum cost clause and to the suggestion that it be mitigated by the right of submitting films costing under £15,000 to a special viewing test.

In practice this will mean, he said, that no producer will be able to specialize in making films of entertainment value for £5,000, as such subjects could obtain quota value only if they satisfy "the whim of a panel of viewers."

Mr. Loudon also objected to the reduction of the exhibitor's quota to a figure (15 per cent) lower than the distributor's (20 per cent).

This expression of opinion is significant as undoubtedly representing, in general terms, the policy of all independent producing interests. It emphasizes the fact that trade opinion is by no means divided, in regard to the new Films Bill, on the lines of division of the various sections of the industry. On most of his points Mr. Loudon is closer to the CEA than to the Film Group, representing producers.

Paramount's British Unit

The chief problem in Paramount's plan to produce a number of pictures in London for world release is to create effective organization of the unit in England, according to Mr. Adolph Zukor, president, who is visiting the chief studios and conferring with Mr. J. C. Graham and other Paramount executives.

Mr. Zukor said that Paramount planned to use English backgrounds and English material.

"Paramount's department for British production must be as efficient as Hollywood, to make pictures for world release, and that will take time," he said.

"Sunshine put Hollywood on the map, but sunshine is not needed these days, even for color. You can make films as easily, in a technical sense, in London as in Hollywood. What is missing is the centralized and highly organized industry background. We know how to make pictures in Hollywood with international appeal. How to make them in London is the problem we have to solve."

Color, said Mr. Zukor, must become less expensive before it could become universal. At present it costs too much and slowed up production, he added. The question the patron asked about any picture, he said, was not whether it was in color or in black and white, but if it told an interesting story.

England, he said, was full of talent and full of stories. The problem was to use them in a form acceptable in America. A major British picture was of no use unless it was usable in the States.

He declined to discuss at any length the pictures, for the British market only, which Paramount previously has made to meet Quota.

"All I know is that they are no good," he said.

Mr. Zukor plans to sail on the Normandie, Saturday, for New York.

"Prestige Pictures"

The socalled "prestige pictures" now are being made in a form acceptable to the public, said Sam E. Morris, Warner vice-president in charge of foreign sales. Mr. Morris, here in connection with the taking over of Daly's theatre, dispelled rumors that the company planned theatre acquisition on a large scale, and added

NORWAY'S TRIBUTE TO SONJA HENIE

The Norwegian miss, Sonja Henie, was home on vacation for two months. [Miss Henie arrived in New York last Thursday on her return to Hollywood.—Ed.]

During her stay she lived quietly and peacefully in her father's nice bungalow near Oslo. Her admirers in Oslo paid homage to her on her arrival, but since then she was seen only with her mother and brother shopping and little attention was paid to her.

On Monday, September 11th, however, the municipal cinemas of Oslo gave a special performance in their biggest cinema, Colosseum, and the 2,100 seats were taken a long time in advance. Outside the cinema thousands were standing to get a glimpse of her when entering and leaving the Colosseum, in spite of heavy rain.

Those who had been so lucky as to get a seat rose and clapped when she appeared in the entrance. When they were calm again, Sonja's latest film, "Thin Ice," was shown on the screen. The first time she was seen in the film the public started applauding, and each time she made marvelous figures on the ice or had a funny scene, rounds of applause nearly destroyed the ears of Miss Henie.

She was given lots of flowers and after the show the public cheered, whistled and stamped their feet to show Miss Henie their enthusiasm for her work on the screen.—Leif—Eric Bech, Bogstadon, 53 A, Oslo 30, Norway.

that settlement of the question of major production by Warner Brothers in England awaits the arrival of Jack Warner, now on his way to London. But if Mr. Morris was noncommittal on theatre and British production matters, he was definite, emphatic, on prestige pictures and conclusions drawn from the Warners' experiences in making them, such as "Midsummer Night's Dream," "The Green Pastures," "Pasteur" and "The Life of Emile Zola."

"We are satisfied," he said. "We feel that the industry owes the public a certain number of pictures of that type. We have made mistakes. We thought we were doing the right thing in making 'Midsummer Night's Dream.' We thought we had a great idea and we spent a year on research before we made it into a picture. We didn't make a profit, but we didn't lose anything on it. It wasn't accepted, and that's that. I have nothing to say on the point whether Shakespeare was responsible.

"Now with 'Pasteur' and 'The Life of Emile Zola' you have prestige pictures the public will accept. They are out of the ordinary films, worthy of the two years we put in on preliminary work, in England and France, for 'Zola' for instance.

"'The Green Pastures' did terrific business in U. S. and it was a big winner also in some foreign territories, especially in Scandinavia, South America, Poland and Austria. We are satisfied with our prestige pictures, taking them as a whole."

Pointing out that Warners' had scheduled "The Adventures of Robin Hood," "Gold Is Where You Find It" and "Valley of the Giants" for all-color production, Mr. Morris said they proposed to use color where it would make the most of the subject.

"There is nothing new to us in the color problem," he said. "We made 12 features in color before any other producer made one."

Federation Bans "Doubling"

A ballot of members of the Variety Artistes Federation on the question of "doubling" or "turn working" in provincial towns has resulted in a vote of 943 against the practice and only 49 in favor.

"Doubling" is the practice of an act playing two or more theatres in the same area on the same date. Federation rules prohibit it out of London. The ballot was taken as part of the settlement of a dispute between the Federation and Union Cinemas, Ltd. Union claimed that variety was uneconomic unless doubling was permitted and, in a statement which went out with the voting papers, said that condonation of the practice by the VAF might make it possible for acts to be played in the whole of the 200 odd theatres in the Union circuit, instead of in only 20.

The result of the ballot will definitely discourage any tendency among exhibitors in general to introduce stage acts. It is unlikely to influence the policy of the big theatres, chiefly circuit houses, which already specialize in stage acts, and can afford to pay for them on a solus basis.

Threaten Theatre Strike

A recent recommendation by the Council of the CEA to branches that they should recognize labor unions is likely to be tested by action on the part of the National Association of Theatrical Employees. The executive of the union has resolutions from eight branches in Lancashire requesting strike action against various circuit and independent theatres there. The Transport and General Workers Union also is in support.

A dispute between Union Cinemas, Ltd., and Association members is in negotiation, the Ministry of Labor intervening, after a strike threat, on the basis of recognition of the union by the theatre company.

The Scottish CEA is having a general conference with labor unions, and it seems likely that branches in general will adopt the Council suggestion.

Oppose Alien "Infiltration"

The Trade Union Congress, meeting at Norwich, adopted the resolutions, put forward by the National Association of Theatrical and Kinematograph Employees, in favor of legislation establishing efficient British film production as a "national necessity," safeguarding British employees, and preventing "alien disparagement and infiltration" of British cultural standards. The Association of Cine Technicians is associated with the NATKE.

That half the cotton exports of England were needed to pay for imported films was a statement made by T. O'Brien, NATKE secretary, who also said that 80 per cent of the world trade in films was controlled by American companies. He urged the necessity of preventing "American domination" of the British production industry.

The White Paper, forecasting the Government's plan for the new Films Act, was declared inadequate by Mr. O'Brien and by G. Elvin, for the technicians.

There was opposition to the resolution, however. Secretary Bradfield of the Shop Assistants' Union praised American films which had attacked British imperialism and revolutionary Russian films.

MGM BRITISH FILMS ON HOLLYWOOD PLAN

Other Arrivals Include Mayer with Plans for Quality Production in English Studios

The motion picture industry was well represented last Thursday when the Normandie nosed its way into its New York dock with a total of 1,485 sleepy passengers, most of them having been aroused at 5 A. M. for the 7 o'clock landing.

A host of delegates from large and small companies was on hand to greet the passengers. They included Louis B. Mayer, vice-president, in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Howard Strickling, head of studio publicity for MGM; Jack Buchanan, head of Jack Buchanan Productions, who is to appear in the Shubert stage show, "Between the Devil"; Danielle Darrieux, French actress who has been signed by Universal; Fernand Gravet, Warner Brothers star; Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., who will appear in RKO's screen version of "Having a Wonderful Time"; Sonja Henie, Twentieth Century-Fox star; Ramon Novarro, who is to make another picture for Republic, and Hedy Kiesler, who, wearing only a wave, appeared in an underwater scene in the Czechoslovak film, "Ecstasy," a few years ago, and now has been signed by MGM. (Pictures in the pictorial section.)

Mr. Mayer signed Miss Kiesler, who has taken the professional name, Hedy Lamarr, and 14-year-old Grisha Goluboff, violin prodigy, while on board the Normandie. During his visit to England and the Continent he had signed a director and two other players. The director is Reinhold Schunzel and the actors Lionel Royce and Greer Garson.

Mr. Mayer declined to discuss the labor situation on the Coast and offered no comments on formation of the new Italian producing company formed independently by Hal Roach and Mussolini's son, Vittorio.

No Set Budgets in England

However, he talked freely of MGM's British production plans and policies. Quality pictures will be the aim, he said.

"There will be no set production budgets," he continued. "That's the way we do it on the Coast and the same policy will prevail in England. Quality is first, cost is second."

The number of pictures to be produced will depend entirely upon how many quality productions can be made, he said, adding that the number may be anywhere from one to 50. "We'll make as many productions as we can make worthwhile pictures," he said.

Mr. Mayer, before leaving for the Coast, also scotched reports that his company was planning to purchase part of Gaumont British.

While indicating he would be pleased to have David O. Selznick, United Artists producer, associated with MGM, Mr. Mayer offered no definite word as to whether a contract was being considered. He said he understood Mr. Selznick was to visit New York this week to confer with United Artists executives and that there was no way of determining what might take place after that.

Even though other companies may launch into a program of color pictures, MGM will continue to produce in black and white, according to Mr. Mayer. He said he does not believe color can be termed practicable until it is definitely proven to increase revenue on its own. Instead of investing in color, Mr. Mayer said, MGM will put the money into stars and stories.

Among those who greeted Mr. Mayer, Mr. Strickling and Benny Thau, MGM production executive, were Al Lichtman, who is to leave for England in two weeks to further MGM's production plans, and Howard Dietz, Al Altman, Florence Browning, Harry Bernstein, Ernest Morrel, Mel Heyman and Milton Weiss.

The welcoming party for Miss Darrieux, who arrived with her husband, Henry De Coin, included J. Cheever Cowdin, president of Universal's board of directors; Charles R. Rogers, vice-president; Charles Ford, managing director of Universal's newsreel; Marc Lachman, head of studio publicity; Paul Gulick, publicity director.

Miss Darrieux explained that she had studied English for three months in preparation for appearing in American pictures. She is to appear in "The Rage of Paris." On Friday, the French actress was guest of honor at a cocktail party in the Hotel Pierre. More than 300 persons attended. Miss Darrieux' most recent picture was "Mayerling," in which she had the feminine lead opposite Charles Boyer. Miss Darrieux left for the Coast Tuesday.

Gravet Makes French Film

Mr. Gravet, who was accompanied by his wife, had just completed a role in "The Lie of Nini Patrona" for Solar Films in France. After four days in New York, he left for Hollywood to appear in "Food for Scandal" with Carole Lombard.

Mr. Fairbanks said he is not contemplating making any more pictures for Criterion Pictures, although, he added, the company continues active.

Mr. Novarro had discussed the possibility of making a picture in France, but said he had not decided whether to accept the French offer.

Miss Henie briefly reported she had done no skating during her vacation in Norway.

Miss Kiesler, or Miss Lamarr, greeted questions with the declaration:

"I have nothing to say. I have nothing to say about 'Ecstasy.'"

GB Sales Meeting Held in Chicago

The second regional sales meeting of GB Pictures was held in the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, on Saturday with Clinton M. White, assistant to Arthur Lee, presiding. Plans for the new season were discussed and two pictures, "Dr. Syn" and "Non-Stop New York," were screened.

Others attending the meeting included Arthur Greenblatt, eastern division manager, A. H. Fischer and Max Mazur, Chicago; Harlan Starr, Detroit; Herman Booth, Cincinnati; Fred Wagoner, Indianapolis; Al Kent, St. Louis; Bill Marshall, Milwaukee; Fred Abelson, Minneapolis; Douglas Desch, Kansas City, and Bob Selig, Denver.

Irving Gumberg has returned to the managership of the GB exchange in New York. For several months Mr. Greenblatt doubled in the exchange and home office.

'Air Cleared', Says Universal's Rogers

Following the many and varied rumors heard the past few weeks on Broadway and Hollywood Boulevard, concerning management, finances, home office staff changes and whatnot, Charles R. Rogers, executive vice-president of Universal Pictures in charge of production, returned to the Universal City studios last Friday with the parting assertion that home office discussions "have cleared the air of all the misunderstandings that have hitherto existed." The meetings at Universal's headquarters in Radio City were attended by R. H. Cochrane, president; J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board, and by Mr. Rogers.

A few hours previous to the release of Mr. Rogers' statement through the regular publicity channels of Universal, word came from the home office, through less formal sources, that numerous additional "personal changes" had taken place, in a reputed "wave of economy" in operations.

The number of workers let out was reported as approximating 150, but Mr. Cowdin tossed that figure aside with the wave of an arm and a "hooey."

Regardless, word was heard of the resignations of Sam Sedran, Universal purchasing agent for 22 years; J. Albert Hirsch, advertising manager, succeeded by Lew Pollock, who had served Mr. Hirsch as assistant; and George Cochrane, in charge of film tests in the east, among others. Additionally, some 144 workers in the domestic exchange system and a score or two at the California studios were reported to be at the point of dismissal.

Following Mr. Rogers to Hollywood, and departing on Saturday, was Mr. Cowdin, with Willard McKay, the company's general counsel. Mr. Cowdin and Mr. McKay will plane back to New York Friday.

With the home office personnel changes reputedly among the clerical forces for the most part, little time was lost by the workers in looking for an affiliation with unionism. Universal headquarters employees were persistently connected by report with the filing of an application for a charter with John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization. Anne Berenholz, in charge of motion picture unionization for the CIO's United Office and Professional Workers, refused to talk about the matter.

Another Broadway report concerning Universal this week was the reputed buying of an additional interest in the company by C. M. Woolf, managing director of National Film Distributors, Ltd., of London, which already is considerably interested in "U" financially.

N. L. Nathanson, of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, a circuit in the Dominion, previously had denied that he was to be a new factor in Universal. This week's report had it that Mr. Woolf might acquire Universal holdings through Mr. Nathanson.

Before leaving for Hollywood, however, Mr. Cowdin, while conceding that he had been in trans-Atlantic telephonic conversation with London, last Wednesday, explained that the call was only in connection with "exhibition of our product in England." Mr. Cowdin likewise denied that Universal was contemplating the distribution of ten British features on this market.

Ambassador

DEVIL DIAMOND, THE: Frankie Darro, Kane Richmond—One swell action picture. Frankie is there with the goods. Running time, 6 reels. Played July 23-24.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

VALLEY OF TERROR: Kermit Maynard, Harlene Wood—What one of the Western fans said: "That was a punk Western"—and I somewhat agree with him. Running time, 6 reels. Played Sept. 17-18.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Columbia

I PROMISE TO PAY: Chester Morris, Leo Carrillo, Helen Mack—A very thrilling and suspenseful racketeer drama. It is hard to believe that such a state of affairs existed, but the loan racket was fully exposed by the press so we know that it is based on fact and they made a mighty good all-around thrill drama out of this racket. This reminds one of "Marked Woman." One is based on the vice racket; this, on the loan racket. This was doubled with "The Hit Parade" and did a good average business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

KILLER AT LARGE: Mary Brian, Russell Hardie —Made an excellent owl show, as our owl show patrons like murder mystery stories. Played Sept. 18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LOST HORIZON: Ronald Colman, Jane Wyatt—I had heard that this picture was a flop and that Capra and Columbia were having a scrap over it. However, I got the surprise of my life when we played it. I never had so many favorable comments on a picture. We had many people come the second time. The picture is a different type than Capra has ever made but it is the best to date. The rumors about the cutting having spoiled the picture are a lot of bunk because the picture runs very smoothly. The direction, acting, scenery and theme are all tops. Edward Everett Horton's comedy sequences brought the house down. Ronald Colman is the best ever, even topping his part in "Tale of Two Cities," and that is saying plenty. The picture will do plenty of business but don't let it slide without plenty of advertising. Running time, 115 minutes. Played Sept. 19-20-21.—J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Me. Town and country patronage.

MORE THAN A SECRETARY: Jean Arthur, George Brent, Lionel Stander—Was enjoyed by the few that saw it, but some way it did not have the drawing power here.—H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Mo. Rural patronage.

NORTH OF NOME: Jack Holt, Evelyn Venable—Just good enough to get by; no comments either way. —H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Mo. Rural patronage.

RACKETEERS IN EXILE: George Bancroft, Evelyn Venable—This story of the crook who adopts religion to further his racket and then becomes religious in earnest makes interesting drama and can be classed as above the average. This was doubled with "David Harum," and the combination did a better than average business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RECKLESS RANGER: Bob Allen, Louise Small—Just another Western. The same old "shoot 'em up." Will pass where Westerns are liked. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Sept. 8.—Fischer & Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

WESTBOUND MAIL: Charles Starrett, Rosalind Keith—The usual Saturday night action fans had no kick coming here. Played September 18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

First National

CHEROKEE STRIP: Dick Foran, Jane Bryant—This is as good a Western as anyone has put out. The kid singer just about steals the show. Foran never sang better. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 24-25.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

DANCE, CHARLIE, DANCE: Stuart Erwin, Jean Muir—A fair picture with Stuart Erwin as the country cousin full of wise cracks. Business fair. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 15-16.—Walter Hollowell, State Theatre, McCrory, Ark. General patronage.

DANCE, CHARLIE, DANCE: Stuart Erwin, Jean Muir—A satire or burlesque never goes over with our patrons. Consequently, all I asked how they liked this said it was "not much," and some said "the poorest picture they ever saw." Played Sept. 17.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison Ark. Small town patronage.

MR. DODD TAKES THE AIR: Kenny Baker, Jane Wyman—Very satisfactory program picture with some fine singing by Kenny Baker and plenty of comedy by Frank McHugh. Seemed to please. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MR. DODD TAKES THE AIR: Kenny Baker, Jane Wyman—A very clever little picture. If the producer had a prominent female lead to play with Baker, this picture would have been a big grosser. As it is cast, the draw is very disappointing. Play it on a double feature to get by. Baker is a singer, not an actor. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 26-28.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

MR. DODD TAKES THE AIR: Kenny Baker, Jane Wyman—Good entertainment but had no drawing power. Everyone seemed to enjoy it, though. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Sept. 22-23.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

BACKSTAGE: Anna Neagle, Arthur Tracy—Arthur Tracy's singing sure hit the spot with our patrons. This is a very good English picture, and as a musical it ranks high. If the English producer would eliminate some of those actors that play minor parts and somehow are unable to speak distinctly, they then would have a product that American exhibitors would be glad to play. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 17-18.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

YOU'RE IN THE ARMY NOW: Wallace Ford, Anna Lee—Here is one picture from the British studios that hit the spot. Excellent photography and A-1 sound, swell entertainment, and English dialect so far in the background as not to be noticed. It took well with our patrons. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 20-21.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BETWEEN TWO WOMEN: Virginia Bruce, Franchot Tone—I made the mistake of playing this picture on a weekend. It's a swell show for a Sunday booking. —Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

DAY AT THE RACES, A: Marx Brothers—These comedians have a following and do us business. If the price had been right we would have enjoyed it a little better. They pack sure fire box office receipts.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

DAY AT THE RACES, A: Marx Brothers, Allan Jones, Maureen O'Sullivan—This is the best picture the Marxes have made. People certainly like to hear these boys play the piano and harp. This picture could have stood a little more of them, I believe; otherwise just enough of the Marx's foolishness to put the picture over in grand shape. The business proved they are still very popular.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

GOOD EARTH: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—This is a wonderful picture. Great acting and directing. Was rather heavy for the younger people, but the older ones enjoyed it greatly. As entertainment it's not so good, but it holds interest for its entire run. It's a little too realistic for this section where there's been much drought; people don't especially care to see more of it. Some of the scenes were excellent, especially the locust. This is one picture that my patrons will not forget. I thought it one of the best features I've ever seen, for acting and drama, and that was the opinion of the majority of my patrons. Running time, 138 minutes. Played Sept. 19-20-21.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

ROMEO AND JULIET: Norma Shearer, Leslie Howard, John Barrymore—I will be very much surprised if this is not classed with the ten best of 1937. A perfect cast, lavish settings, good photography and recording; in fact, everything but box office appeal for the small town. It appeals to the clubs and to those who like a high class entertainment, but, alas, there are not enough of them to pay expenses, and, as is usual with this type of picture, I took a loss. It is a picture any theatre can be proud to play, but about one a year is all I can afford. Now I am willing to "let the dead past bury its dead" and run some comedies until I take in enough to pay the rent again. Running time, 127 minutes. Played September 17-19.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan—A very fine dog story that should appeal to dog lovers. We tied up with a local Rod & Gun Club and enjoyed a nice business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Paramount

ARTISTS AND MODELS: Jack Benny—A grand musical show in every way. Jack Benny and Ben Blue are great. Business good. Played September 22-23.—Walter Hollowell, State Theatre, McCrory, Ark. General patronage.

ARTISTS AND MODELS: Jack Benny, Ida Lupino, Richard Arlen, Gail Patrick—Another one like this and Buck Benny won't ride again. Misses by a big margin of being a hit.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

ARTISTS AND MODELS: Jack Benny, Ida Lupino, Richard Arlen, Gail Patrick—Opening night the ticket buyers tried to push out the sides and both ends of theatre, and by the end of four days' run it fizzled out. It has the usual musical show numbers and the production ranks right up with the best, but it did not make 'em talk here and why I do not know.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

EXCLUSIVE: Fred MacMurray, Frances Farmer, Charlie Ruggles—A swell little program picture. Would not do in this spot for more than two days. MacMurray is always good here. Miss Farmer's acting is very wooden. Running time, 73 minutes. Played

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Rockefeller Center, New York

September 22-23.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Bob Burns, Martha Raye—This picture went over fairly well. Rufe Davis really stole the honors. People would like to see more of him.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

WAIKIKI WEDDING: Bing Crosby, Bob Burns, Martha Raye, Shirley Ross—We ran into fine, cool weather and did a very nice business. There was additional interest in this attraction as a former Sodus woman has a pleasant acquaintance with Mr. Crosby. Played September 15-16.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Republic

CAVALRY: Bob Steele, Frances Grant—This one was well received. Lot of Bob Steele fans here. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Sept. 3-4.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HIT PARADE, THE: Frances Langford, Phil Regan, Louise Henry—They certainly tried to give us our money's worth, but they put too many ingredients in this, but as a whole there is enough in it to entertain the average theatregoer. This was doubled with "I Promise to Pay." This bill drew within $5, on a three-day showing, of another high-priced, top allocation picture. So, for my part, I have no reason to complain, and can put "The Hit Parade" among my money making pictures.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

JIM HANVEY, DETECTIVE: Guy Kibbee, Tom Brown—No better than the last half of a double bill. Slow and draggy. Too much dialogue and not enough action. Guy Kibbee has no draw in our town. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Sept. 4-5.—Fischer & Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

OLD CORRAL, THE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnett—Here are the comments received while playing this one: "Gene Autry not so hot," "As cowboy he don't fit the saddle," "Singing he is A-1, but he acts as if he's cocksure of himself." All I have to say is he does the trick nevertheless at the box office. Running time, 56 minutes. Played Aug. 27-28.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PUBLIC COWBOY NO. 1: Gene Autry—And they have the nerve to call "Public Cowboy No. 1" a special when it isn't even a good Saturday western. I am not writing this in any criticism of Autry as I realize he has done the best he could with what they gave him to work with. But if Republic doesn't improve these pictures they are going to ruin Autry. My business was off practically one-half for these three pictures, and for no other reason than they were poorly and cheaply made pictures. Running time, 57 minutes. Played June 27-29.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

RIDE RANGER, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—A very good musical Western. As good as the rest of the Gene Autry pictures that we played, and they were all plenty good for the theatre. Packed house whenever we play a Gene Autry picture. Better than most specials. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Sept. 15.—Fischer & Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

ROOTIN' TOOTIN' RHYTHM: Gene Autry—Along with this picture I want to report on "Yodelin' Kid from Pine Ridge" and "Public Cowboy No. 1." These three are the poorest Autry pictures I have played. They are cheaply produced with practically no story, poor direction, and no appeal in any way. This isn't my opinion alone but is taken from remarks from patrons. Republic certainly has slipped on these Autry pictures since Nat Levine quit producing them.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

ANGEL'S HOLIDAY: Jane Withers, Robert Kent—A little better than average audience enjoyed Jane Withers. Played September 11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

ANGEL'S HOLIDAY: Jane Withers, Robert Kent—Very good picture. I believe it is quite an improvement over her last picture. Good business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Thaetre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea—Best picture and best box office draw I have run this year.—H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Mo. Rural patronage.

CALIFORNIAN, THE: Ricardo Cortez, Marjorie Weaver—This is quite a bit better than the last few of these Harold Bell Wright series.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

CAN THIS BE DIXIE?: Jane Withers, Slim Summerville—Was liked very much by my patrons.—H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Mo. Rural patronage.

DAVID HARUM (RE-ISSUE): Will Rogers, Evelyn Venable—The reissues of Will Rogers' pictures still bring them in. While this did not do quite as well as some of the other reissues, it still did above average business, and "David Harum" is one of his best.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LADY ESCAPES, THE: Gloria Stuart, Michael Whalen—Too foolish. Did not go over at all.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LOVE IS NEWS: Loretta Young, Tyrone Power, Don Ameche—Excellent comedy and action picture that pleased the cash customers. Slim Summerville gives an unusually good performance. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SEVENTH HEAVEN: Simone Simon, James Stewart—The ladies appreciated this fine love story, but the men did not show much interest. We got by, but did not get the business expected. Played September 22-23.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SEVENTH HEAVEN: Simone Simon, James Stewart—I did not care for this one, as I do not like Simone Simon, but this is much her best performance, and James Stewart is very good. This one seemed to please everyone but me, and I don't count. Running time, 102 minutes. Played September 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

STOWAWAY: Shirley Temple, Robert Young, Alice Faye—Mighty good. Shirley is always a good B. O. bet here.—H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Mo. Rural patronage.

WAKE UP AND LIVE: Walter Winchel, Ben Bernie, Alice Faye—Good entertainment. All persons interviewed liked it. Played Sept. 15-16.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACTS OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912, AND MARCH 3, 1933

Of Motion Picture Herald, published weekly at New York, N. Y., for Oct. 1, 1937.

State of New York, } ss.:
County of New York, }

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared Theo. J. Sullivan, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the Business Manager of the Motion Picture Herald and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management (and if a daily paper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, as amended by the Act of March 3, 1933, embodied in section 537, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

2. That the owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding one per cent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a firm, company, or other unincorporated concern, its name and address, as well as those of each individual member, must be given.) Quigley Publishing Company, Inc., 1270 Sixth Avenue, N. Y. C.; Martin Quigley, 1270 Sixth Avenue, N. Y. C.; Colvin Brown, 1270 Sixth Avenue, N. Y. C.; Gertrude S. Quigley, 1270 Sixth Avenue, N. Y. C.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.) None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company, but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

THEO. J. SULLIVAN,
(Signature of Business Manager.)

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 27th day of September, 1937.

ANNA MILBERT,
(My commission expires March 30, 1938.)

WEE WILLIE WINKIE: Shirley Temple, Victor McLaglen—Disappointed in this. Shirley is cute during her parts but the balance of the picture kills it and it did not do the business her previous pictures did. She does not dance, and has only one song. Played Sept. 19-20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WESTERN GOLD: Smith Ballew, Heather Angel—Very good. Ballew not much of an actor; has a good singing voice. Believe he would be better in "present time" pictures. Played Sept. 18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

United Artists

ACCUSED: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Dolores Del Rio—We played this picture with the fight pictures and enjoyed many favorable comments. Much to our surprise, many told us it was the best picture they had seen in some time. I doubt if it would draw them in alone, but should be excellent for a double bill in any situation.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HISTORY IS MADE AT NIGHT: Charles Boyer, Jean Arthur—An excellent picture well played, and holding the interest throughout with a very nice ending, but did not draw. These pictures are just not a drawing card for a small town. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Sept. 11-12.—Fischer & Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

STAR IS BORN, A: Janet Gaynor, Fredric March, Adolphe Menjou, May Robson—An interesting story plus the glamour of Hollywood and color, which drew above average. This was doubled with Buck Jones in "Smoke Tree Range." Imagine having to double "A Star Is Born," but the double bill is so general here that no doubt "The Good Earth" and "Lost Horizon" will also be doubled here in Detroit. But to get back to our double bill, this combination did good business and Buck Jones did his share to bring in some extra customers.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

LOVE IN A BUNGALOW: Kent Taylor, Nan Grey—Delightful comedy. Pleased the majority and that's hard to do these days.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

ROAD BACK, THE: Richard Cromwell—A sequel to "All Quiet" but a much better picture. A little heavy for women but they came anyway. Running time, 110 minutes. Played September 24-25.—Walter Hollowell, State Theatre, McCrory, Ark. General patronage.

SANDFLOW: Buck Jones, Lita Chevret—A fair Western. Buck has turned out better ones than this one. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Aug. 7-8.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich.

SMOKE TREE RANGE: Buck Jones, Muriel Evans—You can have your Gene Autrys, Ken Maynards or Tex Ritters, but give us Buck Jones for this situation. He usually starts out slow on the opening night but, boy, how he finishes. We always remember him, especially at the box office, outgrossing "Maytime," "San Francisco" and many other so called specials. It's Buck Jones that makes theatre business enjoyable for us here. Thanks for your autographed picture, Buck, which hangs over our drinking fountain, to be worshipped by your fans that are both numerous and profitable.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WEST BOUND LIMITED: Lyle Talbot, Polly Rowles—Just the type of show for Saturday night trade. Universal has some mighty nice pictures lately.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Warner Brothers

BLAZING SIXES: Dick Foran, Helen Valkis—This, in the opinion of my patrons, was tops as a Western. More power to Foran. May we have more like this. Average attendance. Running time, 55 minutes. Played Sept. 17-18.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

POLO JOE: Joe E. Brown—My patrons enjoyed this feature. Plenty of laughs. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 9.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

SINGING MARINE, THE: Dick Powell, Doris Weston—Powell's best since "Shipmates Forever." One of the best of the year. Running time, 105 minutes. Played September 17-18 to good business.—Walter Hollowell, State Theatre, McCrory, Ark. General patronage.

SINGING MARINE, THE: Dick Powell—Just the tops in entertainment for my patrons. Play this one and get a treat for your customers. Running time, 12

Revised Sixth Edition

F. H. RICHARDSON'S BLUEBOOK OF PROJECTION

The sixth edition of F. H. Richardson's Bluebook is now in its second printing, for which it has been extensively revised. In addition to revisions in text, it contains a supplementary chapter devoted to developments which have become important in projection room technique and servicing methods since the first printing.

The revised edition includes 736 pages of up-to-the-minute text, charts and data with detailed description of assembly, wiring and functioning of all modern sound and projection apparatus. It is a practical "trouble shooter," cross indexed for immediate reference in any projection room emergency.

reels. Played Sept. 23.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

SLIM: Pat O'Brien, Henry Fonda—Pat O'Brien at his best with Henry Fonda giving excellent support. Business fair. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 19-20.—Walter Hollowell, State Theatre, McCrory, Ark. General patronage.

THAT MAN'S HERE AGAIN: Hugh Herbert—Not so hot. Made up a show with poor shorts. May be good for double bill; won't stand alone. Running time, 52 minutes. Played Sept. 16.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

MARY'S LITTLE LAMB: Comi-Color Cartoon—You should have heard the laughter produced by this one. It is a very good cartoon. The sound was perfect A-1. Running time, 8 minutes.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich.

Columbia

GOOFS & SADDLES: Three Stooges—Pretty fair, but not as good as some of the others. Running time, 18 minutes. Played Sept. 8.—Fischer & Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D.

MY LITTLE FELLER: Andy Clyde—A very good Andy Clyde comedy. Plenty of laughs. Running time, 18 minutes. Played Sept. 15.—Fischer & Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D.

SUPER SNOOPER, THE: El Brendel—Good slapstick comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

Educational

GIRLS AHOY! Buster West, Tom Patricola—A disappointment. Not the sort of thing this team should be doing.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

HOLDING THE BAG: Sisters of the Skillet—Better than their first, but still only a poor attempt at comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theare, Penacook, N. H.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BOSKO AND THE PIRATES: Harman-Ising—Another very good colored cartoon. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

DANCING ON THE CEILING: Tabloid Musicals—A very clever one-reel musical comedy from Metro, with some clever photography.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PICTURESQUE SOUTH AFRICA: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—This scenic grandeur was most ably described and photographed in the clever FitzPatrick manner.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Paramount

HULA HEAVEN: Eddie Peabody—If I could get shorts—all of them—as good as this Headliner, one of my big worries would be over. This one is tops, and pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn.

POPEYE THE SAILOR MEETS SINBAD THE SAILOR: Popeye the Sailor Series—Good color, but did not bring extra business, like Paramount said it would. Running time, 2 reels.—Fischer & Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D.

PUDGY PICKS A FIGHT: Betty Boop Cartoons—This is a better Boop than had been given us for some time, but it still is not up to last year's standard. Running time, 8 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

MARCH OF TIME: No. 1—Very interesting.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

MARCH OF TIME: No. 13—This issue was about as poor as number twelve was good. This series of shorts is about the worst we must play in a small community.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MICKEY'S GRAND OPERA: Mickey Mouse Series—Nothing but a lot of noise. Mickey does not mean a thing to us. Running time, 7 minutes. Played Sept. 11-12.—Fischer & Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D.

MODERN INVENTIONS: Silly Symphonies—This is about the best of Disney cartoons. Enjoyed by adults as well as children. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

Universal

NIGHT LIFE OF THE BUGS: Oswald—Fair cartoon, not as good as some. Running time, 7 minutes.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich.

Vitaphone

CAPTAIN BLUEBLOOD: Georgie Price—Not up to the average Broadway Brevity. Running time, two reels.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

CLYDE McCOY AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Master Series—After playing this short subject four times in three months, we feel very much converted to the fact that to date we have never played such a band act, and take the greatest pleasure of handing Warners a wagon load of bouquets for this one. It puts life in your theatre. Play it by all means.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HOME RUN ON THE KEYS: Babe Ruth—The producers tried to build something on Babe Ruth's name and did not get it over. Skip it. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

IT'S ALL OVER NOW: Broadway Brevities—Just fair entertainment. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

JIMMIE LUNCEFORD AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Master Series—A beautiful reel and a fine orchestra just spoiled by the music played for my patrons. What entertainment could have been given with good numbers. Too much screeching on brass. Running time, one reel.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

LAND OF THE MAGYAR: Colortour Adventure—The coloring in Vitagraph Colortour is about the worst on the market. Subject matter is good, but the colors spoil it for everyone. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

LENNIE HAYTON AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Poorest of this series we ever had.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

MEDIUM WELL DONE: Vitaphone Novelties—Just terrible. No entertainment value. Running time, one reel.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural patronage.

NICKEL LOWDOWN: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—A dandy Vaudeville Reel. These shorts are very good for small town patronage where the people have a small chance to see stage vaudeville. Running time, 8 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

OKLAHOMA AS IS: Cal Tinney—A nice out-of-the-ordinary short. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

PORKY'S SUPER SERVICE: Looney Tunes—Porky's good here in anything. This was better than usual. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn.

SWING FOR SALE: Hal LeRoy—A Broadway Brevity featuring Hal LeRoy with comedy and some fine dancing. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VACATION SPOTS: Our Own United States Series—This short is very interesting, showing the highlights of many of the most popular vacation spots in America, with the last few minutes in color.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

VAUDE-FESTIVAL: Fritz and Jean Hubert—Very good vaudeville reel. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VITAPHONE DIVERSIONS: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—Good. Had three very good acts and only one that lagged. Pleased. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn.

VITAPHONE DIVERSIONS: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—This series is unusually good and this one is no exception. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

LOUIS-FARR FIGHT PICTURES: One of the best fight pictures yet. Business exceptional.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

FOR VILLAGE AND CITY

This being a right free country, there is no law reading a man can't sit down or stand up and give out what he thinks might or can be done to put over a picture, a holiday, a new season or suchforth in a town, city or otherwise. Showbusiness being what it is, little digging is necessary to discover that most everyone concerned with exhibition has an idea or two he feels could provide some extra nourishment for the box-office. However, a suggestion is one thing. The putting it over is something else again.

The motion picture industry is built on ideas. But only ideas that have established their worth at the ticket-window. And since the business flourishes best on a diet of other than the usual slants and angles, there exists a steady demand for additional pointers of proven value, a demand that hardly ever, if ever, is equalled by the supply.

Thus, the main reason for the Round Table pages.

Any lasting success this department has won to aid eager theatremen ceaselessly on the hunt for ways to do it better is due largely to one thing—we have never lost sight of the essential reason-for-being:

That the Round Table acts as a clearing house for ideas put over by the man in the field. Ideas put to work and found practical; ideas that have brought in returns and thus are reported here for the benefit of other readers.

It's nothing new. We have said the same thing before and are emphasizing "our platform" again today in referring to a communication from a reader who complains that exploitation ideas published here are often expensive and practicable only for the large city theatre. "Why not give the little fellow a break with inexpensive exploitation ideas that nevertheless put the picture across?" he asks.

Well, now let's see about that. From actual experience and from viewing the work of others, our personal opinion is, no absolute division has been clearly established that defines an idea as completely small or big town. True, a stunt particularly applicable to a larger spot may take more dollars. But even that necessarily does not mean some phase of its conception or execution cannot be adapted profitably by your ingenious showman in a smaller situation without hocking the washing machine to put it over.

In the presentation of these campaigns, your Round Table keeps in mind the limitations of other theatremen by assuming that the agile-minded small-towner will find something of merit in the big city exploitation that he can utilize, and inexpensively, for his own purposes.

The "little fellow" is represented in these pages. Theatremen in the lesser communities report their activities regularly and among these are far from costly exploitations smart enough to click as well in the larger spots.

The Round Table is as much the clearing-house for the activities of the manager in the village as it is for the box-office accomplishments of the theatreman in the biggest city.

THOSE HUMAN-INTEREST ANGLES

For his date on Paramount's "Double or Nothing" at the Tri-States Omaha, in Omaha, Eddie Forester struck upon the happy publicity device of an honesty-test wherein he dropped 25 purses at random about town, each containing one dollar and the manager's name and address. Nothing more. To nine finders who returned the purses, Forester awarded two dollars for every one turned in, plus a pair of tickets to see the show.

Kept in touch with the goings-on from the beginning, and giving the stunt its editorial blessing, the Omaha Bee-News was all set for the finale. When all returns were in, the daily broke out with a full-column story topped by a four-column head and shots of some of the finders. All of which landed on the front page of the second news section in advance of the date with the picture title, stars and theatre projected prominently.

Theatremen who ponder ways and means to break into the news columns realize their chances are brighter in landing the story that emphasizes the human-interest angle. And especially is this so when the yarn can be tied to things that local folks do to make them newsworthy.

It seems that the Government of Bombay forbids civic employees to accept passes. American theatremen so advised will no doubt be tempted to tell local pass-pests from "down-town" to: "Go to - - - Bombay."

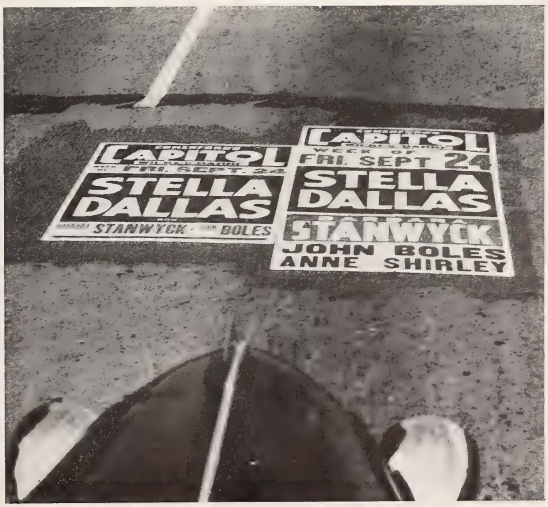
SNOW stuff again, this time in Los Angeles and from the work shop of the ingenious W. C. "Rick" Ricord, Jr., for his lobby display on "I Met Him In Paris," at the Westlake Theatre. Against a back drop of snowy mountains, Rick created a tobaggan slide and sled on which were placed action cutouts of the three stars in the picture. For additional atmosphere, girl dressed in Claudette Colbert's skiing costume, with skiis was spotted in front of the exhibit.



The Great Lakes Exposition in Cleveland proved a very fertile attention-hunting ground for the local theatremen in spotting ballys of one kind or another on the main thoroughfares of the Big Show. In this instance, it was Milt Harris, Cleveland Loew Theatres publicity director, who promoted one of the rickshaws used on the grounds for a gag on "Good Earth" with driver and passenger in Chinese costumes. Direct tiein was made with lettering on umbrella carried by girl.

Directly below is illustrated one of George Laby's distinctive art displays and below, right, some safety advertising by Al G. Cox. For the Paramount Theatre's eighth anniversary in Springfield, Mass., Laby erected a giant candle, 15 feet in height, atop which was a flasher light illuminating the entire lobby. The safety angle by Al Cox had to do with his date on "Stella Dallas" at the Capitol, Wilkes-Barre, Pa. To discourage motorists who have a tendency to take their eyes off the road to read billboards, Cox pasted three-sheets smack on the main roads leading ino the city.

QUICK REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Temple Contest

The lassies of Maspeth, Long Island, were invited to participate in a Shirley Temple resemblance contest as part of Ed Siegal's "Wee Willie Winkie" campaign at the Maspeth Theatre. Each patron received a coupon good for five votes and the 20 children receiving the most votes modeled in a stage fashion show held two days ahead. Cooperating department store presented winner and runnersup with Temple dresses and Siegal further promoted a radio for the winner. Local photographer took photos of each entrant which were displayed in lobby.

Opening day parade was held in which 250 local cadets and their band marched to the theatre, where they gave a brief concert. Coloring contest was planted, for which promoted prizes were awarded and fan photos distributed. Another stunt was tieup with twelve local grocers who featured the Quaker Oats Shirley Temple displays in windows. Imprinted bookmarks were distributed in libraries, Kipling books prominently displayed, and announcements were made over p.a. system at Police Athletic League annual Field Day meet.

Radio

Before leaving the Capitol in Halifax for Loew's in Montreal, Howard Knevels on "Captains Courageous" promoted various merchants for tieins, stores devoting windows to slickers, sea voyages, nautical gear, etc. Radio station cooperated by putting on four-minute programs of lives of courageous captains in that sector. These were spotted three days ahead and on opening days at no cost, Howard digging up the material for the broadcast. Newspapers found this material worthy of page one stories and photos.

Serial Contest

Frank Boucher, Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa., whooped things up among town youngsters when he started organizing his "Wild West Days" club around Universal's new chapter-play. Through tieup with local furniture store he arranged a contest whereby all those attending every episode would be eligible to win a bicycle.

Boucher distributed souvenirs and membership cards imprinted on back with the bicycle contest notice, and special throwaways were issued carrying large ad and special announcements of the souvenirs and prizes.

40-CENT TICKETS SELL FOR $2.50

With a resissue of "The Bat Whispers" on screen, special escape act on stage and weird audience gags, Manager Joe La Rose played to capacity recently on a midnight "ghost show" at the Eastown, Detroit. Demand for tickets was so great that patrons holding regular admissions had no trouble turning them over for as much as $2.50, it was reported.

The Legion

Booked in during the American Legion state convention in Hot Springs, Ark., W-Clyde Smith, Paramount Theatre, tied his "Road Back" date in with a preview night ahead of opening in honor of the officers; second private screening was held for Local Peace Movement Organization with guest comments used in newspaper layouts.

Through cooperation of Mayor Leo P. McLaughlin, street parade was held, Veterans' Week planned honoring all exservice men, and local merchants sponsored "Veterans' Week Road Back Sales." For his front Smith decorated it with flags of all nations with sandbags stacked along curb giving trench effect. Soldiers were stationed on guard. Lobby display of machine guns, army rifles, shells, relics, etc., surrounded by high line of sandbags loaned further atmosphere. Local columnist interviewed ex-service men on their experiences in the World War, running the stories in chapter form each day, copy being in on date.

Street ballys in addition to parade included bannered army truck, directional road markers placed in city and on highways. "Road Back" souvenir booklets were also distributed to patrons on opening day. (See photo in Round Table picture section.)

Newspaper Stuff

Manager E. D. Yarborough and publicist Leon Rosenmann at the RKO Capitol, Union City, N. J., for "Toast of New York," planted a two column newspaper story on the tactics of "Admiral" Jim Fisk at the famous "Battle of Jersey City." Local newspaper accounts of the "battle" printed on March 11, 1836, were quoted.

"Toast" beer pads were distributed to taverns, cards planted in busses and trolleys and decorated flags and champagne glass signs placed on all light standards within block of the theatre.

Early Bird Show

Special 7:30 a.m., screening of "Easy Living" was held for secretaries at the Palace Theatre, Lubbock, Tex., by Arlie Crites who in order to secure additional publicity worded his invitations so that it was necessary for the girls to secure the signed permission of their bosses to attend the show. Invitation letter also carried a postscript to all employers assuring them that by permitting their secretaries to see the picture, the management promised that the girls would return to work in a good humor.

Various merchants came through with co-op ads all of which carried some tiein with picture title, bumper strips and tire covers were used and Arlie planted a series of teaser ads in the classified section of local daily.

District Drive

Two weeks in advance of the opening of "Zola" at the Erlanger, Chicago, 30 Warner theatres in that territory ran special trailers announcing the engagement of the feature, giving the price schedule, and announcing that reservations could be made in advance at all the houses, cashiers' booths carried cards with this information.

Airplane carrying 36-foot banner was flown over Soldiers Field during local music festival, and also over the beaches and downtown Chicago.

Revival Week

To start off his Revival Week at the Orpheum Theatre, Clarksburg, West Va., Manager Joseph Feeney tied up with local newspaper, running contest in classified section, offering tickets to the ten folks who found their names scattered throughout the ads. Paper came through with stories plugging the week and Feeney built new fronts for each change of show in addition to dressing up his lobby for the event.

5000 Gifts

Al Rosen, managing director of Loew's State, New York City, for theatre's gala 17th anniversary celebration during the engagement of "Vogues of 1938" promoted 5,000 gifts for distribution to patrons. Certificates redeemable at the various shops cooperating as well as at the theatre were presented in envelopes to patrons at time of purchase of ticket admission.

Ace Exploitations Effect Tieins for '100 Men and Girl'

In Baltimore J. L. Schanberger, of Keith's, promoted the News-Post for two-week front page contest in which girls between the ages of 12 and 14 were invited to compete. The girl with the best singing voice was designated as the "Deanna Durbin of Baltimore." Fred arranged with local piano company and department store for a piano and Durbin dresses to be offered as prizes to winners; piano was kept on exhibition in lobby. So much interest was aroused that Shanberger reports the director of the Baltimore Civic Opera Company offered a season's free scholorship in vocal instructions as one of the grand prizes to the winner.

In Gloversville

Thousands of cards reading "You have a date to see Deanna Durbin," etc., were put out on "100 Men and a Girl" by Manager Glen Lazar and Thomas E. Jefferson, Schine Circuit publicity director, for the date at the Gloversville, N. Y. To point up the stunt, playing dates were attached to the cards by a string.

Imprinted napkins and paper bags were used, as were roto heralds, space on back of which was sold to local dealers to cover cost. Tieup windows were secured and taxis carried bumper strips and tire covers plugging the attraction.

To Reading, Pa.

Where tieup was arranged by Douglas George, Warner's district publicity manager, and Manager Dwight Van Meter, Astor Theatre, to stage a giant Deanna Durbin 'Twixteen fashion show in leading department store. Full page ads announced the show with layout and copy worked around large photo of the starlet. Colored fan photos were distributed and guest tickets were awarded to the first 25 who purchased the Deanna Durbin fashions displayed in store.

And At the Capital

Hardie Meakin, Keith's, Washington, D. C., grabbed plenty of newspaper space in papers by inviting all local orchestra leaders to see the picture as his guests. Anyone who had ever conducted a concert orchestra of 20 or more pieces was eligible to accept, news item explained that the leaders would derive the greatest enjoyment from the magnificent music played by Stokowski and his symphony orchestra.

Winding Up in Peoria

With City Manager Leonard C. Worley and Publicist E. G. FitzGibbons holding a prevue three weeks ahead to which officials of women's clubs, schools, merchants' critics and other locally prominent persons were invited. Advance lobby smash was made with blown-up reviews from other cities where the pictures had already been shown and with local reviews presented with photographs of the reviewers.

Tieups with local Buick automobile agancy landed generous ad in the papers, plus a parade of cars bannered with plugs for both car and picture featuring the line "Both give perfect performance." Directional arrows pointing toward the theatre and carrying picture billing were tacked around city. Maiden run of new train out of Chicago was tied into date by having print carried on it to Peoria. Stunt landed photo and story in news columns of local dailies, plus picture plugs.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Many Angles Covered For "Stella" Campaigns

Planted on the women's page of the local Times Union was a views-and-opinions contest on "Stella Dallas" used by Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., asking readers to give their opinions on the question Should the husband or child have first call on a mother's time and affection? Contest broke for four days with cash prizes and tickets awarded. Postal Telegraph heralds were distributed with all messages, jumbo telegrams spotted in offices and local distributors of Screen Romance in which the picture novelization was included used cards on stands calling attention to the opening play dates included.

Two electrical transcriptions were spotted over WHEC and WSAY day ahead of opening and singing organist dedicated broadcast to mothers and mother songs. Two "men on the street" broadcasts were also effected with continual picture plugs throughout the program.

In Clearfield, Pa.

Miss Mae E. Shively at the Ritz planted editorials on mother love in daily and weekly local papers each containing excellent plugs for the picture. Special front was built with large cutout of Barbara Stanwyck above boxoffice, flanked on either side by scene stills. Heralds were mailed to all rural families, imprinted napkins bearing cut of Stanwyck, Boles and Shirley were distributed in leading hotels, restaurants, etc., book displays planted in leading stores and libraries, and bookmarks with theatre imprint were also used.

While at Norfolk

During the absence of Manager Allan Sparrow, assistant Charles Yerby took hold and distributed "lucky Friday the 13th" cards with bit of poetry ending with "Your lucky date is when you see," etc. Tieup was also arranged with drug store which in addition to the theatre distributed lucky numbered heralds, guest tickets going to those whose numbers were listed on lobby easel.

Various merchants' co-op ads were secured, local department store's beauty salon featuring a "Stanwyck Coiffure," ads carrying cut and picture mention. Yerby employed other reliable devices to round out an effective advance.

Building Midweek Changes Without Use of Giveaways

"Home Movies" Plan Found Profitable for Small Town Operation

by TED STUMP
Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont.

We have always opposed so-called "Giveaways" in the theatre. After all, the primary business of a motion picture theatre is to present entertainment. In our opinion, it was a sign of weakness for the theatre operator to resort to the appeal of the gambling instinct in order to fill their theatres.

There is, of course, the necessity of building up one change a week in the average small town, especially if you are running three changes, for the Wednesday-Thursday change as a general rule is ofttimes rather skimpy when run on its own.

We have employed an inexpensive scheme which has built up our Wednesday-Thursday change to phenomenal proportions and it is being done strictly on an entertainment basis without giveaways of any kind. I am sure that this scheme would be successful in any small town and neighborhood theatre anywhere.

Newspaper Publicity Sought

It's "Home Movies." We purchased a Cine-Kodak Model "E" 16 mm. camera, which lists at $59.50 and a Keystone Model A81-750-watt projector which lists at $72.50. We then got the necessary newspaper publicity to build up interest. From then on it was easy. We took the 16 mm. camera wherever we went, making it a point to hit all the auction sales, Ladies' Aid meetings, birthday parties, etc.—in fact, everywhere there was apt to be a group of people. We attempted to get as many people in each scene as possible, for every one who had their picture taken, naturally, wanted to see how they looked, and so do the rest of their family, their relatives and friends. It's a natural.

We have packed them in each Wednesday and Thursday nights in unbelievable proportions. As the scheme progressed we, of course, scouted for funny and unusual subjects. We have taken pictures of bathing beauties, of babies, of bumper wheat crops, of native wild animals, of "old-timers" in the county, etc. And the only reason we don't play to bigger houses is because the house isn't big enough.

Since our "throw" here is only 68 feet, we project these pictures from the booth, making "cracks" through a microphone as it unreels. In larger houses, the projector can readily be set up in the aisle and the running commentary can be made with or without the aid of a mike. We run 300 feet each night, which amounts to $13.50 at list price for films, which item is small when you look at your gross. However, even this is cut down by buying in quantities from your local druggist, or by buying wholesale, which is rather easily done. Then, too, there are always some scenes meriting a repeat showing, some of them over and over again.

Here, at least, is our answer to maintaining a strictly entertainment policy, yet bolstering up an ordinarily weak change to our most profitable change. The camera and projector were paid for the very first time we showed the "Home Movies." We can not see how this scheme can fail in any situation with proper publicity and ballyhoo. We have stressed the angle "Look Out! The movie camera will get you when you least expect it." Of course, if we do catch some one unawares, we always tell them after we took the picture so that they will come to see themselves.

Each week we list in the paper the people who are in the particular reel to be shown that week and every last one of them attends the show and brings all their friends with them. We heartily recommend this to every exhibitor.

Santa Bows In For "New Faces"

Novelty approach by Great States city manager Ed Crabtree, Fischer Theatre, Danville, Ill., ushered in "New Faces," the theatreman covering all office buildings and downtown stores with memorandum slips reading "Good morning, new faces, and also the old, are always welcome at the Fischer," etc., copy appearing over Ed's signature. Good part of his tri-weekly broadcast which originates from lobby of theatre was devoted to the date.

With the thermometer hovering around 90, Crabtree sent Santa Claus out on the streets with back copy to the effect that he came early to see the film. City-wide stenciling campaign was sponsored with line "We welcome new faces," and local store ran cooperative ad on theatre pages plugging "New Faces" both from the angle of seeing the picture and their creating "new faces" with cosmetics.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Temple Contest Put On By Syracuse Schine-men

Highlight of campaign put on by City Manager Gus Lampe's and Manager Jay Golden's Schine's Keith, Syracuse, N. Y., for "Wee Willie Winkie" was cooperation with the Municipal Recreation Commission to conduct a contest in the 27 municipal parks for the purpose of selecting a Shirley Temple. After first preliminary contests in the various parks, semi-finals were held in 11 key parks with five finalists presented on the stage opening day, judges selecting the winner. Department store cooperated by presenting outfits to winner and runnerups.

Picture was given elaborate Hollywood opening which was broadcast over WSYR, entire front lighted and Scotch band providing appropriate music. Three days ahead two native Scotch lassies in costume paraded city distributing special heralds and stores carried tieup ads plugging the Temple dresses and film.

Halloween Plans Include Contests And Safety Tieins

Sentiment in favor of safe-and-sane Halloween observance found general last year becomes more widespread in 1937 as theatremen are arranging to cooperate extensively with local police and other civic heads to discourage children from damaging property and causing personal injuries, as has been reported. Special shows for the youngsters to hold them in line are on tap, as are the various Halloween contests celebrated since time immemorial to entertain the adults as well as the juveniles.

Since interested theatremen have in their files detailed accounts of Round Table slants and ideas to celebrate the occasion, the following briefly outlines various of the tieins and contests found effective in the past, many of which will be again employed on October 31st.

There have been instances related of special shows put on in cooperation with local police departments at lower prices to children. In connection civic authorities have taken newspaper space to call the show to the attention of adults, parents being asked to cooperate. For further buildup police authorities visited schools to announce the event. Special shows have been uniformly successful in every case bringing higher grosses than usual and with few complaints of property damage.

Pledge Cards Issued

The Halloween show tied in with a pledge of good conduct signed by the children is another idea that will again command attention. Pledge cards are printed by the theatre, signed by children and when countersigned by police chief are good for admission at special matinees show. Children pledge that they will keep the true spirit of Halloween; that they will not deface, destroy or damage property; that they will not cause injury by blocking sidewalks or streets. To make it more impressive, copy on pledge cards appoints juvenile signer to act as officer in the protection of local property.

Contests on the stage of course are to be featured with the children competing for prizes. Among most favored in the past is the apple ducking with large tub with water, children on knees behind tub facing audience, vying to get apples out of tub with their teeth and without aid of hands. Balloon gag is another natural, with youngsters in straight line, hands behind backs, balloons inserted in mouths. First one breaking balloons by blowing it up is winner.

Cracker Eating and Costume Parties

Cracker eating contest has small box of unopened crackers in front of each contestant, winner being first one to eat all his crackers and whistle "Turkey in the Straw." Blackberry and raspberry pie eating slant is another laugh provoker, pastry to be eaten without aid of hands.

Costume parties for youngsters and adults will also be repeated, as will the usual lobby decorations, such as pumpkins, witches, cats, autumn shrubbery and other of the old time standbys.

J. C JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Norfolk, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We came down here on invitation of our congressman to have lunch with him. He probably wanted to interview us and get an idea of the feelings of the "Boys back home," and besides that we wanted to have an opportunity of unloading a few ideas that have been uppermost in our mind, and we knew of no one better to unload them on than a congressman. You know that a congressman can stand a lot of "unloading"; in fact that is what we pay him for.

Now that what we call our mind has become somewhat rational we might tell you something about Norfolk that a lot of you may not know. Norfolk is another "Gateway to the west," and she has kept the gate open so long that the herd has got out in the cornfields and is finishing up what crop was left by the grasshoppers. Norfolk claims to have something like ten thousand people who say they believe in the Constitution of the United States and the state of Nebraska. But speaking of the Constitution, we might again remind you that our constitution prohibits the state from going into debt. We couldn't buy a nickel's worth of lolly pops on time, and that probably accounts for why we are not paying interest on long time bonds for more than the state is worth. This hasn't anything to do with pictures, we know that, but here is another thing for you to consider, and that is that no individual or no nation has added to prosperity by going into debt. But then let's talk about something else.

You know that a blank mind is one that has forgotten about everything he knew. That's about our fix, and it reminds us of the time we went hunting for ducks and geese in the marshes of western Nebraska some time ago. We packed our tent, decoys, a couple of cases of shells, dishes, provisions, bedding, etc., etc., and took the train for the marsh country. Then we got a team to haul us out to the marsh, where we set up the tent and arranged our beds and put on our hip boots and got ready to go out for the evening's shooting. But when we looked for our gun it dawned upon us that we had left it standing in the closet back home, a hundred and fifty miles away.

But getting back to the picture business. We went and saw "Wee Willie Winkie," with Shirley Temple, Victor McLaglen and Aubrey Smith and few more. We wouldn't attempt to criticize the picture because what we don't know about pictures would fill several volumes. The picture purported to show an English troop in war with the Arabs, presumably on the desert of Egypt or some other country, but more likely the action was had in the sand dunes between Yuma, Arizona, and Holtville, California. Anyhow, Egypt hasn't anything on us for sand dunes.

We would say that the picture, as a whole, was a good one. The only criticism we would care to offer is putting a little star like Shirley Temple in a war picture of hard boiled soldiers like this one. If your audience like Shirley Temple in war pictures they will like this one, for she does her usual marvelous acting.

The Moon theatre played "Toast of New York" recently, with Edward Arnold, Frances Farmer, Cary Grant, Donald Meek and Jack Oakie, which you no doubt will agree is a wonderful cast. It purports to show the Wall Street financial crash supposed to have been caused by Jim Fisk.

Mr. Arnold plays the part of Jim Fisk and Frances Farmer that of Josie Mansfield. It is our judgment that Mr. Arnold did the best acting of his career, and Frances Farmer, as a singer, had about all of the rest of them faded to a two spot, not that she has such a wonderful voice but her enunciation was so clear and distinct that one could understand every word she said, which was a decided relief from hearing dozens of them on the screen and radio. If you exhibitors want a good story well acted we believe you will find it in this production.

We don't know as we should mention it, but we saw another picture, and it didn't impress us sufficiently to remember the name, who produced it, who directed it or who acted in it. To us it was a lot of lost motion and a waste of raw material, but we have to have these things once in a while to make us appreciate the good ones, and you can bet that we'll appreciate the next good one we see.

We stopped at Orchard to visit Mr. Harmon, who operates the Orchard playhouse, but we learned he had gone to Omaha. We missed an awfully good visit but, by chowder, we didn't miss any better visit than he did.

At Ainsworth we called on Mr. and Mrs. Seifert, who operate a brand new theatre there. We are glad we did, for we had a lovely visit, and besides that we learned that Mrs. Seifert's maiden name was Jenkins, and we regard it a profitable journey to go several miles to see a Jenkins, unless possibly the road leads to a penitentiary. Whenever you find a "Jenkins," as a rule, you can bet your bottom dollar that he is of Welsh extraction. We never knew of but one colored man by the name of Jenkins, and that was when we were traveling Texas. We didn't look into his geneology but we'll betcha that his grandmother couldn't run fast enough. We Welsh folks will stand together through H. & H. W.

At Bassett we called on Mr. and Mrs. Carlson of the Kozy theatre and found them busy, just as they always are. We like to call on these folks for we always receive a very warm welcome. Both of these folks are HERALD fans and that alone makes 'em 100 per cent with us.

Valentine, Nebraska

Every time we come to this town we wish we had brought a gun with us, there are so many people here who have never been shot.

We found Harold Dunn, of the Jewel theatre, in the custody of the town marshall. They were sitting in a car in front of the theatre and Harold wanted us to go his bail but the marshal wouldn't accept us. Harold called to Hazel, his wife, who was selling tickets, and said, "Hey there, get on your trotting harness and get ready to take the train for Omaha, that guy is here again."

There's no doggone sense of a man acting like that, and so we are hauling in the gangplank.

It's Good "Box Office" to Improve Sound and Add to the Beauty of Your Theater . . . With USG ACOUSTONE

Acoustone-treated ceiling of Warner Brothers Colney Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

■ Increased audience appreciation — and increased "box office" receipts as a result — are the logical happy ending when you eliminate blurred sound with Acoustone*, USG fireproof acoustical tile. For Acoustone absorbs the sound that makes over-lapping reverberation—permits each show to be heard at its best, without distortion.

Quickly applied to new or old walls or ceilings, Acoustone not only improves sound, but enhances the beauty of any interior. With its rich integral colors and high light-reflecting surface, it forms a perfect complement to modern theater architecture and design—needs no further decorating. Its beauty is kept fresh by simple vacuum cleaning at a fraction of the cost of painting. Yet Acoustone may be painted, if desired, without damage to its sound-absorbing ability.

Maintenance and lasting efficiency considered, Acoustone is actually low in cost. Decide now to have the benefits of efficient acoustical tile—insist on Acoustone!

There's a USG Acoustical Material to Solve Every Sound-Control Problem

USG sound-control service includes absorption treatments and materials to clarify hearing and reduce noise — also sound-insulation to reduce the travel of objectionable noise from room to room. USG acoustical engineers are always available to assist you in an advisory capacity, without obligating you in any way.

BUT WHAT A DIFFERENCE

In comparison with modern SIMPLIFIED HIGH INTENSITY projection old style low intensity projection is as out-of-date as the horse and buggy. And as uneconomical.

The picture on the screen is all you have to sell. Clear, snappy black and white and good accurate color pictures can only be projected properly with high intensity light, such as audiences are accustomed to in the big theaters.

SIMPLIFIED HIGH INTENSITY projection is no longer a luxury. Almost any house can afford it. And every house can make it a business builder.

SIMPLIFIED—

1-SIMPLIFIED LAMP MECHANISM 2-FEWER LAMP PARTS

3-LOWER ARC CURRENT

Two to three times as much light on the screen as you get from low intensity, costs so little more than you are now paying, that one extra admission per show will cover it.

SUPREX PROJECTION is simplified high intensity which in the last four years has completely revolutionized theatre projection. SUPREX uses only one fourth of the power of the ordinary high intensity arc to produce the same brilliancy upon the screen with improved quality. SUPREX lamp mechanisms are not complicated, the carbons do not rotate and, due to the low power consumption, the heat produced cannot damage the mechanisms.

■ SUPREX increases theatre profits by slashing power costs. Breakdowns and repair expenses are virtually unknown. At the same time, SUPREX gives brighter, more even, and more dependable screen illumination. Look at the facts! They will tell you that only SUPREX should be considered for modern, super-efficient, economical projection. Particular Exhibitors prefer ASHCRAFT SUPREX. Their reasons are well founded.

■ The International Exhibition of Cinematographic Art, held the latter part of August and the first week of September at the Lido, near Venice, also served as a properly impressive occasion for the opening of a rather palatial motion picture theatre, views of which are shown here. This theatre, which gives the celebrated playground, on the shore of the Adriatic, modern facilities for enjoyment of films, seats 1,500. The general design is severe in line, but warm in coloring. The auditorium walls are tinted a soft yellow, and the lighting is in a gold tone. Floors, velvet draperies and seat upholstering follow the same color scheme.

"Edgeless" Screen with Light Border Shown

A SCREEN arrangement eliminating masking and thus permitting full visibility of the projected image, was demonstrated this week at the annual Fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York. The invention is a result of two years of research work by Ben Schlanger, motion picture theatre architect, and Jacob Gilston, electrical engineer specializing in theatre work, both of New York City.

Not only is the usual black masking eliminated, but the dark surroundings of the screen as well. Taking their place is an illuminated field contiguous to the edges of the screen and on this field appears automatically the color and intensity of the projected light, synchronizing with the color and light intensity of the marginal areas of the screen.

The accompanying diagram indicates a front and plan view of the screen. The plan sketch shows the method of transmitting the projected light through the marginal areas of the screen and on to a reflective and diffusive background field.

New England Remodeling Estimated at $4,000,000

THE OUTLAY for theatre modernization and alterations since January 1 of this year, throughout the six New England States, is conservatively estimated to be $4,000,000. Massachusetts leads the group with over half the total.

Getting into full swing, for the most part, modernization this year has materially affected theatres on which little or no money has been spent for quite a few years. Attention was directed first to the front, new marquees with the latest in lighting and with silhouette attraction board letters, being extensively installed. Frequently such improvements have been made in conjunction with general remodeling of the front, with the result that a widespread transformation has taken place in the exterior appearance.

Some fifteen suburban houses of M. & P. Theatres have undergone rather complete modernization. Several of the houses seating from 500 to 1,000 were closed for one or two weeks for alterations which importantly involved the decorative scheme. —Howard Shonting, Boston.

27 Classes of Sound Devices at Trade Show

TWENTY-SEVEN classes of equipment and apparatus used in theatre projection rooms and elsewhere about the theatre were displayed at the National Trade Show of radio parts manufacturers, held in New York City the first week of October.

Amplifiers, some suited to sound picture work, others intended for public address, stage shows and advertising, including truck advertising, were exhibited by four manufacturers—David Bogen Company, New York; Jefferson Electric Company, Bellwood, Ill.; Operadio Manufacturing Company, St. Charles Ill., and The Webster Company, Chicago—while several others offered amplifiers as components of complete sound systems.

Cables of special construction needed in sound wiring, were shown in considerable variety. Co-axial and other shielded cables for photocell and microphone connections, and multiple-wire cables suited to general sound wiring, were exhibited by American Radio Hardware Company, New York; Belden Manufacturing Company, Chicago, and Lenz Electric Manufacturing Company, also of Chicago.

Communications systems as used in many theatres for contact between the manager's office and projection room, stage, box office and other departments, are rendered obsolete by the new types embodying vacuum tube amplification, which were displayed by no less than seven manufacturers. The improvement over earlier types with respect to clear and intelligible speech is great. Exhibitors of such equipment were Bogen, Electronic Design Corporation, Chicago; Operadio, Philco Radio and Television Corporation, Philadelphia; United Sound Products, Inc., Chicago; The Webster Company of Chicago, and the Webster Electric Company, of Racine, Wis.

Eight makers displayed microphones of every known type, suited to the most varied requirements of sound pickup, including high, medium and low sensitivity; high and medium quality; directional, non-directional, and instruments whose directional characteristics can be altered at will; also microphones suited to long connecting lines, and others favored where use of short lines is possible. The Amperite Company, American Microphone Company, Los Angeles; Astatic Microphone Laboratories, Youngstown, O.; Bruno Laboratories, Inc., New York; Brush Development Company, Cleveland; The Lifetime Corporation, Toledo, O.; RCA Manufacturing Co., Camden, N. J., and Transducer Corporation, New York, were the manufacturers represented.

Noises of motors, refrigerating and air-conditioning machines, and other disturbances, including those that originate outside the theatre in heavy machinery,

X-ray equipment and similarly troublesome sources, are not infrequently picked up by theatre sound systems; they represent one of the most difficult of all sound troubles. Tobe Deutschmann exhibited electrical filters that can be attached to the sound system or to lobby radios, to suppress such interference.

Public address sound systems, fixed and portable, suited to stage, lobby or outside advertising use, were included in the displays of Bogen, Electronic Design Corporation, The Magnavox Company, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Operadio, RCA, The Webster Company, and Webster Electric Company.

The new magnesium-copper sulphide rectifying stacks, now used in projection rectification equipment, were exhibited by P. R. Mallory & Company, of Indianapolis.

Vacuum and rectifying tubes were shown by Arcturus Radio Tube Company, Newark, N. J.; Consolidated Electric Lamp Company, Lynn, Mass.; Hygrade Sylvania Corp., Emporia, Pa.; National Union Radio Corporation, New York; Philco, Raytheon Production Corporation, New York; RCA, and Tung-sol Lamp Works, New York.

Volume controls suited to use in theatre amplifiers of most types were shown by Centralab, Milwaukee; Clarostat, Mallory, Ohmite, Ward Leonard, and Wirt.

New Theatre Projects Average 916 Seats

NEW THEATRE projects indicate a substantial increase in the average seating capacity—this despite the downward trend during the past several years, placing the average number of seats in operating theatres on December 31, 1936, at 640. Of 162 projects reported between July 1 and October 1, a total of 102 projects for which capacities were definitely indicated showed an average of 916 seats. Policy and Hazard Factors In Theatre Insurance Costs

● First be sure that physical conditions earn the lowest rate—then be sure you are buying full protection. Here is guidance, based on experience

By FINTON JONES

THEATRE OPERATORS should realize that the rating bureau debits the theatre as it finds it, and says nothing about the matter. The bureau makes no recommendations unless requested to do so by the exhibitor. It simply marks the theatre guilty of certain bad practices—and lets the bad news reach the theatre operator in the rate!

First, let us consider coverage: Suppose an exhibitor built a $50,000 theatre at the bottom of the depression, or at any time after that when construction materials and labor were at their lowest. The same theatre today, if it has been kept in good condition, is worth at least 25% more than the exhibitor paid for it, but very likely he hasn't increased its insurance protection to cover this accretion in value. A fire would destroy the $12,500 fruit of his foresight or good luck.

Again, an exhibitor may spend—many exhibitors in Western Missouri and Kansas did this during the depression and since—a thousand dollars or two thousand a year for three or four years, in small amounts. In this way he may add as much as $10,000 worth of improvements to his theatre, but his insurance covers the old valuation.

Of less importance nowadays is the decrease in value of a new theatre due to declining prices of construction materials and labor. That will come after building reaches a cost peak and when or if the theatre is going into a depression. Then the exhibitor needs a close check periodically to keep his insurance down to the decreasing value. Of course, the exhibitor should make allowances as the years go along for ordinary obsolescence.

LESSEE IMPROVEMENTS

Perhaps the exhibitor doesn't own the theatre—he leases it. Then why should he care? There is here a coverage he often overlooks. As lessee, he makes "improvements and betterments"—he has a mural or two painted on the walls, he has some frescoing done, he has a special job of painting, or he may install a new washroom at his own expense. These are not protected unless he buys a fire policy to cover them. Even a small fire that doesn't harm the owner's seats, walls or building, might ruin a wall piece, and of course they are unprotected in a big fire. If the exhibitor owns the building, these things are figured in the total building valuation, or should be, and are covered under the building policy.

Certainly, the theatre operator who is going to spend real money in building a new house, or in remodeling one, should have the benefit of insurance engineering advice. The contractor may be aware of the penalties for building or arranging a building in a certain way, but his primary objective is to get the theatre built, and in the building of practically every theatre something is done which, if it had been done another (and not necessarily a more expensive) way, would have saved the exhibitor perhaps $100 or more a year in his insurance budget.

Figures given in this discussion are only approximate. Rates vary with individual risks and with different areas, but they will be found to hold true in general.

PROJECTION HAZARDS

A new theatre recently completed in Missouri was very well constructed. When the contractor arrived at the projection room, he built it with regulation floor, fire door, automatic shutters; the walls were all right, the ventilators standard. But at the ceiling he attached metal lath to wooden joists. The exhibitor might just as well have had a cheaply constructed projection room and a cheaper theatre. This one mistake added approximately 75 cents per $100 of valuation to both the fire and contents rate of the entire theatre.

To correct this, extra layers of concrete (instead of plaster) on the booth roof were recommended—4½ inches instead of 2 inches in order to bring the projection room up to standard specifications and to eliminate the debit.

"A theatre is as good as its booth," say insurance rating men. In building a theatre, or extensively remodeling one, the projection room is the important thing to watch. It is the heart of the fire hazard and should not have to be built more than once. While the entire theatre rate hinges on the construction of the building as well as on construction of the projection room, unapproved construction of the former does not affect so immediately nor so seriously the insurance premium. Improper construction and equipment in the booth can increase the theatre's total insurance cost from 75% to 125%.

It is here that the theatre differs as an underwriting hazard from other types of buildings, and approved standards have the purpose of providing a fire resistive room which will handle any small fire that occurs in connection with films, prevent panic and keep the fire from spreading to other parts of the building.

Briefly, these standards call for incombustible material in construction, openings protected with automatic closing devices, self-closing doors, vents to the outside so that poisonous fumes from a possible film fire can escape. Film must be kept in metal cabinets so that a small fire in the projection room will not spread. Metal waste cans with self-closing lids for film clippings are another requisite (neglect of this one item, for instance, costs around 5 cents per $100 on both the theatre and contents rate). Only approved projectors should be used. Most projectors now made meet the requirements of the Underwriters Laboratories, but almost 10% of those in the field still cannot get the Laboratories' approval. Incidentally, the changeover to sound eliminated almost all of the unapproved types of projection equipment.

In remodeling a Missouri theatre recently, the contractor cut a hole for ventilation through the sidewall of the projection room. The hole emptied between the false front of the theatre and the front. The exhibitor's insurance rate increased $1.50 per $100. When the hole was plastered over and ventilation secured through the ceiling, the exhibitor obtained a reduction.

PROTECTIVE DETAILS

While on the subject of projection rooms, there are several things that, though they do not come under the heading of construction or remodeling, are so important in their effect on the insurance rate that they should be mentioned here.

In quite a number of theatres, motor generator sets are located in the projection room. At the point where the brushes contact the armature, sparks are created,

The Theatre Owner's Defense in Suits Over Injuries to Patrons

● How the exhibitor can successfully meet claims made in accidents, as indicated in actual cases in which he was held not liable by the courts

By LEO T. PARKER

INJURIES TO patrons of theatres, while on the theatre premises, have ever been a "headache" to motion picture exhibitors. While the liability of theatre owners for such injuries has been frequently discussed, circumstances vitally affecting such liability are seldom the same, at least superficially, and all too often the theatre owner allows himself to be victimized simply because he is not exactly sure of where his liability ends.

THEATRE OWNER NOT AN INSURER

This discussion of injuries to patrons therefore considers cases in which theatre owners were held not liable, analyzing them to indicate methods and practices in theatre operation which, if followed consistently, will eliminate the operator's liability in damages from many sources of this kind.

First, it is important to know that the owner of a theatre is liable in damages to all persons who come into the theatre at his invitation, express or implied, provided the injury is occasioned by the unsafe condition of the theatre premises, or accessories, known to the owner and not known to the patron, and also provided the owner of the theatre failed, after using ordinary care to discover the defect, to repair the same within a reasonable period.

On the other hand, various courts have held that the operator of a theatre is not liable in damages for injuries sustained by a patron if the thing, arrangement or accessory which caused the injury had been in use for a long time previously without effecting injury to other patrons.

For example, in the recent case of Lappin v. St. Louis (33 S. W. [2d] 1025), it was shown that a woman, who was familiar with the theatre premises, was injured when she was walking down concrete stairs. She sued the owner for damages, contending that the latter was negligent because he failed to provide a handrail. However, the counsel for the owner proved that the stairs had been in existence for twelve years previously and that there had been no previous accidents; therefore, although the lower court held the patron entitled to recover damages, the higher court reversed this decision, and said:

"It (owner of premises) was not bound to make the stairway absolutely safe, but was charged only with the duty to use ordinary care to maintain it in a reasonably safe condition. It would be liable only if the plaintiff (patron), using due care, was injured by an unsafe condition in the stairway known to it and not known to the plaintiff. . . . In this case there is no evidence that defendant had previously known of any dangerous condition of the stairway; in fact, according to the testimony of a witness who was in a position to know, in the twelve years of his connection with the premises, there had been no previous accident at this stairway."

NEGLIGENCE OF PATRON

Where the evidence clearly indicates that a theatre patron is injured as a result of his own negligence, he is not under any circumstances entitled to recover damages from a theatre operator. This point of the law is applicable in all cases involving injuries to theatre patrons, irrespective of the manner in which the injury is sustained. A leading higher court case involving this point of the law is Gibbons v. Harris Amusement Company (167 Atl. 250, Pittsburg).

Citing Loose Rug

In this case a patron, when walking across a lobby of the theatre, sustained severe injuries when he tripped on a small rug. He filed suit against the theatre operator to recover damages and alleged that the injury was sustained because the theatre operator was negligent in failing to provide proper and adequate illumination so that he could observe the dangerous condition of the rug. He testified that the rug was wrinkled and that this condition was the cause of the accident. Also, the patron contended that the rug should have been fastened securely to the floor, or that a theatre employe should have kept the wrinkles out of the rug in order to eliminate danger to patrons.

The lower court held the theatre operator liable in $1200 damages, but the higher court reversed this verdict and, in holding the theatre operator not liable, said:

"The rug was not fastened to the floor, but we know of no rule that requires a rug of that size and description to be fastened to the floor. It was in good condition, had been used there for some time. . . . Under the plaintiff's (patron's) own testimony, the rug was not . . . in a torn or curled up condition which might cause a patron of the theatre to trip . . . nor was there any proof that the floor beneath the rug was slippery or dangerous. . . . There was no structural defect in the rug; nor was it inherently dangerous. . . ."

Citing Elevated Seating

In another leading case, Suggs v. Saenger Theatres (130 So. 817), it was disclosed that a patron testified that she entered the theatre in the afternoon through one of the vestibules, and (note carefully the build-up of her case) that it was dark, that she had never been in the building before and was not familiar with the seating arrangements, that no usher was present to direct or assist her to a seat, that there was not sufficient illumination to disclose the platforms on which the seats were placed, and that she was seriously injured when she tripped on the edge of a seat platform.

The theatre owner, in turn, introduced evidence to show that the light was sufficient to enable the average theatre patron to find his way along the aisles; therefore, the court decided that the accident was due to the woman's negligence in assuming that the aisle was on the same level as the floor between the rows of seats, and held the theatre owner not liable, saying:

"There cannot be any doubt that one, in passing along the aisle, with the seats rising in tiers along the side of the aisle, must have realized that the aisle was on an incline and that the seats were arranged so as to compensate for the incline. . . . The defendant was not guilty of any negligence in having the theatre so arranged, and it being necessary to maintain the theatre in semi-darkness, we do not think that plaintiff should have assumed that the aisle was on the same level as the floor between the tiers of seats."

Obligation to Observe

In the leading case of Givens v. De Soto (156 La. 377), a patron was injured and testified that the owner was negligent in failing to place floor lights at the ends of

Stadium Plan Without Cross-Aisle

The front, constructed of limestone; and (upper picture) the auditorium, finished in Celotex.

*[Having found the stadium arrangement definitely advantageous in traffic control as well as space economy, Mr. H. W. Knutson, general manager of the State Theatre Company, can find no disadvantage in its application without any cross-aisle. It has been so applied in the Montana theatre in Miles City, which also is interesting for the clean-cut modernism of its interior. Mr. Knutson himself has prepared the following descriptive article on this new State theatre.—*THE EDITOR.]

THE MONTANA theatre at Miles City, Mont., is an entirely new structure with a front 50 feet wide. The building is 150 feet deep and is built of brick and re-inforced concrete. On each side of the entrance, which is 20 feet wide, there is a small shop 14 feet wide by 25 feet deep which have proved to be nice revenue getters from rental. Then across the entire front of the second floor is a large apartment.

The box office is located on the sidewalk property line and is so arranged that in summer the cashier uses the front spot for ticket sales; however, for winter use the ticket sale is confined to the wicket just inside the first doors. The lobby display cases or frames are mounted on the walls and set in a Carrara glass trim of black and green.

The facing material for the front of the building is limestone in a buff color. The marquee has two-line attraction boards with neon used to illuminate under sand-blasted prism glass behind silhouette letters. The neon tubing for the board illumination is red and blue on a three-point flasher, permitting a combination of the two colors.

Upon leaving the lobby one enters a spacious foyer which is lighted with specially designed fixtures (by Elaine) and luxuriously carpeted in velvet weave of modern design laid on ¾-inch Ozite.

The general decorating scheme is of various shades or tones of green, and of course with a blending of contrast colors to give the entire decorating scheme the richness it has in the main auditorium. The foyer walls have rose stripes with gold bands, and the foyer ceiling is done in three shades of blue, each shade being separated by a gold line. The high point in the foyer ceiling is done in a cream background with free-hand ornamentation of modern pattern exevuted in gold. The carpeting is of modern design and the two predominating colors are rust and green.

Just off the foyer is the main lounge, reached by descending a flight of four steps from the foyer floor level. This lounge is 18 feet wide by 34 feet long. It is carpeted the same as the foyer. It is furnished with two three-section corner pieces, and four two-piece "love seats." These are constructed to stand hard usage and are covered as follows: backs and sides, or arms, light cream leather; inside backs and sides and seats, blue and rust mohair. All lighting is from two table lamps and two torchiers. At a point just opposite the stairs leading from the foyer is a figure of a dancing girl, executed in relief on the lounge wall by Gunnar Dahlstrom, who was in charge of decorating the theatre. Off the main lounge are the women's and men's lounges and off these are toilet rooms.

The ceiling of the public lounge is unique in the beamed effects obtained from the pouring of the reinforced concrete slabs and beams for the stadium just above the lounge. This most interesting ceiling, plus the decorative treatment, gives us one of the finest lounges I have ever seen.

AUDITORIUM

To enter the main auditorium from the lounge one returns to the foyer from which entry to the main floor is gained by passage ways along each side wall, and upon entering the main auditorium one then can select seats either on the main floor or back into the stadium.

The first five rows of seats in the stadium in the center section is given over to loge seats, and in the extreme back of the stadium are two small smoking sections—these are the only places in the auditorium where smoking is permitted.

The auditorium side walls are paneled between pilasters, above a 5-foot wainscot, with Celotex laid horizontally in strips 3 feet wide—three, four or five strips in each panel, according to the different levels. These Celotex strips are jointed by the use of ¾-inch chromium beading.

The main auditorium lighting is by vertical cornice fixtures on color circuits, located on each side of every pilaster, and by two ceiling fixtures over the back of stadium ceiling. The ceiling of the auditorium is two tone Celotex so laid as to give a herring-bone effect.

The proscenium arch is 32 feet wide by 20 feet high. The front curtain is made of gold color antique satin with pea green trim, while accessory drapes are of green antique satin with gold trim. The screen setting is of egg-shell antique satin. Also other passages, exit openings and arches to lounge from foyer are draped with combinations of gold and green antique satin.

Seating (by Air-Loc) has end standards of modern design and are of spring-edge type with fully upholstered backs. Covering is green velour with a diamond pattern. Total capacity is 669, with 210 seats in the stadium.

We broke away from the usual procedure of a cross-over at the point in the auditorium where the stadium starts, and for that reason we have but the regulation 14-inch riser or step, starting at that point, and all other risers or steps of stadium are 14 inches, with a 7-inch auxiliary step at each riser. The reason for this procedure was to save two rows of the choicest seats in the house center section which would otherwise have been given over to the cross-over passage. Of course, it may be a slight inconvenience at times not to have this cross-over, but I find that by a little care in handling the incoming patrons, the house can be so well balanced that any need for the cross-over is entirely eliminated and therefore added choice seats are had.

The Montana is equipped with the latest Western Electric sound system, and is arranged with 24 seats equipped with Western Electric hard-of-hearing devices. The projection equipment includes two Simplex machines, General Electric, copper oxide rectifiers, and Jewel Suprex carbon arc lamps. All stage lighting and curtain controls are operated from the projection room as well as stage.

AIR SUPPLY

For supplying air we installed a U. S. Air-Conditioning Corporation system, with air washers and humidifiers, then we also

Our Theatre Standards Lead World

● But other countries are rapidly taking up the lag, declares Arthur E. Meyer, who has been a visitor in most of them

Mr. Meyer in Calcutta (where posing for your portrait seems to be serious business), with E. D. Klemka, Simplex projector distributor there.

THAT MOTION picture standards are higher in the United States (and one must include a large share of Canada, too) than in any other part of the world, you would not expect anyone to deny. Most Americans, even members of the motion picture industry, are likely, however, to point to the preference of the public in other countries for Hollywood films as evidence of this leadership, whereas the quality of American pictures by no means constitutes either a complete demonstration or an explanation of the advanced stage of the motion picture in the United States. What gives America a superior position in the world of the cinema is its theatres.

This you soon realize upon talking with Arthur E. Meyer, whose job for sixteen years has been to know intimately the conditions of motion picture exhibition in most regions of the world. He has just become general sales manager of the International Projector Corporation, in an organizational change which places him in the chair long occupied by Herbert Griffin, now executive vice president. But from July 5, 1921, when he joined International, until just the other day, Mr. Meyer was export manager, and in that capacity he has observed motion picture operations at first-hand in most of Europe, in China, Japan, Siam, India, the Straits Settlements, all of the countries of South and Central America.

"Even England," reflected Mr. Meyer, "hasn't the general—or shall we say, average?—standards of motion picture exhibition that America has, and of course England is far and away superior in this respect to the other countries I have visited. Now let me explain that a little further."

Apparently he wasn't satisfied with the accuracy of such a generalization. He turned in his chair toward the office window and Brooklyn Bridge just beyond, and swung an extraordinarily long leg over its mate (Arthur Meyer stands well over six feet, as lean as he is tall).

"There are," he continued after a moment, "many British theatres as well designed and as well equipped as our best houses. But in the United States you are as likely to run across such theatres most anywhere, and the latest equipment and high standards of performance are as common in smaller communities in this country as in our cities. That is not true of any other nation in the world.

"Take our projectionists, for example. Now in England, where conditions are more comparable to ours than those elsewhere, they are not as well trained, on the average, as projectionists in this country are, they work long hours at low wages, and frequently have to get along with equipment which is of very old type or makeshift.

"Let me illustrate: In a large number of theatres a projectionist comes to work early in the morning and is not through until late at night. If there is any repairing to do, he has to do it, if it can be done in the theatre. Also, if the theatre has a stage show of some kind, he may have to help with the sets and lighting. And of course he has to run the spots and effect machines as well as the projectors, and the effect machine may very well be merely a stereo with some home-made gelatine attachment. His wage is likely to be somewhere around $15 a week.

"When you think of those conditions, you cannot help admire the British propectionist for his—well, his interest in projection. There is no projectionist's union over there, you know—in fact, for some reason British projectionists have turned down efforts to organize them. But there is a craft organization called the Guild of British Kinema Projectionists and Technicians, which is doing some fine educational work and should have an appreciable effect on projection standards generally over there. The trick, however, will be to 'sell' theatre operators on the value, in dollars and cents, of really skilled projectionists and well built, modern equipment, something they do not yet realize as fully, as generally as in the United States."

It seemed to the writer a matter that was importantly affected by industry organization. Mr. Meyer nodded.

"Nowhere is the motion picture business so well organized, so important a part of the nation's business, or perhaps one had better say, so established among the leading industries, as in the United States.

"One should not overlook the fact that in this country circuit operation has been important for a long time, and you can say what you want to about circuits, they have done much to raise standards, and to spread them over the country. That very thing has taken place during the last couple of years in Japan, where some big business men have been taking an interest in motion picture exhibition. The result is a growing number of attractive, well planned theatres with modern equipment, not only for projection, but all purposes."

How about South America, which as a growing market for American goods, ought to be importing some of our ways as well?

"They have been building some very fine theatres down there the last few years," replied Mr. Meyer, "also as a result of the interest being taken by large financial groups in the motion picture theatre business. Development, of course, is necessarily confined to the larger cities. Most people haven't the money to go to the theatre with any regularity."

Wasn't that the real reason why exhibition standards in the other countries lagged behind those of the United States?

"It probably is one of the reasons. It

Practical Air-Conditioning for Small and Medium-Sized Theatres

● Examining the ventilation requirements of theatres seating from 500 to 1000 and pointing out the various methods by which they may be met

THE MANAGERS or operators of the small and medium-sized theatres have a distinct advantage over their competitors when it comes to air-conditioning or proper ventilating and cooling methods. It perhaps would be more correct to say that they should have the advantage, but few seem to benefit from the advantage, because they so frequently resort to home-made methods and the advice of some heating man in the town, or some salesman of equipment. The money wasted in this manner and the inefficient results obtained quickly swings the advantage over to their larger competitor.

Before starting out to point to some of the peculiarities of the smaller plants, it might be well to clarify the term air-conditioning. It is pretty well accepted today among engineers and equipment manufacturers that air-conditioning means the positive control of temperature of air, the humidity of the air and the air motion. In a more correct sense, air-conditioning must also control the cleanliness of the air, but this phase of it is frequently overlooked.

There are still theatre operators who believe that filters are an unnecessary, an added expense and of little use. This point of view is rather astounding, and the finest argument against it is to let those who feel that way about it examine the filters in an air-conditioning system after they have been in use for, say, three months.

In the light of this definition of air-conditioning, there are many small theatre owners and managers who feel that they cannot afford air-conditioning. In the final analysis, does the small theatre need air-conditioning? There is no general answer to the question. The answer depends upon several things—the geographical location of the theatre, the trend of the business done by the theatre, whether matinee or evening, and the people to whom the theatre caters.

We have in our human bodies perhaps the most delicate, most intricate and most complicated temperature regulating equipment known. Yet this human equipment very frequently gets out of balance; it is affected by the food we eat, the climate we live in, the immediate state of our health our blood pressure, our heart action, and our bodily activity. We must understand that the most perfect air-conditioning job ever done will not mean comfort to every person that might be subjected to it. It follows, then, that our efforts must be directed toward making the greatest number comfortable.

The human body reacts in terms of comfort or discomfort to temperature, the feeling of warmth or coldness; to humidity, the accelerating or retarding of the evaporation of the moisture from the exposed skin surfaces; and the movement of air, which brings more air in contact with the body. These are the three fundamental phases of air-conditioning. When any one of these three characteristics of air can be altered by mechanical equipment you are getting nearer to air-conditioning, even though methods of control may be faulty. But if the equipment alters only one of these characteristics, even though it does that perfectly, you still could not say that you had air-conditioning.

RELIEF—THE SMALL THEATRE'S PROBLEM

THE PROBLEM of the small theatre is definitely one of relief rather than one of complete air-conditioning. (This really applies to some of the larger theatres, too.) Between just straight ventilation, which might be described as blowing air into a theatre, and air-conditioning in its broadest meaning, there are many degrees of comfort and relief.

To begin with the first step toward air-conditioning, which we will call ventilation, we need equipment to take air from the outside and force it into the theatre. This is the air motion part of air-conditioning. Many theatre managers have bought fans from salesmen, then more or different types of fans, and still they were not satisfied with results. There are still many fans manufacturers selling fans to theatre men under some system name, such as the "Ocean Breeze System," or "Forest Breeze," etc., and basically the equipment consists in a fan or blower plus some art work on a pretty folder. Now, we all have experienced the sensation of being exposed to an electric fan; well, larger systems of ventilation work on the same principle, except that they draw air from the outside, which may or may not be cooler than the air on the inside. The point is that it is the air movement that tends to create an apparent effect of cooling.

The absolute failure of such systems in any given case can usually be attributed to one of two causes, or both: First, an inadequate duct distribution system; second, an inadequate exhaust system. Every fan or blower gives air a velocity in one direction. It is quite true that a high-velocity stream of air entrains and agitates other air, but there is no reason to believe that air delivered at the proscenium will agitate and set into motion the air under the balcony and in the side seats and the corners of the top balcony. If air is to be got to those points, it must be delivered there in ducts and released at the desired point. (This statement is positively made regardless of statements that might be made by the advocates of few delivery points and high velocities.)

GRILLES

A secondary fault of many ventilation systems lies in the types of grille or deflectors used. All too frequently they are of the home-made variety and actually do more harm than good. Most sheet metal

BOILER GAUGES: We are now in the heating season. The gauge on the boiler is to an engineer what the stethoscope is to a doctor. It helps him to form an opinion as to what is going on inside the system.

Gauges on theatre boilers are most of the time inaccurate because they are never calibrated, cleaned or taken care of until they stop recording altogether. Perhaps the most damaging action on a gauge is the fluctuation of the pressure it is supposed to record. Many times this fluctuation is so excessive that it is hard to read the pressure accurately.

There is a small attachment on the market that might be called a pressure snubber; it serves as a shock absorber for the gauge and is installed between the source of pressure and the gauge. By absorbing the surge and shock of the steam on the delicate parts of the gauge, it prolongs the useful and accurate life of the gauge. The resulting steadiness of the gauge needle on the dial makes it easy to read accurately. It is really worthwhile because it is inexpensive and in many cases it will save a portion of the fuel bill because it permits the gauge to be read accurately.

HOT AIR FURNACES: There still are many of the smaller theatres heated by hot air furnaces. One of the long-standing objections to hot air furnaces has been the lack of any control system. There is now manufactured a fan and temperature limit control for warm air furnaces. This control is of the mercoid switch type and permits individual settings for high and low operating points. The dial on this instrument is calibrated from 50° F. up to 300° F., and adjustments can be made over the entire scale.

This control prevents the operation of the fan if the furnace is not up to a predetermined temperature, and in this way cold air cannot be blown into the room. Hot air furnaces, particularly those fired by gas, can be helped.

AIR-CONDITIONS GUIDES: One of the leading manufacturers of air-conditioning equipment has developed an "Air-Conditioning Ruler," which, when used in conjunction with their psychrometric charts, greatly simplifies the solution of air-conditioning problems.

For instance, here are some of the types of problems that can be solved:

Given the dry bulb temperature and relative humidity to be maintained in an auditorium, you can tell what the dry bulb, wet bulb and dew point of the air delivered must be.

Given the characteristics of the air delivered into an auditorium, you can tell what condition will exist in the room.

You can find the volume of air required to maintain a given condition in an auditorium.

You can determine the total heat that must be removed from the air at one wet bulb temperature to cool it to another wet bulb.

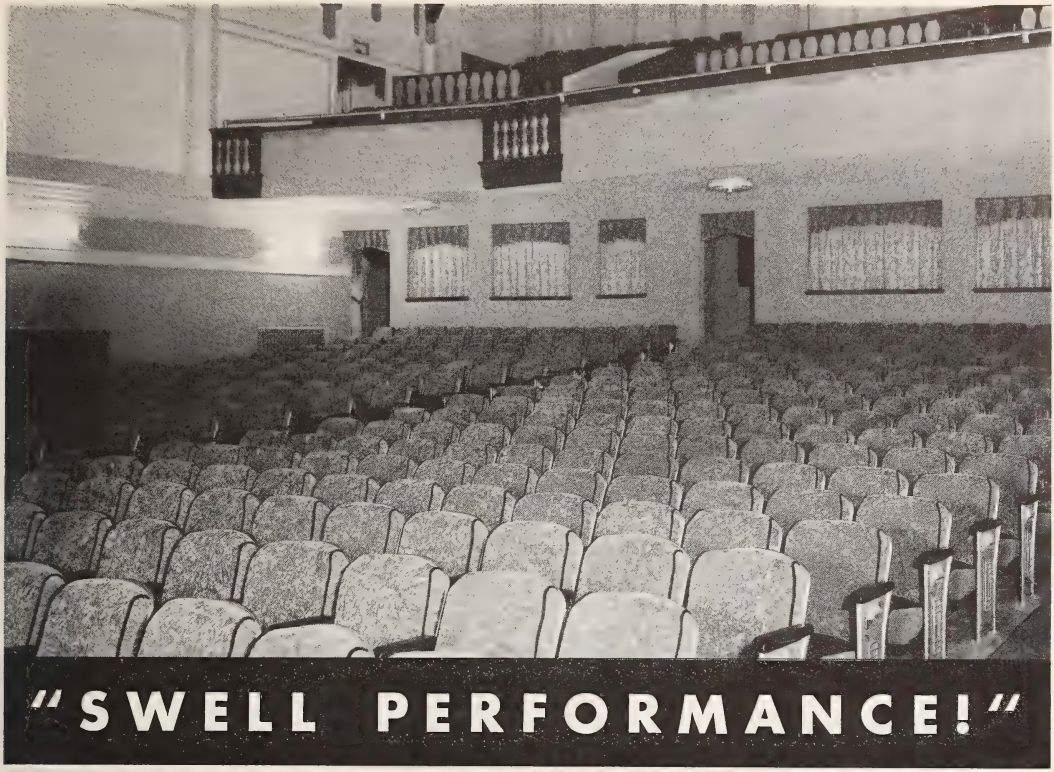
PROTECTIVE COATING: Take any color in oil and mix it with a good grade of clear light varnish and it forms a coating that is excellent for toilets and doors and on all surfaces that are subject to hard wear. When mixed with a spar varnish it forms a paint excellent for attraction frames, box offices or marquee attraction signs.

men, and even some carpenters, seem to think that they can design grilles. It is a fallacy. Grille engineering is a highly specialized study, and whereas a home-made grille might cost $6, and a proper bought grille might cost 20, it is very bad economy to save the $14 and put in the home-made grille. Air delivered by an inefficient grille, and air delivered by the correct grille is just as different as a baseball pitched by a sand lot scrub ball player and one pitched by Carl Hubbell. Because of the grip, the way the ball leaves his fingers, and the wrist motion Hubbell retains control of the ball to a great extent after the ball leaves his grasp. The proper grille does somewhat the same with the air leaving it.

EXHAUST SYSTEM

The other failure of the ventilating system is the lack of inadequacy of a proper exhaust system. Every fan or blower, due to its design, dimensions and the motor power and speed with which it is running, will push or pump air up to a certain fixed pressure. Unfortunately, in the great majority of the installations, this is a very low or small pressure, so small that it is not measured in pounds but in inches of water column. In even figures, a column of water one foot high exerts a pressure equivalent to half a pound per square inch. The average blower installed in theatres will push against a pressure of about ⅜-inch water column. Translating this in terms of pounds pressure per square inch so that you can see just how little it is: (½ ÷ 12) ⅜, or 3/96, or 1/31 of a pound per square inch. Since there are 16 ounces in a pound, this means, in round figures, half an ounce per square inch. You will agree that that is not much pressure. This means that such a blower, when it has once built up that pressure in the theatre, cannot force any more air into the theatre, but as the air escapes through the entrance doors or ceiling vents, it can or will replace only the air that escapes. Other than this it can only mildly agitate the air. Therefore unless a definite blower exhaust is connected to the theatre the movement of air through the theatre is so sluggish and slow that the ventilation becomes inadequate.



Air change is frequently referred to in connection with ventilation. There are still salesmen who tell theatre managers that if they will buy their blowers, they will have an air change in the theatre every 4 minutes or so. This sounds fine and seems as if it should be the answer to the problem.

Let's analyize this. Assume we have a theatre auditorium 40 feet wide, 20 feet high, 100 feet long: 40×20×100=80,000 cubic feet. The salesman has recommended a 20,000 cubic feet per minute (c.f.m.) blower. Certainly 80,000÷20,000=4 minutes. But this little theatre, we'll say, is tight and the only escape for the air is through the front doors. The blower, as described above, has a pressure characteristic of ⅜-inch water column (½ ounce per square inch). The three double front doors are kept open, each pair measures 5 feet wide and 7 feet high. The total area of escape is 3×5×7, or 105 square feet. The velocity of ⅜-inch water column is about 50 feet per minute; so 50×105=5,250, or 5,250 cubic feet of air passes out of the theatre every minute.

The blower, regardless of its rating of 20,000 c.f.m., can put into the theatre only 5,250 cubic feet of air per minute; therefore, the true air change in that theatre is 80,000÷5,250=15.2 minutes.

However, the fact that the air changes every 15 minutes, instead of every 4 minutes, is an unimportant reason why the blower is unsatisfactory. The point of this entire explanation is that it is the exhaust system that measures the rate of air change, not the capacity of the delivery blower. Many ventilating systems are absolutely useless without an adequate exhaust blower. With regard to the exhaust system, it too usually must have a duct system. Ability of a blower to remove so much air from a theatre is not enough—the parts of a theatre from which the air is removed are of utmost importance.

There is another checkup which is of interest and a guide to air motion. Assume that the theatre used in the example above had the 20,000 c.f.m. blower installed. We have determined that 5,250 cubic feet of air escaped every minute through the front doors. We decide to install an exhaust system to remove 10,000 c.f.m. from the theatre. Then 10,000+ 5,250=15,250 c.f.m. removed from the theatre. The cross-section of the theatre is 20×40=800 square feet. Now, the quantity of air moved divided by the cross-section area will give us an average velocity of the air through the theatre; thus, 15,250 ×800=19 feet per minute. A velocity of 19 feet per minute for air is really little or nothing. Even in good air-conditioning practice we design for an air movement as high as 50 feet per minute, so the conclusion is that for a theatre as described, a 20,000-foot blower and a 10,000-foot exhaust is not enough to give relief results.

METHODS OF HANDLING AIR

A GOOD DEAL of space has now been devoted to ventilation and you may wonder why. The handling of air, including velocities, directions, distribution and exhaust (which becomes recirculated air in real air-conditioning), is a fundamental requirement in any form of comfort cooling of theatres. Regardless of equipment or methods, first and last, air must be handled, and the nearer you can come to a proper method of handling, the better the results will be with any given equipment or method.

Summarizing: To handle air there must be a blower (to push the air), a duct system of proper size and shape, a series of grilles that either diffuse the air or give it direction without loss of velocity, and which in many instances may also control the volume at that point of delivery. Finally, there must be an exhaust (pulling the air) to move the air out so newer, fresher air can take its place. If your ventilating system is not performing as it should, look to one or more of these features as possible cause of the trouble.

EVAPORATIVE COOLING

The next step in theatre comfort cooling is evaporative cooling (the use of air washers or water sprays). This is an old principle and the applications of it to cooling air are many and varied. However, let it be definitely understood that evaporative cooling is not guess work; engineers have worked on this principle for many years. Probably (at least in the writer's opinion) the outstanding authority on evaporative cooling in treating air is Walter L. Fleisher, a consulting engineer of New York City. He has contributed a great mass of data on this subject; his studies and papers on it have been outstanding, and it is somewhat surprising to find out that there are still some engineers selling and installing evaporative (air washer) cooling equipment largely on a guess basis.

Evaporative cooling, in so many instances in the past, has been poorly designed, and now with the money and the impetus behind refrigerated air-conditioning, many theatre men have lost faith in washed air systems. In one of Mr. Fleisher's papers, published within the past year, he gives it as his opinion that if the wet bulb in a given locality remains constantly below 70° F., properly designed evaporative cooling systems can give satisfaction. The writer has had a very fine opportunity to check this statement and it has been found to be correct.

The only limiting factor is the size of the theatre, because as the theatre becomes larger, the quantity of air to be handled becomes so great that there seems not to be sufficient space for either ducts or equipment. When the different elements become so large, the cost seems to increase more rapidly than the size of the equipment. Invariably with such a large system, due to job conditions, it becomes necessary to cramp it here and there, and then the loss of efficiency indicates definitely the faults of cramping design. However, evaporation is very definitely a possible method of comfort cooling theatres, say up to 900 seats —but, in the words of Mr. Fleisher, it must be a "properly designed system."

There has been a study made by I. C. Allbright and John Everetts, Jr., of the average wet bulb over a period of years throughout the United States. This chart shows a map of the United States, and certain curved lines have been plotted on this map. Each line represents locations in the United States that have a wet bulb of a certain degree as represented by that line. By studying this chart, the areas of the United States where evaporative cooling equipment should prove effective, are Maine, northern New Hampshire, Vermont, northern New York, northern Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and all states west of a line drawn from a point where the North and South Dakota line joins the Minnesota line, to El Paso, Texas. The Atlantic Coast States, the Gulf Coast States and the regions bordering on most of the Mississippi river are certainly not the areas where great relief can be expected from evaporative cooling methods. Again, for emphasis, even in evaporative cooling jobs, air distribution and adequate exhaust are extremely important.

WELL WATER AND ICE

Further mediums of comfort cooling that might be placed between evaporative cooling and mechanical refrigeration are cooling with well water, and the use of ice as a cooling agent.

There is a relatively small area in the United States wheer cold well water is obtainable in sufficient quantity for comfort cooling of theatres. There are a number of instances of wells that produce 48° F. water, a rather large number that give water ranging from 51° F. to 56° F. Up to this limit the results obtainable are for all practical purposes equivalent to those of mechanical refrigeration. If the well water is about 56° F., the de-humidifying results obtainable are very questionable, even though there is substantial dry bulb cooling of the air. Well water may be used in air washers or through dry-finned coils.

For theatres up to 500 seats the use of ice is practicable, but the writer has never been able to see the real practicability of it in larger theatres. The greatest problem, it seems to me, is one of control. I have never seen what I consider an adequate ice job in a theatre over 500 seats. Also, I have, on several occasions, looked over jobs that were operating under a definite handicap because of an economy complex on the part of the manager who would not permit the proper quantity of ice to be put into the system each day. The results in these instances were little better than those obtained by washed air.

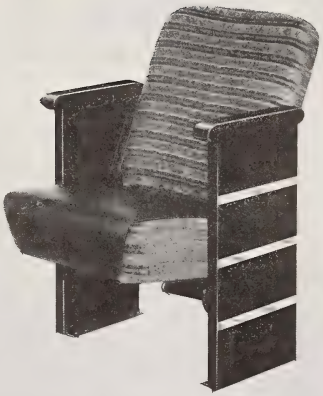
From this point, the next step is mechanical refrigeration, with the accuracy of control and absolute satisfaction if the system has been properly sized and designed. So much has been written about the refrigeration cycle, and on compressors, coils, controls, expansion valves, etc., that we won't go into it again here.

Perhaps one of the most serious problems confronting the owner of the small or medium-sized theatre in planning an air-conditioning system, is space for the equipment, for as mentioned once before, when this type of equipment is cramped, there is a definite loss in efficiency. The next problem is space for the location of ducts. There have been a number of jobs installed with ducts exposed inside the auditorium on the ceiling or along the side walls, which have in no way been objectionable and on the other hand highly efficient. This might be the answer in other situations.

But in the air-conditioning of the small theatre one of the greatest problems of all arises out of the confusion of the equipment market. The writer recently happened in on a situation where a theatre owner was going to buy a 3-ton compressor to air-condition a 600-seat theatre. He had been sold, hook, line and sinker, that it would be adequate and would do the job. This statement might not sound so absurd to some of you, but (as a rather homely comparison) this was just as if a shoe salesman had tried to sell the writer, who wears a No. 10 shoe, a No. 2 shoe and had convinced me that it would be just as comfortable as a No. 10!



There are many pitfalls in comfort cooling; there is no perfect installation. But we owe it to ourselves and to our patrons to get the most for our comfort cooling dollar. First and last, we start with air, we end with air, we must put it where we want it, we must remove it in time for a fresh supply. This means proper blowers, properly designed ducts, correct grilles and correct air velocities.—J. T. K.

000 cubic feet. It is of electric type, operated on altarnating current.

The machine is attached to an ordinary light circuit, the current from which passes into a transformer to raise the voltage. Provided with an electrical condenser and fans, the machine intermittently effects an electric discharge which produces a chemical change in the atmosphere creating ozone (O_3) from the atmospheric oxygen (O_2).

As has become quite generally known to health authorities during the last few years, and as pointed out in BETTER THEATRES previously, ozone not only kills at least some disease-causing bacteria, but it "sweetens" the air. In addition, it has been asserted that ozone, being really "heavier oxygen," has a tonic effect upon the human organism.

Other models in the National line besides the largest include one adapted to auditoriums seating up to 300, and another for auditoriums seating up to 600. The mechanisms are housed in a rectangular housing of black crackle finish, and they are adjustable for low or high production.

5-Stage Amplifier With Compensating Type Tone Control

A FIVE-STAGE a.c. operated amplifier for theatre sound systems, with externally adjustable tone control de-

The output rating is 32 watts, and transformer, resistors and condenser are well over-sized. Exciter lamp current supply, adjustable to either 10- or 8½-volt lamps, is built-in. Rheostat and ammeter are standard equipment. Variable impedances are 2, 4, 8 and 500 ohms. For monitoring, a dynamic speaker with its own volume control is built into the case.

sign of the previous type on the market, represents a number of changes.

The motor employed with the new model is compound-wound instead of shunt-wound for the purpose of eliminating any influence of temperature on the constancy of speed.

Means have also been added to adjust the negative carbon assembly in a parallel motion vertically and laterally with greater convenience. Clockwise motion of a thumb-screw acts on an eccentric lever to rotate the shaft; upon this shaft are two eccentrics supporting the main negative frame. At the extreme upper position the negative carbon is higher than the center of the positive crate. When the screw is all the way in, the center of the positive is in line with the lower edge of the positive crater, giving correct position vertically.

For lateral motion of the negative assembly, a knob is provided, movement of which, to the right, moves the entire assembly toward the operator and to the right side of the crater; clockwise motion of the knob

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE DEPARTMENT DEALING WITH ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN AND MATERIALS, DECORATION AND FURNISHINGS

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES: One of the principal functions of this department is to answer inquiries pertaining to preliminary considerations in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. All questions receive the personal attention of Peter M. Hulsken, A.I.A., contributing editor of this department and a practicing architect who long has specialized in theatre design. He will be glad to offer advice, suggestions and criticisms. Working plans, however, cannot be supplied. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification.

THE QUESTION:

WE HAVE a building suitable for a theatre in several ways. It is 53 feet wide, 110 feet long and 25 feet high. This is cut into three stores 50 feet long, the center one being 18 feet wide, which leaves a space in the rear of the building about 60 feet long.

Could we arrange this to be 18 feet wide and 110 feet long, and seat about 250 people downstairs and make suitable balcony for about 100 seats?—C.T.B.

THE ANSWER:

IF WE UNDERSTAND your inquiry correctly, it is your intention to make the theatre proper 18 feet wide and 110 feet long. We regret to state that a width of 18 feet is too narrow for an auditorium, and several States do not allow such a width. If a center aisle were used, there would be room only for four seats on each side of the center aisle, provided 18 feet represent inside dimensions. You would require 31 rows of seats, and while the depth of the auditorium could accommodate that many rows, we do not advise the construction of such a theatre.

A balcony with 100 seats would also be quite a problem, as it would have to be rather steep to permit the proper sightlines. Then there is the matter of men's and women's rooms and foyer to be taken care of.

We suggest that you use 18 feet for lobby purposes only, reduce the depth of the store rooms, and build the auditorium proper behind the stores. In that case, you could make the auditorium as wide as it should be.

THE QUESTION:

I CONTEMPLATE opening a theatre in a small town, using an existing building. The existing structure is of brick, 24 feet wide by 100 feet long. The building now has a wood floor and ceiling, plastered walls, plate glass front, and is located on a corner lot, facing Main Street. The floor is on a level with the street. The ceiling is 12 feet from the floor. The roof is sloped from front to rear, and there is a 4-foot clearance between ceiling and roof in the front of the building, and slopes from this point to no clearance in the rear. I would like to know the best arrangements for a seating capacity of 250 to 300. If possible, I would like to have a small balcony for colored patrons.—R.B.C.

THE ANSWER:

THE BEST seating arrangement for an auditorium 24 feet wide would have a center aisle with five seats on one side and six seats on the other side. For 250 capacity, you will require 23 rows of seats, or 60 feet minimum, leaving 40 feet for lobby, foyer, screen platform and wall thickness.

Making the lobby 10 feet deep, and the foyer 6 feet wide, you will have sufficient space for proper distance from screen to first row of seats. If you own the vacant lot in the rear of the theatre, the screen may be placed directly on the rear stage wall by building, outside of the stage wall, a compartment for speakers.

The floor slope should be not less than 3 feet, leaving the floor from platform apron to the back of the fifth row, level. The ceiling height of 12 feet is not sufficient, but since there is a 4-foot clearance between roof and ceiling, it may be well to remove the present ceiling joists and plaster the new ceiling directly on the roof joists. In this case the space between ceiling and roof should be insulated.

Unless the entire roof is substantially raised, there will be no space to provide for a balcony.

The projection room should be located over the lobby, and the roof over the projection room will have to be located above the level of the present roof. Should a balcony be required, the entire roof will have to be raised at least 7 feet.

THE QUESTION:

I AM PLANNING on building a theatre seating 400 in a small town of 1000 population, but with a very good and large drawing area—farming communities. I own a lot 60x140 feet. I would like to have two stores, size 23x60, one on each side of theatre lobby if possible, which would make lobby 14x60, all front street entrance and theatre to be at the rear of these stores and lobby. What dimensions for 400 seats, also height of ceiling, length of foyer, advisable distance from front row to screen? Also advise the cheapest type of construction to comply with fire ordinances, which call for brick, tile or its equivalent.

What would be a good slant for the floor? What would be the cheapest type of interior finish? Also heating and your suggestion as to where to place furnace. What would be the size of projection booth and size of port holes? Please give size and height of stage; want to get in picture 14 feet wide or larger. Please suggest latest and reasonable lighting for theatre.—E.M.

THE ANSWER:

ACCORDING TO your sketch, there is a space 60 feet wide and 80 feet deep, which is to be used for the auditorium. It will be more economical in construction to use 44 feet in width in place of the 60 feet. This will give a seating arrangement with a center bank of 12 seats, with an aisle on each side, and two wall banks of four seats each, making a total of 20 seats across the width of the auditorium. To obtain a seating capacity of 400, it will require 20 rows, figuring the spacing of the rows 32 inches from back to back. The required floor space for seats will be 43 feet. Figuring the depth of the stage 14 feet, and the distance between the first row of seats and projection screen at 20 feet, there will be left about 10 feet for foyer.

If it will be possible to reduce the depth of the stores to 53 feet, men's and women's toilet rooms can then be located behind the stores, where they would be more commodious than if placed at each end of foyer between standee railing and back wall of stores, which, of course, could be done if necessary. The length of the foyer between the toilet rooms would be 28 feet, 6 inches.

The most economical type of roof construction to comply with fire ordinances consists in clear span steel joists with concrete or metal deck.

The ceiling height above the high point of the auditorium floor should not be less than 17 feet.

Cinder blocks for exterior walls seem to be cheaper than brick or tile, and if they are laid up correctly, they can be decorated very effectively without plastering the surface.

The auditorium ceiling should be plastered with acoustical plaster. The slope of the floor should not be less than 3 feet, starting at the back of the second row, or 2 feet, 6 inches starting at the back of the fifth row. The furnace or boiler room may be located under the stage, and a hot air system for auditorium, combined with a steam system for stores, lobby and foyer, may prove to be the cheapest.

The projection room should be located over back of stores, and the lobby and should not be less than 20 feet wide and 10 feet deep. The portholes of the projection room vary in sizes; for projectors, they generally are 12x12 inches; for lookouts, 10x12 inches; and for effect machines, 2½ feet square.

The floor of the stage should not be less than 3 feet, 4 inches above lower part of auditorium floor, and the proscenium arch should be about 28 feet wide and 16 feet high.

Indirect lighting is advisable, and the use of troughs at the ceiling would be very effective and inexpensive for your theatre, although modern indirect and semi-direct fixtures would be suitable, particularly in the foyer and lounge areas. Lighting methods are usually determined by the cost allowable, and by the general style of interior treatment.

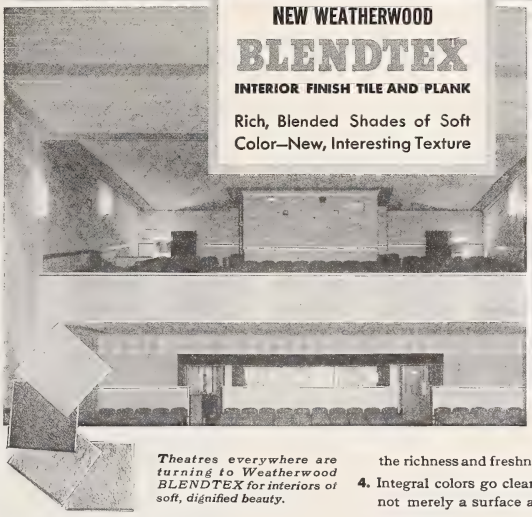
THE QUESTION:

I WANT to remodel a building which is almost new and is for sale. This building is 72 feet long, 32 feet wide, two stories, brick construction. I want to add on to building a 21-foot front, which is next to sidewalk, and 40 feet can be added to rear if ever needed. This second story is strong and could be used, part of it, as a balcony, and has 12-foot ceiling above it and 12-foot ceiling below, with basement under one-third of building at end where I want to add 21 feet more, making building 93 feet long.

What size foyer and lobby would you recommend, and how many seats could you get in lower floor, and how many in balcony? What would be cost of sloping floor and putting on 21-feet front, which will include front canopy, lobby, foyer, toilets, stairways. I thought that front of present building could be used as front on addition and only have to add new sides. Also want to make two small rooms on each side, 12x24.—A.W.H.

THE ANSWER:

AFTER ADDING 21 feet to the front of your present building, the area will be 32x93 feet. Planning for a lobby 12 feet deep, and a foyer 8 feet deep, there will be left for seating area, after deducting the required space between screen and first row of seats, space to accommodate 18 rows of seats, spaced 31 inches back-to-back. With the auditorium 32 feet wide, a center section of 14 seats is advisable with wall aisle on each side, making the total seating capacity 252 seats on the lower floor.



If you intend to build a balcony, it will

Beautiful Interiors PLUS Better Hearing Conditions —Have Both With This One Material

Showing easy application of BLENDTEX Tile to ceilings, using adhesive.

BLENDTEX Plank quickly, easily applied to both new and old walls.

Theatres everywhere are turning to Weatherwood BLENDTEX for interiors of soft, dignified beauty.

■ Your audiences will appreciate the distinctive individuality and charm which Weatherwood* BLENDTEX brings quickly and economically to theatre interiors, new or old. But BLENDTEX does more than provide attractive walls and ceilings. It improves acoustics — provides better hearing conditions. At the same time, it insulates against heat and cold.

READ THESE IMPORTANT BLENDTEX ADVANTAGES

1. Blended shades of harmonious colors combine with a new, interesting texture to add charm and dignity to the interior.
2. Improves acoustics and quiets sound—at the same time insulates against heat and cold.
3. Durable—special treatment of surface increases resistance to wear—helps preserve and prolong the richness and freshness of colors and texture.
4. Integral colors go clear through the material—not merely a surface application.
5. Predecorated surface saves both time and cost of painting.
6. Adaptable—the wide variety of shapes and sizes gives unlimited scope to expression of individual taste in design.
7. Quickly, easily applied to both new and old walls and ceilings—goes right over old walls.
8. Economical—a popular-priced material. With all its advantages, BLENDTEX costs no more than ordinary insulating tile and plank.

be necessary to remove the entire second floor construction, as 12 feet from auditorium floor is too high to obtain proper sightlines. I doubt if the seating capacity of the balcony could exceed 112 seats.

The addition and marque would cost approximately $6,000.

The matter of providing two small rooms 12x24 feet on each side of lobby is entirely out of the question, as the spaces on each side of lobby should be used for women's and men's toilet rooms, entered from foyer, which extends across the entire width of the auditorium.

Of course, if you add the 40 feet to the rear, the plan changes entirely. The seating capacity may be increased and two small stores may be provided in the front; however, do not plan for a lobby less than 12 feet wide.

THE QUESTION:

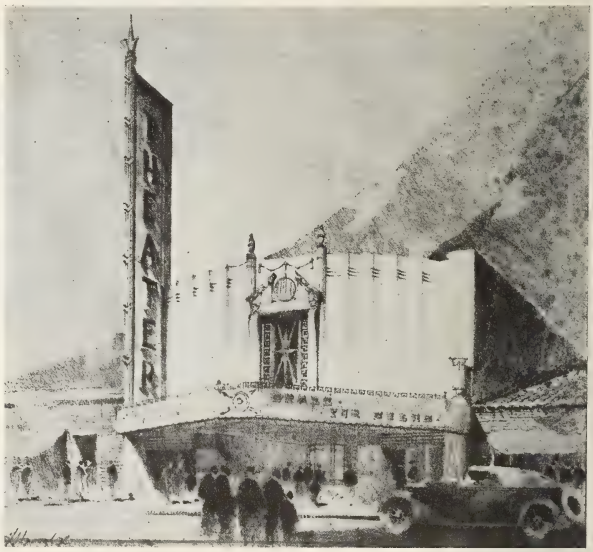
MY ASSOCIATES have in mind the erection of a modern theatre seating between 1400 and 1500, all on one floor. A lot 79x205 feet is available. Can a theatre of this size be built on this lot with good results? Nothing of the "deluxe" or stadium type is desired, just a presentable building, fireproof of course, with modern type front and heat and ventilation systems.

How much should be spent on such a theatre, and what rental can the owners expect from a good neighborhood location? How much would sketches or complete working plans cost?—W.O.S.

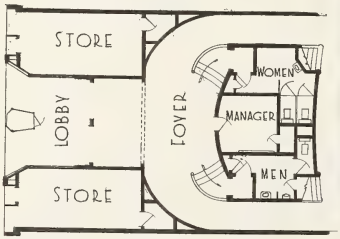
THE ANSWER:

A LOT 79x205 feet seems to be large enough for the erection of a theatre with 1400 seats on one floor. If there are no alleys on either side, it will be necessary to provide for exit courts. These courts shall not be less than 8 feet in width; so, if they should be necessary, you must deduct these courts from the width of the lot.

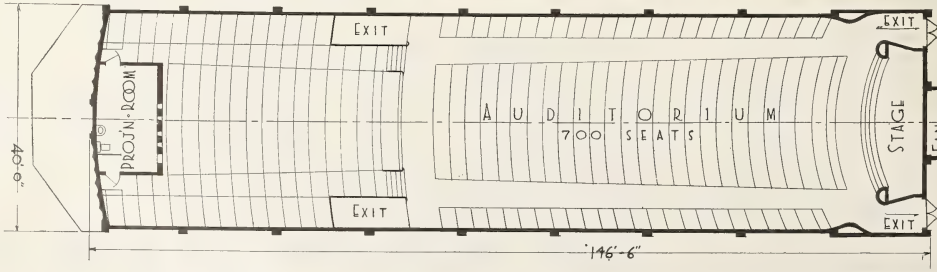
The most economical width for the building would be 60 feet, as this would provide a maximum amount of seats across the width with a minimum number of aisles.



The minimum cost of a 1400 seat theatre would be approximately $90,000, exclusive of equipment; and at that price, the strictest economy would have to be exercised in the general design and in the construction.



The returns from a well located theatre vary according to specific conditions. Most leases are made on a basis of 10% of the cost of the building, and from 6% to 8% on the value of the land, the lessee to equip the theatre and put this equipment up as collateral for his lease. The matters of taxes and insurance are too variously arranged to be dealt with here.



Architects' commissions are based upon 6% of the cost of the building. This compensation includes supervision of the construction. For sketches, some architects charge a lump sum, others base them on 1% of their estimated cost.

A PLAN TO OVERCOME LIMITATIONS OF LOT SIZE

ACOUSTICAL PRODUCTS AND ENGINEERING

ACOUSTICAL treatment for the motion picture theatre auditorium is almost always necessary, in some degree, and is properly to be taken into consideration in determining the decorative forms and materials. Motion picture speech and music can now be recorded and reproduced with great fidelity, but the transmission process includes acoustics as well as electro-mechanical provisions; hence, natural sound calls for precision in acoustical adjustments with respect to the entire available frequency band.

Acoustic materials are available not only to suit every acoustic defect, but to fit into most any decorative scheme, and to meet requirements as to labor costs under varying circumstances. Materials most frequently used are sound absorbent tiles, acoustic plaster, rock wool and similar products, while some wood and synthetic veneers possess certain sound-absorption characteristics. Which to use partly depends on the natural acoustic characteristics of the auditorium and the decorative scheme desired. Most manufacturers of acoustic materials can supply an acoustical analysis of an auditorium.

ADVERTISING NOVELTIES

THE thing to be accomplished through the use of advertising novelties, of one type or another is the chief consideration in their selection. Among the popular novelties, however, which have been used by theatres for stimulating matinee business, building up juvenile performances or bolstering business on week nights are balloons, thermometers on which are imprinted pictures of stars, buttons, badges, pennants, confections, toys, etc. Also available in great variety are articles like toilet sets, pocket lighters, etc., manufactured especially for use as premiums.

AIR CONDITIONING AND VENTILATING EQUIPMENT

FOR HUMAN comfort, air conditioning requires not only the heating and cooling of air in accordance with seasonal conditions, but adjustment of relative humidity, removal of dirt and pollen, and constant exhaustion of expired air from the theatre and its replacement with fresh conditioned air.

Ventilation, as commonly referred to in the theatre, involves merely the supplying of fresh air. A ventilating system may therefore consist only in provisions for drawing fresh air into the building and giving it, by means of blower fans and ducts leading to openings (grilles) on the interior, suitable circulation. To such a system may be added a dehumidifier or cooling apparatus (such as a cold-water spray chamber). In no case does a ventilation system mean air-conditioning, which term must refer to all the provisions indicated in the first paragraph above, and normally implies automatic control.

Cooling of air may be achieved in several ways. There are a few theatres in which a slight cooling effect has been attained by fans capable of introducing fresh air (with proper distribution arrangements) under extremely high pressure. Any kind of controlled cooling, however, demands means of placing the air in contact, directly or indirectly, with a cooling agent, which may be either a chemical refrigerant or water. Mechanical refrigeration is frequently necessary for cooling even when water is the immediate cooling agent. Where well water is available at a temperature of about 55°, this water may be used without mechanical refrigeration. How mechanical refrigeration may be applied depends upon local and State regulations.

Air Filters, consisting in a dust-collecting material of cotton or other type of fabric or mesh on rollers or fixed in a metal frame, are designed to filter dirt out of the air introduced into the theatre through the ventilating system. They are not only advised for the complete air-conditioning system, but are effective in connection with a simple ventilating system. Dirty air represents a maintenance problem. Air filters, properly installed, minimize this problem.

Ventilating grilles, which are located at the wall openings of air ducts through which the air is introduced into or removed from the interior of the theatre are to varying degrees ornamental and thus prevent these openings from being unsightly. This was once the principal function of grilles, but today a scientifically designed grille gives direction to the air flow, diffuses the air stream and regulates the quantity of air passing through.

AIR PURIFICATION: OZONE

OZONE is a specific, unstable form of oxygen which rapidly breaks down into the ordinary form, but in so doing produces oxidation (cold burning) of impurities in the air, especially those which are characterized by unpleasant odors, which for the most part are readily dispelled with oxidation. Ozone is also deadly to many forms of microbe life, and its use as a purifier therefore does not cover a disagreeable smell with a (theoretically) agreeable one, but chemically removes the impurities and causes of odor by converting them into different and innocuous chemical substances.

Ozone is produced by chemical action, ultra-violet rays, electric discharge, and a number of other means. Generators are available in various sizes, suited to lounges, toilet rooms or an entire theatre. Small units are inexpensive. Larger and more costly ones have blower and filter apparatus, while still others are designed for use in connection with central air-conditioning systems.

A minute percentage of ozone in the air produces a sense of physical exhilaration and well-being, since it is oxygen in a form very readily utilized.

AMPLIFIERS

IN FUNCTION, as part of a sound reproduction system, these are panels or cabinets that take sound current from the photoelectric cell (or other source) and use it as a pattern to produce a similar but vastly more powerful current for operation of the loudspeakers. Modern compact apparatus may have an amplifying power of ten billion to one.

Amplifiers today contain their own power supplies, needing only connection with an a.c. or d.c. power line, and dispensing with all auxiliary batteries, generators or rectifiers; and in addition commonly supply polarizing voltage to photocells, and sometimes current to exciter lamps and loudspeaker fields.

Very small, low-power amplifiers may be mounted on the projector, deriving their operating power from the main amplifier.

ANCHORS FOR CHAIRS

THESE ARE KNOWN as theatre expansion bolts. A leading type anchor consists of an especially long tapered fin head bolt, conical cup, lead sleeve, washer and hexagon nut. For best results these should be placed into a hole ½-inch in diameter. It is suggested that one use a 17/32-inch diameter drill to allow for wear. The bolt is set head downward into the hole. The setting tool furnished with each order, is a hollow piece of rod, which is slipped over the bolt against the washer, and when driven with a few blows of a hammer, expands the conical cup which spreads out, increasing the diameter of the head of the bolt to the absolute diameter of the hole and thereby allowing no lead to be driven past the head of the bolt, and at the same time expands the lead sleeve into every crevice in the concrete.

Another method, of later development, combines lead and steel jackets and employs lead, a dead metal, for anchorage, a method calculated to eliminate any transmission of vibration to or cracking of masonry.

When placed in a hole and driven down with the application tool, the steel cone expands over the head of the bolt and completely fills all space between the head of bolt and wall of hole, thus preventing the lead from flowing past the head of bolt, and it wedges the bolt head in the hole. The lead jacket expands and flows over the steel cone completely filling the hole around the shank of the bolt and gives a soft but powerful grip between the bolt and masonry throughout the entire length of the lead jacket.

ARCHITECTURAL MATERIALS, DECORATIVE

PROGRESS in chemistry and in manufacturing technique have made available a wide variety of decorative materials to supplement or supplant the familiar marble, stone and terra cotta. Glass, and the plastics known as phenolics, are now obtainable in almost infinite variety of colors and patterns. New manufacturing methods provide marble in thin slabs that are translucent. Wood veneers and fireproof materials having the appearance of wood are offered in large number of grains and colors. Glass and ceramic tiles can be had in great variety.

Materials can be chosen for any decorative scheme, any color scheme, any lighting scheme and any architectural style.

CARBONS, PROJECTION

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons are required for projection in most motion picture theatres (all except those using incandescent projection lamps). The type and size of carbons required depends upon the type of arc, and in this connection the reader is referred to the several articles in The Equipment Index on projection lamps.

The newer development of a positive carbon of different core composition than previous types, smaller in diameter, and non-rotating, has resulted in the attainment of a much whiter projection light at low and medium amperages than is obtainable from low-intensity and hi-low arcs. This carbon, used with a negative carbon of adapted type, is the source of the so-called "suprex" arc. A report of the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, has stated:

"A comparison of the Suprex carbon arc with the high-low arc at a current of from 50 to 60 amperes, showed that the Suprex carbon arc provides a light of equal intensity, but with a more even field, and of course at a much lower operating cost."

This carbon is used with a special lamp and certain low-voltage rectification facilities developed for it. (See Motor-Generators and Rectifiers.)

A still later development in projection carbons (in the United States) is a super-high-intensity carbon for use in very large theatres where the size of screen demands utmost illumination for the best presentation of the picture. It has an effective current capacity of 180 amperes.

CARBON SAVERS

THESE DEVICES, which permit use of carbons down to a very short stub, consist in a metal rod that is clamped into the carbon jaws of the lamp house, one end of the rod being provided with means for holding a stub of carbon that is too short for use in the normal way. There are several methods of attaching the stub to the carbon saver, some of them permitting use of the carbon down to one inch.

CARPETS

CARPETS are selected according to four qualifications:

1. Appearance, which should be in harmony with the general decorative scheme.

2. Durability. It has been found that because of the extreme wear to which theatre carpets are subjected, real economy is seldom effected by buying the cheaper grades.

3. Acoustic considerations—installation of carpet (or of heavier carpet) may aid in overcoming certain acoustical defects in an auditorium.

The standard weaves, in order of cost, from the most to the least expensive are Chenille, Saxony, American Oriental, Wilton, Axminster, Velvet and Tapestry.

Padding under the carpet provides a softer and more comfortable footing; increases carpet life very materially by reducing friction and keeping the carpet out of direct contact with the floor; and improves sound absorbing properties, providing increased acoustic absorption per unit area.

Upon the last point, the ideal chair is one that has precisely the same sound absorption as the human body; in a theatre thus seated it is never necessary to change sound volume with changing audience conditions, and sound quality is always equal to that obtained with a full house. Veneer chairs should never be used.

The importance of well designed chairs to the comfort of the theatre patron—and all possible comfort must be provided—advises careful selection of chairs in the first place, expertly supervised installation, constant maintenance and periodical reseating. Much scientific research with respect to posture and materials has gone into the designing and production of modern theatre chairs, and a similar, painstaking attitude toward seating is indicated on the part of the theatre owner.

Chairs may be procured with full spring construction, or spring-edge seats, and with padded backs. Row end standards may be obtained in special designs to suit a particular decorative scheme. Coverings, of course, are always selected according to the interior treament of the auditorium (see also articles in The Equipment Index on Chair Covers, Chair Refinishing Materials and Upholstering Materials).

CHAIR COVERS

CHAIR COVERS create an impression of coolness during the summer months, and are especially advised for theatres without any means of cooling the air. Main floor chairs require a full cover, while the slope at which balcony chairs are commonly placed permits use of a quarter-back.

CHAIR FASTENING CEMENT

THE METAL pieces to which theatre chairs are bolted are firmly fastened to the floor by special cement made for that purpose, which hardens in approximately ten minutes. In reseating a theatre, the old chair bolts are removed from the floor, and new ones inserted and recemented. (See Anchors for Chairs.)

CHAIR REFINISHING MATERIALS

CHAIRS MAY be refinished in a short time, in practically any color, and without removing them from the chair frame. Materials now available provide new flexible surfaces that hide worn seat overings, will not crack or peel, and are impervious to moisture and perspiration. In some cases, costs may make refinishing a suitable method of ameliorating bad seating conditions.

Chair pads for veneer seats are obtainable, as are special chair materials which may help to correct poor acoustics in theatres having veneer chairs.

CHANGE MAKERS

OCCUPYING little space in the box office, modern change making machines prevent annoying errors in offering change to a patron and loss to the theatre through mistakes. A touch of the keyboard delivers the correct change into a metal cup, from which it is easily scooped. CONDENSERS (LENSES)

THE PROJECTION condenser is located between the lamp house and the projector, and serves to focus the light on the aperture. It serves a similar purpose in spotlight projection. The condenser is a single glass lens, unmounted, made in various shapes—moon shape, plano-convex, bi-convex and meniscus. The diameters of projection condensers range from 2¼ to 7¼ inches; of spotlight condensers from 5 to 8 inches. Focal lengths for theatre work run from 6½ to 9½ inches.

(These lenses should not be confused with electrical condensers, which are used in amplifiers and other portions of the sound equipment, and are not lenses, but pairs of conductors spaced by insulation and mounted in a suitable case.)

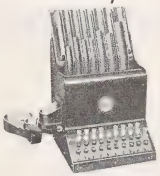
ARE YOU LOSING PROFITS AT YOUR BOX OFFICE?



Humans will err! When a ticket seller works rapidly under strain, errors are bound to occur—errors in mental calculation—in the selection of coins. Overpayments result that may mean a substantial loss of profits over a period of time.

Model 201
For the theatre whose admissions include pennies.

These losses are impossible when change is made with a BRANDT AUTOMATIC CASHIER, as it cannot mispay.

The sale of tickets is also greatly speeded up because but one key—the key corresponding to the price of admission—need be pressed to deliver the change. For example, with an admission of 38c—tender of $1.00—key 38 is pressed and 62c delivered. There are no mental calculations; no coins to handle; no unnecessary delays or waiting in line at the box office.

CURTAIN CONTROL MACHINES

SMOOTH AND silent opening and closing of curtains are effected, either from backstage or from the projection room controls, by automatic machines that operate at the touch of a button. The curtain may be stopped at any point along the stage, or its motion reversed as desired.

The equipment consists of a motor, a track and a cable, as well as snaps to which the curtain is fastened. The motor may be placed in the grids, which makes it possible to fly the entire mechanism, curtain and all. Special models for small theatres are available at relatively low cost.

CUTOUT MACHINES

EXPLOITATION cutouts for lobby and marquee displays are easily made by tracing the desired pattern on wall board and then guiding a cutout machine along the pattern. A small electric motor driven by power from a lamp socket does the work, and by substitution of cutting edges the machine may be used as an ordinary saw to build the frame and supports for cutouts or any other display.

DIMMERS

THESE ARE electro-mechanical devices for controlling illumination. They permit fading out of any desired set of lights and fading in of others, soft or bright color combinations, and all the beautiful lighting effects that produce as desired, a gay or a restful tone and atmosphere. They are necessary to any effective system of decorative illumination in variable color tones.

EFFECT MACHINES

EFFECTS IN lighting and still projection for both stage and screen are obtained with special machines, essentially stereopticons, that produce illusions of depth. These are available in various types, depending upon the effects desired. Backgrounds for stage shows, in color, can be projected and changed at pleasure, or the opening of a feature picture be framed in color or given a superimposed, changing pattern.

ELECTRICAL MEASURING INSTRUMENTS

THE DEPENDENCE of the modern theatre upon electricity, and the immensely varied and intricate apparatus used in the projection room, backstage and throughout the house, frequently advise having in the theatre measuring and testing equipment to assist the projectionist, stage electrician and maintenance engineer.

Voltmeters and ohmmeters are essential to finding most electrical troubles if the work is to be done with any reasonable speed. Ammeters, wattmeters, illuminometers, decibel meters and oscilloscopes are valuable adjuncts that pay for themselves in reducing current consumption, avoiding equipment breakdown, making possible faster repairs, and minimizing maintenance costs.

Combinations of most of these instruments are available; thus, a single instrument with suitable auxiliaries mounted on the same panel may serve as voltmeter, ammeter, ohmmeter and decibel meter. Such combinations may, in the latest equipment, be further combined with an oscilloscope.

FILM CABINETS

METHODS OF storing film methodically, and in a manner that avoids any chance that the projectionist may use the wrong reel, are provided by modern fireproof film cabinets. They are available in units holding from three to twelve reels, and some are so arranged that on opening the cover the reel is raised and brought within grasp. Each reel occupies an individual compartment heat-insulated from all others. Arrangements for outside ventilation are also provided.

FILM CABINET STANDS

AVAILABLE in sizes that accommodate from one to three film cabinets, these units mount the film cabinets at the most convenient operating height and permit them to be moved about the projection room when necessary. Some models hold the cabinet at an angle that prevents a reel of film being laid on top, compelling the projectionist to store it properly, and leave it stored until the time has come for its use.

To "Lift the Face" of your Theatre start with a TYL-A-MAT floor

Audubon Theatre, N. Y.

Look at your lobby floor—all your patrons do. A run-down-at-the-heel appearance indicates poor business or a lack of progressiveness.

TYL-A-MATS will dress up that old, cracked or otherwise unsightly floor. They have been chosen for many years by the largest theatres to enhance the portals of the modern theatre. Now TYL-A-MATS, more beautiful than ever, can be installed in the smallest house at very reasonable cost. An investment in TYL-A-MATS will cut your cleaning costs because their construction tends to keep dirt outside your auditorium.

Our color-illustrated TYL-A-MAT folder, together with a generous sample of the actual mat, is yours for the asking. Write for it today.

FIRE EXTINGUISHERS

THERE ARE several types of fire extinguishers suitable to theatres—the carbon tetrachloride extinguisher, the soda-and-acid mechanism, the foam type and the portable carbon dioxide hand type. They should be distributed throughout the theatre in accordance with the directions of fire department officials, care being taken that any extinguisher likely to be used in the presence of electrical apparatus is safe for that purpose, and not capable of electrocuting the man who uses it.

FIRE SHUTTERS, PROJECTION ROOM

FIREPROOF shutters for projection room ports isolate the projection room in an emergency (by melting of fusible links in case of fire), operating either automatically or through the intervention of the projectionist. They minimize the chance of panic and lower insurance rates, and are commonly required by fire regulations.

FOUNTAINS

ORNAMENTAL fountains are sold as units for installation in lobby, foyer or lounge, alone or in conjunction with statuary. Drinking fountains are offered in plain and decorative types, recessed or pedestal.

Two types of automatic drinking fountains are available; one operating by means of a photocell (the head of the person stooping to drink interrupts a beam of light, which interruption actuates the water valve); the other operates upon the principle of electrical capacitance, the approach of a human head upsetting the balance of a critical electrical circuit, and thus actuating the water valve.

HEARING AIDS

THESE ARE receiving instruments (phones) either of air conduction or bone conduction type, to assist patrons whose hearing is impaired. They are plugged into suitable outlet boxes permanently mounted and wired in selected seating locations. Individual volume controls, which the patrons can adjust at will, may be provided either on the outlet boxes or on the cord leading to the receiver.

Sound may be taken from the main theatre system, either directly or through an auxiliary amplifier, or may be picked up via microphone from the screen speakers and passed through a low-power amplifier that is part of the hearing aid system. Because of the relatively large number of people who do not hear well, and their varied influence on theatre attendance, group hearing aids are to be regarded as regular equipment for the motion picture theatre.

HEATING SYSTEMS AND ACCESSORIES

HEATING SYSTEMS used in the theatre present different requirements from those of other public buildings because of the concentration of occupants in the auditorium, and the wide variation in the number that may be present at any given time.

Heat distributing systems are of two general kinds, those using standard steam radiators and those circulating masses of warmed air through a ventilating system. The latter may of course be part of a complete air conditioning system (See Air-Conditioning).

The fuel may be oil, gas or coal. Oil and gas are preferable where automatic control is provided in the system. With coal, automatic stokers reduce labor and insure efficient use of fuel.

HORN LIFTS AND HORN TOWERS

SOUND HORNS or speaker combinations may be struck to make room for stage performances by a number of means, of which one is the horn lift. When the stage is in use, the horns are concealed beneath it. When the screen is in use, an elevator working on hydraulic, drum and cable, or screw principle, lifts a portion of the stage with whatever setup may be on it toward the grid; the horns or speakers follow, rising until they are in correct position behind the screen.

Horn towers are steel structures on which the speaker equipment is mounted at the proper height above the stage; they are often mounted on rubber-tired, ball-bearing casters by means of which they can be moved silently into the wings when the stage is needed.

LAMPS, HIGH INTENSITY

HIGH INTENSITY projector lamps are of two types—reflector type, and condensing-lens type. Their selection depends on the size of the theatre and other local factors. The condenser-lens type is generally operated at from 115 to 130 amperes. The reflector type is generally operated at from 70 to 80 amperes.

LAMPS, INCANDESCENT FOR PROJECTION

INCANDESCENT LAMPS for theatre motion picture projection are usually of the low-voltage type for added efficiency and greater source concentration. They cannot be used on the ordinary lighting circuit without a transformer or regulator. The 900-watt, 30-ampere, T-20 bulb lamp usually provides acceptable results on good screens up to 16 feet wide at throws not greater than about 100 feet.

There are also available 1,000-watt prefocus base, and 1,500-watt bipost base, 100-120 volt, T-20 bulb lamps employing the biplane type of filament construction, which is inherently of higher cost but makes possible the requisite source concentration at ordinary circuit voltages and thus saves the cost of auxiliary apparatus. They are preferred where operating schedules are relatively short, and for projectors of the semi-portable type. Screen results equal or surpass those from the 900-watt lamp. The 1,500-watt lamp requires forced ventilation.

For portable 35-mm. projectors there are the 500-watt monoplane filament, and the 750-watt and 1,000-watt biplane filament lamps in short T-20 bulbs with medium prefocus bases. All are of the 100-120 volt type. The 750-watt and 1,000-watt lamps require forced ventilation.

For stereopticon projection there are the 500-watt, short T-20 bulb, medium prefocus base lamp; and the 100-watt, long T-20 bulb mogul prefocus base lamp. Both of the 100-120 volt types employ monoplane filaments.

LAMPS, GENERAL LIGHTING

INCANDESCENT lamps are made for every conceivable lighting use, and are described according to wattage, voltage, bulb shapes, bulb diameter, color or special purpose. Spotlight and floodlight lamps have concentrated filaments, and some types are prefocussed, the filament being mounted with especial accuracy. Colored lamps are available with spray finish inside the glass, and these are particularly suited to applications in which the lamps themselves are visible. Particularly effective are "lumiline" lamps, which provide a practically continuous line of light.

LAMPS, LOW INTENSITY

THIS CLASSIFICATION is rather general, inasmuch as it refers to all types of projection lamps designed for theatres requiring light of lower intensity. Lamps in this class are Low Intensity, Hi-Low and (although it is commonly referred to in the trade as "high-intensity") Suprex Carbon Arc lamps. All of these lamps are of the reflector type. The operating amperages for these lamps range from 15 to 80.

LAMPS, LOW-WATTAGE H. I.

THESE ARE projection lamps designed for a special d.c. arc, which gives, through the use of a non-rotating carbon of specific composition, a much whiter projection light at low and middle amperages than is obtainable with low-intensity and hi-lo arcs. At 45 amperes, this type has a light intensity as high as 7,000 lumens, which is as much as hi-lo develops at from 70 to 80 amperes, while the low-intensity arc has a light intensity of only about 2,000 lumens at 25 amperes.

LENSES, PROJECTION

THERE ARE two general classes—the condenser lens, which focuses the projection light on the aperture (see Condensers); and the objectives. The latter are commonly referred to as the projection lenses; they focus the light upon the screen. They are made in four standard diameters, with focal length as determined by the size of the screen and its distance from the projector.

HIGH INTENSITY PROJECTION IS NOW INDISPENSABLE TO HOLD AND INCREASE PATRONAGE

● A superior and outstanding quality of projection is required to hold the interest of the highly critical present day audience. Brilliant, Snappy, Snow White Magnarc High Intensity Light adds tremendously to the quality of your picture, be it black and white or color photography.

For the past four years theatres the country over have been modernizing projection with Peerless Magnarcs. Projection is the heart of the picture theatre and the most important place to modernize.

Don't think that high intensity projection is a luxury. It is a necessity. 4000 theatres having 75 per cent of the nation's total seating capacity are already using high intensity projection. Such wide use and immediate adoption must prove that it is the small theatre's only alternative to hold and increase patronage.

Peerless Magnarc Lamps produce 200 to 300 per cent more light on the screen than low intensity lamps, at the same current cost. Peerless Magnarc will modernize your projection and will keep it modern for years to come. It's the finest arc lamp ever built.

Get the facts. Write for new illustrated folder, "Get A Seat On The Bandwagon."

LETTERS, ATTRACTION BOARD

CHANGEABLE sign letters permit rapid change of marquee advertising. Such letters have been made of various metals and compositions as well as glass. Usually, however, they are either of cast metal or glass. Glass letters are commonly in panel form, with the letter translucent and the surrounding panel area opaque.

The so-called silhouette marquee letter gained wide usage immediately upon its introduction. It reverses the visual character of the glass translucent letter, being itself opaque, while the surrounding area is illuminated. The silhouette letter is of cast metal and is attached readily to rods or wires in front of translucent glass panels, which latter cover a metal lamp box. The lamp box fits into the structure of the marquee so as to be integral with it.

LIGHTS, SPOT AND FLOOD

ARC AND incandescent lamps are available for use on the stage, in the projection room, in coves, and in banks of incandescents that flood the stage from the wings. Arc lamps will burn from 25 to 140 amperes, and incandescents up to 2,000 watts. Most spotlights can be used for full flood as well. Spot and flood lights of incandescent type are designed for wattages of from about 75 to 2,000.

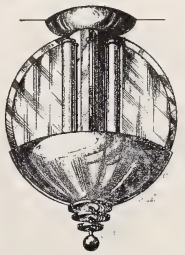
BETTER BOXOFFICE RECEIPTS



The improvement in projection quality a Super-Cinephor lens makes possible is reflected in better attendance records. Their more critical definition, reserve covering power and flatness of field on even the largest of screens gain audience good-will.

They are the first anastigmatic projection lenses — the first lenses that project a picture with all the detail, sharpness and tone value of the image that originally entered the camera lens.

Super-Cinephors are not expensive either—"One new patron a day will pay for a Super-Cinephor in a year, and any additional patronage is your profit." Write for complete description to Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 679 St. Paul Street, Rochester, N. Y.

MACHINES, TICKET

AUTOMATICALLY registering ticket dispensers facilitate the handling of box office peaks, and impart the impression of efficiency, cleanliness and business-like methods; they eliminate all excuses for errors on the part of the cashier (some type of dispensers make the usual errors impossible); and they may be regarded as necessary to any real assurance that box office losses are not occurring through cashier-doorman collusion. They are obtainable in motor-driven and manually operated types.

Also available is a ticket dispenser which automatically prints the ticket as it is issued. This mechanism is loaded only with blank rolls of paper tape, and the printed ticket bears both the number of the ticket and the date.

Automatic ticket dispensers are obtainable with from two to five ticket channels, each issuing mechanism being a unit so that a case for five channels will accommodate added mechanisms, up to five, as the business and price policy of the theatre call for at a time following the original installation. The cases are designed with counter tops to set flush with the counter of the box office.

MARQUEES

A MARQUEE is to be regarded as essential to the motion picture theatre. There are exceptions, due to location and form of building, but not many. Its function as a means of protection for patrons from rain and snow has become of less importance than its function as an advertising medium. It advertises the theatre and the program, by distinguishing the building from other commercial establishments on the street, by the theatricalism of its lighting, by announcing the features of the performance.

Marquees today have become more closely associated with the general architectural form of the theatre front than they originally were. They are frequently constructed according to specifications supplied by the architect, who has designed the marquee itself, along with other display and sign elements of the front, as a part of the facade.

Another later development is unit construction of marquees, providing prefabricated marquees to fit most any theatre entrance, complete with all attraction board equipment.

Most marquees have been rectangular in shape, but because the greatest amount of announcement space on such marquees cannot be read up and down the street, particularly on the side on which the theatre is located, other shapes have come into vogue, notably one combining rectangular with triangular forms.

Marquees are generally of sheet metal construction, with soffits of metal or glass illuminated by incandescent lamps or lighting troughs. There are, of course, many variations in pattern and illumination; however, the design should provide for attraction boards as integral parts of the structure.

The early type of carbon granule microphone has been almost completely replaced by later and superior instruments, the crystal and magnetic microphones. The condenser microphone used in early sound recording, while less favored today, is still decidedly advantageous to meet certain conditions of stage pickup. The crystal microphone, and the various types of magnetic microphone (velocity dynamic) have come into general application to theatre uses.

MOTOR GENERATORS

MOTOR-GENERATORS for converting a.c. line power to direct current are available in a variety of types suited to the requirements of all types of motion picture projection arcs, alone or involving d.c. current supply to spotlights and effect projectors. They are used in some instances for sound power supply, and where more than one source line is wired to a theatre, for emergency power conversion in the event one line should fail. They are also used in mobile ballyhoo public address systems, for driving amplifier and loudspeakers from the power of automobile or truck storage batteries.

ORGANS

WITH THE exception of the all-electric organ, the only organ suited to the motion picture theatre is a pipe organ, and the theatre pipe organ is usually different from the church type in many of its characteristics. The theatre instrument is capable of simulating a variety of orchestral tones, which are required for effective rendition of the classes of music performed in the theatre. Consoles are most frequently of two-manual type, and may be obtained in a variety of decorative styles.

The all-electric organ produces the tones of a pipe organ (as well as the orchestral effects of which theatre pipe organs are capable), but it has no pipes: the tones are effected by the transmission of electrical frequencies, through suitable amplifiers, to one or more loudspeakers. The console is of standard two-manual type, but in addition to the keys, has certain drawbars with which specific tone-types are created.

PERFUMES AND PERFUMERS

PERFUMES are available especially prepared for concealment of disagreeable odors in the theatre. They are particularly aromatic and are effectively diffused by porous containers. The containers, which are usually vase-like in form and decorative, are located at various points along the walls. The perfume saturates the porous clay and gradually penetrates to the air.

Other methods of disseminating perfume are by direct spraying and by placing a suitable disseminator in contact with the ventilating system.

PHOTOELECTRIC CELLS

IN THE THEATRE, photoelectric cells function principally as a vital "organ" of the sound reproduction system, though they have other applications in many fields.

Although they have many applications in many fields, in the theatre the photoelectric cell functions principally as a vital "organ" of the sound reproduction system, transforming the light of the exciter lamp, after it has passed through the sound track of the film, into the electrical energy which, amplified, actuates the loudspeakers.

Some few equipments require photoelectric cells of a certain type differing from the type generally used, and in ordering it is well to specify the make and model of the soundhead.

PROJECTION ROOMS AND ACCESSORIES

THE DESIGN of the vital nerve center of the motion picture theatre involves many factors, including local building regulations and general safety, as well as provisions for efficient and competent work on the part of the men who produce the commodity the theatre sells.

Ventilation is essential, and fireproof construction mandatory. To secure uninterrupted attendance to operations on the part of the projectionist, washroom and toilet facilities are highly desirable. The projection room proper should not be less than 15 feet wide and 10 feet deep to accommodate two projectors, a stereopticon and effect machine, amplifier panels, rewinder and film cabinet, while for proper ventilation the ceiling should not be less than 12 feet high. (The various kinds of projection equipment and accessories are discussed under their own titles.)

PROJECTOR PARTS

THE WEAR to which projectors are subjected requires close observation of all parts and prompt replacement or repair before any that have become defective injure others that must work with them. Neglect of reasonable and necessary replacement results in unnecessary deterioration of the entire mechanism, makes expensive overhauling or replacement necessary later on, and is also a threat to the performance. It is also to be borne in mind that mechanical faults in the projector are usually "picked up" by the sound system.

PROJECTORS, PORTABLE

PORTABLE PROJECTORS are motion picture projection machines which are designed to be set up only temporarily and not for permanent installation in a regular theatre, as a rule, although used there. They are particularly adapted for use in schools, clubs, etc., and may be obtained for installation in connection with leading makes of sound equipment or with sound apparatus built in.

Semi-portable projectors are standard motion picture machines which may be utilized for either temporary or permanent installations and are well adapted to smaller theatres not operating on a "grind" policy. These projectors, while sturdily constructed, are comparatively light in weight and may be moved from rooms or buildings more easily than the standard theatre projector. Sound apparatus specially constructed for these projectors is also available.

Also available are sound-on-film unit projectors of portable type for both 35-mm. and 16 mm. film.

PROJECTORS, STANDARD THEATRE

PROJECTORS HERE referred to are the standard non-portable 35-millimeter projectors designed for permanent installation in theatres. In addition to the regular large types, smaller, more compact and somewhat simplified projectors are also available for permanent theatre installation (see Portable Projectors).

It is the expressed belief of theatre owners and projectionists that practically ideal projection is possible with equipment available at present, provided it is in the hands of a competent projectionist. Modern projectors are the result of many years of improvement and development to meet the ever-growing requirements for the best possible screen results.

All late model standard projectors are either constructed specially for sound pic-

Such savings in Kilowatt hour consumption, and hence power costs, are typical. You should investigate the possibilities of similar savings through the use of G-E Copper Oxide Rectifiers for Projection Service. The average saving, as indicated above, was 315 Kilowatt hours per week. A G-E Copper Oxide Rectifier pays for itself quickly.

Other features, too numerous to describe here, include easy and economical installation . . . small space requirements . . . quiet and simple to operate . . . practically unlimited life if properly operated.

PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEMS

SUCH A SYSTEM provides means for amplifying stage sound, for managers' announcements, for lobby ballyhoo, on sound trucks in street exploitation, also over the marquee, and even in association with theatre billboards.

In the theatre the public address system may consist of microphones suitably connected to the standard sound installation, or an entirely separate system, with its own amplification, wiring and also speakers, may be employed. Hearing aids may be used in association with any type of theatre public address reproduction.

RECTIFIER TUBES

GAS-FILLED tubes used to convert alternating current to direct current are made in many ratings. The smaller sizes are commonly thought of as being in the category of radio or amplifier tubes. But while there is no distinction in principle of operation, the larger sizes, having current capacities of from 2½ to 30 amperes, are by custom classified separately.

They are often described by their best-known trade name as "Tungar" tubes. In the theatre such tubes are used to provide rectified direct current to arc lamps and to sound exciter lamps. Where storage batteries are used, they function in the battery charger.

RECTIFIERS AND POWER UNITS

RECTIFIERS are devices that employ rectifying tubes or copper compound rectifying assemblies (dry type) for the purpose of converting alternating current to direct current. The larger sizes are fan-cooled, and supply direct current to the projection arc.

The smaller sizes are of somewhat different design electrically, incorporating electrical filters to insure smooth d.c. output, and to supply power to exciter lamps, speaker fields, tube filaments and other parts of the sound system.

REELS

REELS NECESSARY for takeup magazines of projectors and also otherwise constantly utilized in the projection room, are available in a number of sizes and types of construction. The standard reel in the United States (since September 1, 1936) has a diameter of 14½ inches, and a 4½-inch hub for the accommodation of the film lengths up to 2,000 feet. Reels are also available in the former American standard size (diameter 10 inches, hub 2 inches) while another available size adapted to the standard American film length of 2,000 feet has a diameter of 15 inches. (See Takeup, Film.)

Some reels have embossed sides, some wire welded or die cast sides, and while a particularly flexible reel (resisting so-called "dishing") has tempered band spokes and rims and is available for both 35-mm. and 16-mm. film in the 15-inch size.

REFLECTORS FOR INCANDESCENT LAMPS

THESE ARE metal receptacles for incandescent lamps, having a reflecting inside finish and a glass cover, or roundel. The purpose is to reflect all available light forward and out through the roundel, which may be white or colored as desired, thus to obtain more effective illumination per watt, and also color without the use of colored lamps.

Use of such reflectors is especially indicated for marquees and exterior signs, but is also to be considered for vestibules or wherever lamps may be exposed. The roundels are readily removable for relamping, being held in place by a snap-ring.

REWINDERS, FILM

FILM REWINDERS are available in two general types, open and fireproof enclosed. The open type is offered in a number of different models, either as a single unit or as two separate units that are clamped to the work bench, or bolted in place. The enclosed type is a single unit.

Both open and enclosed types may be hand-driven or motor-driven, may have sleeve bearings or ball bearings, may accommodate either one or two thousand foot reels, or both, and may have either one or several driving speeds.

Some of the motor-driven types incorporate accessories by means of which the same motor can be used for general machine work, such as grinding and polishing.

RHEOSTATS

THESE ARE devices that introduce an electrical resistance into any circuit, the value of the resistance being variable at will. There are several methods of varying resistance, one being to move a contact lever over a series of switch points, one being to move a slider over the coil of the resistance wire itself, and one being to compress carbon or graphite discs or powder.

Rheostats may be very large in size, suited to operation in the projection arc circuit, or extremely small for use in certain sound circuits. They are rated according to the range of resistances available, and the current or wattage with which they can safely be used.

SCREENS

THEATRE SCREENS are classified according to their construction, surface and reflective characteristics. Four general types or available—solid, porous, perforated (consistently perforated to all edges), variably perforated (perforated only at speaker area), and translucent (the latter for rear projection).

Surfaces (except for the translucent screen) may be diffusive or specular. The latter is specified for narrow, relatively deep auditoriums since the light is concentrated upon seats directly in front of the screen. Wider theatres must use the diffusive type.

SHUTTERS (FIRE), PROJECTION PORT

ALL PROJECTION room ports must have fireproof means of being closed in the event of fire in the projection room. Such shutters are metal shields suspended above the ports by a pulley system dependent upon fusible links, which melt in case of fire, permitting the shutters to slide down and seal the projection room from the auditorium.

SIGNS (ELECTRIC) FOR THEATRE NAME

ELECTRIC SIGNS (metal framework with illumination provisions) are available in a wide variety of designs more or less closely associated with the architecture of the theatre front. They frequently are specially designed, but there are also stock designs often adaptable to the theatre front. Gas tube (neon) and incandescent lamp illumination has been found effective for these signs in combination as well as alone, and either type of lighting can be flashed.

Horizontal name signs have normally been more closely associated with the marquee than the vertical sign has, but often the vertical sign can be effectively related to the marquee and entrance by continuing the sign illumination scheme down to the marquee and even across its soffit.

SLIDES, PROJECTION

SLIDES FOR the projection of song lyrics, advertising and effects are made either of glass or other material suitably transparent. The more elaborate slides, carrying pictorial matter or designs, are usually of glass, while a flexible transparent material permits the ready preparation of an announcement slide on a typewriter, the blank material being kept on hand and, when written upon, inserted into a frame..

SOUND EQUIPMENT, COMPLETE

SOUND SYSTEMS have followed a steady evolution toward simplicity and compactness since their first introduction. Only the larger theatres now use sound power supplies disassociated from the sound amplifier; in smaller equipment the two commonly constitute a single unit, or at most two units in a single compact cabinet. The majority of modern systems consist of a single amplifier-power supply unit, two sound heads, and suitable loudspeakers.

More elaborate apparatus may include complex speaker assemblies with sound filter systems, an amplifier rack mounting decibel meter and other accessories, and an emergency amplifier.

SOUNDHEADS

THIS REPRODUCTION apparatus, mounted between the projector and lower magazine, guides the film between the exciter lamp and the photoelectric cell, which are mounted within it. Striking improvements have been made in this item of equipment, producing steadier film motion and hence finer sound, with reduced strain on the film and less wear and friction in the soundhead itself.

SPEAKERS AND HORNS

TO CONVERT the electrical product of amplification into audible sound, speaker "units" are available in considerable variety. The practice now is to use several types of speakers to reproduce selected bands of sound frequencies.

Speakers are available in a.c. types, in a great variety of d.c. types, and in the new permanent magnet types that need no field excitation.

Baffles are required with every speaker. The simplest is flat board, behind which the speaker is mounted, large enough to provide baffling for the lowest frequency to be reproduced. In many auditoriums, however, proper distribution of sound cannot be secured without directional baffles, or trumpets, to point the sound toward locations otherwise "dead" and away from locations where it is not desired, particularly reflecting surfaces likely to cause echo or excessive reverberation. Directional trumpets or baffles are now also used for high-frequency speakers or tweeters, clusters of small trumpets operated by a single tweeter being favored. These arrangements secure better distribution of the high frequencies, which have a normal tendency to travel in straight lines, over-supplying some seats and missing many others entirely. Clusters of directional baffles applied to the tweeters correct this tendency.

STAGE SCENERY AND DRAPERIES

DRAPERIES at the proscenium and wings give stage and all that takes place thereon a frame removed from reality; they soften hard angles and architectural lines; they dress up doorways and arches, providing a pleasant impression of softness and luxury. In motion picture theatres, stage scenery kept on hand for general use consists in conventional drops and cycloramas, made according to specification.

SWITCHBOARDS

USUALLY indispensable to proper stage lighting are switchboards for the control of all stage illumination. A lighting schedule can be preset to provide rapid changes of lighting according to cue, with a single motion.

Some types use grid-control tubes in place of rheostats. Few or many banks of switches and controls can be installed, according to the requirements of the theatre; additional banks can be added to an existing installation and tied in electrically and mechanically to constitute a single unit of increased size.

TEMPERATURE CONTROL APPPARATUS

TEMPERATURE control apparatus of the automatic variety can be installed on any type of heating, ventilating or air-conditioning system to maintain desired conditions. Apparatus sensitive to temperature, either inside or outside, or relative humidity, or pressure will operate instantly or with time lag, valves and dampers, or start and stop oil burners.

There are two main classes of equipment, pneumatic and electrical. Pneumatic equipment requires a small compressor, a storage tank for the air which operates the various units, and the necessary pipes or tubing connecting the units. Electrical equipment requires either a low or high-voltage source of power and wire connecting the various units to be operated.

UPHOLSTERING MATERIALS

MANUFACTURERS of auditorium seating, and furniture for lobbies, foyers and lounges can supply upholstery coverings in a great variety of materials, patterns and colors, but the hard usage such furnishings normally get in the theatre makes durability a prime consideration.

Among the better fabrics suited to auditorium chairs are mohair and velour. Imitation leather (which, as produced today, is indistinguishable from real leather to most people) is also well adapted to auditorium chairs. It is also suited to other theatre furniture, particularly that in men's lounges, although in white or gay colors it has been effectively employed for women's lounges as well. Wool weaves in colorful patterns, rayon and damask are among upholstery coverings well suited to lobby, foyer and lounge furniture.

sank an artesian well to secure colder water for summer use. We dropped a 10-inch well to a depth of about 200 feet and used a Pomona rotary pump to supply the necessary flow of water to a 1,000-gallon reserve tank. Heating is done by two-core heat units placed in the ventilating equipment, and these as well as the balance of all air system equipment is thermostatically operated and controlled.

Fresh air intake ducts are located on each side of the proscenium arch and are of U. S. Air dual deflector type. Then we have complete recirculation by means of ducts under the auditorium floor, and exhaust blowers and ventilators which exhaust from the rear of the auditorium over the back of the stadium. Air is also supplied the projection room by the air-conditioning plant, as is also the apartment.

The air distribution capacity of the equipment is approximately 35,000 cubic feet per minute. The storage water tank for the equipment is located in basement under stage. The well is capable of producing 100 gallons per minute and supplies us water of 52° even in the hottest of summer weather. We do not use mechanical refrigeration.

At the time of contemplating the construction of this theatre it was originally planned to build some of the conventional one-floor type; then, too, thought was given to the matter of a house with balcony. However, in the end it was decided to use the stadium type for these reasons:

First, because of the ease with which an audience can be taken care of, both incoming and outgoing, but especially in "spilling" an audience without interference with incoming patrons. With the plan we adopted, we can accommodate possibly 300 people in our main lounge and foyer and still have ample exit openings available for egress.—H. W. KNUTSON.

certainly is true that in those countries where there has been improvement in the economic status of the masses during the past few years, there also has been a tendency toward higher theatre standards, better planning, better decoration, and most emphatically—probably most significantly—better projection equipment. In fact many countries have been rapidly taking up that lag existing between them and the United States, probably because of better economic conditions.

"You want to remember, of course, that the picture business in other countries has to develop a public under some rather difficult circumstances. Hollywood has the money necessary to make—shall we say, expertly done pictures?—because it has a domestic market warranting such expenditures. And so people in other countries prefer American pictures. But for the most part they are about American things, with American backgrounds, and except in some parts of the British Empire, the dialogue is in a foreign language. If people in South America, let us say, could go to the theatre and see pictures about their own countries, based on their own ways—in other words, stories about things they know, about themselves, told in their own language, they would regard the motion picture more as we do."

It must have been a swell job that Arthus Meyers has turned over to John M. Brozek, the new export manager of International Projector. Shipping through the Suez, planing over the Andes; London and Paris in a single day, and a couple of weeks later, Hong Kong—or Rio!

"Maybe so," replied Arthur Meyer, but you could see that he didn't agree. His eyes narrowed, and there was just the flicker of a smile as he asked, "Have you ever tried to drink their coffee?"—George Schutz.

THEATRE ACOUSTICS TODAY

6. Mounting and Decorating Acoustic Materials

● Concluding a series of six articles comprehensively dealing with acoustical factors in theatre planning, construction, remodeling and decoration

By C. C. POTWIN

THE ADAPTATION and ultimate effectiveness of acoustic materials are dependent to a large extent upon the methods used to mount them. Laboratory tests indicate that the sound absorption coefficients of most materials are increased at the low frequencies when they are mounted on furring strips or battens to provide an air space behind the material.

With test data at hand showing the effect of mounting on the absorption in materials, it is possible for the exhibitor or architect to determine whether or not the low-frequency absorption of a material will be significantly improved by the use of furring strips, or if this method of application will make the material suitable for use in the theatre when the frequency analysis indicates that it will fall short of the requirements if applied directly to the surface. A minimum increase of 5 per cent in the average coefficient from 128 to 512 cycles per second may be sufficient to justify the use of furring strips, and the net increase for most materials lies well above this percentage. In fact, there are materials which do not fulfill the requirements for theatre use unless they are installed in this manner.

When comparing the absorption characteristics of two or more different types of materials, it is axiomatic that the methods of mounting employed must be identical. If one material has been tested only flat, and the other only on furring strips, a true comparison of the data cannot be reached, since the furred material will have the advantage in low-frequency absorption. Not only for this reason is it very important that the method of mounting be checked carefully, but also to ensure that the procedure followed in testing is duplicated in the final theatre installation.

There is one fact to be emphasized here; namely, that in cases where furring strip application is necessary, definite assurance must be made that the material is mounted on and not flat against the surface in the area between the furring strips. This mistake is sometimes made in cases where insufficient attention is given to application of the material.

BASIC METHODS OF MOUNTING

In considering the methods of mounting for the various classes of materials, blankets, in general, should be installed on furring strips providing a minimum air space of 1 inch behind the material. In theatres where sound reflections are unusually objectionable from certain surfaces, such as curved or large unbroken rear walls, and this form of treatment is to be used, a 2-inch air space should be provided behind the blanket. For maximum sound absorption, it is also desirable in these cases to use a 1½-inch or 2-inch blanket rather than the usual 1-inch material.

When a 1-inch air space is to be provided behind blankets, the furring strips should be placed approximately 16 inches on centers and should run in one direction only, whereas for a 2-inch air space, the furring should be placed approximately 12 inches on centers. In this latter case it is also satisfactory to use 1-inch cross-furring, the outer strip mounted on, and running perpendicular to, the inner strip, and the spacing between strips approximately 12 inches in each case.

ACOUSTIC BOARDS

Acoustic boards of the wood and cane fibre varieties should also be furred for proper low-frequency absorption. When installed directly over structurally rigid surfaces, a minimum air space of 1 inch should be provided behind the boards, the furring strips to be spaced approximately 16 inches on centers extending in one direction.

In cases where these boards are to be applied directly to studding to present a finished interior surface, and the distance between studding is greater than 18 inches, one of the two following methods of installation is suggested. (1) A diagonal stud in the form of a stiffener should be placed between the verticals, to which the board may also be nailed; or (2) furring strips spaced 12 inches on centers should be installed on the studding, running perpendicular to it, to which the board may be applied.

Most acoustic boards are quite flexible, in themselves, and the increased air space effected by stud construction may cause an accentuation of absorption at particular frequencies in the lower range if the distance between studding is too great and additional stiffness is not introduced to offset this condition. When acoustic boards are used for suspended ceiling construction, it is also imperative that they be securely braced and reinforced to prevent excessive resonance or vibration.

ACOUSTIC PLASTER

Too little emphasis has been placed on the importance of mounting in connection with the use of acoustic plasters. Although the economics of heating and air conditioning do not favor the application of finished plaster directly to base walls of brick or gypsum tile, this construction is not uncommon in present-day design.

There are very few cases where acoustic plaster can be used successfully if applied directly to base walls. When this material is applied to standard scratch and brown coats on metal lath, spaced out a distance of at least 1 inch from the base wall structure, a certain amount of low-frequency absorption is introduced by the furred construction. This is evident from the test results shown in Figure 1. If construction costs do not permit the use of metal lath and furring strips, reliable advice should be obtained before acoustic plaster is specified for treatment.

The low-frequency absorption of acoustic plaster is similarly enhanced when it is applied to suspended ceilings. While the improvement thus gained is very helpful, it is not usually sufficient to furnish the required amount of low-frequency absorption if the plaster is being applied to suspended ceilings in an effort to compensate for the lack of furred wall construction. In this connection it must also be borne in mind that ceiling treatment becomes of greater importance than wall treatment only in the case of the very wide auditorium.

In tropical countries where metal lath is subject to disintegration because of high percentages of relative humidity, wood lath or furred plaster board are suggested as a part of the basic construction for the application of acoustic plasters.

ACOUSTIC TILES

All but a very few of the acoustic tiles must be mounted on furring strips to secure the proper amount of sound absorption at the low frequencies. A minimum air space of 1 inch is usually required behind the material, the furring preferably running in both directions and spaced 12 inches on centers. The low-frequency absorption of several of the tiles resembling compressed excelsior in appearance, is appreciably improved by introducing a rock wool fill in the air space behind the material.

SPRAY TYPES

The majority of the "special" types of materials also require furring strips for maximum low-frequency absorption. Unquestionably, the absorption characteristics of those types of materials which are sprayed on a surface can be improved by applying them to a thin base coat of ordinary plaster on furred metal or wire lath, or to plaster board furred out from the base wall structure.

HAIR FELTS

The low-frequency absorption of hair felts is affected to only a minor degree by the use of furring strips, even when comparatively large air spaces are provided behind the material. Consequently, even with this method of application hair felts cannot be used successfully for modern auditorium treatment.

DIRECT APPLICATION

In considering mounting in general, some questions may arise to as whether or not the low-frequency absorption of acoustic materials is increased when they are applied directly to furred plaster surfaces. In the case of acoustic plaster this method of application is effective for new construction because the material forms an integral part of the furred surface. In the cases of blankets, boards and tiles, however, all that can be realized under this method is the absorption effected by the diaphragmatic action of the surface and only the normal low-frequency absorption of the acoustic material. In other words, the effect is not the same as that of furring the acoustic material itself, since the rigidity of the combined surface is much greater than that of the acoustic material installed alone.

This does not imply that furred plaster construction is not desirable, or even necessary, when the acoustic materials themselves are to be furred. In practically every case, the additional absorption provided by this construction, particularly on those areas to be left untreated, will help to complete the proper provisions for the lower portion of the frequency spectrum.

It is evident from a review of these important points that careful study must be given to the question of mounting acoustic materials in every case, whether it be one of new design, remodelling or interior modernization.

DECORATION OF ACOUSTIC MATERIALS

SURFACE decoration has always presented an intricate problem in planning acoustic treatment, due principally to the fact that the sound absorption value of many materials is either impaired or totally destroyed by painting. There are a few types of materials on the market which may be decorated in practically any manner desired without impairing their acoustic value. For the majority of materials, however, certain limitations are imposed by composition and surface texture, which make it necessary that rigid precautions be taken in decoration to ensure that their normal efficiency will be maintained.

Unless the acoustic material is of a type which is especially designed to receive a paint application, or has a composition such that the paint is readily absorbed into the body of the material, oil paints as well as certain of the water color or casein types, tend to form a film on its surface. If the texture and composition of the material are such that the surface pores are bridged or closed by this film, the sound absorption contributed by porosity and by the associated inter-communicating air cells within the material is not only reduced but is actually destroyed in many cases. Furthermore, there is always the possibility, particularly in the case of the thinner boards and tiles, that the low-frequency absorption effected by plastic deformability will be diminished as a result of the added stiffness caused by heavy paint application.

FABRICS

Fabrics used as decorative covering for acoustical blankets must be both thin and porous, with an open weave or texture. Several fabrics manufactured especially for the purpose of covering acoustical blankets are unusually thin and porous, and yet are woven in such a way that the blanket is fully concealed.

The use of heavy weight or closely woven fabrics is to be avoided, since they usually alter the frequency absorption characteristic of the blanket. Furthermore, when fireproofing liquids are applied to closely woven fabrics, there is always the possibility that a very fine film will be formed on the material or that it will be slightly stiffened, with the result that the sound absorption value of the blanket may be decreased.

Acoustical blankets with a decorative fabric covering are most adaptable to panel treatment in the auditorium. They may also be used very successfully on larger areas where the covering material is selected to match the interior decorative scheme and is carefully stretched and applied to present a uniform surface. It is highly advantageous, with a view to cleanliness and proper maintenance, to space the fabrics approximately ¼-inch to ½-inch away from the surface of the blanket. Under no condition should the fabric be painted, since this is very detrimental to the overall efficiency of the treatment.

In cases where a rigid and paintable surface is desired, perforated hard boards may be used as a covering for acoustical blankets, provided the holes will not be objectionable from the standpoint of decoration. Fabrics should not be used as a finish for these boards unless the fabrics are very dark in color. There is a tendency toward "breathing" through the holes of the board, especially when air conditioning systems are in use, and when this action occurs it leaves dust spots on the fabric at points in line with the holes. These spots may become very conspicuous on a light fabric within a relatively short period of time.

ACOUSTIC BOARDS

Acoustic boards, due chiefly to their minute surface porosity, are a class of materials with limited decorative possibilities. The application of even very thin coats of oil paint to these materials practically eliminates their absorption values at the middle range and high frequencies, and usually reduces their efficiency, to a marked degree, at the low frequencies. Certain of the water color or casein paints have a very similar effect, in that they form a thin film on the surface of the board. Stains, dyes and non-bridging lacquers offer the most satisfactory solution to the decoration of acoustic boards, although even these liquids must be applied sparingly to avoid saturating the material to the point where the pores are filled or closed.

When boards are to be used primarily for acoustic treatment, and only an amount sufficient to fulfill the sound absorption requirements for specific areas is to be installed, the material should either be left undecorated, or at most should be finished with one of the preferred liquids mentioned above. Actually the boards themselves are available in several colors, ranging from a light cream to a dark brown, and some very pleasing interiors have been achieved by using them in combination in their natural finishes.

In cases where acoustic boards are adaptable both to interior surface construction and acoustic treatment, the analysis may show that an excessive amount of sound absorption will be introduced by coverage of entire side wall or ceiling areas with the material. Consequently, it may become necessary to eliminate the absorption of the board on certain sections of the surfaces, and to retain its normal effectiveness on other areas. Some very favorable decorative schemes have been worked out under this method, using a heavy oil paint on certain areas and either retaining the natural color of the board or using a stain, dye, or non-bridging lacquer on those areas where the sound absorption value of the board must be maintained.

When planning the effective and ineffective areas, it is usually necessary to retain the absorption of the board in relatively large panels or bands, and to confine the painting to smaller sections adjacent to or surrounding these absorptive areas.

As an alternative to oil painting, some interesting possibilities are offered by the use of any one of the several types of plain hard boards now on the market. These hard boards have a negligible absorption value, but are very similar in color and texture to the acoustic boards, and if securely mounted, may be used successfully to obtain a uniform surface on those areas where acoustic treatment is not required.

PAINTING

The sound absorption coefficients of acoustic plasters and stones are also influenced to a very large extent by decoration. Oil paints practically eliminate the absorption value of these materials, while certain of the water color and casein paints have a similar effect. There are several special paints now on the market which may be used for decorating porous materials of these types without materially altering their efficiency, provided the paints are carefully and lightly sprayed on the surface. With the spray method of application, the paint adheres mainly to the arenaceous surface around the pores, whereas if it is applied by the brush method, it is apt to fill the pores and reduce the efficiency of the material.

ACOUSTIC TILES

Among the various types of tiles used for acoustic treatment, the ones having a perforated surface are most commonly associated with painting. These tiles may be decorated with any type of paint preferred on condition that it is carefully applied so that the holes are not obstructed. Extra precautions must be taken in applying the heavier paints to perforated metal tiles, since the holes in these materials are usually quite small in diameter.

In using the perforated tiles architecturally, where a flat or uniform surface is desired throughout and the amount of treatment required does not permit coverage of an entire wall or ceiling, some interesting design possibilities are available in the use either of perforated or non-perforated hard board, or of metal for the particular areas to be left untreated. For this method, the hard board or metal may be obtained in sheet or tile form and may be furred out to a line level with the treatment areas. It is imperative that these materials be securely mounted to prevent resonance, the spacing between furring or studding preferably not to exceed 12 inches.

Laboratory tests show that the absorption values of a number of the plain mineral fibre and wood fibre tiles are not substantially affected by the application of several coats of oil paint to their surfaces. However, it is very important that the manufacturers' specifications for painting be followed in strict detail, since experience has proved that it is possible under certain conditions to alter the efficiency of these materials by improper decoration. Several of these tiles are available, predecorated in a variety of colors, and may be easily cleaned by the vacuum process. In cases where they are adaptable for acoustic treatment, the precolored tiles offer an alternative to painting, when either uniformity or variations in color are desired for the decorative scheme.

Of the "special" types of materials, the ones which are sprayed on a surface should be retained in their natural finish, since most paints tend to harden their outer surface. One of the sprayed materials has a special decorative finish which is applied as the final coat and may be blended favorably with the more common forms of interior decoration.

As a final consideration relative to the decoration of acoustic materials, these two very important points are to be remembered: (1) that when natural surface porosity is a contributing element to the absorption of sound in materials, it is always preferable to use the materials in their original finish; and (2) that whenever these materials are to be painted, the types of paint used and the methods of application must comply strictly with the material manufacturers' specifications, as well as with the procedures followed for laboratory testing, in order that the possibilities of impairment of acoustic efficiency may be minimized.

In concluding this series the writer wishes to emphasize that, in view of the necessarily limited scope of the articles, it has been necessary to abridge certain of the more detailed phases of the subject. However, an attempt has been made to explain and to stress the various important factors which must be considered carefully between the time the theatre building site is selected and the final decoration is applied. Consistent with the many new developments in sound recording and reproduction, and not overlooking those developments yet to be realized, the science is necessarily becoming more complex, and it is hoped that the material presented may be helpful in connection with the numerous acoustic problems which must be met today in the designing and modernization of theatres.

[The series on acoustics concluded with this article began in the May 29th issue and continued in successive issues. The author is on the engineering staff of Erpi, dealing with acoustic problems.—THE EDITOR.]

COMMENT ON PROJECTION AFFAIRS

and answers to inquiries . . . By F. H. RICHARDSON

TOOLS NEEDED AND USEFUL IN MODERN PROJECTION ROOMS

REQUESTS FOR advice as to what tools it is advisable for the modern projectionist to own or have ready for use in the projection room reach my desk quite frequently. Recently a St. Louis, Mo., man, wound up his request for advice in this matter as follows:

"I take pride in my work and have every desire to do it well. My family is not small and we have use for every dollar. Nevertheless my work and its proper carrying on must come first, since it is by that we live. Also my employer and the theatre patrons I try to serve have the right to the best I can give. Will you therefore advise as to just what tools may be deemed a necessity to proper performance of projection work in a modern, well equipped theatre?"

It would seem such a request could not well be ignored. Therefore I sought for as thoroughly reliable a source of information as could be found, finally applying to M. D. O'Brien, assistant director of projection for Loew Theatres who, after some urging, agreed to oblige by compiling a list of tools and discussing them as follows:

"Compiling a list of tools necessary or convenient to have in the modern, well equipped propection room is analagous to asking a surgeon to name all the various instruments he may find necessary or convenient to take care of every case that may be brought before him. As a matter of fact, there is scarcely any tool an electrician, a radio man or even a plumber might use that may not at some time be found useful in a modern theatre projection room. I have even seen a glass cutter put to use. It therefore obviously is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule concerning tools, since there are so many that may occasionally be either convenient, or even necessary. Much depends upon the kind and complexity of the particular installation the projectionist is handling.

"One is perhaps one of the most essential tools is a good assortment of screwdrivers. They are handy for so many things, as well as essential in so many repair and adjustment operations.

"There should be a watch case screwdriver, preferably with an extension handle. We have one with a handle 12 inches long. There should be others with blades, preferably well tempered, ranging from 2 to 6 inches long; and one with a steel handle and blade, the latter extending clear through the handle. On many occasions this tool has served very satisfactorily both as a screwdriver and as a cold chisel on light work. Off-set screwdrivers are a present-day essential.

"An assortment of plyers comes next, ranging from the well known 'Woolworth' type that is useful for handling hot carbons, to the off-set, long-nose type that is so convenient for removing loose screws that refuse to fall out of their holes. There should be a medium-size diagonal cutting plyer, and an 8-inch side cutting plyer, as as well as a straight long-nose one.

"We all know the aggravation so often encountered in attempting to enter tiny screws in rather inaccessible places. I have found a doctor's artery clamp most convenient for such purpose. This clamp locks itself to the screw and holds it firmly until its threads have caught.

"One thing in connection with tools must not be overlooked, namely the type of tools requisite to completeness and convenience of projection room work is to a large extent dependent upon ability of the man in charge to use certain types of tool properly and efficiently. The frequency with which any tool is convenient or requisite to the work in hand should largely determine whether or not it should be added to the kit.

"Small hammers have been found useful in theatre projection rooms, but I personally regard a medium-weight rawhide mallet as most useful. It may be used without damage where a hard hammer might inflict serious injury. Not only that, but a rawhide mallet is useful for straightening out dents in sheet metal—for example, lamphouse and magazine doors.

"The ball peen hammer, not too large, in conjunction with a variety of suitable punches, is useful for removing and reinserting taper pins. For removing sprockets and gears there are several satisfactory gear pullers available at a price not too high for the projectionist's purse.

"There is nothing more convenient in emergency work than a complete set of socket and open-end wrenches of sizes suitable to engage all the nuts and bolt threads in the various equipments. A good cold chisel is convenient, though a dangerous tool in the hands of the tinkerer. A small hand drill, equipped with drills from 4/36 to 3/16, is handy to facilitate removal of broken screws. It should be accompanied by a set of standard machine screw taps and a tap wrench. With such an outfit (it need not be very expensive (one need not worry about removal of broken screws.

"For sharpening tools a combination carborundum and emery wheel, aided and abetted by a cloth and wire wheel buffer, will not only enable the projectionist to keep his tools in shape, but will insure proper cleaning of carbon contacts, for which latter a wire wheel is excellent if high intensity is used. If the manager can be persuaded to install a somewhat more elaborate, also more costly outfit in the form of an electric bench drill suitable for use with drills from No. 60 to half-inch, which may be removed and used as a portable drill, such action will endear him to the projectionist's heart forever after.

"Added to this, a medium-size bench vise is always useful for holding parts for filing, etc. It should be equipped with pipe jaws and lead or brass jaw facing inserts. Incidentally, as an adjunct to the carborundum wheel device, there is a relatively inexpensive gadget that may be attached to the spindle and fitted with a strip of emery cloth or other abrasive material. It is useful for many things, including resurfacing most types of carbon clamp inserts now in use.

A sort of two-in-one photo of the projection room of the Artcraft theatre in Franklin, Ind., sent in by Projectionist M. J. Hoover (who may be seen peeking out from behind the projector in one of the views). Projectors are Simplex, the rectifiers General Electric copper oxide, the sound RCA Photophone. New lamps, Peerless Magnarcs, were installed since these snapshots were taken. Note enclosure of lens to port—a good stunt.—F. H. R.

"Reference to monkey wrenches has purposely been avoided. The very name is significant of the temptation they present—to 'monkey' with hexagonal nuts and and bolt heads, which are to often scarred in their tendency to 'give' a bit under strain, slip off and work injury. There also is too much tendency to employ them as hammers.

"An assortment of files, ranging from fine to coarse, should be in every projection room. A type for more delicate work is obtainable in the form of a complete set, ranging from the very finest to the 4-inch safety edge set.

"The foregoing constitutes a group from which each projectionist may select as complete a set of tools for mechanical work as he desires, plus such as the management may be induced to install, which latter should include files, emery wheel, vise and possibly some other items such as plyers, hammers and wrenches, all of which may be charged against the projectionist in one-man rooms and credited when he turns them in upon taking final leave, provided suitable accommodation for locking them up while off shift be provided.

"And now as to test tools. Definitely there should be a pair of weather proof lamp sockets equipped with 110-volt lamps, the sockets connected in series. This tool (for that is what it is) is very necessary for testing fuses, continuity of power circuits, either 110 or 220-volt, an extra lead being attached between the two sockets. In lieu of this tool, which any projectionist can construct for himself, there is now on the market a quite inexpensive instrument, known as the 'Neon Tester,' which serves the same purpose adequately.

"The voltmeter and ammeter, ranging in capacity from zero to the highest current used in the projection room, may be considered as obligatory, though these instruments should be provided by theatre managements.

"For those willing to invest the required sums of money, there are such luxuries as the oscillograph, the beat frequency oscillator, the ohmmeter, the photometer, and several other recommended and very useful instruments for determining the continuity of circuits, correct optical alignment of sound equipments, short circuited condensers, open circuited resistors, etc.

"A battery and buzzer set, in conjunction with a small headphone, has been found useful for testing continuity of sound circuits, as well as low-voltage circuits which would not cause a 110-volt lamp to function. Standard 6-volt Edison lamps are available, two of which in series are satisfactory for testing 12-volt circuits.

"Returning to the voltmeter, this writer is fortunate in having an instrument consisting of a small carrying case in which is mounted both an ammeter and voltmeter, as well as a 50 millivolt shunt, with calibrated leads. The usefulness of such an instrument will be well understood by informed projectionists.

"For those who desire to work in 1/1000-inch measurements, there are dividers, and outside, inside and micrometer calipers. A sliding metal rule will be found useful. There also is an 'optical alignment' tool by means of which the entire projector optical train alignment may be tested. Theatre managements will do well to stock this and require its reasonably frequent use.

"There are other tools that, while not essentially necessary, will very often be found convenient. In this category may be named a hack saw, a keyhole saw, tin snips of medium size, a blow or alcohol torch, reamers of suitable size (which may usually be obtained from projector manufacturers), additional parts for the socket wrench set such as off-set and flexible handles. Another must tool is a soldering iron, with several different sizes of tips, for use around sound equipments.

"And so, F. H., we might extend the list, naming tools for the projection room to cover not only routine maintenance work, but to take care of those many emergency jobs likely to arise from time to time. However, it is suggested that before planning his tool kit the projectionist first very carefully analyze those various conditions he has encountered during, say, the previous three years of work, and from that estimate the number of times any particular tool other than those ordinarily used, frequently in routine work, has been necessary, or would have been sufficiently convenient to justify expenditure of its price. For example, he may find some tool would have been convenient, or even necessary two or three times during the whole time considered; surely that would hardly justify the expenditure necessary for its purchase, either by himself or the theatre management.

"Therefore, F. H., it all seems to boil down to such tools as are, or may be, necessary to proper carrying on of normal projection room work, plus as many more as the individual projectionist may find pleasure or benefit in owning."

On behalf of myself and those many projectionists who, I am sure, will welcome this well prepared discussion of projection room tools, I thank Mr. O'Brien most sincerely. It is, I believe, the first really adequate discussion upon the subject ever published. I will be glad to advise projectionists forwarding self-addressed, stamped envelope, where any of the tools named may be obtained.

SLIDE PROJECTOR WIRING INTERFERES

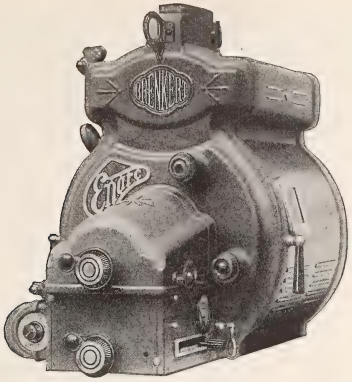
WALDO H. EDMONDS, projectionist of the Park Theatre in Dexter, Me., has constructed a slide projector, making the first temporary hook-up in such manner that the d.c. wires are near the head amplifier of No. 1 projector, whereupon a noise very similar to tearing paper out in the auditorium showed up when that projector was in operation. Says he:

"I checked and cleaned but it all pointed to the proximity of the d.c. wires to the amplifier, though I was unable to see how anything could get through the shielding. Moreover, those wires carried no current while film projection was in progress. Finally I rewired with d.c. wires and arc circuit well separated and the paper tearing stopped, so it seems an open switch may allow something to pass and that even the best of shielding will not take care of everything."

The explanation of Edmond's trouble is this: Although a switch charged with open circuit voltage be open, a high grade audio amplifier located near by may and probably will pick up an electro-static field emanating from the switch or the circuit wires connected thereto. The amount of the pick-up will depend upon the proximity of the amplifier and switch or its circuit wires.

In this case the field picked up is the result of commutator ripple voltage from the d.c. generator, or ripple voltage in some other form being superimposed upon the d.c. voltage generated to supply the arc. Increasing the distance between the switch or wires and the amplifier would, of course, cure the trouble.

Other projectionists will do well to make mental note of this matter, since they may encounter similar trouble.



PROPOSED NEW APERTURE DIMENSIONS

IN THE ISSUE of Motion Picture Herald of October 2 appeared an illustrated article concerning projector aperture dimension change proposed by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. It probably has been, and certainly should have been, read by every projectionist. This change was proposed by the Research Council without any consultation whatsoever with the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, not withstanding the fact that the latter body had direct representation upon or in the Council.

And now as to the proposed change and its practicability. The matter was very carefully examined and discussed by the Projection Practice Committee at its last meeting, the unanimous opinion being that, while the proposal advanced by it some while since was entirely practicable, the one now proposed by the Council is not practicable for any one of several reasons, the two chief ones being as follows:

If the vertical dimensions of projector apertures is altered in accordance with the Council's proposal, assuming the framing carriage to be in exactly central position, a movement either up or down of even so small a distance as 9 mils (9/1000 of an inch) would bring the frame line of the film into view upon the screen. To realize what a very close tolerance of error this is, visit an auto shop, borrow a "feeler guage" and see what a very small measurement 9 mills really are.

Especially in one-man projection rooms, such a tolerance of error in framing carriage location is wholly out of the question. I venture the assertion that at least in those theatres, where the projectionist is BETTER LIGHT!

WITHIN YOUR MEANS—NOW

Simplified high intensity projection — the quality show — produced by Brenkert ENARC—is now within your means.

Better light on the screen is the key to rising profits—you must have it to keep the crowds coming. For although you may bring them in once with stars, they won't keep coming unless the light projection is top quality.

A practical price and practical terms enable you to put in this modern equipment now.

There is an efficient, well-trained Brenkert distributor near you, ready and able to serve you in the way you need to be served.

very frequently of necessity away from the working projector, the frame line would be visible upon the screen quite frequently indeed. Cameramen and studio technicians generally may not realize that projectionists in thousands of theatres work for hours without even so much as one moment of respite. They cannot watch things so closely, and must have some reasonable tolerance of error provided in a matter of this sort. The present one is plenty small enough.

But that is only one objection. The distance between sound track and sprocket holes and sound track and picture area is now so small that there is very frequent annoyance and injury to sound by the sound track impinging either upon the picture area or the sprocket holes. Yet it is proposed to reduce it still further upon the picture side.

The Council's prime motive for this impossible change is to get more room for action, and to avoid the occasional amputation of a portion of the edges of the image. This is all very commendable, but to accomplish that at the expense of added frequency of damage to the screen image or sound most emphatically is not commendable. The proposal of the Projection Practice Committee, as published in the July, 1937, issue of the Journal, will do the trick and without objectionable effect.

EXAMINATIONS IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA

I HAVE received a letter from T. E. Smith, Chief Inspector of Cinema Theatres in Adelaide, South Australia, which should be of some interest to readers of these columns. South Australia is a province of Australia bordering the ocean at the south of the island continent. Its capital, Adelaide, has a population of approximately 325,000. Inspector Smith writes:

"For your information I inclose copy of regulations relating to theatres and public halls that is now law in South Australia; also a copy of the theory portion of cinema operators' examination.

"In this state all cinema operators are licensed, with result that they all are well posted and at high standard of efficiency. This is very satisfactory both to the government and managements of our cinema theatres.

"The theory portion of the examination is changed for each examination. The practical test is held at one of our leading city theatres. I of course have your Bluebook of Projection for reference and appreciate its contents. If you will secure and forward to me a copy of regulations relating to cinema theatres in your country it would be highly appreciated.

"In closing may I thank you and wish for you every success in the great work you are doing in the interests of the cinema."

In looking over the South Australia regulations I note some very interesting items. For example, one section provides:

"Any person who smokes in any place of public entertainment, except on the stage for the purposes of the entertainment; or (b) on any staircase leading into a place of public entertainment; or (c) in any retiring room, dressing room, property room, scene dock or passageway of, or connected with, any place of public entertainment whilst such place of public entertainment is open to the public, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds."

This section is followed by a provision that the authorities may, if they see fit, suspend the anti-smoking clause on occasion of any "smoke concert" (presumably like our "smokers") or similar entertainment; also the section does not apply to open air places of entertainment. Other sections of the regulations are equally emphatic and the penalties for infraction equally severe.

All projectionists (officially they are termed "cinema operators," though in his letter Inspector Smith uses the newer term projectionist) must be at least 21 years old. The fee for examination and license is one pound, one shilling [about $5]; the annual renewal fee is five shillings. Applicants for license must satisfy the examining board of three members that they have adequate knowledge of (1) electrical action, (2) motors and generators, (3) limelight tanks and cylinders [I can see you old-timers smile at that.—F. H. R.], (4) machines (presumably motion picture projectors, stereopticons, spotlights and all the various equipments incident to reproduction of picture and sound elements), (5) film, (6) practical projection, and (7) safety precautions.

Because I get so many letters for material of that kind, I am going to pass on to you some of the questions asked in one examination. No harm will result from their publication, since the questions are changed for each examination. The "spool" referred to is what we call a reel, a "spool box" a magazine. Now I wonder how many of our own crack men could pull through with a high rating on a set of questions like these:

What would you do in the event of fire in the upper spool box? What precautions are necessary?

Describe the construction of a spool box complying with the necessary regulations, and state the reasons for the precautions.

What are the various causes of damage to film? Give the necessary remedies for same.

Describe six important moving parts in a mechanism of a picture projector and explain fully.

Draw a diagram of a complete amplifier, from (and including) a p.e. cell to a dynamic speaker, showing field connections, using four triode tubes, coupling stages to include resistance, transformer, parallel feed, or push-pull output.

Explain the action of both half-wave and full-wave tube rectifiers. Draw a diagram of each type, including the connections to transformer.

What part of the sound equipment has the highest applied voltage? What would you expect this voltage to be? What precautions should be taken before handling the components of an amplifier to minimize risk of shock?

Explain briefly the action of the three-electrode thermionic valve.

Will a three phase motor, when running from a three phase current system, continue to run if one of the supply lines is interrupted (due to, say, a blown fuse)? Explain fully.

SOUND MASKING BY NOISY BLOWERS

HANSEL GALLOWAY of McComb, Miss., writes, "I have been planning to write you for twelve years to tell you how much I appreciate your Bluebooks and articles. They are swell, even though we may disagree on some points. I find I can understand a thing more intimately by disagreeing with someone, since thus I either am convinced I am wrong or I know the reason why I am right. That may sound a bit smart-alec, but I really am just a hard working, studious projectionist, trying to ascertain what all the wheels are for and exactly what makes them go 'round.

"After using old type RCA for eight years, we have had RCA 'High Fidelity' and new Super-Simplex mechanisms installed. Now we are troubled with high and low sound. That is to say, when the fader is at one setting there will be unintelligible words; then perhaps at the next scene they will be too loud. Raising the fader will bring out the unintelligible words, but will make the other sounds too loud.

"Consulting the attached plan, you will see that we have two large blowers, one on either side of the screen and at an angle of about 45° therewith. It is my theory that these blowers are interrupting the sound waves by movement of the air. It is my theory that since the RCA cones give a more even distribution of sound air currents, distortion might more easily be caused by air movement. We did not experience this trouble with the former equipment because directional horns were used. True the beams suffered, but sound was necessarily run at higher levels to get coverage, hence the effect was not so noticeable.

"When the blowers are cut off the sound is perfect. It then becomes necessary to lower the amplifier control to point 1, and the fader must be lowered as well in order to have the sound at proper level. I am very badly in need of an authoritative opinion. I hope that, as in the past, you will lend your aid."

If the blowers set up sufficiently strong air movement, it is possible that movement will deflect the sound beam sufficiently to cause unintelligibility.

Since the new RCA equipment has a much stronger low-frequency response than had the equipment it replaced, masking would be more noticeable. The only possible remedy in such case would be to make the blowers more quiet, which probably cannot be done except by speed reduction, and therefore a lowering of the ventilation values, or else by locating them remotely and conveying the air to the openings through acoustically treated ducts.

Another possible reason why it is necessary to advance the amplifier gain when the blowers are on might be that the fan motors are connected into the same circuit, and when the fans are cut in, the circuit voltage drops, causing more volume and increased distortion. If this be true, install larger circuit wires.

the rows of seats next to the aisles. However, it was proved that the patron found her way along the aisles, and had taken a seat where she remained during the performance, but when coming from her seat into the aisle she stumbled. Therefore, the court held the theatre owner not liable because the accident resulted from negligence on the part of the patron in failing to use care to observe and remember the plan of the theatre building. Thus, if a patron safely gets into his seat, the courts assume that he must use sufficient care in getting out of the theatre to avoid an injury.

ADEQUATE ILLUMINATION

If a theatre patron testifies that he was injured because the illumination was poor, the court will not allow damages if the theatre owner proves that actually there was sufficient illumination to enable the other patrons to see defects and dangerous conditions and to avoid injury to themselves.

With respect to providing illumination, theatre owners are not required to insure or guarantee that enough light is supplied to enable all patrons to avoid injuries. This rule of the law is especially true if a patron is injured while walking in an unusual place.

For instance, in Merrill v. Morris (231 N. W. 231), it was disclosed that a person when leaving a building walked over a plot of grass and stumbled over a post used to support a wire which surrounded the plot of grass. There was an electric light just above the door, and a reasonable amount of light came therefrom. The injured person sued the proprietor for damages. However, the court refused to hold the latter liable, saying:

"It was defendant's duty to exercise ordinary care to keep its premises in a reasonably safe condition. It was not an insurer of safety. . . . The presence of the post and wire was not inherently dangerous. There was no concealed trap and no dangerous substance or dangerous machinery or appliance. The entrance walk leading from the door was safe and sufficient. The injured person was not supposed to go upon the strip of ground protected by the post and wire."

OWNER'S NEGLIGENCE NOT CAUSE OF INJURY

While it is well established law that a theatre patron is entitled to damages for an injury sustained as a result of negligence of the theatre owner or his employes, yet the theatre owner is not liable for an injury unless his negligence actually is the proximate cause of the accident. And the mere fact that a theatre owner permits persons to stand in aisles does not establish negligence.

For illustration, in the case of Circle Theatre v. Grant (32 S. W. [2d] 676), a patron sued a theatre owner for an injury and testified that she attended the show, took her seat, and that during the performance someone yelled "Fire." She testified further that many patrons were standing in the aisles and that while people were attempting to make their exit from the building she was knocked down and trampled upon. She contended that the theatre owner was negligent in permitting patrons to stand in the aisles of the theatre during the performance. However, the higher court held the owner not liable, saying:

"We are of the opinion that this evidence was not sufficient to support a finding that permitting people to stand in the aisles was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury. . . . Plaintiff was not injured because the aisles were obstructed, but because someone behind her, who had been seated, pushed or knocked her down."

As has been pointed out, a theatre owner is merely under the duty of exercising reasonable care to keep his theatre in safe condition. In other words, a theatre owner is not an insurer of his patrons' safety while in the theatre, but owes to them merely the duty of exercising reasonable care to keep the premises in a safe condition. Generally speaking, a patron will not recover damages from a theatre owner for an injury unless the former proves that the injury resulted from negligence on the part of the theatre owner or his employes. It is not sufficient that the patron proves that it is likely that the theatre owner was negligent.

For instance, in F. W. v. Williams (41 F. [2d] 970), it was disclosed that a woman patron slipped and fell on a floor, breaking her arm. She was the only witness who testified as to the cause of the accident. She stated that when she was assisted from the floor to a chair she noticed a spot on the floor at about the point where she fell; that the spot was darker than the floor; that it was slightly raised above the floor; and that she had no doubt but that her heel went into this spot and caused her to slip.

During the trial the counsel for the injured woman contended that the proprietor was negligent in that "he allowed and permitted some greasy, slimy, oily or other like foreign substance to be and remain upon the floor, and did fail to remove and clear the floor of the substance so as to remove danger to persons of slipping and falling." However, the court held the woman not entitled to damages, saying:

"Until it is established that the accident was occasioned through the negligence of defendant's employes, or as the result of the existence of a condition of which defendant had either actual or constructive notice, there can be no recovery."

In another case, Leach v. Kresge (147 Atl. 759), it was shown that a woman patron was injured when her heel came in contact with the edge of the brass nosing on the stairs and caused a sliver to rip up from the nosing, thereby releasing her heel and causing her to fall and receive the injuries. She sued to recover damages, contending that the proprietor negligently permitted the nosing to remain in use until its condition was unsafe and dangerous to persons using the stairs. However, the court held the injured woman not entitled to damages, saying:

"The brass nosing, when installed on the stairs, was three-eighths of an inch thick. . . . Assuming that at the time of the accident the nosing in question was in a dangerous condition, there was no evidence either that the defendant knew of the condition or that the dangerous condition had existed for such a length of time that defendant would have known of said condition, if reasonable care had been exercised. . . . The defendant's duty was to use reasonable care, and there was no evidence whatever tending to show that such duty was violated."

INJURIES CAUSED BY OTHER PATRONS

Generally speaking, a theatre owner is not liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron if the injury resulted from negligence of another patron.

For example, in Mahoney v. Atlantic (169 N. E. 424), a patron sued a proprietor to recover damages for injuries sustained. Unknown to the proprietor, another patron had stood a heavy object against a radiator and it fell when the patron walked against it. The court promptly held the injured patron not entitled to damages.

Also, in Kerns v. Dykes (48 S. W. [2d] 183), a patron was seriously injured when a seat in a theatre collapsed. He filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages, and during the trial the theatre owner introduced evidence tending to show that the seat was weakened as a result of pranks of certain boys who had been in the theatre. In view of this testimony, although the lower court had held the theatre owner liable, the higher court reversed the verdict, and said:

"The causative force of the injury must be shown to be controlled by the defendant (theatre owner); it must also appear that there was no other equally efficient proximate cause."

CARE EXPECTED IN USE OF STAIRS

Whether or not a theatre owner is liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron who stumbles or falls on a stairway depends entirely upon the circumstances. If the steps are not defective and are well illuminated, so that patrons have ample opportunity by the application of ordinary care to see such steps, the theatre owner is not liable for injuries sustained by careless patrons.

For instance, in Garret v. W. S. Butterfield Theatres (246 N. W. 57), it was disclosed that a theatre patron 70 years old stumbled on a step. The patron filed suit against the theatre owner and the lower court held the injured patron entitled to receive payment of heavy damages. However, the theatre owner appealed to the higher court and proved that the step was illuminated and that any person who exercised ordinary care should have observed the step. Therefore, the higher court reversed the lower court's decision holding the theatre owner not liable.

In another case, Stockes v. Commerce Realty Company (25 S. W. [2d] 186), suit was filed by a woman patron against a theatre, alleging that while descending the stairway leading from the mezzanine to the street floor of the theatre, she stepped upon a defect on the stairs and fell, breaking her leg and receiving other injuries. The woman testified that the cause of the fall was the insufficient lighting.

The theatre owner produced witnesses who testified that the woman carelessly walked down the stairway and that, immediately after the accident, they examined the stairway and found no defect, and also that at various times prior to the accident the lighting in the stairway was good. In view of these facts the jury held the theatre owner not liable.

Policy and Hazard Factors in Theatre Insurance Costs

and this portion should be screened. The screen should not be coarser than a quarter-inch mesh; neither should it be too fine, because the generator needs air. Many projection room fires are caused because the motor generator is in a too-small, unventilated room where it becomes overheated. Note that should this sort of fire destroy only the generator, the loss is not recoverable under the fire policy. Generators are expensive enough to warrant alertness on the part of the exhibitor. If the fire spreads, the damage, except to the generator, is covered; or, if a fire originates away from the generator, and in the conflagration the generator is burned, the latter then is covered.

Exhibitors frequently go to extremes to get the wiring in conduit in order to reduce the fire hazard to a minimum. A general requirement is that all wiring in the projection room should be installed in conduit in strict compliance with the National Electrical Code.

Yet an almost universal hazard is created by the exhibitor or his operator who splices the conduited wire in order to run an extension to a fan or light or heater. Usually the old piece of wiring used hangs over a nail to keep it out of the way. This destroys all the effect of the conduiting. The debit for something like this increases with the number of defects, but runs from 5¢ to 25¢ per $100. This is so common a defect it is something every exhibitor should check periodically.

Some projectionists, especially in the summer, disconnect from the doors their self-closing springs or weights in order to get a breeze. When the bureau inspector comes along, the theatre gets a strong debit. The exhibitor should see to it that if the projectionist must keep the door open, he use a stick. In case of fire, it would be simple to knock it out and allow the automatic closing device to go at once into operation.

INSULATION

Fundamentally, the construction of a theatre building differs little from construction of other buildings so far as insurance rates are involved; however, a recent development in theatre construction is new —insulation for sound and air-conditioning. It is essential that noncombustible materials be used. Recently in a Kansas theatre being remodeled, flaked paper was blown on the plaster above the ceiling. The exhibitor had been sold "flaked asbestos." Paper around the wiring, where always exists danger of a short, would have made the theatre uninsurable. It was removed. In some cases of insulating, composition board is used. This is not incombustible. It is simply heavy cardboard.

ADJOINING BUILDINGS

A not unfamiliar method by which an exhibitor allows his theatre rate to be pushed higher than it should be is in leaving openings next to buildings that take a much higher rate. Side openings should have a clear space of 20 feet from the next brick building; 40 feet if the building is of frame. If this clearance can't be provided, the exhibitor can protect the openings with wire glass windows in approved metal frames, or with approved fire doors. The penalty depends on the rate of the adjacent building. If it is of ordinary brick—mercantile building, say—the debit could be as much as 40¢ per $100, which amounts, in a $30,000 theatre, to $120 a year.

Window openings in adjacent buildings which are above the roof of the theatre should be at least 36 inches above so that in case of fire in the adjacent building, the flames will go up, and that far above, they will not hit the theatre roof. Recently an exhibitor in Kansas discovered it would be much less expensive to build his sidewalls a few feet higher so that they surmounted windows in an adjoining building, a very old one taking a very high insurance rate.

If the exhibitor uses coal in his heating plant, he must have the bin walled up with brick or stone away from the furnace, or pay a 10¢ penalty in the rate. There must be a minimum of 18 inches of clearance between the heating plant—and this includes the smokestack—and any combustible material. The debit on this varies from 5¢ to 25¢ per $100, depending on the amount of clearance and the combustibility of the material.

Theatre contents, such as draperies, chairs, etc., are subject to very severe damage from oil furnace smoke. It therefore is very essential that the oil burning equipment be as safe as possible. Only approved oil burners should be installed, and in all cases the fuel oil tank should be buried outside the building and the oil fed to the burner by pump feed. If gravity feed is used, in case there is a break or leak in the basement, the oil will syphon into the building from the tank, and fire in the heating plant sometimes will ignite the oil to cause a serious oil fire. The debit for gravity feed is extremely severe. In fact, a penalty of around 90% is provided on both building and content rates.

In some instances it is difficult or unfeasible to get the tank below the burner. Here again there is likelihood of creating a syphon into the basement. In such cases an anti-syphoning valve should be installed at the highest point in the fuel oil line inside the building. Absence of so simple a device calls for a 90% penalty in the rate.

PROTECTIVE COVERAGE

And now, by way of conclusion, let us cite an actual case of costly insurance management. For almost six years an exhibitor in a Middle Western city went to bed every night feeling secure because his two theatres were protected by insurance. He had seven fire policies alone. Yet on any one of those nights a bad fire would have ruined him.

Recently, upon examining his insurance affairs, it was discovered that a conservative estimate of the cost of replacing the building which housed one of his two theatres, exclusive of contents, was between $22,000 and $23,000. His seven policies carried an aggregate of $11,750 of fire insurance coverage, or less than half the value. There was no supplemental contract on the building, though the exhibitor did carry $1500 in tornado coverage—a good cyclone would have ruined him.

Although there was a first and second mortgage on the building of Theatre A, only one policy noted this fact. Two mentioned one of the mortgages. Other policies failed to mention either mortgage. Had there been a fire, loss payments would have been delayed by the companies until the exhibitor and the mortgagor had worked out some sort of agreement as to who was to receive the money. The mortgage holder would have had first call for his share. Perhaps the original mortgagor had sold the mortgage and it was in the hands of a third party interested only in liquidating the loan—not interested in seeing that the exhibitor got back into business as soon as possible. A court action might have been necessary. In the meantime, the exhibitor would not have enough cash to repair and reopen.

One policy had an 80 per cent co-insurance clause. Under the other six policies the exhibitor was paying for 100% insurance. Because he was underinsured, the exhibitor should not have had an 80% co-insurance feature in any of his policies. What he should have had was adequate coverage with an 80% or 90% co-insurance clause governing the entire protection. Only very rarely in towns of any size is a building destroyed by fire.

Theatre A contained $7500 worth of contents on which the exhibitor caried no insurance at all. Neither was there any protection on the contents of Theatre B, which were worth approximately $3000. The exhibitor did not own the building which housed the second theatre.

Briefly then, the total investment of the exhibitor was $33,000. His protection from the simplest hazard, fire, was $11,750. He stood to lose $21,250 of his capital. Had a cyclone wrecked the house, he would have lost all but $1500, which the mortgagor would have taken.

In rearranging his insurance, measures taken included a $22,500 fire and supplemental risk policy on Theatre A building; $7500 on contents in Theatre A, and $3000 on those in Theatre B. The insurance was issued for a five-year period, which saved the exhibitor between 15% and 16%. In addition, liability policies were written on both theatres, with a 25% reduction in the cost of both under the KMTA plan which he worked out several years ago by the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association.

Hazard corrections were also made—an expenditure of approximately $55 was made on installation of projection room shutters, defective wiring was replaced, a rubber hose connection was supplanted by a copper tube on a gas-fired popcorn stand, and an automatic shutoff valve was installed in the oil burner. These changes saved many debits applying to both the building and the contents, so that they really constituted a double saving.

With the savings effected, the almost doubled protection actually cost the exhibitor 10% less than he formerly was paying for dangerously inadequate insurance.

[The author has dealt with theatre insurance problems for many years, particularly throughout Western Missouri and Kansas. He was instrumental in the formulation of the liability insurance plan of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association. —THE EDITOR.]

ACTING MAYOR

THE new issue of The March of Time, devoting a section to the career, causes and affairs of Fiorello LaGuardia, mayor of the city of New York, in the midst of a campaign, carries the amusement screen yet farther into the uncertain adventures of the shoal dotted seas of controversy.

The presumed pretext that Mayor LaGuardia is being mentioned as a potential candidate for the presidency of the United States might explain the editorial opinion that he is material for the national screen. The nomination so far seems to come from Mr. William Allen White of Emporia, who is part of "what's the matter with Kansas."

The decision, this election to attention, then seems to come from Mr. Louis DeRochemont of The March of Time and Mr. White. And that by some, maybe irrelevant, connotation reminds one that ornate multi-colored Fortune, a blood cousin of the screen periodical, has at least two candidates for the presidency, also, a subject for future attention here, and elsewhere.

But, even yet, Mayor LaGuardia is a person sizeable of importance only in New York, which is after all only between ten and twelve percent of the motion picture audience of the United States.

Regardless of the depth of editorial sincerity which decided that this mayor and candidate should get such signal attention, it is inevitable that many persons both in New York and afield will regard the treatment as one of curious partisanship, the like of which the theatre screen has never seen since the days of 1896 when Abner McKinley bought stock in the American Biograph company and put his brother, Major William McKinley, candidate, upon the newborn screen.

TIME has marched quite a distance since the Major stepped out on his lawn at Canton and posed for a close-up. Mayor LaGuardia did not pose; he acted, all over the lot, pictured in doing a sample of most of what he has done and saying a bit of everything that he has said. The supporting cast included a considerable array of the members of his municipal government. The concluding sequence takes him home, exhausted, hair disheveled, worthily wearied in the services of his people and, after a deep breath, asking the good wife what they shall be having for dinner. It is a drama of the great common people.

The spectator can hardly escape the realization that the Mayor of the great city of New York has done this, with much rehearsal and labour, and someway that realization is not accompanied by impression of dignity. One must know that behind the camera was a director, that there was make-up, that there were lights, rifles, floods and spots, reflectors, baffles, the gadgetry of cinema in the making. Commands: "Roll 'em." "Action!" "Cut." "It's a take."

This is perhaps, as Time marches on, the new era's equivalent of the great man sitting for his portrait, but it is hell on the sitter.

Presumably while all this was in the making, the code of journalism, even screen journalism, required that the opposition, including Tammany, be invited to contribute to the scenario of the mayoralty campaign story, but the opposition does not appear. Maybe the opposition did not have a script on hand at the moment. So the public will never know just why Time seems to be so enthusiastic about Mayor LaGuardia. The motion picture, the whole institution of the screen, will get credit for partisanship.

This comes after two decades of newsreels that have counted frames to keep candidates even.

WEEK-END ADVENTURE

FOR a hundred and fifty years or so there has been a neat white painted house up at Lockwood Corners on Long Ridge Road in Connecticut. It was a farm house, then, nestling against a ledge buttressed hillside to the back and with corn patches and pasture lands in front, with an ox-cart highway that led the better half of a day's journey down to Stamford village. Now it is the country home of Maurice McKenzie, surrounded by the landscaped acres and the gardens where he takes respite from the toils of the Hays office.

Last week the carpenters were in to do something among those staunch hardwood beams that the pioneers so ably mortised together, and discovered, tucked between ceiling and floor, a half finished, skilfully carved violin head, of native maple. On one side of it was pencilled: "You ain't found so much," and on the other side "Made Apl 1856. Not now, fiddle head.—Eph."

One must wonder what came over Ephraim that April day eighty-one years ago. Was he wearied of whittling through a long winter? Was the spring plowing calling? Had a traveling Yankee parson rebuked him of the vanities of the fiddle? Maybe a romance had ended, taking music out of his life. Maybe he ran away to sea. Or maybe the shadbush bloomed early that April and Eph just went a-fishin' down to the Mianus. Whatever the answer was he epitomized it in "Not now, fiddle head." Certainly he was reluctant. He did not throw it away. "You ain't found much," he forecast, against discovery in this remote, hurried world of 1937. His prideful, careful tool marks in the perfect maple belie that modesty.

Eph made a good fiddle head, and when he put it away, he waxed and beveled the end so it wouldn't split. He knew it was going to be there a long time.

We who live by words on paper and sound track, by flitting pages and pictures, at ninety feet a minute, shall do well if we leave a fiddle head to season between the rafters against discovery in some tomorrow.

ANYTHING GOES?

JUST suppose it was turned around the other way, and that a maker of motion pictures should put a gossiper on the air to attract attention to his wares by announcing that the Duke of Windsor was to be placed in charge of Jergens Lotion and its market distribution, and suppose that the broadcast were further decorated with adverse comment on the alcoholic adventures and conduct of various persons in the toilet goods trade—then just how much hell would be raised.

We now inquire, without rising to request the floor, just where does a manufacturer of toilet counter merchandise and

Theatres and the Press

A majority of editors and publishers have awakened to the circulation value of motion picture news and are giving it more space and more carefully edited space, a trend which has resulted in a greatly improved relationship between the press and exhibitors. A survey of the nation's press in its connection with the motion picture industry which indicates also that there has been little average change in the amount of theatrical advertising placed in spite of increased rates adopted or threatened, is the basis for such a summation.

Analyses and reports of the treatment of film news in individual newspapers throughout the country start on page 12.

Local Newsreels

Theatre owners in large numbers are turning to the independent production and exhibition of local newsreels to serve as that added attraction in place of chance games, giveaways and such.

Iowa and Illinois appear to be the most fertile fields for the idea, which is described on page 16.

ANYTHING GOES?

a National Broadcasting Company acquire license to invade the affairs and status of the motion picture industry, make a toy of the name of a king of England toss about the names and repute of famous players of the screen?

The presumptuousness involved is beyond that of any but the lowest and least respectable sectors of the yellow press. It does not square with the general cautiousness of radio. It means, one must assume, that there is a notion that the motion picture industry will stand for anything.

TO SELL WHAT?

"MORE business men and salesmen" and not so many lawyers in government, is the possibly unbiased suggestion of Mr. Bruce, author, advertising expert and magnate, preacher's son and twentieth century success, also a candidate for Congress. As for business men, yes—but one may hope, and feel reasonably sure, that Mr. Barton is not advocating salesmanship influence which might encourage government to promotional tactics leading to free deals, bonuses, premiums, passes, a prize-in-every-package, radio acts and a Federal Bank Night.

War Film

An unsuccessful attempt to purchase the entire footage of Universal Newsreel's latest pictures of the Sino-Japanese war for the admitted purpose of suppression was made this week by Siegfried F. Lindstrom, who claimed to represent the Japanese Chamber of Commerce in New York, according to a copyrighted story published in Motion Picture Daily. The offer, the Daily continued, was made to Charles E. Ford, editor of the newsreel, who explained the film is to be released as the weekend issue of the reel. He said it contains shots of the bombing by Japanese airplanes of the Central Hospital, the Nanking Power Plant, the shooting down of Japanese planes and the capture of their pilots by the Chinese, and the visit of Madame Chiank Kai Shek, wife of the generalissimo of the Chinese armies, to the Central Hospital during the air raid. Mr. Lindstrom, according to the Daily, admitted he had no official capacity in the Japanese Chamber of Commerce in New York, but said he had been requested to represent it in the attempt to purchase the film. He said he also had approached officials of News of the Day and Movietone News on the same matter, but that they had given him no specific answer pending receipt of their film.

George Yamaoka, attorney of 120 Broadway and a director of the Japanese Chamber of Commerce, said he had asked Mr. Lindstrom to obtain copies of the reels, not the negatives.

Biophone Suit Settled

A stipulation settling and discontinuing the $15,000,000 anti-trust suit of the Biophone Corporation against American Telephone and Telegraph and Western Electric was filed by both sides in the United States district court in New York Wednesday. Biophone, suing under the Sherman anti-trust laws and seeking triple damages, had charged that the defendants refused permission to licensees of their patent to use the apparatus in the motion picture industry. The amount of the settlement was not given.

Gossip and Windsor

George Fischer, motion picture gossip columnist for the Los Angeles Daily News, motion picture gossip commentator on the air for Jergens' toilet-counter hand lotion, and, described by the press as the possessor of an ingenious imagination, told an NBC radio audience last Sunday night that no less a person than ex-King Edward VIII, the Duke of Windsor, is going to take on no less a position than "czar" of the entire international motion picture world. Will Hays said that there was absolutely no foundation for such a statement, but Mr. Fischer persisted.

The affair is reported on page 17.

To Be or Not to Be

"Inside stories" have been written, press interviews have been granted and all sorts of rumors have been denied but the status of the Hal Roach-Vittorio Mussolini producing company, RAM, still remains a mystery. The 21-year-old son of Italy's Dictator, announced in New York that everything was fine in Hollywood and so far as he knew the RAM deal was still on. However, a Roach executive was quoted as answering a query on the new company with the question: "Why bring up a dying duck?" Press reports from Rome state Il Duce had ordered his son to return to Italy but young Mussolini, first quoted as saying he had talked with his father, later announced he had received no word from Il Duce.

Dunphy to Aid Zukor

After reorganization of Paramount's publicity department, Christopher Dunphy, now in New York, will become production aid to Adolph Zukor, whom he is meeting in New York upon Mr. Zukor's return from Europe. Terry Delapp and Cliff Lewis, assistant to Mr. Dunphy, will split command of the studio publicity and advertising department respectively. Mr. Dunphy succeeds to the post recently vacated by the resignation of Ted Lesser.

"Red" Film Outlet

Protestations by Pennsylvania "liberal" and labor groups against the state censor board's banning of "The Spanish Earth," documentary war film purportedly propagandizing the Red cause in the Spanish Civil War, resulted this week in removal of the ban by George Howard Earle, Governor.

Governor Earle, however, remarked that the United States is becoming the "dumping ground" for pictures "which attempt to sell to the American people the doctrines of Communism, Fascism and Nazism," as reported on page 38.

Basque Suit

An action for 200,000 francs ($6,600) has been instituted in French civil court against the German film company, Agfa, by the Basque government, according to Associated Press dispatch from Paris. The Basques contend they were damaged by the alleged retention of pictures said to prove that Spanish insurgent warplanes destroyed Guernica, once capital of the country and shrine of the Basque nationalism. The suit also demands immediate return of the film under pain of a fine of 5,000 francs ($165) for every day's delay in delivery.

Exhibitors Meet

Edgar A. Kirchner, manager of the Family theatre, Detroit, opened the annual convention of the Michigan unit of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors at Detroit with announcement of plans to make the organization a "real independent exhibitors' association." The Massachusetts Allied unit elected officers and directors and progress was made on plans to merge the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York City with Allied of New Jersey.

Reports of conventions and dates of future meetings are on page 16.

Binaural Sound

Of chief interest at the early sessions of the convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in New York was a demonstration of binaural or stereophonic sound at the Bell Telephone Laboratories. Under the new method of two channel recording and reproduction the sound appears to come from its pictured source on the screen instead of from a central point, giving a third dimensional effect. At the opening luncheon of the convention on Monday Martin Quigley decried attempts by groups outside the industry to force producers to introduce propagandistic elements into pictures produced solely for entertainment.

A complete record of the convention activities starts on page 25.

Legislation Warnings

A warning that there is an impending onslaught of legislation which will affect the motion picture industry, was issued this week in a bulletin from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Ed Kuykendall, president, made the announcement before leaving on a trip through the West and he called upon exhibitors to join forces in preparation for the next session of Congress. Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors also issued a bulletin, asking that steps be taken in regard to possible future legislation. Allied announced it would conduct a nationwide survey to determine the stand of exhibitors on such proposed measures as an anti-compulsory block booking and blind selling bill.

Both bulletins are discussed in stories on page 52.

Operator Contracts

Differences which led to a one-day strike in Vancouver, B. C., last week were settled under the terms of an agreement reached by British Columbia projectionists with the Famous Players Canadian circuit and independent theatre owners. Projectionists also signed contracts in Chicago, Kansas City, Wisconsin and New Jersey. Interest in the labor situation in the production branch centered on the Regional Labor Board hearing in Los Angeles at which the Screen Writers' Guild is seeking designation as a collective bargaining agency.

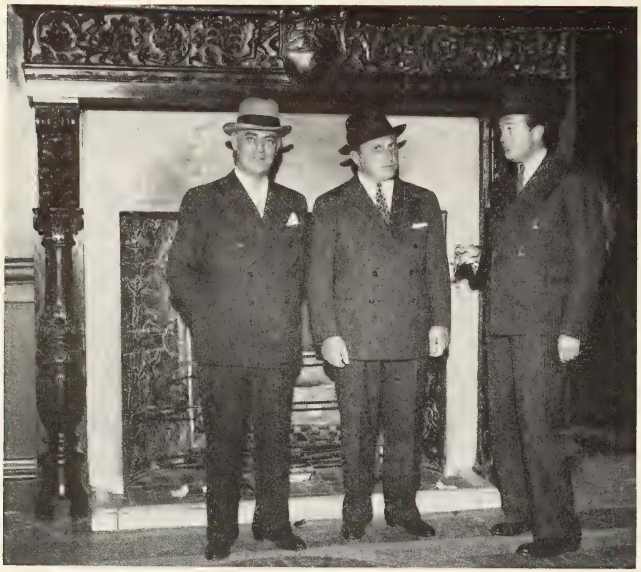
The labor front is covered in the story on page 56.

Dullzell Quits

Paul Dullzell, executive secretary and treasurer of Actors Equity Association, submitted his resignation to the Equity council at its regular weekly meeting on Tuesday. The council, reported to have been taken completely by surprise, postponed action on the resignation until October 26th. Frank Gillmore, president of the association, whose resignation from that post will become effective November 1st, announced from Denver that he would take the first train to New York.

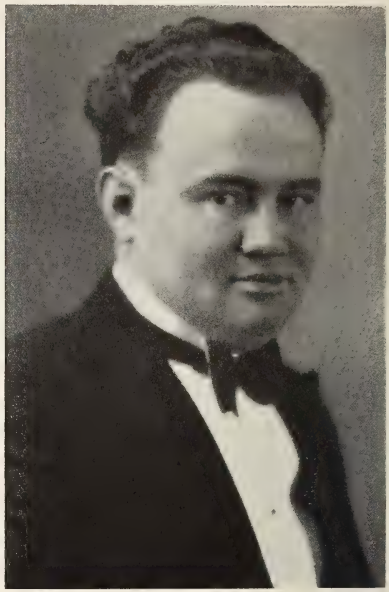
Shy on U. S. Influence

The plan for a one hundred per cent association of producers in England has failed, though an organization committee has been named, with Capt. the Hon. Richard Norton as chairman, to draft the constitution. There will be an association, but its function will be limited to negotiations with organized labor. The reason the idea of an all-inclusive association has bogged down rests in the shyness of British interests on inclusion of American, lest they take too important a place in the organization.



Details are found on page 36.

Conspiracy Law



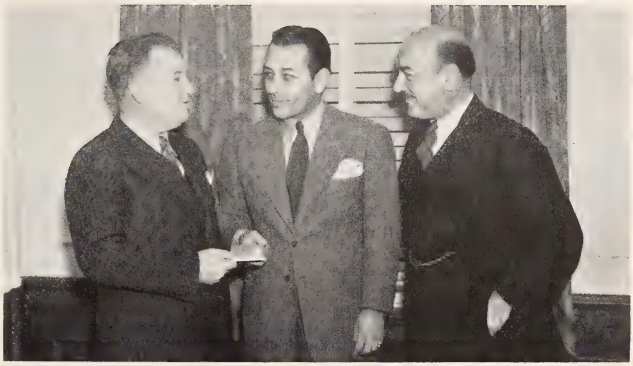
Refusal of distributors to sell to an exhibitor is not a violation of any law, according to a recent decision handed down by William H. Atwell, judge of the United States district court in Dallas. The court dismissed a conspiracy action brought by Ruben Frels, exhibitor, against the Jefferson Amusement Company and major distributors. He charged they had conspired to prevent him from obtaining product but the court held that he had merely proven that he had difficulty in obtaining pictures. There was no proof of concerted action by the defendants, the judge said.

Excerpts from the decision on page 72.

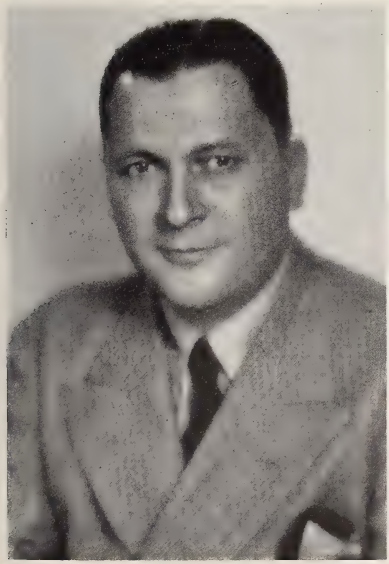
This Week in Pictures

IN front of the fireplace in the lobby of Daly's, London, and surrounded by the ghosts (not shown) of theatrical history, Julian Schlesinger hands over the keys of the theatre to Sam E. Morris, center, and Max Milder, left. Bronzes, statuary and other furnishings associated with the traditions of the world famous theatre will be preserved in the new Warner Brothers house to be erected on the site. To make possible a reconstruction whenever a production requires an old theatrical background cameramen took 300 different pictures of the interior before the wreckers took charge. The pictures together with other relics of the building not used in furnishing the new house will be stored at the company's Teddington studios.

R. X. Williams, Jr., was reelected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee at a meeting in Memphis which was highlighted by criticism of "indiscriminate" intermingling of whites and negroes in motion pictures and by a warning, issued by Edward Kuykendall, MPTOA president, that if a special session of Congress is held this Fall it probably will consider measures affecting the film industry.



Adolph Zukor, Paramount board chairman, at the Hotel Palatinus, Budapest. On Mr. Zukor's right is N. G. Palugyay, Paramount manager for Hungary. Others in the group are representatives of the press.



Warner Brothers theatre managers of Chicago, Wisconsin and Indiana met last week at Chicago's Blackstone hotel to discuss seasonal plans with executives. At the speakers' table, in the customary order, are A. O. Kvool, general manager for the Warner-Saxe theatres; Charles H. Ryan, assistant zone manager for Chicago; James E. Coston, Chicago zone manager; Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner theatres; Thomas Saxe, of Saxe theatres, and Harry Goldberg, Warner Brothers advertising manager.

John L. Franconi, formerly southwest district manager for Gaumont British, has acquired a half interest with Edward Blumenthal in the Monogram franchise for the Texas territory.

PRESS-THEATRE RELATIONS IMPROVE IN 75% OF PAPERS

Increased Space Given to News of Motion Pictures, While Theatre Advertising Lineage Shows Little Change

Relations between the press and the exhibition and distribution branches of the motion picture industry which have direct contact with local newspapers, have shown marked improvement in recent months, noticeably in the way of increased space devoted to film news of interest to the general reader and to exploitation initiated by individual theatre managers. Theatre advertising lineage has shown no average increase or decrease over last year although rate advances in many instances have been adopted or indicated.

A recent survey of 40 cities indicated that 75 per cent of newspapers are giving more attention to motion picture news. In only nine cities, most of them small municipalities, were editors reported less friendly toward the screen.

Commercial rates, considerably lower than the traditional theatre rates for film advertising, are working out satisfactorily in several locations. In some cases newspaper publishers have adopted commercial rates for such lineage in connection with "no publicity" agreements, only to find that reader interest demands comprehensive motion picture news.

Reports from scattered but representative cities indicate that total lineage placed for a sample period, August and part of September, shows little average change over the corresponding period in 1936.

That a majority of editors and publishers have awakened to the circulation value of film news and are giving it more space and more carefully edited space, than ever before was indicated in the answers to questionnaires sent by Oscar A. Doob, advertising and publicity director for Loew's Theatres, to theatre managers and publicity men in more than 40 cities in which the company operates houses. Reports of improved relationships were generally from the larger cities including Boston, Cleveland, Akron, Worcester, Canton, Hartford, Dayton, Atlanta, Wilmington, Houston, Toledo, New Haven, Louisville, Meriden, Indianapolis, Kansas City, St. Louis, Richmond, Providence, Pittsburgh, Washington, Evansville, Reading and Columbus.

Only a few cities reported a retrogression in editorial cooperation, among them Nashville, Bridgeport, Baltimore, Waterbury, Syracuse, Harrisburg and Rochester. New Orleans, Toronto, Norfolk and Memphis reported no material change.

Much of the added space, the answers indicated, is devoted to general studios news and features. Commenting on this factor Mr. Doob said,

"The only danger in this trend to give more space to general Hollywood news and feature services is that it crowds off the movie pages much of the strictly local theatre news; not such a pleasant commentary on the methods and talents of the local publicity writers. If the theatres provided the newspapers with a higher grade of local news the editors would not prefer the wire or correspondence stuff from the coast."

HIGHER RATES ASKED FOR BIG ADVERTISERS

Increase in the low rates now granted volume advertisers by most newspapers are the only solution to rapidly dwindling newspaper profits, delegates at a recent publishers' conference at Stanford University, Palo Alto, Cal., were told by H. C. Burkheimer, publisher of the Alhambra Post-Advocate.

With costs rapidly increasing publishers will face the prospect of losses unless they correct the error of selling advertising at less than cost in order to increase volume Mr. Burkheimer said. The talk was accompanied by charts based on a survey the publisher made of his own cost and rate structures and included a plan for selling the increased rates by stressing the community services performed by newspapers in contrast with other mediums.

Serializations Popular

Another noticeable trend, the reports showed, is the increased interest that editors are taking in synopses of current or forthcoming pictures, either in pictorial or novelette form. Studio publicity offices have been concentrating on these forms, using well known titles and outstanding writers, and newspapers using them have found them valuable circulation builders.

In several situations the newspapers have introduced regular commercial advertising rates for theatres. In all of these cities the theatres report satisfaction with the lower rate which does not carry with it any definite publicity promises. In Richmond, Va., the Times-Dispatch decided to eliminate all unpleasant discussions of publicity with the theatres and merchants. Theatre advertising was put on the commercial rate and a move was made to minimize the space given to the screen. Then the paper took a poll of its readers and found a definite demand for more film news. Since then the paper, still using the commercial rate, has enlarged its amusement columns. In fact the News-Leader, which has maintained its theatrical rate, has increased its film space to keep pace with the other paper.

In Norfolk the theatres prefer to buy advertising at the low commercial rate rather than pay the much higher theatrical rate and secure the 50-50 publicity when the higher rate involves. In New Orleans, where theatrical space is on the low rate basis, the papers still give considerable editorial space to the theatres. In Harrisburg, Pa., policies are mixed. The Telegraph gives very liberal attention to the screen. The Patriot and Evening News gives publicity only to theatres paying the theatrical premium and houses buying space at the commercial rate get nothing.

Screen Pages "Cleaned Up"

Cooperation between editors and theatre managers has made possible calm discussion of mutual problems. In a number of cities the managers have been successful in having the newspapers rid the amusement pages of commercial advertising, radio programs, unsightly black advertisements and similar material. In other cases managers have persuaded publishers to postpone contemplated rate increases.

Theatres in Nashville and Syracuse for the last year have been the victims of local conditions. In both cities the practice of giving merchants publicity placed under advertising pressure rather than on the basis of its news value, became so widespread that the publishers combined to issue a "no publicity" edict. This, aimed primarily at the commercial advertisers, was allowed also to militate against the theatres. While the local screen offerings received routine attention, all contests, cooperative advertisements and similar special cooperation were and are banned. The Theatrical advertising rate has not been reduced.

Syracuse papers are eliminating radio columns and sport and other news from their theatrical pages. In Nashville, the Tennessean, never very partial to screen news, is showing more interest in theatre coperation and recently opened conversations with local theatres toward building up a Thursday amusement page.

A number of papers in other cities have recognized Thursday or Friday opening dates and have amusement pages timed accordingly, although all Sunday papers retain their special sections. Most of these now deal with the coming week's attractions rather than giving space to the current shows which already have run the major part of the week.

Drops Publishers' Agreement

In Pittsburgh the Sun-Telegraph's recent decision to break away from the publishers' agreement against any special promotional contests or other theatrical exploitation has improved conditions. The agreement, in existence many years, barred all stunts no matter how good. The paper also changed its film policy to conform more to the general Hearst policy of extensive art and timely special stories.

With a change of ownership of the Star-Tribune there has been a general change for the better in Providence. The new owners have expressed belief in the value of film news and are devoting additional space to it. The other papers, the Journal Bulletin and the Pawtucket Times have fallen in line with the policy.

Similarly a change of management of the Times in Reading, Pa., quite recently brought about a sudden change in the situation in that city. The Eagle for several years has permitted the theatres to choose a commercial rate without publicity or a much higher film rate which involved a promise of publicity. The Times, with an amusement rate of $1.19 per inch has continued to give publicity. A new general manager for the Times recently offered the theatres the regular mercantile rate of 88 cents per inch and promised that the paper not only would continue its present publicity but would star an improved amusement page.

In St. Louis there has been general improvement. The Post Dispatch retaining its Sunday amusement page, has added a half page on Thursdays and a full page on Fridays. The Star-Times has been running enlarged daily screen pages and the Globe-Democrat is using a full page, double its former allotment. All papers, however, are adhering to an agreement barring film contests.

The Indianapolis Times has established a daily film page and the News has increased the space allotted to routine news and special items.

Rates Increased

Increased theatrical advertising rates were put in effect October 1st by the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. The lineage for motion picture advertising has been increased from $6 to $7 an inch with the scale for legitimate theatres advancing the same amount from $7 to $8. The Post-Gazette is alone in the morning field and claims the top circulation in the city. The new rate will place its card on the same basis as the Press, Scripps-Howard afternoon paper which has been charging the higher rate for some time.

Omaha theatres have received news of a major advance in rates by the World-Herald which recently acquired control of the newspaper field in the city through its purchase of the Bee-News. All existing contracts have been cancelled and the 20 cents an inch rebate formerly accorded if advertising was split between the two papers has been suspended. Effective November 1st the rate will be $5.05 an inch with a rebate of 10 cents an inch if 150 inches a week are used and an additional 10 cents if 250 inches are used.

An advertising rate dispute between the Lincoln Theatres Corporation and Westland Theatres Corporation on one side and the newspapers, Journal and Star on the other, has been settled after eight weeks of dissension which began when the papers increased their rate of $3.70 to $4. The theatres withdrew more than half of their usual advertising. Under the new agreement the rate will be $3.80 an inch and if more than 50 inches are used weekly it will be $3.

A similar but more extensive war is still being waged in Baltimore where the theatres have confined their advertising in the Sun papers to directory space for several months since the papers announced a rate change. Neither side shows any inclination toward modifying its stand and the theatre managers claim no loss of business has resulted. The News-Post, opposition newspaper, has continued its cooperation with theatres.

New Orleans Lineage Heaviest in South

Display advertising placed by theatres in New Orleans exceeds that of other industries, major department stores excluded, and is believed to be the heaviest in the South in comparison with other cities.

While advertising rates are high for non-contracts, the theatres enjoy the commercial rate if a sufficient number of lines are contracted for at the beginning of the season, with a rebate for unused lineage when the year expires. National advertising placed by the distributors and producers is not as heavy as the local.

Display advertising and editorial space devoted to film news during the weeks ending August 21st and 28th and September 4th and 11th totalled for two seven day papers, two six day papers and miscellaneous weeklies, compared with the corresponding weeks for 1936 follow:

	1936	1937
Display	10,000 inches	9,050 inches
Free reading matter	6,800 inches	7,300 inches

Included in the total for free reading matter were routine reviews and Sunday layouts as well as special matter.

ALL ADVERTISING TAXED IN PERU

The Peruvian Government has enacted legislation providing for taxation of advertising in newspapers and magazines, the revenue to be applied toward establishment of a government printing office and toward the expense of disseminating propaganda concerning Peruvian economics, industry and culture.

According to a report to the United States Department of Commerce from Lima the law will be applied only to publications issued in Lima or its suburbs and will amount to ten per cent ad valorem. Advertisements soliciting employment will be exempt.

Totals Show Decline For Spokane Papers

Records show that during the four week period from August 21st to September 11th this year theatre advertising in three newspapers in Spokane, Wash., declined about 950 inches in comparison with the corresponding period of last year. The decrease is attributed to differences in the weather during this period, the newspapers claiming 15 per cent more theatre advertising so far this year than for corresponding months of 1936.

The totals for the period were:

4,325 inches	3,380 inches

Free space given theatres by the three newspapers is about the same this year as last but type has changed. More space is given studio news and local theatre publicity is dressed up as legitimate news. Each paper gives about a column a day to the theatres, including gossip and comment on local theatre bills. The Press has a full page of art and film news on Saturday. The Spokesman-Review has a color section on Sunday. More tieups between the theatres and the papers are evident, including contests, lobby displays, and special shows.

Cleveland Advertising Shows Big Increase

Theatre advertising lineage in four Cleveland newspapers for August, 1937, showed an increase of 1,204 lines over August, 1936. Totals were:

	August, 1936	August, 1937
Plain Dealer (morning)	36,828 lines	38,764 lines
Plain Dealer (Sunday)	10,458	11,821
News (evening daily)	41,223	46,318
Press (evening daily)	45,355	48,165
Totals	133,864 lines	145,068 lines

Cleveland first run houses receive an average of approximately 1,500 lines of free space a week in the Plain Dealer, including daily and Sunday editions, and the Press and the News, each daily except Sunday. On extraordinary occasions as much as 3,500 lines has been accorded a picture in one week.

Grosses, Advertising Up in Indianapolis

Total theatre receipts in the fifty-odd houses of Indianapolis showed an increase of approximately $30,000 for the period August 15th to September 11th compared with corresponding period a year ago.

In round numbers receipts for the period in 1936 were about $270,000; this year they ran about $300,000 or better. Virtually all existing theatres show increases in grosses over last year and the increase also represents three or four additional houses, including two reopenings of houses long closed.

Agate lines of theatre advertising in Indianapolis's three newspapers totaled 80,000 in the period in 1937, as against 73,000 for the four weeks in 1936.

Free space dropped a bit. The four weeks yielded 200 columns of space in 1936 and 190 columns this year.

Included in the period is the Indiana State Fair, which can be credited with bringing about $10,000 additional into the houses—principally downtown ones, of course—during the week of its existence. It also accounts for some increase in newspaper advertising but a decrease in free space. The papers made generous use of news and pictures of the fair and amusement space consequently is constricted.

Slight Increase In New Haven

Total estimated theatre receipts in New Haven, including the West Haven and East Haven areas, were $129,000 for the weeks ended August 21st and 28th and September 4th and 11th, approximately 8 per cent better than corresponding weeks of 1936, in which the gross was about $118,000. These figures include four first run houses and 14 second run. Although several individual theatres report an increase over last year for this period of nearer 25 per cent, this is not generally indicated.

B. E. Hoffman of Warner Theaters, believes that whatever increase is shown, is due not to betterment of general conditions in the least, but to earlier release of big feature pictures within the period studied, and a "break" in pre-Labor Day weather conditions.

An approximate total of 2,700 inches of advertising space was taken by local theatres in the morning Journal Courier and Evening Register for the four weeks considered, the evening paper representing about two-thirds of this space. Space taken last year in local ads was about the same, except in the instance of the Journal-Courier which many theatres reduced after the rate was changed from $1.75 to $1.85 an inch. The Register rate is $3.00 an inch. Only about eight of the neighborhoods advertise regularly, using a 2-inch top size ad, while East Haven and West Haven houses use the news columns for publicizing programs.

The greatest change in the advertising situation in 1937 was the tremendous increase in national advertising placed. During the last two weeks in August and the first two in September the national lineage appearing in both papers amounted to approximately 650 inches. In 1936 for the same weeks, there were 205 inches. This again may be partially traced to the earlier re leases of leading features this year.

of readers and art were given theatres by both papers during these four weeks, or about one-third the amount of paid space. A negligible amount of copy on serials, contests and other articles appeared during the time considered.

Birmingham Lineage Shows Little Change

A check of Birmingham and surrounding territory reveals an average of 10 per cent increase in grosses for the four weeks selected for 1937 as against the same period in 1936 though in one or two instances managers reported a larger July-August business in 1937 and a slack period during the late days of August and early September.

The trend shows a larger per cent increase in grosses for downtown houses than for neighborhood theatres.

The average for newspaper advertising is about the same for both periods with possibly slightly less free space in 1937 than in 1936.

Business Upturn Slow in Kansas City

Improved general conditions in Kansas City and the surrounding area have not been reflected in theatre grosses, an analysis of box office returns reveals. Circuits representing 150 theatres both in Kansas City and in the territory report grosses off from 10 to 20 per cent in the four-week period ending September 11th with the Labor Day holiday weekend comparatively the same distance from last year's figure. This figure, circuits report, holds true not only for the dated period above, but for the summer as well. An average for this group would be a loss of between 10 and 15 per cent.

Only one circuit reported grosses up. This was Commonwealth Amusement Corporation, with 28 theatres. Here grosses are said to be holding their own with last year, or gaining slightly.

Among first runs in Kansas City business is down. Two houses report business up from 10 to 30 per cent; two report it down 15 per cent, and one reports the decrease at 25 per cent. An average based on seating capacity leaves grosses in this category definitely lower.

Comments would indicate that returns from early season "big picture" releases have been disappointing.

Advertising, national and local, is down in comparison with a year ago. This is true both of the territory and of local first runs. Kansas City, Mo., suburbans show little variance in advertising lineage between the four weeks ended Sept. 11, 1937, and the same period of 1936. The five first runs, however, bought over 17 per cent less lineage in the four weeks this year than in the same period a year ago in their biggest medium.

Free space ran about the same. In the Kansas City Star there is, regularly, a daily column from Hollywood. In Sunday's issue the first page of one of the sections is devoted to art layouts and reviews. In Thursday's Times (Star morning edition) is an art layout with captions on coming attractions. This has increased slightly due to increased use of double features by first runs. Otherwise there is no appreciable change.

In the Journal-Post Lowell Lawrance's reviews on Sunday and "Views and Previews" column five days a week are much the same in space as a year ago. They are confined to the product at the Midland, Mainstreet and Newman, the only first runs operating last year as well as those which advertise in the Post. Lawrance is using more serializations on outstanding early season pictures.

EXHIBITORS BLAMED FOR PRESS FRICTION

Squabbling among theatre managers over the amount of publicity granted certain houses is responsible for lack of newspaper cooperation in many cases, according to Oscar A. Dobb, advertising and publicity manager for Loew's Theatres.

"A narrow dog-in-the-manger attitude among the competing theatres," he said, "apparently has turned many a harassed editor against the movies and movie publicity. The fact that one theatre lands a good story or contest in a local paper often sends all other managers to the editor crying discrimination and demanding a 'break' for themselves. . . . The disgusted editor decides to avoid the arguments and complaints by shutting down on all publicity except, perhaps, the bare routine stuff that does no one much good, not even the paper."

Grosses Up, Lineage Down in Wilmington

Box office receipts of Wilmington theatres showed a decided upturn for a four-week period during 1937 compared with the corresponding period in 1936 as circuit and independent houses reported increases of from 10 to 25 per cent. The comparison was made in a survey of city theatres for the four-week period including the last two weeks of August and first two in September.

While receipts of independent houses in the city were not disclosed managers reported increases for that period over the same four weeks in 1936 of up to 25 per cent, while the circuits gain averaged better than 10 per cent. Box office receipts for the two circuits, Loew's and Warner Brothers, totaled $58,000 in the four-week period, including the weeks ended August 21 and 28 and September 4 and 11, compared with $52,650.30 for the same period in 1936.

Local advertising space in the city's three newspapers by circuit houses and one first run independent down-town theatre showed a slump for the four-week period in 1937 over the corresponding period in 1936. A total of 14,868 lines were used in the local papers for 1937 compared with 19,146 in 1936, a decrease of 4,278 lines.

National advertising for the same houses showed a heavy increase, however, with 8,906 lines reported for the 1937 period compared with 6,474 lines in 1936, an increase of 2,432 lines.

The unchanged policy of the local press toward free theatre publicity showed little increase for 1937 over the 1936 period. In the city's three papers, the Journal-Every Evening, Wilmington Morning News and Sunday Star a total of 1,773 inches of free space was given to all theatres in the city for 1937 compared with 1,761 inches during the same period in 1936, an increase of only 12 inches. The Journal gave 674 inches in 1937 compared with 655 in 1936, the News 697 in 1937 compared with 706 in 1936 and the Star 402 inches in 1937 compared with 400 in 1936.

Syracuse Advertising Shows August Increase

A total of 8,074 more lines of advertising were placed by theatres in Syracuse in three newspapers in August of 1937 than in the same month of 1936. The figures for the three papers, including daily and Sunday editions were:

	1936	1937
Herald	17,278 lines	20,965 lines
Journal-American	19,501	22,084
Post-Standard	16,197	19,001
Totals	53,976 lines	62,050 lines

Total free space given theatres as readers and news averages one column a day including Sunday. This figure is slightly high but includes extra space given in picture displays and indicates no change from last year.

Los Angeles Grosses Up; Advertising Unchanged

For the four week period ended September 11th box office gross receipts in the Los Angeles territory were approximately $2,200,000, a figure said by theatre executives to be a ten per cent increase over the same time last year.

In the same period Los Angeles theatres paid for 12,240 inches of display advertising in the Times, Examiner, Herald-Express, Daily News, Post-Record and Hollywood Citizen-News. Neighborhood local papers, shopping news sheets and market throwaways were not included Exchange advertising for which theatres run newspaper exploitation clips totalled 7,040 inches. During the period free publicity, regular columns, studio material and news stories of openings totalled 21,048 inches.

The figures were practically the same for 1936.

National Decency Legion Classifies 19 Productions

Of 19 new pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week, 14 were approved for general patronage and five were listed as unobjectionable for adults. The pictures and their classification follow:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Breakfast for Two," "A Bride for Henry," "Bulldog Drummond Comes Back," "Casta Diva," "Fit for a King," "Lancer Spy," "Life Begins with Love," "Love Is on the Air," "Over the Goal," "The Perfect Specimen," "65,68 och Jag," "Stars Over Arizona," "Thunder Trail," "Youth on Parole." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "The Bride Wore Red," "Dangerously Yours," "Ebb Tide," "La Llaga," "The Westland Case."

Wilby To Discuss Paramount Contract

Negotiations for a new operating contract for the Wilby-Kincey Circuit in the South and Paramount will be continued next week when R. B. Wilby visits New York, according to Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount vice-president and theatre head.

The former agreement expired June 30th and negotiations were undertaken in midsummer but were postponed when Mr. Wilby found it necessary to return to the south. A five-year contract is understood to be under consideration.

EXHIBITORS INCREASE ATTENTION TO RADIO AS AID TO BOX OFFICE

Butterfield and United Detroit Circuits Using Tieups and Trailers; Radio Newsreel Is Minneapolis Variant

Hollywood's renewed attention in the radio broadcasting of their stars and pictures is bringing an equal interest on the part of some exhibitors in the use of the air medium for publicizing their screenings —this despite the protests heard elsewhere in exhibition from some owners against the so-called "competition" of film stars on the air.

Although virtually all state exhibitor organizations at one time or another have condemned the practice of film studios loaning their stars to radio, the principal source of complaint against the renewed move appears to be concentrated now in the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, whose secretary, Pete J. Wood, this week advised members to play as many MGM percentage pictures on Thursday nights as they can, as one means of combating the "competition" of Metro's new arrangement to loan all their stars to the General Foods programs. Mr. Wood had previously registered a vigorous protest in behalf of his organization with Nicholas M. Schenck, MGM president.

Organized exhibitors are investigating the extent, if any, of the film stars' competition on the air through a special MPTOA committee, under the leadership of Walter Vincent, circuit owner, which has been studying the situation for months.

Now, however, many individual owners and circuits, apparently believing that radio can be utilized as a box office aid, are tying in extensively with local stations on arrangements, made cooperatively or otherwise, for broadcasting of entertainment or information to publicize their current attractions.

Several hundreds of theatres today are using local stations for exploitation tieups, obtaining air "plugs," gratis for the most part. Added to these are the several dozens recruited in the past few days to the idea of radio aid for box-offices.

Michigan Circuits Active

Probably the most formidable tie-in has been made in Michigan, where radio again is being employed as a ticket-selling medium throughout the territory by Butterfield Theatres and United Detroit Theatres, two of the largest circuits in the state.

United Detroit last week started a series of "new season previews," first instituted by United Detroit in cooperation with Robert Gillham, director of advertising for Paramount.

Nine stations broadcast the United shows, originating at the Detroit studios of Station WXYZ. The program runs for a half-hour and is a combination of both drama and music, with an orchestra of 30, a chorus of 16, several solos and a dramatic cast of from eight to 15 persons, depending on the character of the dialogue taken from the Hollywood film script. The story of the current feature attraction is told up to the point of arousing curiosity, with dialogue and the high points of both orchestral and voice music given from the film's score. Other Detroit and subsequent stations now airing this program are Stations WWJ, WJR, WMBC and WJBK.

The Butterfield circuit ties in with spot announcements at the close of the program on the local stations in the cities of Lansing, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, Bay City, Battle Creek, Flint and elsewhere.

Trailers on the screens of the United Detroit Theatres in Detroit and in the Butterfield Theatres throughout Michigan call attention in the theatre, as do special newspaper advertisements which are used by the theatres on the radio pages of all local daily newspapers.

Edward Forrester, of the Omaha theatre, in Omaha, started a weekly 15-minute program at eleven a.m. Wednesday, over Station WOW, in Omaha, for the benefit of the large circuit operated by Tri-States theatres.

A unique cooperative radio arrangement with exhibition was made in Minneapolis, where both Station WTCN and the World theatre joined to produce a radio newsreel, each giving mention to the other in advertising and station announcements. The idea is a local newsreel, covering events of immediate interest, particularly those upon which the radio station lays emphasis in its regular news broadcasts.

The World provides the camera equipment and cameraman, and Station WTCN furnishes Stephen Wells, director of publicity, who edits the film and writes the continuity, and Charles Irving, narrator.

"Art" theatres, and there are many in and around New York, are benefiting by the new "International Film Review" series going over Station WBNX, Tuesdays at 5:30 P. M., when Bob Stokes comments on their foreign film fare.

Great States Circuit in the midwest, headquarters in Chicago, is turning to radio as a potential aid for its box offices. Jules J. Rubens, Great States executive, is even considering the operation of a 1,040 kilocycle station with a 250-watt daytime power from Aurora, Ill. He already has filed an application to build with the Federal Communications Commission in Washington.

Tieup on Celebrities

Albert Galston, operating the Marcal theatre on Hollywood Boulevard, in Hollywood, writes to describe a radio tie-in which he employed.

The program was presented jointly by Station KMPC and the Marcal.

Arranged by Mr. Galston and Jay M. Sutton, theatre head, the tie-up presented the cast of Cecil B. DeMille's "Godless Girl," current attraction, in person on the stage, where they received "a tremendous ovation," according to Mr. Galston. They were then rushed to KMPC studios, where they spoke to the audience of the air and also the audience seated in the theatre. This was followed by the master of ceremonies, who introduced the screen celebrities seated in the theatre auditorium.

Edwin ("Cinemania") Martin, columnist and commentator, officiated as master of ceremonies both theatre and radio. The remote control set-up, arranged by Clarence Talbott, Marcal projectionist, consisted of a public-address-radio system hooked up to the theatre sound system.

In Pittsburgh, Walt Framer, air commentator for Station WWSW, is doing competitive programs for air attention for both the Harris Amusement Circuit and Warner Brothers Circuit. Harris is sponsoring the Framer "Show-Shopper" program and Warners are sponsoring the Framer "Footlights and Shadows" show at 11:30 every morning. The Harris program goes over the air for 15 minutes at 5:45 P. M., excepting Saturdays and Sundays.

Details of MGM Plan Coming

Plans for the new MGM air show which is to be sponsored by General Foods for advertising Maxwell House Coffee will be formulated this week on the Coast when Louis K. Sidney, of Metro, who will be general director of the program, arrives in Hollywood to confer with Billy Bacher, in charge of the show on the coast. Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, said the other day that he saw certain advantages in a radio tieup, provided the program is handled properly.

The first indication of MGM's new policy of maintaining a watchful eye over the outside radio commitments of its players came to the fore this week with Mr. Bacher, producing Sunday's Vicks program starring Jeanette MacDonald, "loaned" to Morse International Agency to produce "The Student Prince," Miss MacDonald's Sunday vehicle.

RKO Radio has established a radio relations department and will preview important pictures for sponsors and producers of radio shows interested in using screen talent on the air. First preview was of "Music For Madame," this week.

Grand National is the latest production company to make plans for an air presentation. A print of "Renfrew of the Royal Mounted," recently completed feature with James Newill, radio singer, in the title role, has been shipped to New York for submission to a possible sponsor to return the serial to the air.

Final consummation of the Warner Brothers-American Tobacco Co. air deal awaits merely the waxing of the proposed program and the approval of the show by the tobacco company, Tom McAvity, radio department head of Lord and Thomas, said in New York this week. He disclosed for the first time that the studio heads approved of their end of the deal which would have Warner stars and musical talent and scripts.

The Warner show, if approved, would replace "The Lucky Strike Hit Parade" on the NBC-Red Wednesdays and would be one hour long. Dick Powell and Leo Forbstein, studio musical director, would be permanent features of the program with other lot talent utilized from time to time.

Don Becker of Transamerican has taken offices at the Warner lot to help arrange the show and waxing, calling in the service of Major Nathan Levinson, studio sound department head. Recording will be finished in about three weeks.

Rubey Cowan, Paramount radio contract man, said two weeks ago in New York that "Paramount is planning return to an air program" such as the "Paramount on Parade" program which was discontinued last spring, or like Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's General Food Show.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, now in Hollywood, while discussing studio broadcasting, said that the MPTOA's attitude is that MGM, as well as other studios, should have the exhibitors' box office point of view in regard to radio programs.

AMUSEMENT STOCKS AT $437,783,318

The market value of amusement stocks traded in on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange as of October 1st was $437,783,318.

The average price of the securities at that time was $24.43 a share.

THEATRES TURN TO LOCAL NEWSREEL AS SUBSITUTE FOR CHANCE GAMES

Newspapers Cooperate; Exhibitors Frequently Use 16 mm. Film for Independent Productions

Looking about for some device to take the place of chance games, pot-and-pan giveaways and other gift forms as the seemingly-necessary added attraction, a number of exhibitors are turning to the independent production of local newsreels.

The production of local newsreels is not new, but now theatre owners are taking on the idea in large numbers, frequently using 16mm film.

The Burton Jerrel "News Flashes" in Iowa already are serving local newsreels to some 190 theatres in that state (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, page 92, August 14th), and now the Chicago and Minneapolis areas are adopting the plan.

In Minneapolis, Radio Station WTCN and the World theatre jointly are cooperating on a local newsreel covering that city and the neighboring St. Paul, filming events of local interest, particularly those upon which the radio station's news broadcasts place emphasis. The World theatre furnishes the camera equipment and cameraman, and Stephen Wells, publicity director of WTCN, edits the film and writes the continuity. Charles Irving is the commentator.

Perhaps the outstanding example in the Chicago zone is the 16-mm newsreel being produced by the Stadium theatre in Evanston. This newsreel has been a weekly feature for the past month and interest in the enterprise has been growing rapidly, according to Stuart Tomber, manager of the theatre. The newsreel is worked out in cooperation with the Evanston News-Index, a daily newspaper which supplies the cameramen with information regarding coming news events and in the case of spot news the cameramen are immediately informed and assisted in getting a pictorial record of the story.

Home of Northwestern University

Evanston is the home of Northwestern University, a fact making it an ideal place for better than average news coverage, as many of the school activities lend themselves to being photographed. Football games, class meetings, dances, sorority and fraternity affairs, scholastic events and many other campus doings are constant subjects for the newsreel. Last week the football game between Northwestern and Iowa State was photographed, and the films rushed through for the first showing shortly after the games. Games away from the campus will be photographed and shown on the Stadium screen, according to those in charge.

Full cooperation has been given the theatre by the University which sees in the newsreel a splendid publicity medium. Arrangements are being made, it is reported, for the University to use what footage they desire from the reel after the theatre showing. This footage will be used in shorts to be sent to alumni groups throughout the country.

Doing the camera work for the newsreel are two college students of considerable experience. John Fuller, one of the cameramen, is a pioneer with a 16 mm camera, having made many travel films in the far north. Bart Spence, his associate, has also been active in the 16 mm line for several years.

The Stadium theatre is a 1,200 seat house and the throw from the projection booth, where the 16 mm projector is set up, is close to 120 feet. The projector used is a rotary sprocket intermittent machine made by the DeVry company.

Earlier Tests on 35 mm. Film

On numerous occasions local newsreels have been started in and about Chicago but always they have been on 35 mm film. The cost of producing a newsreel on 35 mm is about 75 per cent more than on the 16 mm scale.

Because of the current interest in the estab lishment of the 16 mm newsreel the DeVry company this week announced in Chicago that they had worked out a plan whereby theatremen interested in making their own newsreels could lease the necessary equipment on a small weekly payment plan. The DeVry company, which makes all sorts of motion picture equipment, would supply the camera, projector, exposure meter, cutting machine and, if desired, the developing and printing equipment.

Several Chicago laboratories are equipped for the handling of the 16 mm film which in most instances is shot on negative stock although in places where only one print is needed the reversable film put out by film companies would be entirely adequate and easy to handle.

Interest in the Chicago newsreel idea has prompted other companies to investigate the plan and it now appears possible that more companies may enter the field. Using safety film at all times makes it possible to project the films from the auditorium of the theatre in cases where the throw is too long. "P.A." systems are used for sound effects and the voice description matter.

For weeks now the Tosa theatre in Wauwatosa, Wis., has been using the 16 mm newsreel idea with the result that business on the nights the film is shown has been above normal. In Morgantown, N. C., Walter Green, theatre operator there, uses the plan with success, it is

Newspapers Cooperate

One important development from this local newsreel idea is the eagerness newspapers have shown in wanting to work with the theatres using the newsreel. Both the newspaper and the newsreel have much in common and the publicity they give each other has proved extremely beneficial. In Evanston, the News-Index runs stories about the reel almost daily and prior to the showing of the reel, which is for one night a week only, a half-page advertisement is given the theatre for advertising the film along with the current feature attractions.

At present other activities in the 16 mm field are being announced in Chicago. This week the Walgreen Drug stores, of which there are 400 in this territory, advertised 16 mm films for sale. The pictures offered are those made by the Castle film company and are of the news or novelty type. They come in various lengths and are sold outright.

Almost currently with this announcement by the Walgreen company, Movie Film Exchanges, Inc., announced a 16 mm film rental plan whereby those who wish to rent 400-foot features can do so at the rate of $1 per reel. These reels will also be released by drug stores, and Dick Courtenay, promotion manager of the company, states that more than 100 stores in key cities throughout the country will have these films for rental in a short time. B. C. Fassio is the head of the concern and is shooting his feature pictures in local studios. The latest production issued was "Footlight Follies of 1937," which is being released by First Runs, Ltd. The vaudeville film is silent.

Annual Meetings For Exhibitors Of Three States

With Allied Theatres of Michigan meeting this week in annual convention, at Detroit, additional state exhibitor organizations moved to hold their annual sessions, in the nature of Wisconsin's Independent Theatres Protective Association, which set November 2nd and 3rd as the dates, in Milwaukee, and Arkansas' Independent Theatre Owners Association, which set November 7th and 8th, in Little Rock.

Other exhibitor organization news this week was the election of officers and directors by Allied Theatres, of Massachusetts, and progress in the merger of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York City with Allied Theatres of New Jersey.

"Real Organization" Sought

Edgar A. Kirchner, manager of the Family Theatre, Detroit, opened the Michigan exhibitor meeting with a discussion of plans to make the organization a "real independent exhibitors' association." Interest in the convention centered on the aftermath of recent withdrawals of a large proportion of Allied members to join Cooperative Theatres of Michigan, along with the resignation of Henderson M. Richey, who was Allied general manager for many years and a former national officer of Allied States.

Sessions of the Wisconsin meeting will be restricted to business, according to Ray Tesch, business manager of the association who, with Edward Maertz and Max Krofta, comprise the general convention committee.

Officers and directors elected at the annual meeting of the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, Inc., held at the Boston City Club, October 5th were: Samuel Pinanski, president; John H. Devlin, vice-president; Stanley Sumner, treasurer; Joseph H. Brennan, secretary, and Charles W. Koerner, Max Mellincoff, M. J. Mullin, E. A. Cuddy, H. M. Addison, George A. Jones, B. E. Hoffman, George E. French, John J. Ford, Al Somerby, James H. Doyle, John S. Giles and George V. Brown, directors.

Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, last week appointed a committee of four to discuss with Allied of New Jersey the possibility of merging both organizations. Maurice Fleischman heads the committee which includes David Weinstock, Leon Rosenblatt and Jimmy Binkov. The New Jersey Allied committee is headed by Irving Dollinger, president, Louis Gold and Morris Marks.

Members of the ITOA, at their regular meeting in the Hotel Astor, New York, last week, reaffirmed their proposal to discard giveaways and games on December 1 provided other independents and major circuits join in concerted action. The film buying situation also was discussed with exhibitors agreed that the new product deals by major companies in the New York area are at low point.

The membership will meet again on October 20th, when Mr. Fleischman reports on merger developments.

Gossiper for Jergens' Lotion Airs Notion about Windsor and Screen

As the "Little Duce" goes home, toilet counter propaganda seeks to contribute world's leading duke.

Will Hays denies, and George Fischer, gossip columnist and Hollywood air commentator, insists that England's Ex-King Edward, the Duke of Windsor, will be named "czar," socalled, of the entire "international motion picture world."

Broadcasting last Sunday evening from Hollywood over the National Broadcasting System, in the role of "gossip" purveyor on the weekly program of Jergens Lotion, and temporarily filling the vacancy of the ailing Walter Winchell, Mr. Fischer asserted:

"From coast to coast and continent to continent, exclusive to the Jergens Journal: Some months ago, the whole world was electrified by a speech that included a phrase 'The Woman I Love.' Thus did one man make his personality felt by all nations through the medium of radio. Now this man's personality may influence the world through the medium of motion pictures.

"I learned authoritatively today that Edward, Duke of Windsor, Ex-King of England, is planning to come to Hollywood, not just for a visit, but to become part and parcel of the third largest industry in the world, motion pictures.

"From reliable sources I have been told that the Ex-King will be named czar of the motion picture world. His salary is reported to have been set at $100,000 per year. Edward, however, will not affect Will Hays' position as czar of American films. His task is expected to become to the international motion picture world, what Will Hays is to the film industry in this country.

"I learned further that the Duke of Windsor will have elaborate offices in Hollywood, but that much of his time will be spent as a roving ambassador.

"My informant further claims that Edward will be invested with full censorship authority for all Hollywood films released outside of this country.

"I understand that the Ex-King is anxious to take the position so that he may give up his present income from the British Government (reputed to be $1,000 per day, $365,000 a year).

"Terms of that income prevent him from entering England to live as a citizen, but with the high salary offered him in Hollywood he would have his complete independence.

"The Duke probably will not live in Hollywood, but I understand that agents are dickering to buy an estate in Virginia where Edward and his wife want to live."

Monday morning, special messengers were sent to newspaper offices in New York by the New York headquarters of the Motion Producers and Distributors of America, Will Hays, president, with the following statement:

"Asked regarding a report that the Duke of Windsor would be employed by the American motion picture industry, Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, said:

" 'There is no basis for the report'."

Following the statement by Mr. Hays, whose

MUSSOLINI SAYS DEAL WITH HAL ROACH STANDS, BUT—

"It's off."

"It's still on."

"It's been postponed indefinitely."

"Why bring up a dying duck?"

That is the enigmatic status accorded by press dispatches to the widely heralded company, RAM, which Hal Roach, Hollywood producer of comedies, and Vittorio Mussolini, son of Il Duce, formed to produce operettas in Italy. Also unexplained was young Mussolini's abrupt departure from Hollywood, whither he had gone with Mr. Roach to study production.

International News Service reported from Rome that it was "assured that Il Duce ordered Vittorio to hurry back home" after reading President Roosevelt's Chicago address condemning "aggressor nations." At the same time, young Mussolini was reported in Los Angeles as saying he had "talked with papa by telephone last night" but when he was greeted by reporters in Chicago, enroute to New York, the youth announced:

"I have not received a single word from my father since arriving in this country. I intend to stay in New York for a week before sailing for home and hope to see President Roosevelt."

Although it threw no light on the possible abandonment of the Roach-Mussolini organization, Vittorio had his "hope" fulfilled by meeting President Roosevelt this week. He was guest at a White House tea on Monday but police and federal agents, guarding against any possible anti-Fascist demonstrations, refused to permit reporters to get close enough to ask any questions.

As for his affiliation with Mr. Roach, the young Italian visitor had this to say in Chicago, Associated Press reported:

"Hollywood is a very fine place. I had no trouble at any time with Hal Roach and he is still in the Italian Film Company so far as I know."

After his flight by airplane from Chicago to New York, Mr. Mussolini was even more emphatic in his assertion that RAM still exists. The company will start work on its first production, "Rigoletto," about the first of the year, he said.

Meanwhile, in Hollywood, the Mussolini-Roach deal was termed in the trade press as "definitely off."

"It was said on the coast that the action brought by Dr. Ranato Senise, seeking $30,000 damages in the RAM deal, was largely responsible for young Mussolini's sudden departure from the coast," said Motion Picture Daily. It was further reported that Mussolini was irked by coast trade paper ads calling attention to his writings about war being a glorious adventure.

"Reports were widespread throughout Hollywood that the recently completed deal . . . had collapsed."

However, the Roach studios denied that Vittorio's departure was unexpected. Motion Picture Daily reported one Roach executive as saying: "Roach does not know when he will be able to leave for Italy to wrap up the loose ends of the deal for RAM."

But the Daily also told of the experience of a reporter who attempted to elicit a definite reply from a Roach executive as to future plans. The spokesman was reported as having replied: "Why bring up a dying duck?"

Young Mussolini left Hollywood by plane for San Francisco, traveling under the name of W. J. Willis. The Roach studios had announced the Dictator's son would make a leisurely trip across the country to New York, visiting several cities but Mr. Mussolini apparently was of a different opinion because he went direct to New York by plane.

Once in New York, the visitor granted a press interview at the Hotel Ambassador but the questions and answers were concerned chiefly with wars. He offered the opinion that no civilized person would bomb civilians, "especially in Italy." Asked if he had not participated in air raids in Ethiopia, the youth replied:

"There it is different. In Ethiopia everybody is a soldier."

His one brief mention of the motion picture industry came when he was asked if he was interested in war and politics.

"My future is tied up in the movie industry," he replied. "I have no thought of flying for the government again."

The New York Daily Mirror, reporting on

HAYS CALLS WINDSOR STORY UNTRUE

contract as industry leader in this country still has four years to run, Gabriel Yorke, press spokesman for the MPPDA in Hollywood, late Monday, announced that Mr. Hays had long-distanced from New York that "the Fischer broadcast is utterly without foundation."

The Los Angeles Daily News, of which Mr. Fischer is motion picture editor, published on Monday a story, under the caption, "WINDSOR MAY BE WORLD FILM CZAR," and quoting the aforementioned text of the broadcast, without assuming any responsibility for Mr. Fischer or for his remarks.

Motion Picture Daily said on Tuesday that Mr. Fischer's assertion "created little, if any, stir in informed film quarters," adding that "New York reaction, primarily, was one of tolerant amusement at the ingeniousness of the idea."

The national press services reported on the broadcast, and United Press quoted Mr. Fischer as saying that his information "came from an 'authoritative source' which he did not name."

The New York World-Telegram, however, pointed out that persons "who are well informed in the motion picture field declared that any report that the Duke might have complete censorship was absurd. They said that a foreigner would not be chosen for such a post if one were created, and that because a large part of American motion picture receipts come from British exhibitions no move would be made that would be likely to arouse any antagonism in that territory." Presumably the World-Telegram was referring to the attitude of English parliamentarians and Church of England authorities toward the Duke.

Later, on Tuesday, Mr. Fischer in Hollywood flatly stated that the story "is true," adding that it came from "a highly unimpeachable source." He took the attitude that the Duke of Windsor is the only one who will be able to make any statement disproving the yarn. "And, until the Duke does," the Fischer story "sticks," according to the reporter.

George Fischer was among the first, if not the first, "film gossip" commentator to broadcast from Hollywood, starting some five years ago. Warner Brothers gave him his beginning when they placed him on their Los Angeles station KFWB, with a program called "Studio Whispers."

He formerly was a newspaperman and publicity writer, both in Hollywood and in San Francisco, also doing some radio work in the Bay City. For a while, in 1930, Mr. Fischer worked as an announcer on Station KMTR, in Hollywood, and served various other Los Angeles stations in the same capacity. He started on Station KHJ, Los Angeles, and the Don Lee network last October, and went coast-to-coast on a sustaining basis when Mutual Broadcasting System took over Station KHJ in December. His Mutual duties have also had him announcing at "world premieres" of motion pictures in the Hollywood fashion, and acting as master-of-ceremonies on those occasions.

M. Holiner, radio director in Hollywood for Lennen and Mitchell, radio and advertising agents for "Jergen's Journal," said that Mr. Fischer's broadcast script is "gone over" by an NBC executive and a Lennen and Mitchell attorney before presentation on the air, for libelous material, etc. He said that Walter Winchell returns to the program on November 15th, and that the future status of Mr. Fischer is uncertain.

However, Lennen and Mitchell has options on him for further services after eight weeks of substituting for Mr. Winchell. As a result, there may be a deal worked out for a midweek edition of "Jergen's Journal" for him to handle, or Lennen and Mitchell may "sell" him as Hollywood "gossip" columnist and commentator to another sponsor. He had to abandon his Saturday night Mutual Broadcasting "Hollywood Whispers" program, which was sustaining, to take the Jergens spot. Whether he will return to Mutual if the Lennen and Mitchell option arrangement fails to materialize has not been determined.

George Fischer is 26 years old.

Meanwhile, the Duke of Windsor and his "Wally" Simpson have arrived in Germany, as the guests of Adolph Hitler, before sailing for the United States, presumably to inspect our housing conditions.

Vittorio Mussolini Sailing for Home

the "inside story" of why Il Duce's 21-year-old son left Hollywood, said:

"It is a story inferentially revealed—a tale of 'snubs' and 'cold shoulders' by some of the swankiest cinema stars who, it would seem, were not of one mind with Il Duce's son as to Fascism, war, etc."

After a brief stay in New York, Mr. Mussolini left for Washington, where Americans of Italian descent became incensed over the possibility that he would confer with President Roosevelt and staged a demonstration in front of the Italian Embassy. The District of Columbia branch of the Italian Anti-Fascist Committee drafted a letter which was forwarded to the Chief Executive, exhorting him not to meet young Mussolini.

Shortly after leaving the White House, young Mussolini departed by plane from Washington and arrived in New York Monday night with the announcement that he would go sight-seeing and would sail for Italy in about ten days.

London Opens Sweeping Entertainment Cleanup

The United Press said this week that the greatest cleanup Great Britain has known, embracing theatres, music halls, cabarets and cinemas, was launched at a secret conference at St. James's Palace." The report says the meeting was "called by Lord Cromer, the Lord Chamberlain, and the London County Council."

"For months protests of every kind have been reaching the Lord Chamberlain. 'Strip-tease,' nude tableaux in nonstop revues, indecent gestures and actions in the halls and in stage shows in cinemas, all have resulted in the receipt of hundreds of letters and complaints from church leaders, and resolutions passed by uplift societies," the United Press report continues.

Scripps-Howard Film Section

The Scripps-Howard newspapers issued a special 18 page film section with their regular editions on Wednesday. The section appeared in 22 newspapers.

Goldwyn to Meet Korda on Options

Samuel Goldwyn is due in New York from Hollywood about November 1st for conferences with Alexander Korda on exercising the options for purchase of the United Artists stock interest of Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks for $6,000,000. After a few days in New York they will leave for the Coast to discuss final details for assuming control of the distributing company. Mr. Korda, who will spend some six weeks in this country, is expected to be accompanied from England by David Rose, vice-president and financial adviser for Samuel Goldwyn, Inc.

They are scheduled to leave England October 20th on the Ile de France with Maurice Silverstone, United Artists head in England. Meanwhile, word has been received from London that Mr. Rose is believed to have completed financing arrangements for the exercising of the stock purchase options.

Mr. Goldwyn is planning a day and date opening at the Carthay Circle on the Coast and the Astor theatre on Broadway for "Hurricane" the early part of next month. He will attend the New York premiere.

Walter Wanger arrived in New York last week and will probably await the arrival of Mr. Rose to confer on the approaching change in the United Artists setup, before returning to the Coast.

James Mulvey, vice-president of the Goldwyn corporation, arrived in New York this week following conferences on the Coast with the producer. Emanuel Silverstone, New York representative of Mr. Korda, returned to New York from Cincinnati and other points.

Anti-Dual Leaders Address AMPA

The "spontaneous" movement against double feature programs, launched by two Nutley, New Jersey, men under the banner of the Anti-Double Feature League of America, is spreading throughout the country, the two leaders announced last Thursday when, for the first time, they came in direct contact with members of the motion picture industry.

The two, George H. Siegel and William R. Clay, were guests at the weekly Associated Motion Picture Advertisers' luncheon at Sardi's restaurant, New York. (Organization of the league was explained in detail in an article published in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD October 2nd, 1937.)

Other guests at the lunch included, Douglas MacLean, former Grand National producer; Herbert Marshall, Jean Muir, Lee Patrick, RKO player; Peggy O'Donnell; who appears in the screen version of "Stage Door"; Gene and Kathleen Lockhart, of "Virginia"; Ted Hamerstein, and Valentina Darde, who sang.

RADIO

The Columbia Broadcasting System will radio-cast the banquet to its millions of listeners. Other important networks have likewise expressed a desire to broadcast the news. (See also "Texaco")

NEWSPAPERS

The Associated Press will run a special feature story about Eddie Cantor for its subscribers . . . comprising America's most important papers. The New York World-Telegram will carry a special feature. The New York Sunday Mirror (circulation over 1,500,000) is using a full color photo of Eddie Cantor for its front cover. Other big newspapers are planning similar special co-operation. The national syndicated feature "25 YEARS AGO TODAY" will play up Eddie's anniversary.

MAGAZINES

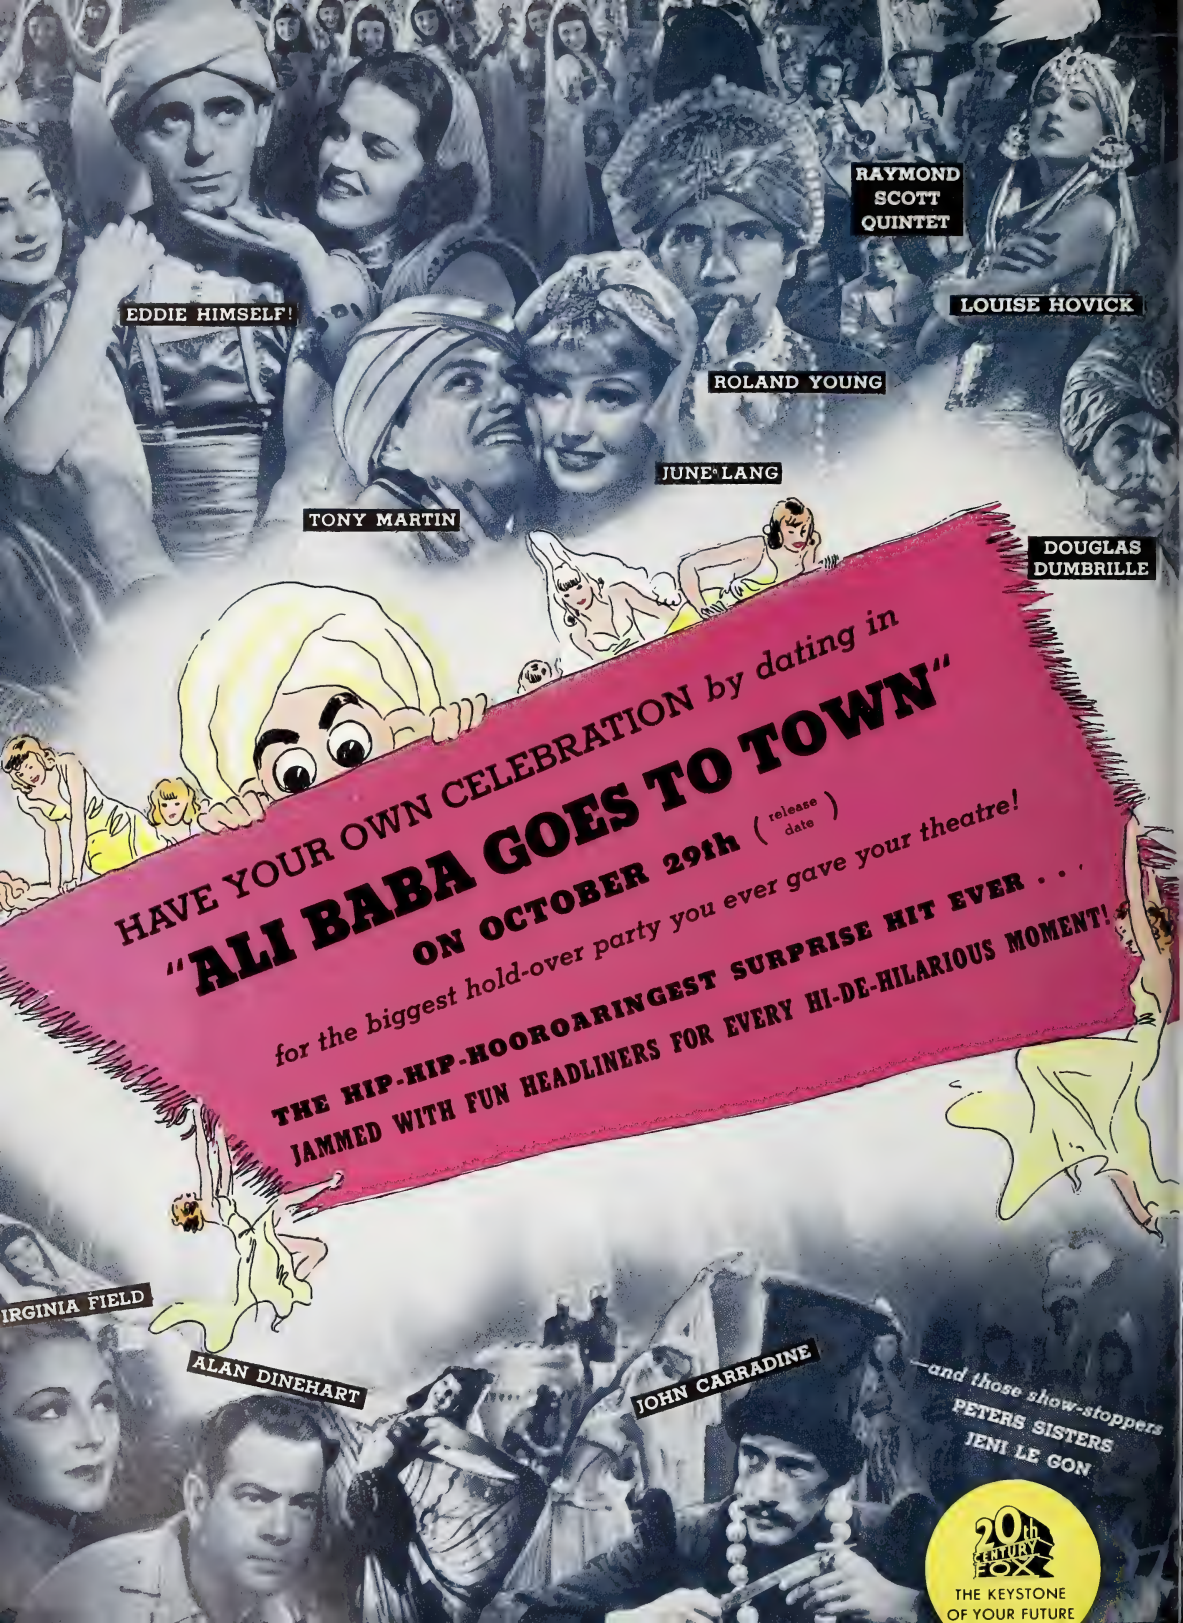
Both "LIFE" and "LOOK", leading pictorial magazines with national circulations running into many millions, are planning special layouts for the event.

WESTERN UNION

Western Union will use displays in its thousands of offices in every city, town and hamlet.

TEXACO

All Texaco stations will carry special displays referring to Eddie Cantor's 25th Anniversary. In addition, the Texaco Wednesday night program, over the Columbia network, will call attention to the celebration in advance as well as during the week of the festivities.



FAN PUBLICATIONS

Leading fan magazines, with their tremendous national circulations, have expressed a desire to join in the tribute with special articles.

AND BESIDES

Motion picture editors, columnists of note, stage publications, motion picture critics, outstanding radio personalities, newspaper editors, magazines of general circulation . . . all are planning to lend their enthusiastic support to make Eddie Cantor Week an unforgettable event!

BINAURAL SOUND DEMONSTRATION HIGHLIGHT OF SMPE FALL MEETING

Society Attacks Academy's Projection Revision Plans; Martin Quigley Warns Against Pressures of Special Pleaders

A demonstration of binaural or stereophonic sound recording and reproduction was a highlight of the four-day fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York City, this week.

The SMPE, which, for the most part, represents the manufacturers of equipment for all branches of the industry, also at the meeting gave voice to a charge that the technical branch Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences intend unnecessarily to saddle exhibitors with the expenditure of $1,000,000 for revision of projection practice in conformity with new standards.

The new sound development, also called "third dimension in sound" was explained and demonstrated at the Bell Telephone Laboratories where, also, a demonstration of third dimensional pictures was given by representatives of the Land-Wheelwright Laboratories.

The "Progress Medal," annual award made by the SMPE in recognition of outstanding achievement in motion picture technology, was presented Wednesday evening, at the Society's semi-annual banquet, to Edward Washburn Kellogg, of the RCA Manufacturing Company. At the same time, Dr. Dean Brewster Judd, senior physicist in optics at the National Bureau of Standards, Washington, received the "Journal Award" for the best technical paper published in the Society's Journal in 1937, his paper having to do with "Color Blindness and Anomalies of Vision."

Speaking at the opening day luncheon, Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and Motion Picture Daily, reasserted his contention that the motion picture industry could not yield to the pressures of special pleaders, demanding access to the theatre screen for messages of propaganda in the guises of social service and education. He declared again his contention that the business of the amusement business is amusement—and nothing else.

"The screen is regarded covetously by those who seek to alter radically our social and economic system," observed Mr. Quigley. "It is an interesting fact that the pictures which seem to please most these objectors against industry policy are films of a 'realistic' character—and the more bitter the realism the more acceptable they are to that group.

"Their attitude is explainable, I believe, on the grounds that those who seek a revolution seek as a means to that end the fostering of those expressions which create public discontent. They seem to resent the hours of happiness and contentment which the motion picture theatre now affords millions of persons the world over.

"It seems to me entirely proper that a group of men should have taken the motion picture as a medium of expression and built out of it a great entertainment industry. It is further proper that, within those limitations necessarily imposed upon entertainment of all kinds in a decent civilization, these men, and the partnerships and corporations which are their successors, should be permitted to go on about their business and not be diverted into provinces where they do not belong.

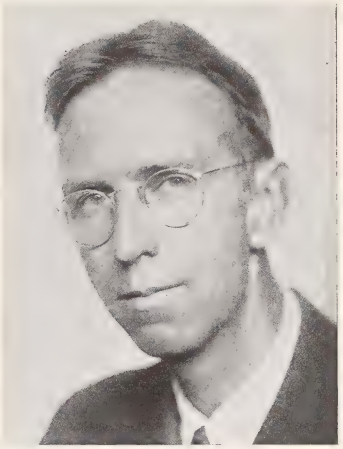
"The entertainment industry holds no exclusive mastery over this medium of expression. Any others who wish to see the medium put to other uses are at liberty to do so."

Officers Elected

Results of the balloting for officers and governing board, as conducted by mail, and not including the presidency, which is to be held by S. K. Wolf for another year, were announced as follows: E. A. Williford, National Carbon Company, financial vice-president; Dr. L. A. Jones, Eastman Kodak Company, reelected engineering vice-president; Kenneth Morgan, Electrical Research Products, elected west coast section vice-president; James Frank, Jr., International Projector Corporation, secretary; L. W. Davee, Electrical Research, treasurer; Ralph E. Farnham, General Electric, elected to the board, and Herbert Griffin, International Projector, and Dr. A. C. Hardy, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, both reelected to the board of governors.

Others besides Mr. Wolf, whose tenure of office continues, are the following: On the board of governors: Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, M. C. Batsel; also James I. Crabtree, editorial vice-president, and George Friedl, Jr., chairman of the Atlantic Coast section.

Television's position in the laboratory evidently is in status quo, for not a single paper on the subject was delivered during the convention. The extent of television recognition was two demonstrations by RCA in the RCA Building at Rockefeller Center, and conducted by Dr. B. E. Shackelford.



300 Attend Sessions

The motion picture in this country is continuing to make progress in the technical development of its photography and color, sound recording and sound reproduction, laboratory and engineering practice, lighting and projection, reported the motion picture's inventors and technicians during the convention. More than 300 of the industry's engineers attended the 42 semi-annual sessions. Many delegates were present from Hollywood, Chicago, Rochester and other cities where motion picture equipment is designed, manufactured and used.

Some fifty papers of a technical nature describing the latest advance in equipment and technique were presented. Special sessions were devoted to each of the principal fields of production, exhibition, distribution and the printing laboratory, and to an apparatus symposium, and manufacturers' announcements of new equipment.

Challenges Academy

The SMPE's challenge to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences of Hollywood came Thursday in a report by the Projection Practice Committee, of which Harry Rubin, of Paramount, is chairman, and which said, in part:

"In view of the fact that essential action photographed upon the film is often cut off from the screen during the process of projection, the Projection Practice Committee of the Society offered at the Hollywood convention last May, the recommendation that cameramen draw upon the ground-glasses of their view-finding devices, hair-line rectangles that could be used as guides or danger signals in composing their scenes. Specifically, the proposal was to inscribe upon the ground-glass a hair-line rectangle 0.815 x 0.590 inch, which would be slightly within the dimensions of the standard projector aperture, which are 0.825 x 0.600 inch. To avoid misunderstanding, it should be emphasized that this would make no change in the photographic area of the film, but would act only as a warning to the cameraman that the heads or feet of their actors are approaching the points at which their images would not be projected upon the screen in the theatre. By adopting dimensions slightly smaller than the existing projector aperture dimensions, allowance was made for screen masking, film weave in the projector, keystone effect, etc.

"On September 16, 1937, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences issued a memorandum dealing with proposed revisions of the dimensions of the standard projector aperture, the stated purpose being to decrease the possibilities of cutting off the images of the heads and feet of actors from the screen. Among other alleged advantages were superior pictorial composition of the scene during production, and the facilitating of composite and process shots, etc. Specifically, the proposal was that the dimensions of the projector aperture be increased to 0.615 x 0.846 inch, and that the projector aperture be moved laterally so that its center-line would coincide with the center-line of the camera aperture.

"The Projection Practice Committee is unable to concur in the Academy's proposal.

Sees $1,000,000 Cost

"It is extremely difficult to estimate exactly what the cost would be to effect a change from the present standard to the proposed dimensions. However, a fair idea may be gained by remembering that there are approximately 16,000 theatres in the United States that would be forced to buy new apertures, shift the screen masking, and probably be required either to renovate their screens or buy new screens. It is estimated that the change could not be effected even in small theatres for less than $50, and may amount to as much as several hundreds of dollars when necessary to purchase new screens. It is probably not too much to anticipate that the cost to the exhibitors of the country would be in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. In addition, it is obvious that all theatres could not make the change at the same time. Many theatres are in financial difficulties, and many of those that are not may not find it convenient to make the necessary expenditure. Accordingly, introduction of a proposed aperture would extend over a considerable period of time during which much confusion and many poorly projected pictures would result.

"The American Projection Society also concurs in this action of the Projection Practice Committee."

Third Dimension Demonstrated

On Monday evening a special session was held at the Bell Telephone Laboratories for the binaural (third dimension) sound demonstration, using for the first time, outside the laboratory, a motion picture with its sound binaurally recorded and reproduced.

"This development of "stereophonic' talking picture recording and reproduction," which was described to the SMPE by J. P. Maxfield, of Erpi, was said to be "the result of a number of years of research carried on by engineers of Bell Telephone and Electrical Research."

"In present-day talking pictures, we obtain only an illusion of sound coming from the point of origin on the screen," Mr. Maxfield said. "Actually, it comes from a fixed point behind the center of the screen with no direction or space-relationship. If for instance we see someone playing a piano on the screen, our ears and our eyes tell us that the sound of the piano is coming from the keyboard of the piano because we see the pianist strike the keys. There is no effect of sound motion on the screen. Stereophonic recording and reproduction provides this sound motion or direction."

"In ordinary talking pictures of today sound is picked up with one microphone amplifier channel and recorded on only one sound track. The condition is actually similar to hearing with only one ear," Mr. Maxfield said, in explaining how third-dimension is produced. "In 'stereophonic' talking pictures sound is picked up by two channels and the output of each is recorded on a separate sound track on the film. In other words, there are two separate sound tracks on the film each of which is a recording of just one channel. In reproducing the two sound tracks in the theatre, the output on each track is fed to a separate set of loud speakers at the sides of the screen. The effect on the listener is that he is actually enjoying 'two-ear hearing' (binaural) instead of 'one-ear hearing.'"

How soon the new third-dimension will be incorporated in regular production, and subsequently find its way to reproduction on the screen, is a matter that rests with the production companies, Mr. Maxfield indicated.

"Ultimate naturalness in talking pictures will be accomplished only when color 'stereoscopic' photography, and stereophonic recording are combined and presented together in the motion picture," he said.

The second demonstration, also held Monday evening in the Bell Laboratories, consisted of pictures purportedly demonstrating the accomplishment of "third-dimension" in pictures, as conducted by G. W. Wheelwright, 3d, of the Land-Wheelwright Laboratories, Boston. The SMPE declared that the motion pictures demonstrated gave "the same stereoscopic or third-dimension life-like quality as possessed by the familiar stereoscopic still photographs."

The convention was opened on Monday morning with an address from the Society's president, S. K. Wolf, of New York, and the opening luncheon followed at noon, with the address on "Propaganda, Education, and the Entertainment Film," by Martin Quigley and remarks by Louis Nizer, secretary, New York Film Board of Trade and attorney for distributors.

World Popularity of Films

Nathan D. Golden, chief, Motion Picture Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, told the engineers that "American motion pictures are maintaining their immense popularity throughout the world," despite "the barriers and obstructions which tend to limit their sale," and which "continue to be imposed abroad."

John K. Hilliard, MGM Studios, Culver City, told the convention some nine types of "movietone" sound track are currently being used or will be used in the immediate future, as follows: Standard movietone; standard movietone with squeeze—or matted-track; standard movietone with double-squeeze—or matted track; movietone push-pull; movietone push-pull squeeze—or matted-track; variable area bilateral with bias; variable area bilateral with shutter; variable area unilateral bias track; and, variable area push-pull.

Standards Report Read

"The Effect of the Composition of an MQ Developer on its Reduction Potential" was the subject of a paper delivered by Ralph M. Evans and W. T. Hanson, Jr., of Kodak Research Laboratories, Rochester, and Milo Durand, of International Filmbook Corporation, South Norwalk, Conn., explained the "Advantages of Spark Illumination in Certain Types of Photography."

The SMPE's Standards Committee, E. K. Carver, chairman, reported that during the summer 14 new drawings were completed covering 8 mm. film standards, and that standards drawings were revised for sprocket holes in films, and reels for 35 mm., 16 mm. and 8 mm. film. The Committee also reported that it has given initial approval to the adoption of the spacing of 0.15 mm. separating the two halves of the push-pull sound track.

Paul Kellogg, on Monday, brought from his Laboratory of Ornithology, Cornell University, a paper and material for a demonstration of "Hunting with a Microphone the Songs of Vanishing Birds."

W. C. Kunzmann, vice president, gave the Convention Committee report, and E. R. Geib,

MUSICAL ARRANGERS ORGANIZING GUILD

Musical arrangers demanding "proper recognition for their work" are working for the formation of a guild to protect their interests. A committee to discuss the project in New York is headed by Joseph Glover, who, in an announcement concerning the organization, termed the arranger "the forgotten man of show business."

Among the demands voiced were credit announcements on network programs, credit announcements on recordings and program credits on musical films and stage productions. The new guild, according to Mr. Glover, would not conflict with the jurisdiction of the American Federation of Musicians.

SESSION GIVEN TO STUDIO PRACTICES

chairman, reported on the condition of the Society's membership.

Chauncey L. Greene, of Minneapolis, told the delegates that, "Because commercial motion pictures on 16mm film are an outgrowth of 'home movies,' the standards of projection in that field are low." He said that, "Less care is given to the proper presentation of commercial 16mm films than is the case with theatrical showings of 35mm film, whereas, because of the greater overall magnification, more care should be given."

"The cascade type of film storage cabinet may be relied upon to satisfactorily control film fire in a cabinet having a capacity of ten reels," declared Captain J. G. Bradley, of the Office of National Archives, Washington, in reporting on "Further Progress in Film Storage."

Mr. Bradley added that a new method combining the advantages of insulation and cooling agent, while retaining the unit isolation figures, is in the process of development.

R. J. Fisher, of the Flower City Specialty Company, Rochester, explained a new device for cleaning the sound track of motion picture film during projection, and C. E. Schultz, of Heyer-Schultz, Montclair, N. J., announced a new all-metal reflector for use with projection arcs in theatres, to take the place of the present standard glass reflector.

Projection Practice Session

One of the important sessions, and of particular interest to motion picture exhibitors and their projectionists, was the session, taking all of Wednesday morning, on projection practice, as conducted by Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, chairman of the day. Dr. Goldsmith described "The Practice of Projection," and was followed by two addresses by Frank H. Richardson, editor of "The Bluebook of Projection," published by Quigley Publishing Company, conducting MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S "Bluebook School" of projection.

Mr. Richardson, giving "A Discussion of Screen Image Dimensions," presented an argument for recommended standard screen image proportions based upon the combined dimensions and illumination brightness that will provide more comfortable viewing conditions at the center of the theatre seating space.

In his second paper, Mr. Richardson discussed "Perforated Screens and Their Faults,"

G. P. Barber, of the Government of the Province of Alberta, in Canada, explained the unique system employed at Edmonton for licensing projectionists according to grades. The process of becoming a first-class projectionist requires a licensed apprenticeship of at least 12 months, followed by one year as third-class and, later, one year as second-class projectionist before taking final examination for the first-class license.

Ben Schlanger, theatre architect, New York, told the convention that, "Recent trends toward the smaller-sized motion picture audience, indicate that new considerations can be given to the possibility of a larger and differently-shaped screen, retaining the 35 mm. film." The screen was pictured by Mr. Schlanger as completely occupying the entire forefront of the motion picture auditorium, assuming a space stage instead of an artificially framed picture.

Additional papers given during the meeting

"High-Speed Motion Picture Photography Applied to the Design of Telephone Apparatus," W. Herriott, Bell Telephone Laboratories.

"A Modern Motion Picture Laboratory," C. L. Lootens, Republic Productions, Inc.

"Grain-Size Determination and Other Applications of the Callier Effect," J. Eggert and A. Kuster, I. G. Farbenindustrie Film Fabrik, Wolfen, Germany.

USE OF NEWSREELS TRIED BY CHURCH

An experiment to discover whether a more graphic presentation of ordinary sermon material through the use of regular newsreels will attract more persons to churches is being conducted in Cincinnati this week by the Triennial Convention of Protestant Episcopal Churches.

A lecture stressing the social implications of the newsreels accompanies each screening, the whole, set in a frame of prayer and praise to resemble, somewhat, a regular church service.

"Distortion in the Reproduction of Hill-and-Dale Records," M. J. Di Toro, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Orange, N. J.

"Recent Developments in Hill-and-Dale Recorders," L. Vieth and C. F. Wiebusch, Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc., New York.

"Film Perforation and 96-Cycle Frequency Modulation in Sound-Film Records," J. Crabtree and W. Herriott, Bell Telephone.

"Push-Pull Recording," J. G. Frayne and H. C. Silent, Electrical Research Products, Inc.,

Engineering Practices

On Tuesday afternoon, an entire session was devoted to motion picture engineering practice.

"Air-Conditioning with Lithium Chloride," G. A. Kelley, Surface Combustion Corp., Toledo.

"The Activated Alumina System as Applied to Air-Conditioning and Drying Problems," G. L. Simpson, Pittsburgh Lectrodryer Corp., Pittsburgh.

"Die Castings and Their Application to Photographic Appliances," C. Pack, Doehler Die Casting Co., New York.

"The Use of Inconel for Photographic Film Processing Equipment," G. L. Cox, International Nickel Co., Inc., New York.

"Newer Types of Stainless Steel and Their Applications to Photographic Processing Equipment," H. A. Smith, Republic Steel Corp., Massillon, Ohio.

"Vacuum-Tube Engineering for Motion Pictures," L. C. Hollands and A. M. Glover, RCA Manufacturing Co., Inc., Harrison, N. J.

Studio Practices

The session on studio lighting and studio practices, conducted by the Society, featured its Studio Lighting Committee report, by R. E. Farnham, chairman.

"The cameramen in Hollywood," he explained, "are entering an era of 'precision' lighting. Highlights and shadows are carefully balanced with dimmers as well as the placement of the lighting units. This calls for equipment giving more accurate light control. The influence of lighting for color is creating a greater appreciation on the part of cameramen of the color quality of the light in black and white photography."

Mr. Farnham's report also told of the development of a new filter, said to be "of extreme accuracy," making possible the use of incandescent lamps of the "CP" type for color photography, either alone or when "mixed" with other suitable illuminants.

The session on lighting and studio practices consisted of the following papers:

"Spectral Distribution and Color-Temperature of the Radiant Energy from Carbon Arcs Used in the Motion Picture Industry," F. T. Bowditch and A. C. Downes, National Carbon Co., Inc., Cleveland.

"Recent Developments in Background Projection," G. G. Popovici, J. G. Saltzman, Inc., New York.

"Recent Developments in Gaseous Discharge Lamps," S. Dushman, Research Laboratory, General Electric Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

"Light Control in Photography," G. Mili, Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., Bloomfield, N. J.

"Modulated High-Frequency Recording as a Means of Determining Conditions for Optimal Processing," J. O. Baker and D. H. Robinson, RCA Manufacturing Co., Camden.

"Recording Tests on Some Recent High-Resolution Experimental Emulsions," J. O. Baker, RCA Manufacturing Co., Camden, N. J.

Historical Films Shown

The engineers, on Tuesday evening, attended a showing of selected historical motion pictures, in the Pennsylvania Hotel's Salle Moderne, as arranged by John E. Abbott, director of the Film Library of the Museum of Modern Art, New York.

The concluding sessions, on Thursday, were divided into "Apparatus Symposium and Manufacturers' Announcements," during the morning, and a session on sound in the afternoon.

The apparatus symposium and manufacturers' announcements included the following:

"The Sound-Level Meter in the Motion Picture Industry," H. H. Scott, General Radio Co., Cambridge, Mass.

"A New Motion Picture Camera Crane," E. H. Heyer and E. L. Fischer, Universal Pictures, Universal City, Cal.

"Non-Intermittent Projection," J. F. Leventhal, Leventhal Patents, Inc., New York.

"New Ideas in Mobile Sound Recording Equipment," C. M. Ralph and J. G. Matthews, General Service Studios, Hollywood.

"A Mobile Sound Recording Channel," L. T. Goldsmith, Warnre Brothers Pictures, Inc.

"A Device for Cleaning the Sound-Track of Motion Picture Film During Projection," R. V. Fisher, Flower City Specialty Co., Rochester, N. Y.

"A Recorder for Making Buzz-Tracks," E. W. Kellogg, RCA Manufacturing Co., Inc., Burbank, Cal.

"Advantages of Spark Illumination in Certain Types of Photography," M. A. Durand, International Filmbook Corp., South Norwalk, Conn.

"A Flash Fire Valve for Fire Prevention in Motion Picture Projectors," R. V. Fisher, Rochester.

Papers read at the Thursday sound session were as follows:

"Reduction of Loop-Length Variations in Non-Slip Printers," E. W. Kellogg, RCA Manufacturing Co., Inc., Camden, N. J.

"Transmission Characteristics of Western Electric Re-recording Channels," C. R. Daily and F. L. Hopper, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood.

"Permanent Magnet 4-Ribbon Valve for Portable Channel Push-Pull Recording," E. C. Manderfeld, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood.

"Improvements in Noise-Reduction Circuits," R. R. Scoville, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood.

"Improved Methods of Detecting Light-Valve Overload," C. R. Daily, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood.

"Overload Limiter for the Protection of Modulating Devices," R. R. Scoville, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Hollywood.

PARAMOUNT WINS MINNEAPOLIS ROUND, IS SUED IN LOS ANGELES

Temporary Injunction Halts "Buyers' Strike" in Minnesota; Coast Exhibitors Charge Conspiracy Against Independents

Paramount, loser of the first court battle to halt boycott activities of Philadelphia exhibitors, evened the score in the controversy over the reputed non-delivery of pictures scheduled for release in contracts, by obtaining a temporary injunction, restraining Minneapolis theatremen from continuing their "buyers' strike."

Litigation, however, is not yet finished in either city.

In the Philadelphia case, Paramount has appealed from the court ruling and a decision is now pending in the court of appeals.

In Minneapolis, the recently granted injunction will remain in effect only until after a hearing is held on a petition for a permanent order.

Meanwhile, a third action involving Paramount, has been filed by the Mass Exhibitors Committee in superior court, Los Angeles. The committee, representing approximately 40 theatres in Southern California, is seeking to collect $45,000 damages for alleged fraud and monopolistic practices.

The temporary injunction was granted in federal court, Minneapolis, by Gunnar Nordbye, judge, who ruled that the defendant exhibitors had conspired among themselves to effect a "buyers' strike" in violation of the anti-trust laws. He also found that the tactics employed by exhibitors tended to coerce others into refraining from contracting for Paramount pictures, with a resultant interference with interstate commerce.

The decision was in striking contrast to that handed down by the Philadelphia judge, Oliver Dickinson, who ruled the court had no jurisdiction because, due to the strike, Paramount films were not interstate commerce.

Picketing Is Barred

Under the order signed by Judge Nordbye, exhibitors in the Minneapolis territory were enjoined from effectuating the "buyers' strike" with "peaceful persuasion"; from picketing the Paramount Minneapolis exchange or any theatre showing the company's pictures; from the use of "intimidation, threats, force, fraud or defamatory publication," to induce employees to leave their work, theatre patrons to withhold their patronage, or other exhibitors to refrain from buying the company's product.

The decree also stipulated that the defendants were restrained from "advising or requesting" anyone not to do business with the company or its customers under implied threats or intimidation.

Three Questions Cited

Three questions, according to Judge Nordbye, were raised in the case: first, whether the court had jurisdiction, second, whether Paramount was guilty of fraudulent or unconscionable conduct in its dealings with the defendants, and third, whether, if Paramount came into court with "unclean hands," it should be denied equitable relief.

In holding that the court had jurisdiction, the court declared:

"The very intent of the entire plan and scheme of these defendants in entering into the conspiracy is to accomplish the restraint and limitation of complainant's films in interstate commerce."

Should the court fail to have jurisdiction on the interstate question, Judge Nordbye continued, "it is entirely probable that this court would not be justified in refusing to assume jurisdiction" as "a diversity of citizenship exists and the sums involved are sufficiently large to establish a legal action of conspiracy to boycott."

Judge Nordbye pointed out that because of the conflicting affidavits filed by the principals "it would be presumptuous for the court to conclude . . . the complainant does not come into court with clean hands."

"If contracts have been violated," the Judge concluded, "if legal rights have been flaunted, and such matters are collateral to the controversy, it would seem that defendants must resort to the law and have these wrongs redressed and not indulge in open violation of the laws of this land to achieve that to which they assume they are entitled."

The California Action

The action instituted in California is against Paramount Pictures, Inc., Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., and ten "John Does."

It was charged, in the complaint, that through affiliation with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America all of the companies "cooperate with one another to the end that competition in all fields of the motion picture industry may be reduced and eliminated. That as a part of the said policy, the defendants and other members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America conspire and cooperate with one another for the purpose of harassing, embarrassing and damaging independent theatre owners such as plaintiff. . . ."

The manner in which a company's product is purchased was then outlined and a copy of a standard contract was attached to the papers.

A list of 11 pictures, which the plaintiffs contend were named in the 1936-37 contracts and were not released, next was given. The list included "Souls at Sea," "High Wide and Handsome," "Angel," "Spawn of the North," "The Count of Luxembourg," "The Barrier," one additional motion picture starring Marlene Dietrich, one starring Claudette Colbert, one with Harold Lloyd, and one starring Gary Cooper.

Columbia Holding Weekend Meeting

The first of three divisional sales meetings planned by Columbia Pictures Corporation is to be held in Chicago at the Drake Hotel on Saturday and Sunday. A. Montague, general sales manager, will preside.

Representatives of the home office expected at the meeting besides Mr. Montague include Joe McConville, Rube Jackter, Jerome Safron, Louis Astor, Lou Weinberg, Max Weisfeldt, Henry C. Kaufman, George Joseph and Milton Hannock.

The branches represented by managers and sales force are Chicago, Detroit, Washington, Des Moines, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Omaha, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Cleveland.

Columbia is arranging a series of nation wide screenings to insure the launching of "The Awful Truth."

Examination of Balaban Ordered in Hayim Action

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, under a decision handed down on Wednesday by Justice William P. Collins in New York supreme court, was ordered to appear October 21st for examination before trial in the suit brought by Ella Hayim, minority stockholder, seeking an injunction to restrain enforcement of an employment contract signed with Adolph Zukor.

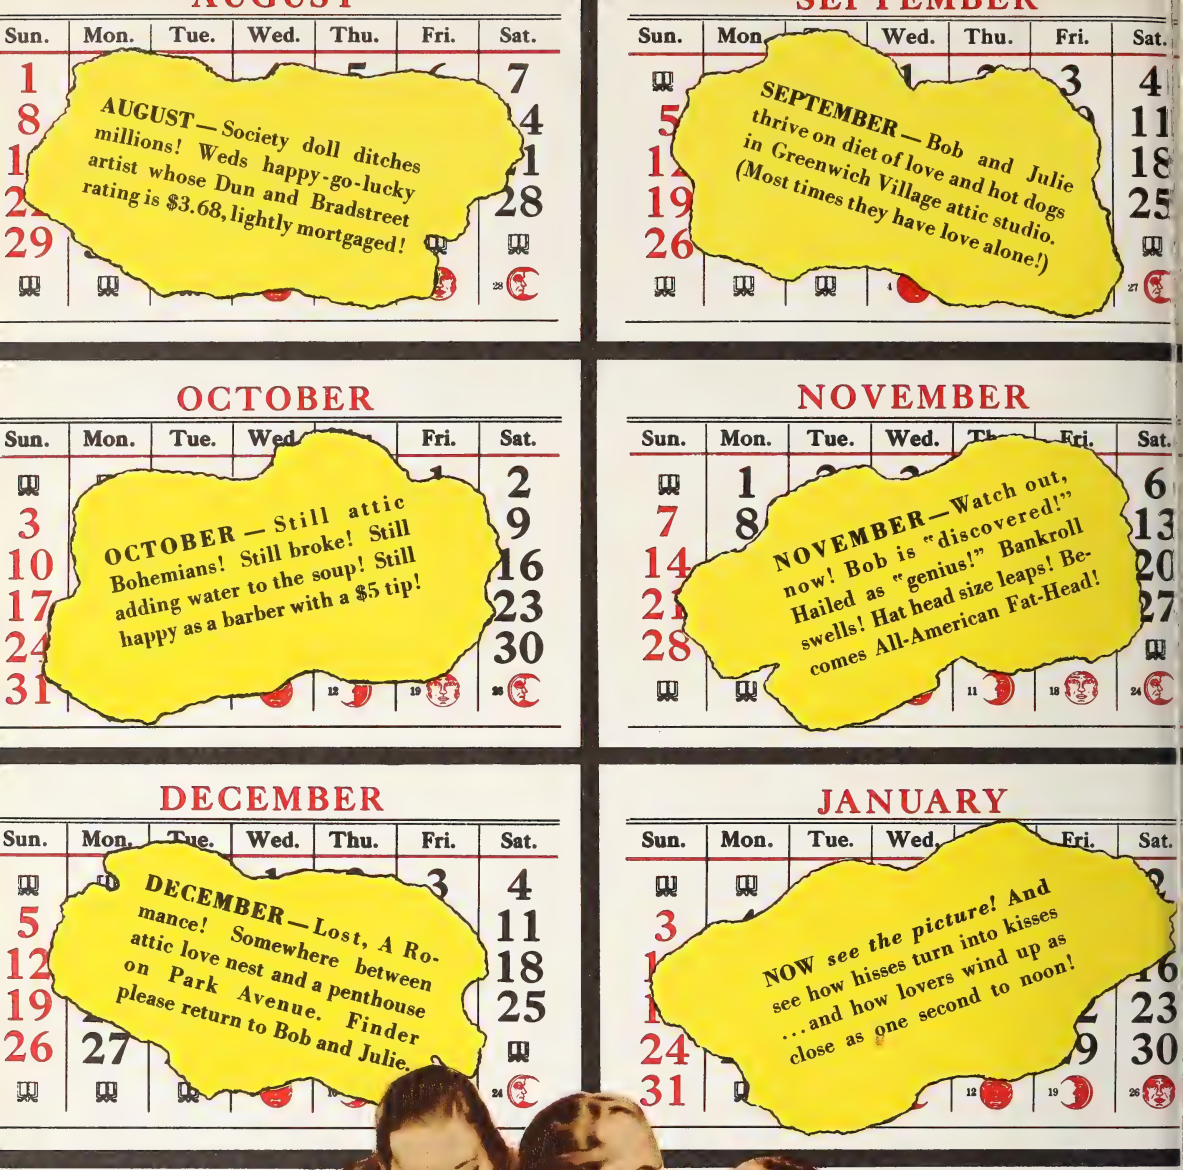
Answering the motion for examination of Mr. Balaban, Paramount attorneys had charged that the suit was "merely an attempt to harass the company in whose interests the suit purports to be brought."

In granting the motion Justice Collins ruled that the executive may be examined only on the terms of the contract itself and not on the negotiations which led to it. The company also was ordered to produce books and records necessary to the examination.

Contract Terms Questioned

The contarct with Mr. Zukor which was made on April 26 provides for a $3,000 weekly salary with a bonus of seven and a half per cent on the profits up to $2,500,000 and five per cent on profits above that figure. The plaintiff seeks to examine Mr. Balaban before trial about the terms, conditions and compensation of Mr. Zukor's employment between July 1, 1936, and June 15, 1937; the details of the April 26 contracts, receipts, expenses and profits relating to film operation as defined in the contract from Aug. 1, 1936, to Sept. 23, 1937, money disbursed to Mr. Zukor for that period, capital employed by Paramount and subsidiaries in the production and distribution of films under the title of film operation and information as to the $2,500,000 allegedly set up on Dec. 31, 1934, as film reserve and the alleged crediting of that sum to profits of 1936 on which Mr. Zukor's compensation was allegedly computed.

Whitney N. Seymour of the law firm of Simpson, Thatcher and Bartlett stated in his affidavit that the complaint was too vague and general. He pointed out that Mr. Zukor's contract was approved at a stockholders' meeting by a vote of 3,571,056 to 11,722. He also charged that "the complaint in the present action was verified on June 12, four days before the stockholders' meeting and the action was commenced on the same day of the meeting. The verification of the complaint before the stockholders' meeting shows that the suit is in utter disregard of the stockholders' wishes and must have been for some ulterior purpose. This motion to examine broadly as to matters not within the scope of the action must be viewed as a near attempt to harass the company in whose interest the suit purports to be brought."



North Dakota officials were granted an extension until Thursday to file an answer to Paramount's action to enjoin the state from enforcing the circuit theatre divorce measure which was enacted at the last session of the legislature.

SHANGHAI THEATRES SHELLED AND LOOTED; AIR BOMB KILLS MANAGER

Shipment of Film by Rail Is Abandoned; Curfew Bars All Gatherings After 10 P.M.; All Nanking Houses Close

The following foreword from J. P. Koehler, Shanghai correspondent of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, explains why the following article, written at Shanghai on August 30th, did not reach New York until October 9th. —Ed.

"Sorry this is delayed, as it was to go out on the S. S. President Hoover, which, however, after being bombed by Chinese planes about fifty miles off Shanghai on the afternoon of August 30, did not make port but continued on to Japan. The next mail out is uncertain at the moment."

by J. P. KOEHLER
in Shanghai

Shanghai in war! And what to say that concerns the immediate field to which your correspondent is presumed to confine his story when mind and body are entirely filled with the atmosphere of war, the rumbling of heavy gun fire and the bombing of civilian centers, punctuated by the rapid fire anti-aircraft day and night, and the atrocious odors of the slaughterhouse and battlefield?

What to say about business! Well, there just isn't any business at present and hasn't been since the night of August 12th, when the mobilization of the Shanghai Defense Forces was broadcast over every radio and on every screen, and men left performances hurriedly to don uniform and equipment and hasten to headquarters in the dead of night.

To begin with, we've also been called out, and for two weeks, until regular troops came in and relieved us, did what the Shanghai Volunteer Corps is supposed to do until reinforcements arrive—hold the line in event of danger to the Settlement. Yes, we had plenty of excitement and many a tale of "how near that one came"—and we've lost some sleep, hardened some muscles pitching sandbags, and sweated off many a superfluous pound, when the mercury stood 96 in the shade.

And on that notorious Saturday the 14th, when the bomb dropped within 100 yards of the Nanking theatre, just about when the show was letting out in the afternoon, and wiped out a thousand or more, piling them four and five deep in destruction—the theatres in Shanghai shut up tight and have not reopened to date. [Cables from Mr. Koehler since the mailing of this letter told of the reopening of theatres.—Ed.] And just when things were easing up a bit and there was hope to start performances again, along came the bomb that struck in Shanghai's most crowded corner—the Sincere Department store—and wiped out a few hundred more and rather took the edge off of our appetites by the time we got through cleaning up the bloody mess. And with that, the authorities were more than a little concerned about allowing crowds to gather in one spot, so the cinemas stayed closed.

J. P. KOEHLER, MOTION PICTURE HERALD correspondent in Shanghai, completes a tour of duty with the American Company of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps.

Up north, we hear that some cinema are being opened again and, on distributor reports from that quarter, "expenses for the week anyway." In Nanking, after the air-raid of Sunday, August 15th, the cinemas and censors quit entirely.

Distributors are concerned over the fate of films that were in transit from Nanking to Shanghai when train service was disrupted, of films lying in the North Station in Shanghai, which, viewed yesterday by your correspondent, looked still in good shape, and with most of the station and train sheds still intact, had loads of express matter on hand just before hell broke loose.

With communication completely disrupted and telegrams and letters taking days to arrive even from nearby cities, there is no possible way of determining at the moment how much damage and financial loss has been caused to the film trade by the present hostilities in the North and in Shanghai.

All films in Nanking are believed to be safe, under the care of a representative of the Film Board of Trade (China), and comparatively little damage has been done in Nanking proper by Japanese air raids.

Shanghai seems to have been one of the worst sufferers from such raids. The bombs have caused terror, loss of life, and, by the fire which has now wiped out a greater portion of the eastern district of the city, and completely denuded the Eastern and Hongkew districts of any but Japanese and Chinese military and a few stray civilians and the occupants and officers of the now famous Ward Road Jail, and has probably ruined the interiors of at least five or six of the dozen or more cinemas in those districts, it will be a long time before business again assumes even a semblance of normalcy.

The Willies theatre, operated by Peacock Motion Pictures Co., Inc., an American concern, was struck at least four times by shells and the interior well flattened, though, through the efforts of the intrepid theatre manager and some of the staff, the more valuable parts of the projection equipment was removed under fire. The Ritz theatre, just undergoing renovation and reconstruction for reopening, is reported looted. The Broadway and Eastern theatres, in the heart of the great fire area in the Eastern district of Wayside, are reported as having come through with a good scorching but otherwise intact, unless looted, but there are several other houses the fate of which is as yet unknown, as the Japanese Military refuse inspection of these areas as yet.

So far, no reports have been received of any theatre in the Tientsin or Peiping area having been destroyed, but some of the Tientsin cinemas in the native districts must have been damaged.

Shipments of film by rail are entirely stopped. By steamer it is possible to make a few shipments both north and south.

Efforts are now being made by the Shanghai offices of the film distributors to a partial reopening of local first-run theatres and such as are not in the immediate danger zones. A curfew, from 10 P. M. to 5 A. M., forbids all persons, except on direct business with absolute necessities, from being on the streets, and therefore evening performances, except perhaps one at 7 o'clock, cannot be held, but afternoon shows may be allowed soon.

Owing to the fact that considerable bombing is still taking place, the authorities are reluctant to allow grouping of individuals, though the situation as regards the International Settlement south of Soochow Creek and the French Concession has eased considerably, due probably to certain troop movements tending to draw the fighting away from Shanghai and further to the west and south of the city.

At the moment Japanese planes are roaring overhead in bombing and reconnoitering pursuits. Chinese guns are and have been comparatively quiet for the past three days.

What the fate of Shanghai will be when it falls into the hands of the Japanese is a guess, of which yours is as good as mine. There is much talk, but the outcome is indefinite. The Japanese have flouted the International Settlement authorities by seizing all of the northern and eastern districts of the Settlement. All we can do is wait and see.

In the meantime, the film trade is endeavoring to carry on as best it can, shipping when it can do so, but what is going to happen to those contracts that will be subjected to the "force majeure" clause? Wait and see? Yes, that is about all we can do, and, for the present, stick to the office between duty at the front or patrolling the streets or breaking up incipient riots, and hope for better times. But it will be months and months before Shanghai's film trade recovers, and before the losses sustained during the present troubles north and here—with more to come probably when this sector is "mopped up"—can be made up.

Anyway, "Cheerio"—until the check-up, which already reveals one well-known cinema manager blown to kingdom come in the Sincere store bombing—Mr. Y. L. Bein, Chinese manager of the World theatre, Shanghai.

Film Offices Under Fire Several Times

In a second article, mailed September 8th and received on Monday of this week, Mr. Koehler writes that "Shanghai is desperately trying to make a semblance of 'business as usual,'" that film interests are "trying to open the cinemas and hope to this coming week."

We are now in our fourth week of hostilities in the Shanghai area. Theatres have been closed since Bloody Saturday, August 14th. From all over China reports are coming in of the closing of cinemas. Canton reports today, "All cinemas closed"; Amoy, Swatow also. Up the Yantze river reports of August 30th show cinemas still operating in Changsha. Tsingtao cinemas still are running, since the menace of near hostilities has been eased by the evacuation of all Japanese nationals and men of war in order to preserve peace in that city.

Film Shipments Uncertain

Communications have been disrupted, telegraphs are uncertain and mails delayed but are carrying on under heavy handicap. Shipment of films by a few foreign (not American) vessels out and into Shanghai are uncertain and precarious. Shanghai distributors' head offices are operating with depleted and worried staffs despite the constant rumbling of guns, aerial bombardments and the bursting of shells and scatter of shrapnel overhead.

Offices Under Fire

The offices of Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists and Columbia, also of the Film Board of Trade (China) in the Capital Theatre Building have been several times under fire.

On Friday, September 3, an artillery and naval duel, combined with machine guns' and snipers' bullets, broke loose within 700 yards of our windows and shattered the peaceful Sunday morning appearance of our now empty Soochow Creek and Wangpoo river, and the normally busy and crowded Bund.

Over across the creek, and a block to our west, the offices of RKO-Radio, MGM, Universal and Warner Brothers-First National, in the Embankment Building, have had their scares of shot and shell nearby, and are still carrying on, though the main staffs have removed to safer areas in Shanghai. And RKO's front door is sandbagged high!

AMERICANS PROTEST WASHINGTON STAND

Reactions of American businessmen in war-torn China to Washington's expressed viewpoint on evacuation, J. P. Koehler, Motion Picture Herald correspondent at Shanghai, writes:

"American business men and women here in Shanghai strongly disapproved the statement accredited to President Roosevelt that we must evacuate or sacrifice the protection of our government. We cannot do that. We operate under American laws, under American courts, and are as much a part of the U. S. A. in our business enterprises and home as American business men in Washington. To lose it all after years of effort in forwarding American trade, under the extra-territorial rights under which we operate, is unthinkable.

"American business in China demands that the American people at home understand our position rightly, and appeal to the sense of justice and right of the American public. We don't want war, but we expect to see American rights fully protected and not to be forced home to enter the ranks of the unemployed."

Trouble Either Way

Shanghai's first-run cinemas are between the devil and the deep sea. If they open they may be subject to the national feeling against amusements of any sort, and if they don't, despite police permission and encouragement to do so, they are condemned by the public, which wants some sort of relaxing entertainment in between anxious and harrowing movements. Ice-cooled cinemas find it impossible to operate, with sufficient ice unavailable and the unseasonable temperature of 95 to 100 degrees F. each day.

The USS Augusta will give a huge minstrel show at Shanghai's largest cinema—the 2,000 seat Grand theatre—this week, for the benefit of refugee sufferers. This may prove an opening wedge.

Nanking Board May Move

Every time we think it's quieting down we are rudely shaken from our sense of security by another bombing or artillery dual nearby, and we carry our tin hat along with us to office, still keeping in uniform, subject to one hour's remobilization call! Our "front line" defenses are now mostly held by "regulars"; our job is mainly "internal pacification" and riot duty for the moment.

With no censor board at Nanking for three weeks, the stock of films on hand is at a standstill, but it is hoped to remove the Board to Shanghai should cinemas here reopen.

Anyway, we're carrying on as best we can, hoping for better days, and not all of us, in fact few of us, intend to avail ourselves of the paternal advice of Washington to "clear out" and leave the results of our years of effort. To what purpose?

The Cheerful Aspect

When the theatres in Shanghai closed on "Bloody Saturday," August 14th, the Nanking theatre was displaying advertising for "Smiling Through"; the Metropole front showed "Thunder in the City," and the Grand theatre "Singing Marine." How's that for coincidence?

We liked the looks of that 4-inch length of shell fragment that buried itself in a shed roof two feet from our head and dug it out with our bayonet. It's a nice souvenir paper weight now!

Laughter at a Premium

Stop Press!! The Grand theatre, Shanghai, announces it will reopen Friday, September 10th, with "Easy Living" (Paramount). Are they just kidding us? Well, we can use a few good, hearty laughs!

The weather man had no mercy on us until September 7th; three weeks of sweltering at 95 degrees F. and over, mostly over! Today cool breezes send us a lung-filling welcome. We haven't sweated this morning, and it's 10:00 a. m.!

* * *

Somewhere on the Whangpoo front something is going "Boom" every few minutes followed by "Cr-u-n-ch!" as the Japanese warships shell the Chinese lines, and north about one mile rather hot artillery firing is sending the shells over Chapei and Hongkew with depressing regularity.

Worries About Rent

Our stenographer is worrying about next year's rent! And that, after the disastrous Yu Ya Chung Road bomb that wiped out about a thousand, dropped just about 200 yards away under her apartment's windows and shook her up a bit! She's not evacuating!

Some of the women evacuatees unannouncedly have returned to the "safety" of Shanghai after having been earthquaked in Manila and typhooned in Hongkong—only to find some hubby very much engaged in indoor and outdoor sports! "My Dear—it's the war. What do you expect?" And it's so hard to get any sleep!

* * *

Who said evacuate? Why, we feel safer than on a Fifth Avenue traffic crossing! Theatres will reopen some day, and there's still plenty of rice on hand. We even have ice-cream and beer at the old prices.

PLAN FOR 100 PER CENT PRODUCERS' ASSOCIATION FAILS IN LONDON

British Interests Fear Too Great Influence by Americans; MGM's British United May Sign Jessie Matthews

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

The plan for an all-inclusive Film Producers Association, endorsed in March last at a meeting attended by representatives of one hundred and fifty companies, has fallen through.

The Association will come into being, a formation committee having been appointed with Capt. the Hon. Richard Norton as chairman to draft its constitution, but its functions will be limited to negotiations with organized labor.

In effect it will be a joint employers' council, over against the Film Industry's Employees' Council. Establishment of the last-named unit was announced this week by the Association of Cine-Technicians and the National Association of Theatrical Employees, who will invite other trade unions to cooperate in a policy of one hundred per cent unionization.

British Producers "Scared"

The original constitution of the Film Producers Association provided for five panels; producers, studio owners, producers of short subjects, newsreel producers, and laboratories. It was anticipated that the present Film Group of the Federation of British Industries would be merged in the producers' panel. Mr. M. Neville Kearney, secretary of the Film Group, was slated to become secretary of the FPA.

The plan has fallen down on account of what seemed its greatest merit. Essential in the draft of the constitution was the proviso that membership be open to any company engaged in the various departments of production in England, irrespective of nationality. The aim being a hundred per cent organization, such a condition seemed necessary and logical, but it has scared British producers, although there is good reason for saying that the FPA as planned had the approval of the Board of Trade.

This Government department, it may be assumed, is alive to the absurdity of regarding as representative of production in England any organization which does not include Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount, and other American companies which, through British subsidiaries, plan large scale activities here.

Fear of Being "Swamped"

The specifically British interests at present organized in the Film Group also were conscious of the fact that, with the British activities of U. S. groups conducted by companies British by legal registration, the Americans could not be excluded logically from a body with a wide constitution. The fear of being "swamped" by these interests is the motive force which now is expected to reduce the field of the FPA so drastically.

In the present political atmosphere the attitude of the strictly British companies is understandable if not exactly courageous. A great deal of the controversy upon the coming Films Bill may turn on the exact definition of a British film. Always to be born in mind is that certain producing interests want the new legislation shaped so that reciprocity, for instance, shall benefit only films made by companies controlled by British money. The present legal definition of a British film, which seems likely to be repeated in the new bill, allows foreign capital to be employed to any extent in its production.

Until the Films Bill is an Act, and operative, it seems that the all-embracing Film Producers Association therefore is shelved. British producers will remain in the Film Group as a separate section, representing limited and in some sense parochial British interests, and shutting their eyes to the fact that quite a piece of the capital employed by this section comes from Continental sources. When the quota's future has been decided, the scheme probably will be revived. The Film Group, in any case, inside or outside of a larger body, will continue to speak for the, more or less, hundred per cent Britishers.

Doyle's Circuit Plans

Stuart M. Doyle, arriving from New York, outlined a plan for establishment of an "Empire circuit" of super-theatres in key cities of the British Empire, for the purpose of putting British films on the map through adequate presentation and exploitation in all the territories under the Union Jack. One hundred theatres are necessary for this purpose, he says, and he proposes to organize them through a private company.

Mr. Doyle also has British production plans, and has selected his first subject, but declines to say with which if any of various British companies he may cooperate; he has had discussions with several, he adds.

The Doyle theatre-cinema-restaurant center in Lower Regent Street will open in the spring or early summer of 1938.

Rapid extension of the British production plans of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is indicated in news of producer and star signings. With others expected to follow soon, these engagements indicate that, through its subsidiary Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer British Studios, Ltd., MGM is organizing here on a basis of definite permanency and with a clearly marked policy of exchanging talent between Hollywood and London. The British organization is being planned and staffed as an integral part of the MGM producing machine.

The most significant engagement announced by Ben Goetz, managing director of the British company, was that of Victor Saville as producer and director. Mr. Saville is admittedly one of the outstandingly successful of British film makers. For Gaumont-British, which he first joined in 1920, he made, among other pictures, "I Was a Spy" and "It's Love Again," which established Jessie Matthews in America. In association with London Films, at Denham, he recently has produced "Dark Journey," "Action for Slander" and "Storm in a Teacup," all rated boxoffice pictures. He just has completed "South Riding," and was scheduled to make "Dancers in Mourning," now abandoned.

May Get Jessie Matthews

The speed with which MGM is working is illustrated by the fact that Saville reported for duty at Denham a few days after the contract was signed. The official statement announced that he would "become one of a group of producers, working under a single studio head." At the present moment the MGM group of British producers consists of Saville and Michael Balcon, in charge of the Robert Taylor "Yank at Oxford" unit, but it is generally believed in London that it is destined to grow rapidly, by means of further signings which may seem sensational.

One possibility, which in some inside quarters is rated a probability, is that Jessie Matthews will become an MGM British star immediately on the conclusion of "Sailing Along," the current and last picture under her contract with Gaumont-British.

Recently announced by Miss Matthews and her husband and producer, Sonnie Hale, was that they purposed to form their own production unit, and to continue to make British pictures. Offers from practically every large Hollywood company have been available to Miss Matthews for some time, but her determination to make pictures in her native country is declared to be unalterable.

Association with Metro-British would meet her wishes and at the same time provide her with a major American release. It would possess all the advantages of a Hollywood contract without its drawbacks.

Significant in the circumstances is that Victor Saville is generally rated as an ideal producer for Jessie Matthews, and that his assumption of that function would leave Sonnie Hale free to act opposite his wife while still cooperating in direction.

Getting Story Plum

Another sequel to the Saville engagement seen as certainty was that the producer would take to MGM the rights in A. J. Cronin's sensational best-seller, "The Citadel," which he acquired in face of intense Hollywood competition and planned to produce for London Films. A statement from Saville confirmed this expectation. The Saville engagement therefore incidentally gives MGM one of the story plums of the year.

The Saville contract is understood to provide that only with his consent can the pro-

SIX MORE ADD THEIR REPORTS ON FILMS

Six more exhibitors, from four states and Ontario, this week contribute reports to "What the Picture Did for Me."

Sending in reports for the first time are these:

M. Bailey, Strand Theatre, Dryden, Ontario, Canada.

C. T. Cooney, Jr., Waldo Theatre Corporation, Waldoboro, Maine.

Steering their typewriters out upon the track again, after more than a year of silence, are the following:

H. T. Nokes, Elite Theatre, Nixa, Missouri.

M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio.

Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa.

J. E. Palmer, State Theatre, Presque Isle, Maine.

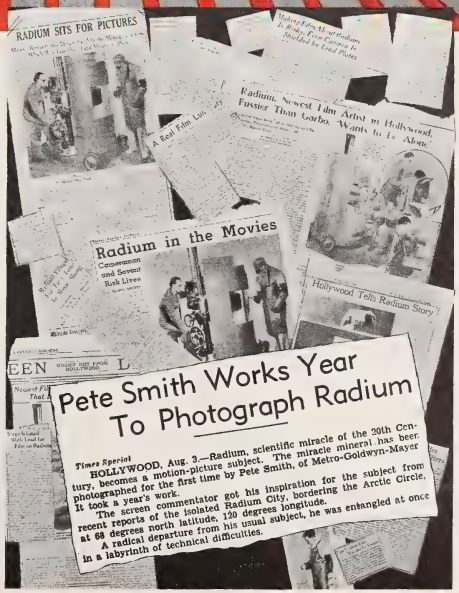
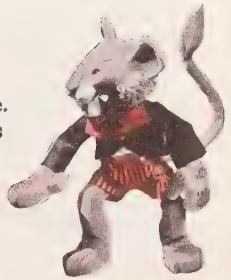
IT TOOK ONE WHOLE YEAR TO MAKE THIS AMAZING SHORT SUBJECT!

Pete Smith's



ROMANCE OF RADIUM

M-G-M brings you the most costly short subject ever made. One entire year was devoted to making the first motion pictures of the "miracle mineral" for the screen. Radium, the most dangerous substance known to man, is also the most valuable. Filming it was a perilous undertaking. Making it factual was a technical triumph. That's why every newspaper in the land, from the New York Times to the smallest weekly, has devoted full pages and rotogravure space to a one-reel motion picture. It is more than a picture, it's the triumph of showmanship over seemingly unsurmountable obstacles. Pre-sold, it will attract more attention to your theatre than any one-reel picture you have ever played. It is a thrilling entertainment that offers unlimited publicity and exploitation values.



A NOTED THEATRE OPERATOR WRITES:

"Dear Mr. Pete Smith: For four years I have booked every short subject you have made and always in 'A' time. You are the best loved and most respected person on the screen today by men, women and children in big towns, little towns, first, second, third and subsequent runs and return engagements. One of the remarkable things about your work is that each subject invariably maintains your high standard. No other short subject series has such a record.

STUART DOYLE PLANS EMPIRE CIRCUIT

ducer be employed outside England, but part of the MGM policy is undoubtedly to send all its British acquisitions to Hollywood for experience, while employing established American star values as the basis on which to build its British organization.

An instance, balancing the dispatch of Robert Taylor and his support to London, is the engagement on a long-term contract of Greer Garson, leading woman in the current St. James's theatre attraction, "Old Music." Miss Garson, a Titian-haired Irish beauty, will leave for Hollywood immediately the play ends.

Also signed on a long term contract is Griffith Jones, highly esteemed as a romantic lead since he made a hit in "Escape Me Never." Currently, Jones is in MGM's "A Yank at Oxford."

John R. Woolfenden has arrived from Hollywood to take charge of publicity, at Dedham, for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Ltd., starting with "A Yank at Oxford."

Carl Esmond Next

To follow Miss Garson to Hollywood is Carl Esmond, currently playing the Prince Consort in "Victoria Regina" at the Lyric theatre. He also has a long-term contract and will sail for Culver City immediately the London run of the play ends. Esmond was originally Willi Eichberger, a Viennese stage and screen star. Louis B. Mayer spotted him at the Lyric.

During Mr. Mayer's stay here and on the Continent it is understood that tentatively arrangements were made which will result in still further announcements of spectacular signings. For the moment London finds the present series quite enough to digest. Suggestions that plans for serious American production in England were so much talk look singularly absurd in face of activities which, apart from bringing major Hollywood celebrities to London, appear to have given MGM most of the brains of the old G.-B. production unit and to promise to give them the beauty also.

Factor in Films Bill

That Hollywood, as represented by MGM, is conducting so wholesale a raid on British personalities will possibly be made the basis of criticism of the new Films Bill, seen as the deciding factor in determining that policy, but the criticism will not come from those whose livelihood depends on a thriving British production industry.

To actors, directors, writers and technicians, all protected by the provisions of the new legislation, the reality of MGM's British plans, so soon to be emulated by Paramount and others, seems the biggest stimulus British production has had since the original Films Act made it a practicable proposition.

GB Pays Dividend

Payment of the half-yearly dividend on the 5½ per cent cumulative preference shares of Gaumont-British Corporation, Ltd., was made on the due date. This action renders impossigle any change in the control of the company, for another six months, by means of preference votes. The shares carry voting rights only if the dividend is passed.

Last March, when the first half-yearly dividend was due, there was a split in the board of directors on the question of payment, the Ostrer brothers carrying the point by five votes to four, against the opposition of Messrs. John Maxwell, Sidney R. Kent, Dixon Boardman and O. H. C. Balfour.

This action, subsequently challenged unsuccessfully in the courts by the "Nordon committee" of dissentient G-B shareholders, disappointed an obvious intention, on the part of Associated British Pictures to obtain control by means of the preference vote which, it was common knowledge, was hostile to the Ostrers and pro-Maxwell. It was followed by the closing down of distribution by G-B and the transfer of uncompleted productions to General Film Distributors, Ltd., on a partnership basis. GFD also took over the G-B distribution.

Both these actions were strongly challenged by Mr. Maxwell, who later entered an action for ABP against the Ostrers, claiming damages and alleging that the sale to him of shares in Metropolis and Bradford Trust, controlling G-B, had been effected by misrepresentation. This action still has to be heard. Rumors that it had been settled on the basis of the return of the ABP investment were denied recently by Maxwell associates.

EMI Profit £363,964

Electrical Musical Industries, Ltd., the radio-gramophone combine, made £393,964 profit in 1937, an increase of £90,000 over the previous year. The ordinary dividend is 10 per cent.

EMI controls the television transmitting system employed by British Broadcasting Corporation in its program from the Alexandra Palace in North London.

The Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association council this week accepted the report of its rentals committee recommending that members continue to book flat A or B pictures where such has been done previously, disregarding the policy announced by the Kinematograph Renters' Society to sell pictures on a percentage basis only.

A joint meeting of the members with circuit representatives has been called to inaugurate a campaign for lower rentals.

Sam Eckman, MGM executive in England, in an unofficial reply to a statement of Arthur Dent dissociating Associated British Pictures from the new policy of the KRS to sell "A" features only on a percentage basis, denied the plan is designed to fix rentals.

Mr. Eckman declared the KRS has no intention of establishing a combination for rental fixing, but that the resolution was designed merely to reduce overlong theatre programs, and eliminate use of two "A" films on bill.

He said that he personally was willing that conferences be held with the KRS but that there could be no discussion of price fixing, which is a matter for individual attention.

London Films reported a profit of £35,839, subject to depreciation for the eight months from May to December, inclusive, in 1936. Salary reductions on salaries up to £10, and half the cuts on salaries from £10 to £20, have been restored.

Results of a recent CEA questionnaire showed 568 theatre managers in favor of a standardized 2,000 foot reel and only 37 opposed. In addition 571 owners said existing projectors would take the long reels. In no case were licensing restrictions against the new reels reported.

"AND SO — VICTORIA" LEADS RENTERS

"And So—Victoria," by Vaughan Wilkins, was the leader among the ten best renters during September and ranked second in a list of the ten best fiction sellers during the month, according to the Retail Bookseller.

The classification of renters was based upon nationwide reports compiled by the Bookseller and the best sellers were listed on the basis of a count of the Baker & Taylor Company's sales throughout the country. The best renters were:

1. And So—Victoria, by Vaughan Wilkins.
2. Northwest Passage, by Kenneth Roberts.
3. You Can't Have Everything, by Kathleen Norris.
4. American Dream, by Michael Foster.
5. The Years, by Virginia Woolf.
6. The Outward Room, by Millen Brand.
7. Gone With the Wind, by Margaret Mitchell.
8. Blind Man's Year, by Warwick Deeping.
9. Theatre, by W. Somerset Maugham.
10. The Wind from the Mountains, by Trygve Gulbranssen.

The best sellers in the field of fiction were as follows:

1. The Citadel, by A. J. Cronin.
2. And So—Victoria, by Vaughan Wilkins.
3. Northwest Passage, by Kenneth Roberts.
4. You Can't Have Everything, by Kathleen Norris.
5. The Nutmeg Tree, by Margery Sharp.
6. The Seven Who Fled, by Frederic Prokosch.
7. Gone With the Wind, by Margaret Mitchell.
8. Twenty-four Hours a Day, by Faith Baldwin.
9. Storm Girl, by Joseph C. Lincoln.
10. The Case of the Lame Canary, by Erle S. Gardner.

The actual period covered in the survey of best seller reports was August 16th to September 13th.

Postpone Booth Law Operation

New Government regulations in Vancouver, B. C., which would allow one qualified operator and an apprentice, instead of two men as at present, have been postponed for a full year. The delay was granted by the Provincial Government on protests by the projectionists' union. Regulations were to have gone into effect January 1, 1938, and have been postponed until January 1, 1939.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Cinema by Air

With news of Hollywood's doings covered to a high degree of efficiency by newspapers, the press agents' other pet medium for the dissemination of fact and poppy-cockery, the radio, has been established along lines that stun credulity. It has reached such a point of development that one can hardly throw the switch without hearing some commentator broadcasting the lowdown. Seven national and eight local and Pacific Coast area stations are doing their best to see that everybody knows everything.

Three commentators take to the microphones on Monday. Sheila Graham has a national broadcast. Warren Stokes and Nora Croft address the western territory.

Jimmy Fidler has things pretty much to himself on Tuesdays to tell all who care to listen all he knows about it.

The airways become a little crowded on Wednesday as Sidney Skolsky broadcasts nationally and Stokes, Harry Mines and Mayme Oberpeake regale the western state listeners-in.

There's a bit of a pause on Thursday. Nobody of importance is on the air, but it can be expected that that day will not be permitted to remain silent long.

Friday Jimmy Fidler is again declaring himself nationally and Owen Crump and Hollywood Chatterbox take care of the area between the Rockies and the Pacific Ocean from Mexico to Canada.

Sunday George Fisher (in the Winchell spot) speaks nationally, as does Lloyd Pantages, while the familiar Mr. Stokes again addresses his audiences.

In addition there are the national feature programs, such as Hollywood Hotel and Jack Oakie's College, which feature picture personalities almost exclusively, and the various other programs upon which some picture notable almost always appears.

To these may be added the guest star comment programs presented by Feg Murray and Edwin and Elza Schallert.

Additionally, Trans-Radio wires and broadcasts a daily news letter to about fifty small and independent local stations and United Press wires a daily news letter to local newspapers, which also broadcast.

No other facet of national or world life is so thoroughly reported by press and radio as is the motion picture business. Only a national presidential campaign and election, or other important event in the affairs of state or politics, receives as much attention. But the radio commentators on picture affairs and personalities go on and on, day in and day out, without interruption (except for salestalk).

Goldwyn Departure

Practically convinced that the business of "big picture" previews is becoming a racket, Samuel Goldwyn is contemplating a radical departure in permitting the press to see "Hurricane." The picture is slated to open in the Carthay Circle theatre on November 5th. Its production has raised so much discussion that everybody wants to see it. Goldwyn knows that reporters, observers, reviewers and critics have been consulting dictionaries in search of adjectives to fling at it. But the newspaper people are in a quandary. Inquiries at the publicity department reveal only that Mr. Goldwyn does not know whether or not he will hold a press preview.

Three possibilities are in the offing, however. All depend upon whether the picture opens in New York before it does on the coast. If it does, the chances are more than favorable that local writers will see it first.

If not, Mr. Goldwyn is considering three alternatives. One possibility is to take the picture to a remote city, Bakersfield, San Jose, San Francisco or Oakland, and to invite an exclusive group of commentators to the showing. The reason for this move would be to permit the film to be shown to an unbiased audience to which previews are a distinct novelty and from which a truer audience reaction may be gained.

The second plan is to preview the picture either in the Carthay Circle or at the studio the night before its local opening. If this idea is followed, the entire press would be invited to witness the preview.

The third plan is not to preview "Hurricane" publicly at all, but to let the press see it on the occasion of its local premiere.

Mr. Goldwyn, who is never quite content to follow in the footsteps of his contemporaries, did something completely out of formula when he took "Dead End" to Long Beach. Mounting the stage upon the film's conclusion, he made a direct personal appeal to the audience to express their honest opinion on preview cards.

BETTY GRABLE VOTED "AMERICA'S IDEAL"

Betty Grable, Paramount player, last week was the recipient of a loving cup which represented the material advantage of having been named "America's Ideal Girl," said title having been bestowed upon her by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce and a group of the film colony's artists.

A spokesman for the group in answer to a query said, "This committee challenges the right of officials of the Atlantic City and other similar contests to describe their winners as being outstanding examples of the young womanhood of our nation. This committee feels that such contests exhibit beauty only of the skin deep variety, neglecting altogether such underlying springs of feminine beauty as charm, intelligence, personality, character and poise, and that therefore these contests fail to produce a type personifying young womanhood of America."

Miss Grable's measurement chart reads: "Bust, 34; waist, 23; hips, 35; weight, 114." Incidentally, the committee said it would be glad to measure any young woman who wishes to challenge Miss Grable's right to the title.

7 Finish; 5 Start

From a production standpoint, not much happened in Hollywood during the week. Five pictures started; seven were finished. Other than the completed "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," practically all the old and new work is run of the mill material. (Most of the week's interest undoubtedly was concentrated on the "unproductive" affairs of Signor Mussolini, Jr.).

RKO-Radio's new activity is "Taking the Town." Under direction of Edward Killy, it will present Fred Stone, Dorothy Moore, Gordon Jones, Berton Churchill, Sherwood Bailey, Paul Guilfoyle, Frank M. Thomas and Dorothy Vaugh.

The cast of "Big Town Girl," 20th Century-Fox, is headed by Claire Trevor, Donald Woods and Alan Baxter. Alfred G. Werker is directing.

At Warner Bros. "Highway Pirates" was started. It will feature Beverly Roberts, Dick Purcell, Gloria Blondell and Charles Foy. Noel Smith is the director.

Republic Active

Republic was the only studio which started two productions. In "News Is in the Air," which Nick Grinde is directing, are Wallace Ford, June Travis, Arthur Lake and Syd Saylor. "The Lady Misbehaves" will present Sally Eilers, Neil Hamilton, Joseph Schildkraut, George Ernest, Marcia Mae Jones, Robert Greig and Mary Gordon. Lloyd Corrigan is directing the picture.

Three of the seven completed pictures are credited to Columbia. Luli Deste and John Boles are starred in "She Married an Artist" with Frances Drake, Helen Westley, Alexander D'Arcy, Albert Van Dekker, Mark Windham, Franklin Pangborn and Jacqueline Wells in support. Marion Gering directed. "Forgotten Women" will present Wynn Cahoon, Scott Colton, Mayo Methot, Sarah Padden, Arthur Loft, Mary Russel, Margaret Armstrong, John Tyrrell and Dick Curtis. Lambert Hillyer directed. The third picture, Larry Darmour's "Murder Is Welcome," will again feature Jack Holt.

"Sawyer" Completed

Selznick-International completed "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer." It will present Tommy Kelly, Jackie Moran, May Robson, Walter Brennan, Ann Gillis, Victor Jory, Mickey Rentchler, Cora Sue Collins, Charles Richman, Spring Byington, David Holt, Marcie Mae Jones, Margaret Hamilton and Phillip Hurlic. Norman Taurog directed.

At Warners "Too Much of Everything" finished. It will present Dolores Costello, Bonita Granville, Donald Crisp, Natalie Moorhead, Lucille Gleason, Mary Doyle, Donald Briggs and Emmett Vogan. Arthur Lubin directed.

"Zorro Rides Again" was completed at Republic. The cast includes John Carroll, Richard Alexander, Jack Morgan, Robert Kortman, Roger Williams and Yakima Canutt. William Whitney and Jack English shared directing responsibilities.

Monogram completed "Federal Bullets," which will feature Milburn Stone, Terry Walker and Helen McKellar. Karl Brown directed.

GOVERNOR EARLE GIVES 'RED' FILM HIS BLESSING

Overrides Censor Board, Saying Scenes of Mutilation Teach Lesson to Americans

Regardless of his observation that the United States is becoming "a dumping ground for pictures which attempt to sell to the American people, the doctrines of Communism, Fascism and Nazism," George Howard Earle, Governor of Pennsylvania, has ruled against his own Commonwealth's board of censorship and issued a permit of exhibition for "The Spanish Earth," one of the Spanish Civil War pictures now flooding the country purportedly propagandizing either the Spanish Red (Loyalist) or the Spanish Rebel cause.

Governor Earle flatly branded "Spanish Earth" as "alien propaganda," but reversed the censors' banning after "liberal" and labor organizations had protested the prohibition. Pennsylvania's censorship statutes and rulings are generally conceded to be strict and final.

The picture had been turned down originally by Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer, widow of the war-time United States attorney general, who is chairman of the board, and Patrick A. Duffy, vice chairman. Mrs. Hester M. Fye, secretary, was unable to be present at the initial viewing.

Prometheus Pictures Company, of New York, distributor of "The Spanish Earth," contended that the film was "moral and proper" and, therefore, the board's action in banning it was "arbitrary and discriminatory."

At the time of the original ban, Mrs. Palmer termed the picture "horribly gruesome and not proper for general release."

Good Lesson, Says Governor

Governor Earle, in reversing his censor board's decision, pointed out that the board felt it was improper to show men, women and children mutilated and killed by bombs and gunfire. In this respect he differed from the board, believing that in showing the horrors of war, the film is a good lesson for Americans.

Conceding that the picture was Loyalist Spain propaganda, and pointing out instances during the picture where German planes are shot down by Loyalists, although no Communist planes are shown shot down by Fascists, the Governor still felt that the film should be shown. Mr. Earle denied that the picture in any way endeavors to recruit young Americans to "fight and die" in alien causes, which was the main objection to a previously banned film of similar type, "Spain in Flames."

The Governor further said that he regretted the United States becoming a "dumping ground for pictures which attempt to sell to the American people, sometimes subtly disguised, the doctrines of Communism, Fascism and Nazism."

"The Spanish Earth" is a film which has dialogue by Ernest Hemingway, photography by Boris Ivens and a musical score written by Marc Blitzstein, Philadelphia composer. New York critics have hailed it as an artistic success and it is now in its seventh week there.

The day after Governor Earle lifted the ban on "Spanish Earth," the appeal on "Spain in Flames" was heard in Common Pleas Court Number 3 in Philadelphia. Judge Louis E. Levinthal heard the arguments, presented by Louis McCabe, attorney for the film's sponsors, while Deputy Attorney M. E. Seidman represented the Censor Board.

No Witnesses Heard

No witnesses were called during the appeal hearing, though Mrs. Palmer of the censor board and several members of the Civil Liberties Union, who are interested in the picture's release, were present.

Judge Levinthal reserved decision but in view of Governor Earle's lifting of the ban on "Spanish Earth," it is expected that the ruling will be favorable to those who are sponsoring "Spain in Flames."

Immediately on the Governor's reversal of the censors' ban on "Spanish Earth," the documentatry film emphasizing the Loyalists' (Red) side of the war in Spain, was booked into the Europa theatre in Philadelphia and the Art Cinema in Pittsburgh.

March of Time Names Sindlinger

Albert E. Sindlinger, who has been in charge of March of Time exhibitor exploitation for the last two years, has been appointed director of promotion and advertising which will carry with it the managing directorship of March of Time's "Photo Reporter," monthly picture newspaper which is circulated in 3,200 schools in United States.

Mr. Sindlinger entered the theatre business as a schoolboy through operation of a theatre in the high school auditorium of his home town, Gnadenhutten, Ohio. While attending Ohio University, he did newsreel free lance work and during the summer vacations was associated with the Redpath Chautauqua organization in the middle west. He has been associated with Warner Brothers and Loew's as a theatre manager in several cities, including Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Reading, Pa., Akron, Cleveland and Marion, Ohio, Kokomo, Ind., and Appleton, Wis. As a theatre manager in 1935 he won five national exploitation contests on various feature pictures as well as The Quigley Silver Plaque for May, 1935.

MPPDA School Plan Now Near Marketing Stage

"Motion picture vaults are mines of educational gold," a committee of eight educators said in a report Thursday to Will H. Hays, president, and the board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in quarterly meeting at headquarters in New York.

1,595 Films Appraised

After spending four months examining and appraising non-current short subject films, the educators' group, known officially as the Advisory Committee on the Use of Motion Pictures in Education, declared:

"If education is to be adequate for the future needs of our increasingly complex life, it must avail itself of every modern device for teaching. The motion picture is destined to take its place beside the text book, the laboratory and the workshop as a factor of major significance in education."

In its survey, the committee appraised 1,595 "non-current" pictures, of which 849 were rated as acceptable for school use without change, 234 as acceptable with minor changes, while 478 contained some usable elements.

Thanking the committee for its work, Mr. Hays said:

"Since the organization of our association in 1922, we have constantly pursued as one of its purposes the development of the classroom usefulness of motion pictures. Thomas A. Edison said years ago, 'Educators are all book-minded now, but they will find the motion picture in time.' Your report fulfills that prediction. It is gratifying that you have found such a high percentage of pedagogic values in the films examined.

"These values will be developed for the classroom in a field and with a technique separate from the essential service of theatres in furnishing wholesome entertainment."

The committee of educators consists of Dr. Mark A. May, director, Institute of Human Relations, Yale University, chairman; Frederick H. Bair, superintendent, Bronxville, N. Y., Public Schools; Isaiah Bowman, president, Johns Hopkins University; Karl T. Compton, president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Edmund E. Day, president, Cornell University; Royal B. Farnum, executive vice-president, Rhode Island School of Design; Willard E. Givens, executive secretary, National Education Association; and Jay B. Nash, director, Department of Physical Education and Health, New York University.

How the Study Started

"Impressed by the growing interest of teachers in the educational values of films seen in theatres and encouraged by the cooperation of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America with various educational experiments such as the Secrets of Success character education films developed by the Committee on Social Values in Motion Pictures and the Human Relations Series now in process of production under the sponsorship of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation," a statement from the MPPDA said, "a group of educators some months ago asked Mr. Hays to secure permission of producing companies to appraise non-current material in their vaults. Permission was granted. To carry out this purpose the committee of eight was established, and in turn the committee organized panels of specialists to screen and appraise short subject films for their fellow teachers throughout the country.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Heidi

(20th Century-Fox)

Juvenile Fiction

Every showman knows what to do in behalf of a Shirley Temple picture—the little lady's two-year sovereignty over competitors of all ages in MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S annual poll of exhibitors dictates full blast, wide range exploitation of her every appearance.

Every showman knows, too, the peculiarly parallel appeal of Jean Hersholt's name when uttered in connection with subjects of primarily juvenile character—his work with the Dionne youngsters has made him a tradition as well as a personality.

But it is possible that some showmen, bachelors or other incompletely rounded citizens of show business, may not know precisely what "Heidi" is. (Hollywood wisecrackers have even punned it "Heidi-ho.") Librarian and bookseller would tell them that it is just about the most widely read and relished bit of juvenile fiction on their shelves.

Yet even the showman who does know what to do with the merchandise in hand may wish to assure himself that it is as sound and saleable as the above listed components indicate, for it would appear to be in the nature of equations human that some Temple picture, some time and for some reason, must fail to jell. Your reporter goes autobiographical, with your leave, by way of making it clear that this is not the one.

It must be recorded that your correspondent, in common with an evident minority of the world's population, is not especially keen, as it were, about what are called child pictures. For this reason he safeguarded himself, in triplicate, against missing whatever merits of "Heidi" might be made manifest to the Hollywood preview audience. He took with him to the screening, violating an unwritten two-by-two code in so doing, his 11-year-old daughter, her mother and her 82-year-old grandmother, the last named a lady whose opinion of the motion picture per se is decidedly, not to say belligerently, negative. Flanked by these chronically unimpressionable critics, your reporter slumped down in his seat with reasonable expectancy of finding out whether Miss Temple had or had not approached the twilight of her reign.

When the picture got under way there was immediate approval from the 11-year-old. Then, for a time, while the story stood practically still as Miss Temple danced and clowned through an adroitly interpolated interlude, things were pretty quiet all around. It was even more so (and your reporter fought off a doze) as "Heidi's" bewhiskered grandfather grew fond of his unwelcome grandchild. Then the mean old aunt abducted the child, and the 11-year-old's mother sat up straight in her chair. And when the mean old governess began being mean to the rich little invalid girl the 11-year-old's grandmother sat up straight in hers. But your reporter didn't notice what they did when the rich little invalid stumbled out of her wheel-chair into her father's arms—he was too busy doing away with a woefully unprofessional mist that had sprung up from nowhere to shut off his view of the screen. He was pretty sure, though, that Miss Temple had not come to the end of her era.

In the strictly technical sense the picture is a strangely fabricated affair, as full of improbabilities as it is of pathos and comedy, as palpably patterned to jerk a tear as it is successful in doing so. Credit for this efficacy may be due Raymond Griffith, the associate producer, or Allan Dwan, the director, but it is a good aisle seat guess that these two, along with screen playwrights Walter Ferris and Julien Josephson, as well as Darryl Zanuck and the nameless witnesses to many an unannounced audience test, all had a patient hand in the job.

The story (if you must have a synopsis) is about a little girl left with a grumpy grandfather who softens under her gentle influence and rescues her, after many adventures melodramatic in the story-book manner, from an evil aunt, a scheming governess and a band of gypsies.

Previewed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, Cal., where a preponderantly paid attendance reacted favorably, as noted, and then all but trampled Miss Temple and mobbed Mr. Hersholt, lovingly, on its way out.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

Produced and distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox. Associate producer, Raymond Griffith. Director, Allan Dwan. Screen play by Walter Ferris and Julien Josephson. Song, "In Our Little Wooden Shoes," by Lew Pollack and Sidney D. Mitchell. Musical direction, Louis Silvers. Dances staged by Sammy Lee. Photograph by Arthur Miller. Film editor, Allen McNeil. P. C. A. Certificate No. 3514. Release date, October 15, 1937. Running time, 90 minutes. General audience classification.

She Loved a Fireman

(Warner - First National)

Action Melodrama

It's been a long time since the screen has seen a fire department story. It's been a longer time since it has seen one packing as much entertainment and exploitation material as "She Loved a Fireman." In less than an hour, it tells a romantic story, the story of a man's mental regeneration, and crowds in a quality and quantity of action that promises to make it a desirable and popular attraction in the houses which it was designed to accommodate.

Well prepared, acted, directed and staged, the film wastes no time on nonessentials. "Red Tyler" joins the department and immediately proceeds to do all the things a rookie smoke eater is not supposed to do. This naturally brings the wrath of Captain "Shannon" down upon him. A thorough beating knocks some sense into his head, as do the perils and dangers which firemen face daily. But when he falls in love with "Shannon's" sister, "Margie," the mutual antagonism is not lessened. However, a romance, during which "Red" sings a pleasing number, is contrasted by action, the picture builds to its exciting climax in which "Red" saves "Shannon's" life during a fire.

Previewed in the Forum theatre, Hollywood. At this neighborhood theatre the audience became interested at once, and there are no sagging or dragging spots in the picture so that applause during the running time was climaxed by an ovation upon the conclusion.—GUS MCCARTHY.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros.-First National. Bryan Foy associate producer. Directed by John Farrow. Original screen play by Carlton Sand and Morton Grant. Photographed by L. William O'Connell. Captain Orville J. Emory technical adviser. Music and lyrics by M. K. Jerome and Jack Scholl. Elmer Decker, assistant director. P. C. A. certificate number, 3540. Running time, 56 minutes when seen in Hollywood. Release date: Dec. 18, 1937. General audience classification.

Renfrew of the Royal Mounted

(Grand National)

Action Melodrama

Exhibitors playing this will have a syndicated newspaper comic strip and a former radio serial, both using the Laurie York Erskine novels as bases, as a start on exploitation of the first in a series of four "Renfrew" stories which Grand National plans to produce this season.

Then, too, Grand National recently announced a plan to present the "Renfrew" radio serial idea to a new sponsor, with James Newill, radio actor and singer, who makes his film debut in "Renfrew of the Royal Mounted," featured in the show.

Preview audience comment brought several revelations.

Newill displays a pleasing personality, a good singing voice and an aptitude in rough and tumble roles, prime factors in determining the continuance of any actor in this type of role, but performance rather than name draw is the first consideration to the exhibitor.

"Renfrew of the Royal Mounted" apparently was not made on a budget commensurate with action melodrama series of other studios aimed at the same market.

Such technical facets of the production as chase scenes, stunting, and rough and tumble fights, were seen through by the preview audience, which gave its indication of knowing the "faking."

Other than Carol Hughes, there are no players in the cast of any consequence.

The screenplay, unfortunately according to the formula of "Chase—We gotta have a chase!" tells of "Renfrew," a Royal Canadian Mounted police sergeant, becoming involved in the hunt for a gang of counterfeiters of American money operating in his district. He falls in love with

DAILY NEWS

Rave!

"The Music Hall has a hit in 'Stage Door.' . . . One leaves the theatre with a feeling of satisfaction at having witnessed a perfectly grand show . . . All the performances are so absolutely right that it is hard to choose among them . . . Ginger Rogers is superb in the handling of the snappy, incisive dialog which keeps the audiences in stitches . . . Miss Hepburn rises to dramatic moments with a fine show of histrionics . . . One of the most entertaining pictures of the Fall season." —Kate Cameron

N. Y. TIMES

Rave!

"Not merely a brilliant picture, but as well a magnificently devastating reply on Hollywood's part to all the catty little remarks that George Kaufman and Edna Ferber had made about it in their play. . . . It is wittier than the original, more dramatic than the original, more meaningful than the original, more cogent than the original." —Frank S. Nugent

HERALD-TRIBUNE

Rave!

"Brilliantly written, directed and acted . . . a far more satisfying entertainment than the play . . . it has such a burden of emotional power that it betters its stage prototype as an exciting and moving tribute to the abiding fascination of the theatre . . . A brilliant, witty and moving show." —Howard Barnes

DAILY MIRROR

Rave!

"Startling in its daring, the idea of teaming arty Katharine Hepburn and realistic Ginger Rogers in the Ferber-Kaufman 'Stage Door' has proved an inspired one. Their roles might have been written for them. Backed by a great cast which includes Adolphe Menjou, the co-stars give the show of their lives . . . All the fans will relish 'Stage Door.' . . . In acting, directing, writing, it represents the finest flower of movie craftsmanship." —Bland Johaneson

WORLD-TELEGRAM

Rave!

"RKO has kicked over most of the traces of Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman's 'Stage Door' and remodeled the essential idea into one of the liveliest and most ingratiating talkies of the season . . . A vastly entertaining picture, and one that moviegoers, as well as playgoers, will underwrite as a Hollywood triumph over Broadway." —George Ross

JOURNAL-AMERICAN

Rave!

"A stimulating, hugely entertaining picture . . . It brings Katharine Hepburn back to the spot she occupied . . . It brings new laurels to Ginger Rogers . . . It brings still more applause to Adolphe Menjou. . . . Under the expert guidance of Director Gregory La Cava 'Stage Door' takes its place as one of the season's best." —Rose Pelswick

N. Y. SUN

Rave!

"One of the funniest, best-made films that has come along for quite a while. The Music Hall, accustomed to fine pictures, can make 'Stage Door' quite at home, which is just as well. This is a picture that should remain at the big theatre for two or three weeks . . . It would be missing a lot to miss this one." —Eileen Creelman

N. Y. POST

Rave!

"If you are thinking of going to the movies once in the next three weeks, this is it! . . . It's the top in entertainment . . . Love Is on the Air

(Warner - First National)

Melodrama

"Love Is on the Air" as a title would suggest a musical, or a light comedy, with radio singing as a background.

The picture opens with shootings, murders, planned car wrecks, sabotage of bread by spreading oil on it, bombings of trucks and business establishments.

It ends with a gunfight in which several cornered gangsters battle it out with the police so fiercely that several women in the preview audience screamed.

There is an indicated murder of a reform movement leader who is trying to break the grip of gangsters upon the city. The characters speak of a "cement job," in such a way as to suggest the victim will be buried in concrete.

Andy McCaine, a quick talking radio news commentator, is about to expose the gang rule of "Nicey" Ferguson, when Copelin, head of the Better Business Bureau (played by Herbert Rawlinson) makes an appointment with McCaine to give him the full information on the gang's machinations. Copelin disappears, and McCaine is put in charge of the children's program on the station because of his sponsor's protests against gang exposes. McCaine stumbles on a series of clues which lead to the discovery of Copelin's body under a concrete floor in a garage and a firce gun battle in which Ferguson is killed and McCaine's sponsor is captured as the brains of the gang.

The Football Toucher-Downer

(Paramount)

Popeye

Popeye, the sailor man, is given to reminiscing as he tells Swee'Pea of the time when he was Popeye, the football captain. Even in those days Bluto was Popeye's arch enemy. When Popeye's anemic sand lot eleven tangles with Bluto's powerful steamroller team the score approaches the national debt. Finally only Popeye is left to carry on for his team. A can of spinach "down the hatch" and Popeye becomes the terror of old, winning the game single-handedly. Swee'Pea decides to try the spinach, much to Popeye's quick regret. Running time, 7 minutes.

Trotting Thoroughbreds

(Columbia)

Racing Reel

How a champion trotter is trained to realize the outstanding possibilities of its breed affords the spectators an interesting object lesson on the detailed care and the amazing amount of skill needed to produce a winner. The material offered in this issue of the New World of Sports Series is cleverly compiled, effectively shot and pleasingly projected. The sequences showing the rearing and feeding of the young candidate for trotting honors together with his initial appearance on the track prove to be entertainment of the first order.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Star Reporter In Hollywood No. 2

(Paramount)

Good

Ted Husing, the Star Reporter, on a roving assignment in Hollywood stops off at a studio lot to introduce youthful David Holt. David is versatile and about equally proficient in dramatics or a song and dance routine. In other settings Reporter Husing uncovers a variety program including the Sons of the Pioneers, cowboy interpreters of western melodies; the Quinlan Juvenile Singers, seven young girls with choral training, and Louis Prima, trumpeter, and his orchestra. Running time, 11 minutes.

Rest Resort

(Universal)

Entertaining

As proprietors of a desert rest resort, the three animated characters, Meany, Miny and Moe, are visited by Mrs. Jumbo and her offspring. Because of the fact children are not allowed to stay at the hotel, Mrs. Jumbo hides her child in a trunk. Two of the monkeys tackle the trunk and attempt to carry it while the third tries unsuccessfully to squeeze Mrs. Jumbo into the elevator. Little Jumbo makes life more miserable for the hotel owners by spraying them with eggs. Finally the two visitors are frightened by a toy mouse and leave in a hurry. Running time, 7¼ minutes.

Pacific Paradise

(MGM)

Entertaining

A Hawaiian setting, the music of Harry Owens, and the work of Cliff Edwards as master of ceremonies are the contributing components of this entertaining subject. Owens, who specializes in Hawaiian compositions, plays four of his tunes to the accompaniment of his Royal Hawaiian Hotel orchestra. Ukulele Ike Edwards introduces the music. In the finale he plays and sings a song. Another diversion is found in a hula hula dance performed by native girls. Running time, 10 minutes.

Teddy Bergman's Bar-B-Q

(Universal)

Potpourri

A variety of musical acts is presented under the guise of being the performers' payment for refreshments served at Teddy Bergman's barbeque stand. Additional story material, serving as a background for the presentation of the songs, dances and numbers played by Carl Freed and his Harmonica Lads, is the attempt by Mr. Bergman to impress a prospective purchaser of his stand. The hoped for buyer turns out to be a process server and when the real prospect arrives he is greeted with an explosion resulting from gasoline being poured into boiling soup. In addition to the harmonica players' offerings, entertainment is provided by Floria Westoff, Mae McKim and Her Three Boy Friends, Gloria Grafton and Cliff "Sharlie" Hall. Jeannie Parillo is seen as the harmonica musicians' mascot. Running time, 19 minutes.

The New Deal Show

(Paramount)

Betty Boop

Max Fleischer's latest Betty Boop cartoon concerns an animal show and proves to what heights the socalled "dumb" species of life can rise when Betty trains them. Betty also is the master-of-ceremonies and introduces a wide assortment of animal life who behave oddly, to say the least. Running time, 7 minutes.

Community Sing, No. 2 (Ser. 2)

(Columbia)

Songs of the Old Sod

Tunes to warm the sentimental hearts of Erin's countless legion of sons comprise the program of songs for this latest community musical fest. Under the gracious and genial coaxing of Gene Morgan and with the smooth vocalization of Donald Grayson as a leader, such perennial favorites as "My Wild Irish Rose," "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," "Mother Machree" and "Tipperary" are given rousing treatment in a reel of melody for all.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Unusual Occupations No. 2

(Paramount)

Very Interesting

An interesting and entertaining subject includes a man who makes miniature replicas of period furniture; a woman president of a metal welding school; a man who raises and cans angleworms; a Mexican painter whose subject matter is bulls and bull fighters; a dog trainer; a professional soap taster; a man who sells beer bottles for a living, and a mother and daughter who model wax figures used in window displays. Photographed in color. Running time, 10 minutes.

Rooftop Frolics

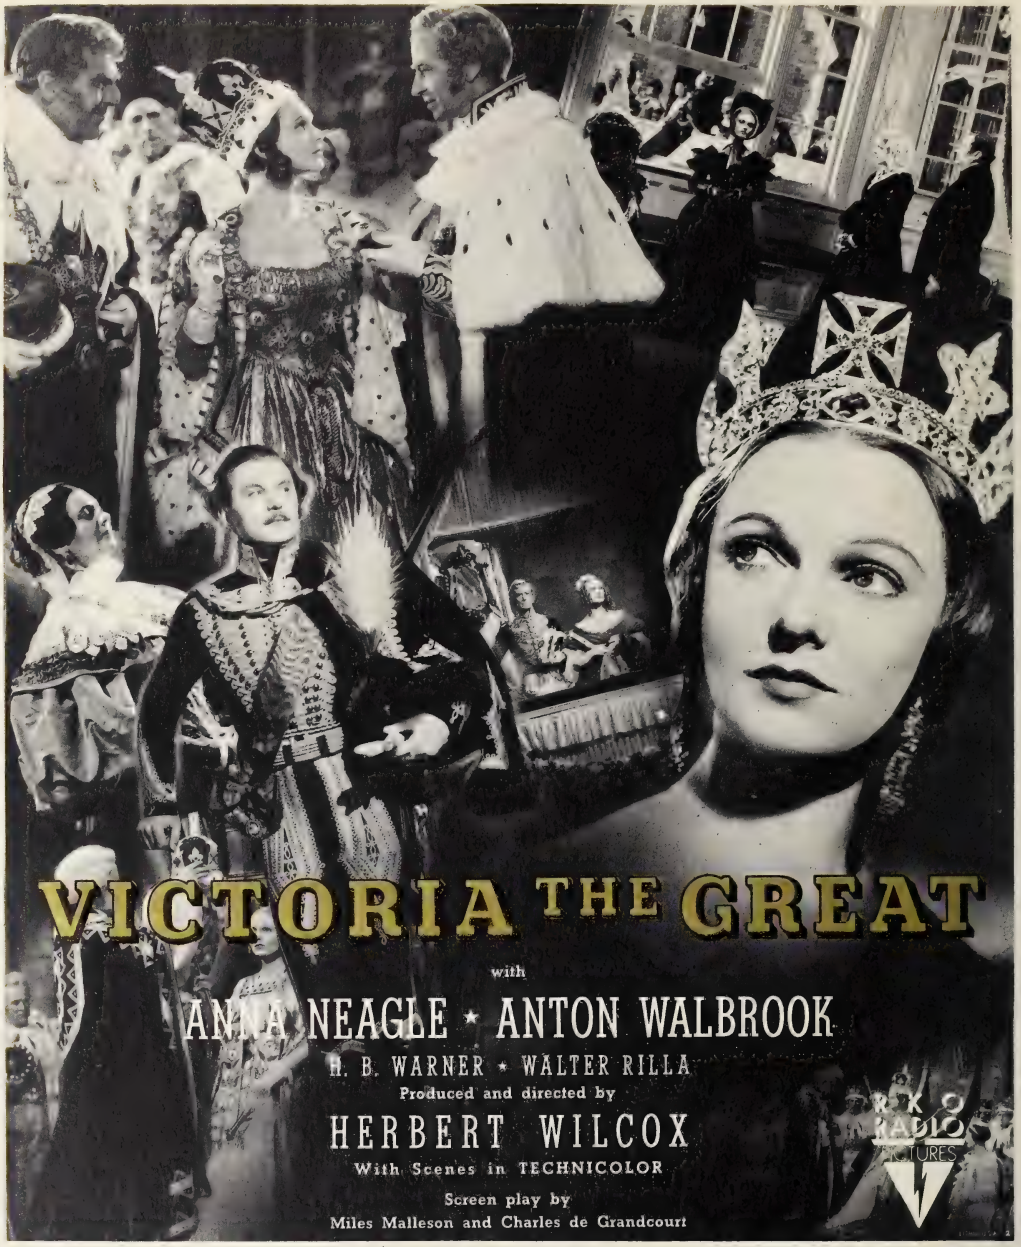
(Columbia)

Mediocre

The locale of this subject is a ritzy rooftop in New York's smart penthouse district, but the quality of the entertainment scarcely can be placed at the same high level. The talent, which includes Peg La Centra, a blues singer; Gina Valente, a child accordion player; a couple of tumblers by the name of Delden and Endler, a tap dance team named the Debonaires together with Al Cooper and his Orchestra, appear to be capable of much better things than they offer in their individual acts. The material provided seems mainly at fault, generally colorlesss and uninspired renditions of the usual song and dance routine.—Running time, 11 minutes.

How to Start the Day

(MGM)



Amusing

That exponent of "How To" is in again. The learned professor of fun, Robert Benchley, demonstrates to an awakened public that the finer points of how to start one's day have been sadly neglected in the past and, incidentally, will continue to be if the Benchley method is adopted. While the Benchley method is being illustrated by the originator the Benchley voice in the background comments on the progress being made, in his customary amusing manner. So it is with a feeling of despondency that,

Now it can be told... the story of Queen Victoria and her Prince Consort... hurled to the screen in scenes of intimate romance and breathless magnitude Withheld from stage and screen for decades, now, at last, the screen thunders the true story of a reign that saw the birth of the world's vastest empire—a mighty nation forged in the fires of conquest and tempered in the oils of civilization on the march!...Scenes of stunning splendor!...Scenes of startling beauty!... Scenes of tender romance!...Filmed in the actual cities and palaces where the young Queen's headlong love affair rocked the powers of church and state!

after going to all that trouble getting started towards the office, Benchley discovers it is Sunday. However, his actions have been recorded for posterity, so it wasn't exactly a washout.

Running time, 10 minutes.

Screen Snapshots, No. 12
(Columbia)
Interesting

This reel of travelogue around the cinema capital should prove an ample incentive to nourish any urge to visit Hollywood. Touring the shops, restaurants, night spots, and country clubs patronized by the film folk affords the spectator some interesting moments of sight seeing. The usual quota of stars are photographed.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Screen Snapshots No. 13
(Columbia)
Of Interest

The camera here makes an interesting incursion into the activities of the screen celebrities during their leisure hours and invades the school, where several of the sons of motion picture stars are entered. In midday a preview is held at Grauman's Chinese theatre and at the Del Mar Turf Club, Sponsors Bing Crosby and Pat O'Brien pose for the camera's inspection. Three score personalities, large and small, also pass inspection for the "Snapshots." Running time, 10 minutes.

Morning Judge
(RKO Radio)
Farce

Edgar Kennedy, after recurrent encounters with police because of a convict suit costume in which he is to attend a masquerade party, resigns himself to fate and demands that he be given a permanent cell in jail. The story, simple and well told, begins with the comedian explaining why his frustration led him to break into jail and ends with him starting a fight with a taxi driver in order to be returned to a cell, a destiny which he is convinced he cannot avoid. Running time, 17 minutes.

Four Smart Dogs
(Paramount)
Good

Four dogs, of different breeds and especially trained for a particular service, share the spotlight in this subject. There is the wire-haired terrier happily at the task of helping to catch the fish on his master's line, the poised and intelligent looking bird dog, the police dog ever wary of his master's safety, and the shepherd dog. To the shepherd dog has been allotted the most footage, and it is the most interesting part of the subject, especially when the patient and clever dog herds three strayed sheep into a small inclosure in a time trial contest. Narrated by Ted Husing. Running time, 10 minutes.

Fireman's Picnic
(Universal)
Cigars and Fireworks

Pictured as three firemen, the monkeys, Meany, Miny and Moe, turn their attention in this cartoon to preparing for a picnic. While the rest of the town attends the firemen's outing the trio are kept busy trying to extinguish a fire started when one of the three drops his cigar in a box of fireworks. Running time, 6½ minutes.

Paramount Pictorial, No. 7-3
(Paramount)
Very Good

Modern Czechoslovakia is featured here as the highlight of another of the informative and entertaining "Pictorial" series. Czecholand with its modern buildings, uptodate means of transportation and in the dress of its people, is completely in tune with the times and in some phases of its life probably a little ahead of the times. It is narrated by Sidney Walton. In addition there is a camera study of the American southwest in color, as recorded by Robert C. Bruce and commented upon by David Ross. And, on New York's Broadway, a fashion show is photographed against a background of glittering lights. Narrated by Alois Havrilla.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Pathe Parade No. 1
(RKO Radio)
Interesting

This first of the Pathe Parade series augurs for entertaining subjects to come. Depicted by the camera in a style called feature in journalism are three subjects of topical interest. How commercial models are booked, how they dress and act, and a typical working day are shown under the first title, "Beauty for Sale." Tunefully amusing is the second subject, "Kidoodling," in which four musicians amuse themselves with toy instruments. The third is a candid camera review of a noted New York night club. Running time 13 minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction, No. 41
(Universal)
Interesting

Highlighted with the showing of a hill frozen by man, this issue of the series contains a total of nine oddities. The hill was frozen at Grand Coulee Dam to prevent it from sliding and to eliminate the need of removing it. Other items include wood that won't float and stone that won't sink, a woman employed as a boilermaker, a pigeon's nest in a New York apartment, a squirrel that thrives on ice cream, a farmer who is seven feet four inches tall, a West Virginia resident who has had number 3 as his license number for 25 years, and a lion that has been trained to walk a wire. Humor is injected with an Austrian cameraman's description of an invention, a water shoe designed to make long distance swimming easier. Running time, 9 minutes.

(Columbia)
Very Good

Beginning the 17th year of the "Snapshots," this issue has dug deep into the recesses of the library for shots of the stars and scenes of yesteryear. Starting with the days of Mack Sennett and his bathing beauties, such stars as Ben Turpin, Gloria Swanson and Marie Prevost are seen. Then there are Charles Ray, Anita Stewart, Marion Davies, Clara Bow and a host of others appearing as the years unfold on the screen. Running time, 10 minutes.

Trailing Along
(RKO Radio)
Musical

This musical, built around Gene Austin and his three man orchestra, is the first of a group of short subjects called Headliner Comedies. Well supplied with melody and augmented by Jane Shirley's singing, the film has for theme and background a night club in a trailer idea. At one camp the Hi-De-Highway Entertainers merge with a group of juvenile performers, who add considerable to the display of talent. Running time 16 minutes.

Community Sing No. 3
(Columbia)
Tuneful

A very tuneful and timely issue, this number of the series concentrates on football songs, from Maine to California. With Gene Morgan as master of ceremonies and Donald Grayson leading the singing these college songs are sung, "On Wisconsin," "Betty Co-ed," "Ramblin' Wreck from Georgia Tech," "Maine Stein Song," "Fight On for Old S. C.," "Notre Dame Victory March," "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" and "Fight for California." Running time, 10½ minutes.

Cowboy Shorty
(Paramount)
Good

The adventures of "Shorty," baby chimpanzee, are further detailed in this entertaining subject. "Shorty" arrives at a ranch in the west and is commissioned to round up a criminal band that is hiding out in the hills. Saddling a burro, "Shorty" sets out, comes upon the outlaws while they sleep and steals the loot. The chimpanzee heads for the ranch with the outlaws in chase. At the ranch, by devious means, "Shorty" subdues them. Narrated by Ward Wilson.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Mexican Mural
(20th Century-Fox)
Very Good

The Magic Carpet of Movietone presentation makes a new and different survey of the Mexican scene. Photographed in sepia tint, the camera work is most effective. Visiting several towns in the interior as well as the principal cities, the camera illustrates the life of the Mexicans and their habits. Narrated by Ed Thorgersen. Edited by Lew Lehr. Produced by Truman Talley. Running time, 9½ minutes.

Hula Heaven
(Paramount)
Good

Eddie Peabody, banjoist and instrumentalist, in the course of this subject plays about every known stringed instrument. Against a background of Hawaiian scenery Peabody strums his way from the violin to the harp-guitar to the banjo, etc., while a chorus of Hawiian singers and dancers do the hula. Running time, 11 minutes.

LEADERS SOUND OUT EXHIBITORS ON STAND ON COMING LEGISLATION

Allied States' Executives Want to Know How Many Theatre Men Will Support Fight in Congress

A definite stand by exhibitors on proposed motion picture legislation is being sought by Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors in preparation for the next session of Congress.

"It is the obligation and duty of every leader to see to it that the exhibitors in his territory are thoroughly canvassed, their opinions noted and their pledges of support recorded so that there will be no 'walking out' when the shooting begins," says the association headquarters in a bulletin issued from its offices in Washington.

The bulletin points out further that "a few courageous leaders will not expose themselves to the retaliatory tactics of the Big Eight by fighting in the open for legislation unless they have ample evidence that the rank and file are behind them."

Three Subjects Presented

Three topics of discussion are proposed, and regional directors are asked in the bulletin to have them given careful consideration at the next meetings. Groups that do not have meetings scheduled within the next 30 days should call special sessions, says the notice.

The three propositions on which definite pledges are sought are as follows:

1. Do you favor the adoption by congress of: (a) The Neely-Pettengill Anti-Compulsory Block Booking and Blind Selling Bill? (b) The Hobbs Resolution for an investigation of the motion picture industry; (c) A Guffey Act for the movies.

2. Assuming there are some differences of opinion as between the several territories, will you abide by the decision of the majority as canvassed and determined by the executive committee of National Allied?

3. Will you individually, and through your regional and national association, work for the enactment of the measure or measures favored by the majority, and, in particular, (a) will you personally visit your congressman in your district and your senators while in the state in the interest of remedial legislation? (b) Will you cooperate with your regional leaders in choosing the best equipped congressman in your state to serve with a select group as a steering committee to press for such legislation? (c) Will you come to Washington (1) to attend a preliminary meeting during the special session in November to help organize a congressional steering committee and/or (2) testify before appropriate committees regarding the need for such legislation?

Court Decisions Refused

Two recent United States district court decisions also are reviewed in the bulletin. The first is the dismissal in Philadelphia of Paramount's petition for an injunction against exhibitors conducting a boycott in retaliation for the reputed withholding of pictures.

"While the result . . . is welcome," the bulletin says, "the interpretation placed on the law appears to be out of harmony with previous decisions.

"It is to be hoped that the court of appeals will sustain the judgment on the ground that Paramount, while seeking equity, refuses to do equity and therefore does not come into court with clean hands; and further, that if any relief is awarded the complainant, it be on condition that Paramount deliver to the exhibitors the pictures which it wrongfully withheld from them."

The Dallas Ruling

The second case reviewed is the anti-trust action instituted by the government against the Interstate Circuit, in Dallas. The court held that a single distributor may impose conditions, including price fixing, but that no price fixing can be done as a result of conspiracy or agreement between a circuit and distributors.

Up to a certain point, the bulletin points out, the decision does not alter existing concepts of the law.

"However," the bulletin continues, "the court did not rest on this familiar ground but ventured into virgin territory, as indicated by the following excerpt: 'Beyond even the citing of testimony is the irrefutable further fact that the signing of such contracts as the exhibitor respondents made with the distributor respondents, was, itself, in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law.'

"Having found a conspiracy, it was not necessary for the court to add this observation. However, the basis for it is that a contract between a distributor and an exhibitor affecting adversely the rights of a third party (i.e. another exhibitor) is a contract in restraint of trade in and of itself regardless of any agreement or conspiracy between the contracting distributor and other competing distributors.

"The Dallas case was a distinct victory for the independent exhibitors, and if the opinion is sustained in its entirety it will have a far reaching effect. It may prove an effective weapon in the hands of the exhibitors in territories where the independent accounts are so large the distributors cannot dispense with them."

BRANDT ENDORSES ALLIED - MPTOA UNION

The proposal by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, that his organization join with Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors to effect fair trade practices within the industry, won the support this week of Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, Inc.

In an open letter published in the ITOA's publication, The Independent, Mr. Brandt declared:

"One good solid front composed of representatives of the affiliated circuits and bona-fide independents—not packed but fairly well represented—will accomplish a great deal of good. The ITOA is not only willing to sit with such a committee or representation, but offers its support financially, physically and morally. Its offices are open now, and always will be, to such a group if it wishes to use them."

Kuykendall, on Tour Visiting MPTOA Units, Warns of Need of United Front Against Drastic Measures

An appeal for a well organized front to meet an impending onslaught of "drastic and far reaching legislation, aimed at motion pictures," was made by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in a bulletin issued before he started on his current trip through the West.

The purpose of the trip, Mr. Kuykendall explained, is "to meet as many local exhibitors as possible in each city, and I propose to do a great deal of listening. I am seeking the constructive ideas and suggestion, advice and counsel of the active exhibitors in each territory that I will visit, on all exhibitor problems."

Among the problems in which Mr. Kuykendall is most particularly interested are organization plans and activities, trade practice complaints and proposals, defense of theatres against adverse legislation and discriminatory tax burdens, the actual effect of radio broadcasting by picture stars on the box office, plans to improve business and theatre management, cut rate competition and business conditions, public relations in the community of the local theatres, and plans and features for the next MPTOA convention.

Warns of Dollar Publicity

One of the chief reasons for the impending legislation, according to the bulletin, is the increase of "dollar sign" publicity.

"Heavy taxes loom over our head," Mr. Kuykendall continued. "The idea that we are rolling in money and ripe for a killing in taxes is being built up every day by press reports of new records being set at the box offices, new highs in the salaries of stars and executives, million dollar pictures becoming commonplace and other startling 'dollar sign' publicity.

The bulletin is directed principally to operators of small, independent circuits, which "frequently work against each other or pass the buck back and forth."

Program Stalemate

Mr. Kuykendall called attention to the aims and purposes of the MPTOA and reported the organization's 10-point trade practice program is not being advanced for two reasons: "First, our pleas for reconsideration of the original proposals in those instances where they were rejected, in whole or in part, or conditions imposed over the objections of exhibitors have met with no response, and, second, the distributors fail or refuse to take the initiative in organizing, establishing and financing the proposed local joint boards of conciliation, which a majority of the distributors approved in principle in their replies, to make effective seven of the ten proposals."

Mr. Kuykendall's itinerary follows: October 8th, New Orleans; October 11th to 17th, Los Angeles; October 18th and 19th, San Francisco; October 20 and 21st, Portland; October 21st to 25th, Seattle; October 26th and 27th, Salt Lake City; October 28th to 31st, Denver; November 1st and 2nd, Omaha; November 3rd and 4th, Kansas City; November 5th to 8th, Oklahoma City, and November 9th and 10th, Dallas.

OPERATOR UNIONS SIGN IN TWO KEY CENTERS

Los Angeles Labor Board Weighs Testimony in Writers Guild Move for Control

With the settlement of a strike which closed nearly all theatres in British Columbia for one day last week and the approval of contracts between theatres and unions in Chicago and Kansas City, in Wisconsin and New Jersey, projectionist unions assumed an important place in the labor news of the week.

The Regional Labor Board in Los Angeles continued to weigh exhibits and testimony designed to show the connection between the film industry and interstate commerce as the hearing on the Screen Writers Guild petition for designation as collective bargaining agent went into its third week.

From the American Federation of Labor convention in Denver came word that that labor organization will extend its organization activities to office workers in order to resist advances made by the Committee for Industrial Organization.

An "interchangeable card" agreement was reached by Actors Equity, the Screen Actors Guild, the American Guild of Radio Artists and the American Guild of Musical Artists under the aegis of the Associated Artists and Artistes of America.

Famous Players Canadian theatres in Vancouver, B. C., reopened last Thursday after a settlement of the projectionists' strike, which had closed the houses for one day, was announced by J. J. Fitzgibbons, circuit executive. Negotiations between the independent theatres and the union with E. A. Jamieson, president of the Trades and Labor Council, acting as mediator, were successfully concluded on Friday.

Under the terms of the settlement projectionists will receive a five per cent increase in wages, retroactive to September 1st, and a second five per cent advance next year. The agreement is for a two year term and covers all Famous Players houses in British Columbia. Members of the union expressed satisfaction with the settlement which they said was a continuation of the previous contract plus the wage revision. They had asked for a ten per cent increase.

The union called out its members in 31 houses in Vancouver when negotiations reached a deadlock earlier in the week.

New Contracts in Four Cities

At the end of five years in which it has had no contracts with subsequent run theatres in Kansas City and four years without a written agreement with first run houses, Operators Local 170 of the IATSE has closed deals with both groups.

Following several months of negotiation with theatre operators by Claude Cessna, business manager of the union, two year contracts have been signed. In general these call for five per cent increases this year and next for first runs and a five per cent increase for suburban houses for next year.

Completion of the deals marked the end of a troubled period in the theatre labor field. At one time a total of 23 houses were using operators who were not IATSE members.

Members of the Chicago local at a general meeting last week ratified the wage contract which gives them a five per cent increase retroactive to October 1st.

Locals in Elizabeth, N. J., and Sheboygan, Wis., reached agreements with the Warner Brothers theatres in those communities. In Elizabeth wage increases of $5 weekly for 16 projectionists in the Ritz, Regent and Liberty theatres and the Union, Union Township, were provided. A second increase of $3 weekly will take effect October 1, 1938. The former operators' scale was $72 to $78 for a 35-hour week, depending on theatre classification.

The Sheboygan contract is for three years and provides annual increases of ten per cent. Twelve projectionists are affected.

More than 200 exhibits which the attorneys for the board claimed showed the effects of the motion picture industry on interstate commerce as well as the employe-employer relationship of writers to producers were offered in evidence at the Screen Writers' Guild hearing before the Regional Labor Board in Hollywood. The exhibits included excerpts from MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Dr. David J. Saposs of the Division of Economic Research of the National Labor Relations Board, presented an analysis purporting to show that screen writers could disrupt the flow of commerce because of their important part in production. Dr. Saposs said opponents of collective bargaining for writers insisted that writers are creative artists whose work cannot be standardized. Acceptance of this principle, he argued, would bar collective bargaining to professional people generally.

After respondents' counsel objected strenuously to the admission into evidence of the exhibits compiled by Dr. Saposs, William Ringer, trial examiner, deferred a ruling on their admissability as evidence.

Counsel for Paramount then moved for dismissal of the entire proceedings, arguing that there is involved only a jurisdictional dispute between the Screen Writers' Guild and Screen Playwrights, Inc., which holds a bargaining agreement with producers. The motion was taken under advisement.

Earlier in the week Leonard S. Janofsky, attorney for the Writers' Guild, precipitated argument by getting into the record the fact that his writer witnesses had demanded subpoenas "to protect them in their jobs because of what they will testify here."

Mr. Janofsky presented an application to subpoena Brian Marlow, Sheridan Gibney and Sherman Lowe, all writers at present working in studios, indicating a fear of possible reprisals but counsel for the respondent companies and for Screen Playwrights, Inc., bitterly fought the intimations. The studio attorneys stipulated that all the time needed from their duties would be afforded the Guild witnesses but Mr. Janofsky insisted upon the issuance of subpoenas.

Mr. Marlowe, writer for Paramount, on the stand at the close of Wednesday's session defined a screen writer as anyone employed in a writing capacity by a studio, or anyone not so employed but writing for the screen independently.

Directors File Petition

Frustrated in its attempt to bargain collectively with the producers as representatives for directors, assistant directors and unit managers, the Screen Directors' Guild on Monday filed a petition for certification as the bargaining agency for those employees before the Labor Board.

Attached to the petition was a lengthy memorandum asking that the board delay its decision on the Screen Writers' Guild hearing, now in progress, until the Directors' Guild could present its case. It was argued that the jurisdictional question being adjudicated in the Writers' Guild case and other issues at stake are of vital importance to both organizations.

To Unionize Office Help

William Green, president of the AFL, summoned leaders of the group's office unions to Denver this week to discuss plans for the formation of a national council and, eventually, an international union. Up to the present the AFL has sponsored only local organizations of office workers.

Members of the United Office and Professional Workers of America, a CIO affiliate, have been petitioning employees of all film companies for the last few months to join.

Interchangeable Cards Arranged

Under an arrangement concluded last week by the Associated Artists and Artistes of America members of the Screen Actors' Guild and Actors' Equity may become members of the American Guild of Radio Artists or the American Guild of Musical Artists, or vice versa, by paying half dues to the second group.

Contrary to first reports concerning the agreement, the arrangement does not affect the original agreement between the Screen Actors and Equity, it was said. Under this agreement an amount equivalent to Equity dues of all Equity members who work for the screen is deducted from their Screen Guild dues and forwarded to Equity.

Makeup Men Get Increase

The makeupmen's local of the IATSE, represented by William Bioff and Vernon Murdock, last week signed a contract with Hollywood producers calling for a 30 per cent increase in salaries, time and a half for overtime and double time for Sundays and holidays.

Fleischer Strike Ended

The strike of 75 artists and cartoonists of the Fleischer Studios, New York, was settled Tuesday by representatives of the company and of the Commercial Artists and Designers Union. The agreement provides for wage increases, details of which were not made known, a 40 hour week, and vacations and sick leave with pay.

WRITER RECALLS EARLY CONTINUITY

Frank Woods, who preceded his testimony by the statement that he had been told he was the first person to write continuity for motion picture films, was the first witness called by Leonard Janofsky, counsel for the Screen Writers Guild, when he opened his case at the Regional Labor Board hearing. Mr. Woods said that while he was editor of the Dramatic Mirror he submitted continuity to the old Biograph Company in New York in 1909. He recited his various work in the then infant industry and told of his going to California.

William J. Walsh, special attorney for the board, asked him why the film companies moved to California.

"I object," said Walter Tuller, of the law firm of O'Melveny, Tuller and Myers, representing Paramount.

"Overruled," said the chairman. "The witness may answer."

Mr. Woods quietly said, "The companies moved to California because of the sunshine."

IN THE CUTTING ROOM

Bringing Up Baby

(RKO-Radio)

Comedy

Very definitely, in this forthcoming production, Katharine Hepburn is being committed to the cause of comedy. The entertainment intent of the story which will mark her debut into the ranks of comediennes is exciting farce. It should have the same showmanship characteristics which have marked the recent series of comedies beginning with "Double Wedding," with Columbia's "The Awful Truth" the most recent example.

Contrary to title significance, the story is not a domestic comedy. The baby in the case happens to be a leopard.

Not many of the central figures in the production have been associated with comedy. Dudley Nichols, who adapted Hagar Wilde's Collier magazine story, had a taste of it in a couple of Will Rogers films. Outside of "Twentieth Century," Howard Hawks has concentrated in directing serious material. Producer Cliff Reid's best successes have been melodramas.

Checking the supporting cast, however, gives an inkling of the comedy character. Cary Grant turned comedian in "Topper." Charles Ruggles and May Robson have long been identified with comedy. It might be said that "Asta," the dog, stopped the show in "The Thin Man." They with Barry Fitzgerald, an Abbey player, George Irving and Leona Roberts are the principals appearing with Miss Hepburn.

Release date: Not definite, but late December.

The Last Gangster

(MGM)

A Public Enemy's Fate

It may truthfully be said that Edward G. Robinson was the first screen "gangster." His "Little Caesar" started a series of pictures that, probably more than any other medium, aroused public indignation which bore fruit when the last of the gangsters of the 1930's were either behind the bars or in their graves. Yet "The Last Gangster" is not being made as a preachment. While it does conclude with the note that "Crime Does Not Pay," it essentially is a vivid and vigorous character story.

Robinson plays the title role. His abilities are wellknown. As his wife, Rose Stradner, blond Viennese beauty, will make her screen debut. The son is played by Douglas Scott, remembered for "Lloyds of London." Head of the gangsters who managed to escape extermination, Henry Daniell, Allan Baxter, Donald Barry and Moroni Olsen, is Lionel Stander, who made a memorable impression as the press agent in "A Star Is Born." James Stewart, last in "Seventh Heaven," is the man who married Miss Stradner after her divorce. Other principals are Sidney Blackmer and Louise Beavers.

Writing and preparation credits should be of comparatively little significance in a story of this kind, but Edward Ludwig, who made "Manhattan Madness," "Fatal Lady" and "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head," is the director.

One of the film's highlights should be the insight which it gives into the inner secretive operation of Alcatraz Island, in which the Government cages its most dangerous criminals. While a lot of it undoubtedly is imaginative, quite a bit is authentic, obtained by MGM in ways known only to itself.

Release date: November 12, 1937.

True Confession

(Paramount)

Comedy

After seeing "Nothing Sacred" a great number of persons probably will be inclined to regard Carole Lombard as one of the most enjoyable of present day screen comediennes. In character the story in which she appears along with Fred MacMurray, with whom she last was teamed in "Swing High, Swing Low," is comedy. Most of it is hilarious. It may be that at times it will be pleasing ribald.

It concerns a young woman who couldn't tell the exact truth if it killed her.

At this stage of production, it appears that "True Confession' will be of sufficient entertainment and showmanship quality to take a high place in the list of quality comedies comprising the present cycle.

An Albert Lewin production, the film is based on a play by Louis Verneuil and Georges Berr. Claude Binyon, who did the screenplays for "I Met Him in Paris," "The Bride Comes Home" and "The Gilded Lily," effected the transition of this story to the screen. Wesley Ruggles, maker of "I Met Him in Paris," "Bride Comes Home" and Gilded Lily," is directing.

The Lombard-MacMurray team, with Barrymore, is being supported by Porter Hall, Edgar Kennedy, Richard Carle, John T. Murray, Fritz Feld, Una Merkel and Tommy Dugan.

Release date: December 25, 1937.

Tovarich

(Warner)

Sophisticated Comedy

It may be that this pictorial conception of a stage play, based on a social, political and financial problem, will roll across the screen with more of a pinkish tinge than did its parent. Still, in the name of amusement, Messrs. Wanger, Towne, Baker, Garnett and Howard got away with quite a bit in the concluding reels of "Stand In." However, lest it be the temptation of someone to suspect propaganda of either a fuller or more enjoyable life, it may be said that this is a comedy of experiences.

The story being used is that of two royal Russian emigres in Paris, shortly after the Bolshevists dispossesed the Czar. They have millions at their command. Dishonestly they might have found considerable enjoyment in the use thereof. Honestly, they prefer not to do so, as they become domestics in a household.

As there will be no stinting in production values of this feature. The acting responsibilities apparently are in capable hands, as Claudette Colbert and Charles Boyer are starred. We happened to sit behind Greta Garbo one night a short while ago when "Conquest" was being previewed unexpectedly in Pomona and saw and heard her applaud Boyer as "Napoleon." Anatole Litvak, who made "L'Equipage," which RKO-Radio dubbed and added to as "The Woman I Love," is the director.

Release date: December 25, 1937.

Love and Hisses

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy

The favor which "Wake Up And Live" enjoyed as entertainment and the commercial exploitation which exhibitors found in it undoubtedly is the best recommendation of "Love and Hisses."

With themselves and Simone Simon featured quite a few welknown names included and a host of specialty performers to be introduced, "Love and Hisses" is to be a continuation of the Walter Winchell-Ben Bernie feud.

As was "Wake Up and Live," "Love and Hisses" is being directed by Sidney Lanfield. He also made "One in a Million," "Sing, Baby, Sing" and "Thin Ice." The original story was prepared by Arthur Arthur. He and Curtis Kenyon, Jr., are credited with the adaptation.

Music and lyrics are by Mack Gordon and Harry Revel. Two of the topical numbers will be sung by Miss Simon. In addition she will be heard in a rendition of "The Bell Song" from the opera "Lakme." By accident, it seems, studio executives discovered that Miss Simon possesses a voice of wide range and quality.

Winchell, Bernie and Miss Simon are known qualities. To a certain extent so is Joan Davis, the eccentric comedienne seen earlier in "Wake Up and Live," "Thin Ice" and "Life Begins at College." Stage actor Dick Baldwin, who shares the romance, is practically new to films, having been seen previously on the screen only in "Life Begins at College." Bert Lahr has long been known on the stage. Wally Vernon, Georges Renavent and Chick Chandler are comedy film fixtures. Specialties will present Raymond Scott and his quintet, the Peters Sisters, 750 pounds of sepia singing and dancing, The Cabin Kids and Chilton and Thomas.

Release date: December 31, 1937.

The Duke Comes Back

(Republic)

A Prizefight Story

No royal duke, fighting his way back to a relinquished throne, is the hero of this forthcoming production. Rather it's the story of fighting Duke Foster, retired heavyweight boxing champion of the world, who, to save his father-in-law's reputation and honor, deceives his wife, braves the murderous intentions of gangsters and blackmailers to go back into the ring, win the championship again and the fortune that goes with it.

Yet, and this should be important from a showmanship standpoint, the story is not entirely a prizefight yarn.

Based on a published novel by the same title, which also ran serially in a popular magazine, written by Lucian Cary, the screen play is by Adele Buffington, who did the currently popular "The Sheik Steps Out," and Edmund Seward. Direction is in the hands of Irving Pichel.

The role of the fighter is assumed by Allan Lane, with Heather Angel as his wife and Genevieve Tobin as a sympathetic sister in law. Other principals are John Russell, Joseph Crehan, Frederick Burton, Ben Welden, Selmer Jackson, Clyde Dilson and Art Lasky.

Release date: November 12, 1937.

NBC PLANS EXPERIMENTS IN OUTDOOR TELEVISION

Mobile Unit Designed to Pick Up Sports Events for Relaying to Transmitter Being Built

With elaborate apparatus now under construction the National Broadcasting Company this month will begin extensive experiments with pickups of sports and other outdoor events for television transmission over its station in the Empire State Building, New York. The portable apparatus, housed in two vans, will be delivered to the company October 18th.

The immediate purpose of the portable unit experiments is to train men in handling special events to be ready when television becomes a daily public service, it was explained by O. B. Hanson, chief NBC engineer. "When that will be," he said, "even in the limited area of New York City, it would be foolhardy to guess. . . . It will be a long time before we can deliver pictures of outdoor events that will meet the home entertainment requirements."

In the beginning the mobile station will be used primarily to study the sensitivity of instruments to average daylight conditions and to experiment with different types of lenses, filters and shades, the spectral characteristics of sunlight, effects of reflected light on image brilliance and the action of micro-waves for relaying purposes.

In one of the two motor vans housing the portable station apparatus for picture and sound pickup will be installed and a video transmitter operating on a frequency of 177,000 kilocycles will be housed in the other. In the metropolitan area, where skyscrapers make high frequency work difficult, the unit's workable range is expected to be about 25 miles. Ten engineers will be required to operate the two units.

The van carrying the picture apparatus and associated sound equipment will be the mobile equivalent of a television studio control room. It also will include two cameras and other equipment. Directly in front of the operating engineers in the darkened mobile control rooms will be two monitoring kinescope screens. On one the engineers will watch the scene being transmitted and on the other the scene as picked up by the camera-iconoscope, or electric eye, preparatory to transmission. Sound will be picked up by a variety of microphones. A telephone cue circuit will keep the ten engineers in contact with one another.

The two iconoscope cameras, to be mounted on tripods, will be technically equivalent to studio cameras, although much lighter in weight. From these the images will be transmitted through several hundred feet of multiple core cable, affording considerable radius of operation. The micro-wave television transmitter van will be linked to the control room van by 500 feet of coaxial cable.

The reception will be tested by special observers and engineers scattered throughout the metropolitan area.

Japanese Buy English Patents

A new company to manufacture and sell television sets under patents owned by Electrical Music Industries, Ltd., of England, is to be established by the Japan Industry Company, a holding corporation, through its subsidiaries, the Victor Talking Machine Company of Japan and the Columbia Phonograph Company. The organization, to be called Nissan Television Kaisha, also will produce electric phonographs and other musical machines. Shareholders of Victor have been asked to double the company's Y5,000,000 capital and this summer Columbia shareholders increased that company's capitalization from Y2,800,00 to Y11,200,000. These increases will be invested in the new television project.

Goldsmith Outlines Problem

The technical difficulties and problems in the path of commercial television are not the least of its developers' worries, it was explained by Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith in a talk before the Press Association of New Jersey.

"Television must develop its own program technique," the engineer said. "If we may summarize the ultimate characteristics of such programs in a word, it would be 'spontaneity.' Television must capture images of the world in action.

"Television networks of stations comparable to those existing in sound broadcasting must await the development of either the coaxial cable or automatic radio relay stations. Meanwhile, if public service should be inaugurated, the individual station has recourse to three classifications of program material: local talent, motion picture film, and road shows of live talent travelling from studio to studio."

1,000 Sets in England

Since regular television programs were inaugurated by the British Broadcasting Company last year only 1,000 sets have been sold to the public and it is probable that two years will elapse before a second transmitter is erected in England, David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America, said in an interview in New York last week on his return from London.

The major problem of television in both countries, he said, is to provide a program for the home that will meet public requirements and maintain public interest. The establishment of such program service, erection of sufficient stations and provision of the necessary interconnecting facilities call for vast expenditures before any returns can be expected, he added.

William S. Paley, president of Columbia Broadcasting System, who also has just returned from a European trip, echoed Mr. Sarnoff's estimate of the progress of British television. Speaking for his own company, he said: "CBS has been broadcasting television intermittently for some time. We will soon make an announcement, probably in two or three weeks, of more permanent plans. Eventually we plan regular television periods, but the date when we will begin is not set."

'TRAILERS' TO HERALD TELEVISION SHOWS

The British Broadcasting Company, in its Alexandra Palace television transmissions, has begun the use of a "trailer" in each Friday's program, showing the highlights of the next week's transmissions. In some cases players appear in person, in others a film is used.

The television station also recently began a series showing motion pictures in production, the first program being the televising of the final sequences of "Sailing Along," the current Jessie Matthews musical being filmed at Pinewood.

THEATRE OBSERVES 16TH ANNIVERSARY

During 16 years of operation, Loew's State Theatre, New York City, has sold more than 75,000,000 admission tickets, it was announced last week in conjunction with the house's anniversary celebration.

The house is the only remaining vaudeville theatre in New York and throughout its 16 years of existence the policy of a combination of vaudeville and motion pictures has been followed.

End of Business Surveys in Sight

Curtailment of federal relief funds and failure of Congress to make a specific approximation may make impossible the taking of another census of American business, including the motion picture, it was learned at the Department of Commerce last week.

A feature of the business surveys so far made was a study of the amusement industries which involved the compilation of figures showing the number of motion picture and legitimate theatres in each state and in the largest cities, the average number of employees, annual payrolls and actual box office receipts.

Three such censuses have been made since the beginning of the depression, the first covering 1929, the last of the so-called "prosperity" years; the second covering 1933, and showing how business had suffered from the depression, and the third covering 1935, showing the extent of recovery.

Relief Funds Used

Census Bureau officials had planned to make another survey to cover 1937 business and, in fact, encouraged by the approval with which the motion picture and other industries reputedly had received the data compiled in the previous canvasses, had hoped to make the census of business a permanent feature of the bureau's work.

The three censuses so far made were financed by grants from relief funds, but hopes for another such allocation are slim and unless special funds are provided the canvass will be impossible.

Greece Imports 338 Films; 241 From U. S.

A total of 338 films was shown in Greece in the 1936-37 season, according to a report received by the U. S. Department of Commerce from K. L. Rankins, commercial attache in Athens.

The United States supplied 241 films of the total, or 71 per cent. Origin of the balance follows: Germany 60, France 25, Czechoslovakia 5, England 3 and others 4.

"100 Men" Tops Box-Office Grosses in Key City Spots

Ranking first or close to that spot, in many comparative estimates, "100 Men and a Girl" appeared to be the leading contender for box-office honors in the major theatres of the key cities during the past week. "Souls at Sea," "Thin Ice," "Dead End" and "Double or Nothing" did a fair share of business and "Lost Horizon," virtually concluding its key city runs, also was in the running.

"100 Men and a Girl" was top in Cleveland, taking $16,500 at Warners' Hippdrome and going to the Allen for a second week. "Dead End" and "Thin Ice" went over average in their spots.

"Walter Wanger's Vogues of 1938" took top honors in Detroit, capturing $26,500 at the Michigan, over par by $6,500, while "100 Men and a Girl" was close behind, running $5,600 over average with a $25,600 take at the

AUSTRALIANS ACT TO RESTRICT BUILDING

Queensland Association Holds Conference; One Seat to Five Persons in One City

by CLIFF HOLT
in Sydney

Exhibitor associations throughout Australia soon will launch a Commonwealth-wide movement to obtain laws governing the restriction of theatre building.

The Queensland Association summoned a conference of representative members from associations in New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Western Australia and Tasmania. The meeting was at Townsville, Queensland.

Meanwhile the Film Board of Trade has submitted a restriction plan to the Motion Picture Distributors Association, which has adopted the proposals with certain amendments. The actual suggestions have not yet been made public, but the chief clause would empower the Board of Trade to recommend the acceptance or rejection of an application for license to the Government's licensing officer. The Chief Secretary's Department in New South Wales already has informed members that it will be glad to consider the Board's proposal so far as licensing is concerned.

The Queensland Association is particularly aggravated over the issue of a license for a new theatre at Milton, Queensland. It is pointed out that the addition of 1,000 seats in Milton will reduce the low proportion of one seat for 5.4 of the population to a world record low of 4.9. Spokesmen cite figures to show that in other countries where legislation has been effected to curb the irresponsible expansion of theatre construction the proportions are not nearly so low as in most Australian situations. Belgium, where rejection laws are now being sought, is the lowest at 15.6.

The Board of Trade has decided to press the NSW Government for drastic amendments to the Quota Act, which, by its impracticability and by reason of the wide newspaper publicity it is receiving, is causing the Government considerable embarrassment.

The trade is anxious to have the anomalous feature of the Act ironed out quickly, feeling that the obligations which the present quota laws impose on exhibitors and distributors will hamper new season selling activities.

As framed at present, the Act requires distributors to handle more than 25 Australian-produced pictures as from December 30, but since there aren't more than five Australian features available it is clear that neither the distributors nor exhibitors can fulfill their Quota obligations this year. The Government has the power to impose penalties up to £100 ($500) for non-compliance with the Act, but prosecutions are not likely to be even considered, the Government's first concern being to frame a law that is workable.

Exhibitors have been officially informed by the MPDA that rental contracts for the new season will embody a special clause prohibiting free gifts completely and irrevocably. This clause will appear in the contract in addition to another stipulating a one shilling minimum admission.

All Children Barred

An outbreak of infantile paralysis which started in Melbourne and suburbs eight weeks ago shows no signs of abating, and in common with most other industries, film business is deplorably bad. The number of cases now quickly approaches the 300 mark, with 18 deaths, and medical opinion inclines to the belief that the scourge will continue until after Christmas and that by that time 600 cases will have been noted.

With the closure of the majority of schools, the attendance of children under 16 at picture theatres was prohibited at the recommendation of the Health Board. A later development is the Health Board's decision to reopen the schools to permit the attendance of children from 12 years and over, but on the first day the schools reopened on this basis very few parents permitted their children to return to their studies and the roll-up was very meagre. Since the authorities are now permitting children over 12 to mingle with others in class, the Victorian Exhibitors Association has lodged a request that the under-16 ban on cinemas be lifted, but at the time of writing no reply to the application has been received.

The theatre business unquestionably has been hit harder by the outbreak than any other. The closure of schools and banning of youngsters from attending the theatres has meant not only the cancellation of all suburban matinees, but it has also had the effect of keeping mothers and guardians at home with the children. Accordingly, city matinees have been deserted and night attendances have not been a great deal better.

To meet the emergency most theatres have been obliged to effect strict economies, and advertising budgets have been cut by as much as 40 per cent.

Private Life Not a Factor

The extensive publicity which the George Brent-Jocelyn Howarth annulment suit has been receiving in the Australian newspapers found its echo in the Legislative Assembly of N.S.W. when a member asked the Chief Secretary whether "in view of the universal disgust at the treatment of a beautiful girl named Howarth in America by a man named Brent, he would take steps to prevent the exhibition in this State of any pictures in which this man takes part."

Mr. Chaffey replied that the request would be considered.

At the height of the divorce proceedings, Brent's most recent Australian-released feature, "God's Country and the Woman," was presented at the Regent, Melbourne. It failed to click at the box-office, but the same picture had proved a disappointment in its first-run seasons in other States before the proceedings commenced, and in any case no picture can be said to have proved really successful in Melbourne since the outbreak of paralysis two months ago.

Audience reaction to Brent at the Regent proved conclusively that patrons were interested in Brent's screen character and not his private life. Since the picture has been running there have been no untoward "incidents," and, in fact, everybody approached generously praised his performance.

BOOK REVIEW

HOW TO DO PUBLICITY. By Raymond C. Mayer. Harper & Bros. 263 pages. Price $2.50.

Publication of a new "how" book invariably recalls to this reviewer the story of the young and inexperienced female who applied for a household position. Asked if she were a wet nurse, the eager applicant replied she was not—but was quite willing to learn. Undoubtedly there are many novices "willing to learn" the science of public relations, and for these as well as the veteran, according to the author, "How To Do Publicity" is offered. Originally published several years ago, the volume has been revised to "describe post-depression techniques" which are detailed among the 23 chapters occupying 263 pages plus an index.

Preparation and placement of material for daily and weekly newspapers, general magazines and trade publications; coverage for conventions and meetings, scientific and professional societies, are some of the subjects analyzed. Types and uses of exhibits, radio and pictorial publicity also are treated. Story leads are suggested; when and how to release material, and to whom, is explained, as is the mechanics of softening negative publicity. The student is instructed not to send out stories on poor paper, not to single space; to leave space on both sides of the page for editorial changes, to leave room at the top for heads.

The book is generally readable though hardly of interest to the veteran writer of publicity. There is a store of information for the beginner that may be of some value in obtaining a foothold in a business the author reports "not yet overcrowded."—A-MIKE VOGEL

PROSPERITY, BOOM, THEN BANG, IS SEEN

Good business for two or three years and eventually "a good boom before we finally start down in the next fundamental decline" were predicted by Ralph B. Wilson, vice-president of Babson's Reports, speaking at the 24th Annual National Busness Conference, held this week in Wellesley, Mass.

The Babson Reports refused to believe the existence of the recent depression, almost during the worst period.

Commenting on labor conditions, Mr. Wilson said that "The most serious cloud on the labor horizon today" was the "intra-union strife" resulting from the rivalry of the Committee for Industrial Organization and the American Federation of Labor.

THEATRE IN TOWN OF 368 DRAWS 761

Ted Stump, who operates the Elted Theatre in Absarokee, Montana, sees nothing unusual in the fact that admissions to a theatre sometimes total half of the population of the city in which the house is located.

Mr. Stump recently played "Mountain Music" for two days. The population of Absarokee, he reported, is 368 and the paid admissions for the two-day run totaled 761.

"This," Mr. Stump commented, "should be the height of something or other."

President Roosevelt's warning of an impending world war, the words of his surprise, bitter arraignment of aggressor nations who have violated treaties and waged undeclared conflicts, still are ringing 'round the world. He used many strong passages in speaking of the results of a possible cataclysmic disaster, not the least ominous of which was the prediction: "There will be no safety by arms, no help from authority, no answer in science;—it will rage till every flower of culture is trampled, and all human things are leveled in a vast chaos."

A pretty statement, that, and, coincidentally, the precise words of a speech in Columbia Pictures' "Lost Horizon," as spoken by the character of the High Lama, played by Sam Jaffe, to indicate the Lamasery's desire for universal brotherhood and understanding.

And directly under the foregoing appeared another—but an on-the-level "Personal":

Loew's Capitol theatre management on New York's Broadway probably will not admit it, but the fact remains that Constance Bennett's silk panties were stolen from her, right in the lobby, some several weeks back. A surrealist poster display conveying the story of Thorne Smith's funny "Topper," in which Miss Bennett was a cast member, had been under a spotlight in the lobby for the week the picture played the Capitol. The display was made up of a door-knob and a keyhole, a shower-bath spray, a hotel register, and a pair of silk undies which Miss Bennett had personally autographed and contributed. Someone stole the panties. The management promptly replaced them with an unauthenticated pair, and covered them over with glass to prevent repetition.

GAS-PROOF CELLARS IN BRITISH THEATRE

Not that there is any need of them expected in the future, but just in case, gas-proof cellars provide a feature of construction of the new Odeon Alhambra theatre in London's Leicester Square, key house in the West End of the Oscar Deutsch circuit in England. A 120-foot tower is a feature of the elevation.

The theatre, structurally nearly complete, was visited in state recently by the Lord Mayor of London, Sir George Broadbridge, K.C.V.O. The Lord Mayor unveiled a tablet in the foyer commemorating the famous Alhambra variety house which occupied the site for so many years.

The Odeon will seat 2,300. It occupies a site of 27,000 square feet and has a 100-foot frontage to Leicester Square.

U.S. ADMISSION TAX RELIEF IS DOUBTED

Additional Income Assessments Indicated Next Year, with Exemption Level Staying at 40c

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

Motion picture theatre owners stand little chance, if any, of a reduction in the admission tax exemption from the present 40 cents. Nor is that the only ominous tax news emanating this week from Washington, for the Capitol is about to turn attention to additional income taxes, which would hit the motion picture and general business fields alike.

Results of several months of study of the tax situation by the Treasury Department will be laid before President Roosevelt within the next few days, for consideration before the tax subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee returns to Washington next month to undertake revenue revision.

While Treasury officials are closely guarding the report now being written, it is believed that the investigation has developed that only by increasing income taxes all along the line, extending them to wage and salary earners now exempt, and a general restriction of the deductions permitted business concerns can any substantial amount of new revenue be raised.

With its hand forced by conditions over which it apparently has lost control, the Administration was seen in Washington this week as giving at least tacit approval to proposals increasing and extending the income taxes.

Congressional resistance to any reduction of relief to the unemployed or other subsidized groups, such as the farmers and the silver miners, or to any sharp cutting of governmental employment, it is said, will force the Administration to accept these proposals.

Because of the steadily mounting national debt, high Government officials are understood to have impressed upon the President the necessity for making a determined attempt to balance the budget.

Tax Reduction Doubted

Not only will the motion picture industry be subjected to the possibility of increased income taxes, but it will also have to face the chance that in the development of its new tax bill the House committee will give no consideration to a proposed reduction of the admission tax level from its present 40 cents to 25 cents.

Further, it is a foregone conclusion that if the income tax base is lowered so as to bring in persons now exempt, the new taxes will be collected "at the source"—that is, employers will be required to deduct them from the employees' pay as they now do for the purposes of the Social Security Act.

Treasury officials are understood to have taken the position that it would be impossible for the Internal Revenue Bureau to handle the millions of additional returns which would result from an extension of the income taxes.

Collection of taxes by employers, as done under the Social Security Act, has been adopted in England, and so little difficulty has been encountered in dealing with the old-age pension taxes imposed at the beginning of the year that the Treasury sees no reason why the system could not be extended.

May Change Corporation Tax

If Congress provides for increases in income taxes, it is believed that the Treasury, to avoid an unduly adverse effect upon business and industry, would be prepared to accept changes in the corporation taxes, particularly with a view to eliminating the double taxation which now arises out of the fact that corporations pay up to 15 per cent of the amount of distributed dividends in income taxes and the stockholder, in turn, is required to pay taxes upon such moneys as he receives in dividends.

The Treasury also, it is believed, would acquiesce in some alteration of the highly unpopular undistributed profits tax which would ease certain of its effects upon debt-ridden and small corporations, the latter possibly to be given a larger exemption so as to permit the building up of conservative reserves.

While the Treasury has made an intensive study of the entire tax situation, Secretary Morgenthau is expected to content himself with submitting merely a factual report to the House committee when it meets next month, and to make no recommendations until they are specifically requested by the committee.

It will be the policy of the Treasury, according to observers, to leave to Congress the whole problem of deciding upon new taxes, so that any unpopular levies cannot be directly blamed upon the Administration.

Conn to Make 16 for 1937-38

Maurice Conn, president of Ambassador Pictures, Inc., has announced that his company will produce 16 features for 1937-38. Mr. Conn, who had been in New York for several weeks making distribution plans, returned to Los Angeles last Saturday to start the first feature, and will return to New York in a week.

Because of his increased program for the new season, Mr. Conn has established offices at 1270 Sixth avenue, New York, and will continue to make his own headquarters at the Conn Studios, Los Angeles. As before, Mr. Conn will supervise all productions of the company.

Charles Reed Jones has been placed in charge of advertising and publicity in New York. Victor Halperin has been appointed eastern story editor.

Under a new territorial franchise plan, all distributors will operate under the Ambassador name. The pictures will be released simultaneously throughout the country and will be nationally advertised.

Gene Austin, Frankie Darro, Kane Richmond, and Kermit Maynard, stars of last year's Ambassador pictures will appear in next year's productions. Other stars and players added to the Ambassador roster include Donald Novis, Grace Bradley, Wynne Gibson, Lyle Talbot, Candu and Coco, of radio, Cyril McLaglen, Molly Lamont, Robert Warwick, Jack La Rue, Sally O'Neill, Lois Lindsay, Guinn (Big Boy) Williams, and Stepin Fetchit.

The complete program includes: a special musical production, "Sweethearts In Swingtime," starring Donald Novis and Grace Bradley; "Strong Arm Squad," a melodramatic comedy, starring Wynne Gibson and Lyle Talbot; "Port Of Hunted Men" and "Gold Coast Rose," two Jack London star cast specials, four Gene Austin exploitation musicals, "Calling All Marines," "Highway Patrol," "The Navy Goes To Town," and "Missing Squadron;" four thrill-o-dramas, based on Peter B. Kyne stories, starring Frankie Darro and Kane Richmond, "Boss Of Chinatown," "Son Of A Gunman," "Young And Reckless," and "He Had To Fight;" and four Kermit Maynard ace musical Westerns, "Range War," "Rawhide And Dynamite," "Boss Of Rocky Canyon," and "Phantom Horseman."

PUBLIC VOTES 2-TO-1 FOR DUALS AT 31 THEATRES IN ST. LOUIS

Fanchon & Marco Circuit Survey Indicates Musical Comedies Are Best Liked; Stage Shows Are Wanted

Double feature programs are the choice, by more than two to one, of St. Louis motion picture fans, according to the final results of a poll conducted in four first run theatres and 27 neighborhood houses by the Fanchon & Marco circuit in conjunction with the St. Louis Star Times.

Patrons of the first run houses indicated their preference with a vote of less than two to one for dual bills but the neighborhood theatregoers left no possible doubt as to their selection. They cast four times the number of votes for double bills as they did for programs consisting of one feature and short subjects.

In the ten days in which the poll was conducted, a total of 310,000 questionnaires were distributed and 57,599 replies were filed. The results showed:

Clark Gable is the favorite actor, Myrna Loy, the leading actress, and Shirley Temple, the Number One child star.

Musical comedies are the best liked in feature length films with comedies ranking second.

In the short subject field, cartoons are the overwhelming choice with musical shorts taking second place.

Stage shows are favored, and the preference in this group is for prominent bands.

The number of questionnaires returned, the Star-Times pointed out, represents approximately five per cent of the entire population of the metropolitan area.

32,751 Favor Doubles

The vote on the double bill question totaled 57,651, of which 32,751 were for two pictures. In breaking the figures down further, it is revealed that the vote in the first run houses was 14,553 against 9,916, and in the neighborhood houses it was 18,198 as against 4,990.

Clark Gable took the leadership among actors by polling 6,096 ballots, or 10.8 per cent of the total. He was followed by Robert Taylor, 4,624, and William Powell, 4,032.

Miss Loy was named the leader of the actresses with an identical percentage to that obtained by Mr. Gable, but in Miss Loy's case she was given 6,209 votes. Runners up in this division were Loretta Young, 4,052, and Claudette Colbert, 2,835.

Shirley Temple's victory in the child star division was far more impressive than in either of the adult groups. She drew 33.9 per cent of the total by being given 19,528 votes as against 12,425 for Jane Withers and 4,839 for Freddie Bartholomew.

The complete list of favorites included more than 300 actors, nearly 300 actresses and more than 100 child players.

Comedies Lead

With two exceptions both first-run and neighborhood audiences selected the same types of feature films in equal ratio. Neighborhood patrons placed comedies ahead of musical comedies and war pictures ahead of detective mysteries. Gangster pictures ranked at the bottom in the opinion of both groups.

First choice of feature films was indicated on 87 per cent of all questionnaires returned and first choice of short subjects was indicated by 84.6 per cent of the total. The total ballots cast for the various types of pictures placed them in this order: musical comedy, comedy, melodrama, historical, love romance, detective mystery, war and gangster. Short subjects ranked in the following order: cartoons, musical, travel, news reels sports, animal life, science, industries.

In compiling the classification of stage shows it was pointed out that vaudeville polled the greatest number of votes but that because this is an all inclusive term, prominent bands were given the top rating, with singers and dancers ranking second and third.

Matrix Costs Increase

Operating costs for Canadian theatres went up another notch when the film exchanges decided that a raise in the price of press book ad notices to exhibitors would be necessary because of the increase in the costs of materials and labor. The charge for ad mats has been increased from 15 cents to 25 cents per column width regardless of depth measurement. A two column mat now costs 50 cents instead of 30 cents while one of three columns will be 75 cents as against the previous charge of 45 cents.

"THE AWFUL SMASH HIT

HOLLYWOOD REPORTER:

"'THE AWFUL TRUTH' comedy riot. Smartest, merriest romantic comedy in many moons and will score smash hit. IRENE DUNNE gives her most alluring portrayal. CARY GRANT is in his best form..."

LOUELLA PARSONS,

Los Angeles Examiner:

"'THE AWFUL TRUTH' is one of the year's best comedies. It is going to put plenty of money in COLUMBIA'S coffers and make CARY GRANT and IRENE DUNNE two of the most sought after players in all filmdom."

LOS ANGELES TIMES:

"A hundred percent winner of light comedy . . . a creation of laughter. A masterpiece of its type. This picture will probably go further than any other during the season in proving a box-office sensation."

TRUTH IS OF SEASON!"

DAILY VARIETY DAILY

"'THE AWFUL TRUTH' is the smash hit of the season ...a laugh orgy for any audience. Certain of tremendous word of mouth. Due for phenomenal coin. IRENE DUNNE retrieves her position as one of the screen's foremost comediennes. The most captivating portrait in her film album. CARY GRANT does a grand job, by far his best and one which elevates him securely to the top flight of box-office names. LEO McCAREY'S fine direction will stand up amongst the foremost directorial achievements of the year and will place him with the contenders for Academy honors. Supreme Court Refuses Hearing On 'Ecstasy' Case

The United States supreme court, on Monday, refused to hear the so-called "Ecstasy" case, brought by Eureka Productions, Inc., to restrain the New York state authorities and censor board from interfering with the exhibition of the picture, in which the federal district court had refused to issue an injunction.

The petitioner contended that the state statute requiring all films to be licensed is invalid as an interference with the right of the Federal Government to regulate commerce with foreign nations and that the New York court's refusal to grant the restraining order was a burden on foreign commerce and infringement upon the exclusive right of the Government to censor foreign films.

Corbar Rehearing Denied

The court also denied an application of T. L. Talley and the Corbar Corporation for rehearing of its suit against Fox Films, arising out of the Fox West Coast receivership. The petitioners had sought to set aside the reorganization on the ground that it was fraudulent, but the courts ruled against them.

The court agreed to hear the infringement case against General Talking Pictures Corporation and ordered it set on the calendar for argument in the near future. The company had appealed from a decision of the second circuit court of appeals in New York holding it guilty of patent infringement in the use in talking motion picture projection of equipment of vacuum tube amplifier purchased from the American Transformer Company, to which were attached licenses notices restricting their use to amateur experimental and broadcast radio reception.

General Talking Pictures, in its petition, challenged the right of a patent owner to restrict the use made of a device manufactured under the patent after the device has passed into the hands of a purchaser, contending that the court below had erred in holding that a patentee may extend his monopoly beyond a sale by a licensee.

DeMille Tax Review Refused

The court rejected a petition of the Bureau of Internal Revenue for review of a decision of the ninth circuit court of appeals in its suit to recover taxes from Cecil B. DeMille.

The bureau had charged that Mr. DeMille formed a holding company, DeMille Productions, by which he was employed from 1924 to 1929 for the purpose of avoiding taxes and related that the company by 1929 had acquired a surplus of $1,606,515, but had paid in dividends only $192,000, and contended that the corporation was availed of for the purpose of avoiding surtaxes. The circuit court ruled that Mr. DeMille was within his rights in forming the company and that there had been no violation of the tax laws.

The bureau's petition related that Mr. DeMille and his wife owned 70 per cent of the stock of the holding company; Ella King Adams, a relative of Mr. DeMille's wife, held 10 per cent. and Mr. DeMille's attorney held the remainder, until after 1927, when Mr. DeMille held 97 per cent.

While in Albany, N. Y., the motion of Foy Productions, asking a review of its film, "Tomorrow's Children," previously denied a license, was referred Monday night to the appellate division by New York Supreme Court Justice Francis A. Bergan, who ruled that his court is without jurisdiction in the matter.

Honor George Weeks At Farewell Luncheon

Several home office, New York and out-of-town exchange personnel of GB on Saturday tendered George Weeks, retiring sales executive, a testimonial luncheon at the Hotel Astor.

Among those who attended the luncheon were: Arthur Lee, American vice-president for the company; Clinton M. White, Arthur Greenblatt, William Barrett, Claude Macgowan, C. E. Schwengeler, Al Selig and Al Margolies, of the home office; Herbert Given, branch manager at Philadelphia; Charles Leach, New Haven; Irving Gumberg, Sol Kravitz, Irving Landes and Rudolph Bach of the New York exchange. Kenneth Hodkinson and Charles Penser, formerly with the company, also attended.

Mr. Weeks left New York Tuesday for a five-week vacation at his former home, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Both Sides Win In Dallas Hearing

Attorneys for distributors and for the Government each won a point in arguments before Judge W. H. Atwell in the United States district court at Dallas at a hearing to fix the form of decree as the final judgment in the anti-trust suit in which the Government won a decision charging circuits and distributors with conspiracy. The action was distinct from the socalled Frels case.

A request by attorneys for the distributors that the names of the Texas Consolidated circuit, Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell be stricken from the decree on the ground that the contracts under fire had not been operative for two years and that the two men had not acted as individuals, was opposed by Government attorneys and was denied. A second motion to eliminate references in the decree to attempts to monopolize trade was granted the film company lawyers.

In amplifying the decree as requested by the Government Judge Atwell said: "This does not affect the right to contract between the distributors and exhibitors. The right of the owner of a copyright to contract for exclusive runs with the exhibitor and ask him to charge 40 cents a seat is not denied so long as they do not conspire or have a common understanding. He may even fix the time of clearance for subsequent runs but must not conspire to do so."

Wilcox to Produce 4 Films for RKO

Herbert Wilcox, who arrived from England on the Aquitania this week, announced he has signed with RKO for the production of four pictures in England. He was accompanied on the trip by Anna Neagle, star of "Victoria the Great."

The producer, after attending the opening of the picture in Ottawa, Toronto and New York, will visit Washington and Hollywood.

Ned E. Depinet, vice-president of RKO Radio, and Ralph Rolan, sales promotional executive accompanied Mr. Wilcox and Miss Neagle to Ottawa, where they attended the premiere Wednesday night.

Court Explains Conspiracy Law In Dallas Case

"There is no law in this land which makes a man trade with another man," William H. Atwell, United States district court judge in Dallas, ruled in dismissing Ruben Frels' conspiracy action against the Jefferson Amusement Company and four large distributors.

In making the statement, Judge Atwell pointed out that Mr. Frels and other witnesses for the plaintiff, had testified he had experienced difficulty in obtaining product for four theatres but, at the same time, the court held, there was an "absence of any sort of a suggestion of concert."

"I have heard no testimony whatever against either of the socalled major picture producers. I have heard some testimony that some of their agents, or, we may say all of their agents, at various times, refused to sell all of their product, or sometime, any of their product, to plaintiff Frels. That was their legal right. They could sell or not, as they saw fit. . . .

"This law (the conspiracy statute) denounces any agreement between two or more sellers, and not any refusal of one seller to sell."

The court elaborated on the refusal of distributors to sell to Mr. Frels by explaining to the jurors that there was testimony to the effect Mr. Frels "brought a suit, or, was concerned in bringing a suit, in which he testified, and, to which he furnished money against some of these socalled major companies. After that, apparently some of them did not see fit to deal with him any more, to any great extent. And they certainly had a right to do that, even as they had a right, without any suit, to do that same thing."

Mr. Atwell also called attention to the fact that after the Jefferson Amusement Company started theatres in the same towns where Mr. Frels' houses were located, admission prices were reduced. The "action itself," the court continued, "is for the benefit of the public, and not monopolistic, nor, injurious to the public."

"Mr. Frels would have no right to a monopoly on Victoria (one of the towns in which Mr. Frels' theatres were located) pictures, any more than any one else would have. But taking the broadest view of it, I cannot see any case, here, gentlemen."

It was the second time the case had gone to trial. The first time, last spring, the jury failed to reach a verdict. The dismissal this time was granted at the conclusion of the plaintiff's case and, therefore, the defendants were not obliged to present any testimony.

Mr. Frels announced he is considering taking an appeal from the court's directed verdict.

Newspaper Wins Award

The Atlantic City News, of which Fred E. Ruslander is editor, was awarded second prize for the best editorial page of a New Jersey tabloid when the New Jersey Institute met at Rutgers University. Mr. Ruslander resigned as press book editor for Warner Brothers June 1st to become editor of the newspaper.

A bow to the Motion Picture Industry

...from the SCRIPPS-HOWARD NEWSPAPERS

SCRIPPS-HOWARD takes pride in the 18-page Hollywood Forecast which appeared in all 22 Scripps-Howard Newspapers, on Wednesday, October 13th.

We are deeply grateful for the whole-hearted coöperation of the great Moving Picture Producers who collaborated in making this Hollywood Forecast so lively, so authoritative, so timely.

This feature supplement is of vital interest to all who are associated with the Motion Picture Industry. But it holds even greater interest to the millions of picture fans who live in the 22 Scripps-Howard cities, from coast-to-coast.

The Scripps-Howard Newspapers wish Hollywood the success it so richly deserves, during the coming year.

IN THE COURTS

Judge Disqualifies Self

Federal Judge John C. Knox declared himself disqualified from hearing the motion made by United Artists to dismiss the $185,000 suit of William S. Hart and Mary Hart in the United States district court in New York this week. Judge Knox said that he had held private conversations about the suit and refused to hear the motion. He referred the case to Federal Judge John W. Clancy for hearing on next Tuesday.

Beekman Details Ordered

The Beekman Film Corporation was ordered to file a bill of particulars by Federal Judge John C. Knox in the United States district court in New York last Saturday in connection with the copyright infringement suit against Warner Brothers. The suit alleges that "This Is America" was viewed by Jack L. Warner, vice-president, and other employees of the defendant and that the picture was thereafter infringed in "The Yanks Are Coming."

Healy, Ginsburg Agree

Ted Healy and Benedict Ginsburg adjusted their differences over the $1,750 claim against the equity receiver of the Roxy Theatre in the United States district court in New York this week by filing a stipulation allowing Mr. Healy $500 and Mr. Ginsburg $1,250. The settlement was approved.

Mondo Assets $48,658

Assets of $48,658 and liabilities of $23,833 were shown in the schedule filed by Nuovo Mondo Motion Pictures, Inc., in the United States district court in New York this week, in the involuntary bankruptcy proceedings against the corporation. The assets consist principally of 200 films and prints, although the originals are owned by an Italian corporation, identified only by the initials UNEP.

Delay Gielow Suit

Trial of the $500,000 plagiarism suit of Irving Gielow against Warner Brothers was postponed by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe in the United States District court this week for 30 days to permit examination before trial of Robert Montgomery and William Elfeldt in California. Mr. Gielow claims infringement of his play, "Give Me This Night," in "Flirtation Walk." Two songs, "I Can't Believe" and "Mr. and Mrs. Is the Name" are also alleged to be infringements. Mr. Montgomery is familiar with the story on which the picture is based and Mr. Elfeldt wrote and arranged the music for the picture. An accounting of the profits and a permanent injunction are asked in addition to the damages.

Anti-Trust Settlement Ratified

Judge Martin T. Manton in United States circuit court in New York this week authorized Milton C. Weisman, receiver for Fox Theatres Corporation, to settle two anti-trust suits against the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Western Electric and Erpi for $22,500. The suits, filed in 1934 for a total amount of $1,577,500, were based on a charge of conspiracy to restrain trade.

Bartholomew Case Hearing Is Set

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is scheduled to go into Superior court in Los Angeles on Friday to follow up its preliminary court victory, in its attempt to prevent Freddie Bartholomew from "jumping" his contract, entered into in September, 1934.

The attack on the constitutionality of the statute was the first since its enactment in 1927. Attorneys for the young actor contended it was unconstitutional because it set apart the contracts of minors who were performing dramatic and picture work, and did not apply to contracts made by minors for other services.

Superior Judge Wilson, who issued the restraining order, held that the statute did not make an arbitrary or discriminatory classification and because of the character of the work performed, it was not in violation of the constitution.

Court Denies Loeb Appeal

The appellate division of the New York supreme court this week denied John L. Loeb, a stockholder of Columbia Pictures Corporation, permission to appeal from an adverse decision dismissing his $201,600 suit against Columbia, Joe Brandt and Harry and Jack Cohn.

Mr. Loeb claimed damages as the result of an alleged destruction by the defendants of the value of certain options he had been granted to purchase stock. The options had been allegedly used jointly by the individual defendants and voting trustees and by Columbia. His complaint was dismissed on the ground that it failed to state a cause of action.

Franconi Gets Post With Castle Films

Leon E. Franconi, pioneer newsreel editor, has been placed in charge of foreign topical film production for Castle Films because as an executive he made himself "easy to see." He will leave for Europe next week to take up his new duties.

Eugene Castle, head of the 16 mm. producing company, related that the ease with which he obtained audiences with Mr. Franconi when the latter headed the Pathe reel and Mr. Castle was a free lance cameraman in San Francisco, about 1914, had never been forgotten. Upon renewing his acquaintance with Mr. Franconi recently, the early impression was sufficient recommendation for him, Mr. Castle said.

Tax Rebatements Seen

An opportunity to secure tax rebatements even if the Boston board of assessors delay so long in announcing tax scales that under the law the time limit has passed for filing necessary credentials is seen for Massachusetts theatremen if a bill introduced by Representative Philip Sherman of Somerville is passed. State commissioner of taxation, Henry Long, is supporting the bill which makes previous tax rates mandatory if assessing boards have not set their rates before May of any year.

OBITUARIES

Bernard A. Moriarity

Bernard A. Moriarity, treasurer and associate producer for Crescent Pictures, died in Hollywood last Wednesday of pneumonia.

Paul Anthony

Paul Anthony, 27, St. Louis motion picture operator, was killed in northeast St. Louis county last week when the automobile he was driving crashed with a Chicago to St. Louis bus.

Richard J. Horgan

Richard J. Horgan, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., died last week.

Joseph Corby

Joseph Thomas Corby, 59, advertising agent of the RKO Shubert and Cox theatres in Cincinnati, and secretary of the Cincinnati Bill Posters' Union, Local No. 11, died late Saturday in Good Samaritan hospital from spinal injuries and a punctured lung sustained when he fell into a coal chute earlier in the day while working at the theatres, which adjoin each other.

W. E. Fite

W. E. Fite, 89, died October 4th at Eldorado, Kan. He was the father of R. F. Fite, operator of the Eris theatre in Eldorado, and W. D. Fite, who has theatres in Kansas City, Kan; Salina, Kan., and Joplin, Mo.

J. J. Goldburg Severs Partnership

Jesse J. Goldburg, in Hollywood, after a trip to England and the Continent where he represented Burroughs-Tarzan Enterprises and the Citizens National Bank of Los Angeles in the sale of the European rights of the company, has severed his partnership arrangement with Ben S. Cohen and George W. Stout.

George Rector Signed

George Rector, noted restaurateur whose New York establishment was the meeting place of celebrities at the turn of the century, has been signed by Emanuel Cohen to appear in Mae West's latest picture for Paramount, "Every Day's a Holiday." Rector's will be re-created in the picture with Mr. Rector in the role of proprietor-host.

Tampa Taxes Increased

City licenses, commonly known as "occupation taxes," in all lines of business were given a sharp increase by the Tampa, Fla., city council last week, when they passed the new emergency ordinance to raise funds to pay the city's share of WPA projects now in work in Tampa. The new scale takes effect October 1st, the new license year.

Goldwyn Signs Jascha Heifetz

Jascha Heifetz, world famous violinist, has signed a motion picture contract with Samuel Goldwyn. Mr. Heifetz will appear in "The Great Musical Festival," to get underway next May.

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 89

Bluebook School Question No. 89 was: (A) Describe the "voice" or "speech" coil; by what is it powered? (B) Explain why a "horn" is used in connection with dynamic speakers. (C) Explain why cones may be used by magnetic speakers, whereas horns are required by the dynamic type.

The following made acceptable answers (some failing of published credit because the answers arrived too late):

C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; J. R. Prater; H. Edwards; W. Limmroth; L. Cimi Koski; C. Oldham; H. B. Smith; L. F. Hayes; J. A. Zachritz; R. and K. Wells; F. L. and L. Savlor; D. M. Stinson; A. W. Baxter; N. F. Rivers; M. D. McGuire; D. Coates; H. Bunker; T. W. Redhouse; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; H. T. Randolph; R. G. Maybe; B. L. Kent; B. and M. Walker; R. H. Carter; M. F. Robinson and L. A. Beachwood; G. T. Jones and A. Leonard; P. S. Baker; R. R. Robbins and W. Winkler; P. and L. Felt; W. B. Myers and L. G. Dillin; J. Morton; C. H. Lowrie; K. L. Brant and G. A. Simmons; D. and W. Porter; F. M. Brown and R. Davis; D. D. Strobey; W. V. Henderson; W. C. Bant; E. Exline; A. H. Bradley; T. and W. Turk; W. R. Davis and B. L. Bunt; H. T. Billings; E. F. and M. Wentworth; H. T. Plum and D. A. Shea; A. C. Greene; G. L. Goss; H. T. Watkins and N. S. Reid; F. W. Brandenburg; H. A. Ames and F. E. Dorp; L. E. Dodson and H. T. Todd; C. Caldwell; R. R. Jacobs and B. B. Hornstein; W. R. Matthews and J. R. Davidson; R. M. Schnider; M. Samuels and O. L. Goldstein; S. L. Maxwell; F. B. Shilshome; P. F. Maxwell and S. U. Lamont; L. F. and B. Brown; R. S. Welch; W. L. Brandon; S. H. Billings and L. Jones; M. Dey and H. Lathrope; D. Dennis; R. E. Bullard and J. K. Robinson; L. M. Roberts.

H. Edwards replies to Section A as follows: "The coil named variously 'Voice coil,' 'speech coil,' 'speech winding,' of dynamic type speakers, is made up of a limited number of windings rigidly attached to the speaker diaphragm and powered by the output of the amplifier. Such coil has no core, but in some types of speaker moves in a recess, gap or slot in the core of the field winding."

J. R. Prater says, "The 'voice' or 'speech' coil of the dynamic speaker consists of only a few turns of wire firmly attached to the center of the speaker diaphragm by means of cement. The coil has no core, but frequently is mounted so that it fits into a slot or recess provided for it in the core of the field coil. The voice coil is powered by the output of the sound amplifier."

(B) G. E. Doe says, "A 'horn' is required with dynamic speakers in order to provide adequate connection between the small speaker diaphragm and the great volume of air to which the vibrations of the diaphragm must be communicated. As clearly as it can be stated is to say that at the face of the diaphragm and for a considerable distance therefrom there is a small column of confined air. This small column receives the full force of the diaphragm vibration, which is communicated at equal force to the still confined but expanding column of air further out, until by the time it has reached the end or 'mouth' of the horn it is, by reason of its then large diameter or area, able to communicate its vibrations to the auditorium air volume.

"Another reason for the horn is found in the fact that without the 'load' provided by the confined column of air, some if not all diaphragms of this type speaker would be quickly injured by what may be termed overvibration."

(C) H. Bunker replies, "In the dynamic speaker there is no mechanical connection possible that would, so to speak, 'expand' the diaphragm vibration sufficiently to communicate sound waves created to the volume of air in a theatre auditorium in any adequate way.

"In the magnetic speaker the center of the diaphragm is directly with the center of a cone, ordinarily of paper, by means of a very small lever or rod that has negligible weight. This lever serves to communicate the diaphragm vibrations to the paper cone, which in theatre work is of considerable diameter. By this means not only is a sufficient load impressed upon the diaphragm itself, but also the cone has enough area to enable communication of the said vibrations adequately to the volume of air contained in even an auditorium of goodly dimensions; also the sound distribution is considerably more even than is possible of accomplishment by the horn."

I regard these answers as so excellent that further discussion is not required. However, as we have still some space, I shall append a note attached to one of the answers, as follows:

"Dear Dad: The answer of Brothers B. and M. Walker to question No. 84 reminds me of an incident. When one of my answers to a question was printed, I was tickled plenty. Showed it to friend employer, who also was very pleased. In his turn he showed it to another projectionist in his employ, asking why he did not send in answers, too. This was his reply as reported to me: 'Oh, you don't get anything for that!'

"Dad, as I see it, here is the pay-off: That man has had the same job in the same theatre for more than 13 years. Yet when even small, ordinary troubles arise he is compelled to, or at least does, call for help. It does seem such men might 'get something' for the small effort required in attendance to a 'school' the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, through yourself, provides free of all cost."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 94

(A) Name seven variable factors that require adjustment of volume control as the show runs.

(B) Set forth your own views as to the box office value of really competent volume control.

(C) Name the various duties that require attention of the projectionist after the show has closed for the day.

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

McGinley.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

Crescent

BATTLE OF GREED: Tom Keene, Gwynne Shipman—Good, lusty Saturday entertainment. The historical angle lifts it out of the beaten track of the ordinary "horse opery." Only criticism is that it is a bit too talky. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 24.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

Grand National

BOOTS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard, Claire Dodd—This is the first Maynard that we have played in several years and his drawing power is not what it was. The worst part of this picture is the recording and editing, as the picture has not continuity. Running time, 55 minutes. Played October 1-2.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

GREAT GUY: James Cagney, Mae Clarke—This is our first Grand National picture. Their policy is fair and we enjoyed this picture very much. It has lots of action, put on in real Cagney style. Business extra good. Thank you, Irving Cohen. We thank you. O. K.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HEADIN' FOR THE RIO GRANDE: Tex Ritter, Eleanor Stewart—This cowboy will never be a Buck Jones in our situation. He sings very well and the farm lads tell me he's quick on the draw. Business good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SHADOW STRIKES, THE: Rod La Roque, Lynn Anders—Not strong enough to stand alone, but will fit in on any double feature program. It is pleasing entertainment. Some of our customers are asking for the second in this "Shadow" series. Played September 22.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

SOMETHING TO SING ABOUT: James Cagney, Evelyn Daw—Here is box office spelled in capital letters. The picture that has everything to satisfy the cash customers. An opening scene that is a wow. A fight that is a fight. And above all it's ninety minutes of genuine entertainment. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 26.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1938: Robert Taylor, Eleanor Powell, Buddy Ebsen, Sophie Tucker, Judy Garland—Top rank anywhere, Buddy Ebsen, George Murphy, who has plenty on the ball, good dancer, passable singing voice and also a lot of personality. Eleanor, of course, good. Taylor? Appearing in too many pictures, and the public seems to be tiring of him; that is the comment that I hear, and also he is too perfect as God's gift to the ladies. All the cast acclaimed but he, and him they did not mention.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—All credit must go to the adapter of "The Good Earth" and the stars, Muni and Rainer. The book was a sordid thing in a lot of the chapters that they left out, and they carried the high spots of it, to the betterment of the picture. It is great in every way, though I hear that it has failed in a lot of the small towns.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Rockefeller Center, New York

SONG OF THE CITY: Dean Jeffries, Margaret Lindsay—Very good feature. Nat Pendleton steals the show. Some excellent shots of the ocean and fishing boats with a spectacular fire at sea. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Sept. 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PERSONAL PROPERTY: Jean Harlow, Robert Taylor—Very good picture with business better than an average, due in no small part to the fact that this was the last picture Miss Harlow completed. She worked in "Saratoga" after this one but did not live to complete it. Should make money in any spot if properly promoted.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

FAMILY AFFAIR, A: Lionel Barrymore, Cecilia Parker—This was doubled with "Charlie Chan at the Olympics," but for some reason this drew below average for a Sunday and Monday playdate. This picture did not seem to help matters.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TOPPER: Constance Bennett, Cary Grant, Roland Young—Great picture in any spot. Big enough for extended runs. You never played a picture like it. Bear down and give it all you've got. Running time, 97 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

Paramount

ARTISTS AND MODELS: Jack Benny, Ida Lupino, Richard Arlen, Gail Patrick—A good musical (?) comedy. The director jumped all around with this production and the audience is left hanging on a limb trying to follow the story. They did not seem to care much, as Blue and Canova made the most of their situations and carried the show. Vitagraph should have made this as a big time vaudeville and it would have been a wow. As a picture, it is just so-so. Running time, 97 minutes. Played October 3-5.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE OR NOTHING: Bing Crosby, Martha Raye—Swell picture. Pleased all. Will stand extended run. Running time, 90 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

EASY LIVING: Edward Arnold, Jean Arthur—This program picture could have been a special. We would have liked it. It has star value and lots of comedy. Well satisfied with business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HILLS OF OLD WYOMING: William Boyd, George Hayes—These Hopalong Cassidy series are well patronized and seem to satisfy. We all thought it very good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HOPALONG RIDES AGAIN: William Boyd, George Hayes—If your patrons like Westerns this one will please O. K. Running time, 65 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY RETURNS: William Boyd, Evelyn Brandt—If your people like westerns, this series should be popular. One thing in their favor, they are longer than the average picture of this type, and it doesn't take so many shorts to fill out your program.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Bob Burns, Martha Raye—I note several exhibitors panned this picture, but it pulled more than average business for me. This is the kind of picture my audience wants. Several came in a third time to see it. I believe in giving the people what they want to see. After all, they pay for the pictures. Give us more with this team. They satisfy. Personally, liked it better than any picture I have shown this year.—L. R. Creason, Palace Theatre, Eufaula, Okla. Small town patronage.

RUSTLERS' VALLEY: William Boyd, George Hayes—Hopalong Cassity will pack them in here every time. This one, in my opinion, didn't have enough action to be as good as some of the other Hopalongs, but had no complaint. My patrons were satisfied, so so am I. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 24-25.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

SHE'S NO LADY: Ann Dvorak, John Trent—If this is a sample of the new product, Heaven help the poor exhibitor, he'll need it. After the first night I think that there were twenty-six paid admissions for an all-time low, which goes to show that you can't kid this smart movie-going public any more.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SOULS AT SEA: Gary Cooper, George Raft—A very fine picture, very interesting and also educational. Starts out with a courtroom scene that put the spectators in a state that makes them follow the following scenes with great interest and attention and keeps them in that state to the very end. I didn't hear of one patron who didn't like this feature and the majority of them thought it one of the best pictures they'd ever seen. As a box office attraction it was a flop. We had two very poor nights and in all didn't do what we should have on this. We followed too close to "Captains Courageous" for our own good on this. Running time, 92 minutes. Played September 26-28.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

Republic

BIG SHOW, THE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—While I did not consider this as good as some other Autry pictures, it did more than average business against a street carnival. Seemed to please almost 100 per cent. This Autry boy is just about tops among the big money getters.—L. R. Creason, Palace Theatre, Eufaula, Okla. Small town patronage.

YODELIN' KID FROM PINE RIDGE: Gene Autry, Betty Bronson, Smiley Burnette—This is the best Gene Autry picture in some time. It gives the customers plenty of pep, action plus a Wild West show, the singing they expect from Gene Autry, also specialties by the Tennessee Ramblers. Smiley Burnette also helps along nicely. Business on this was above average. This was doubled with "50 Roads to Town."—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RKO Radio

BIG SHOT, THE: Guy Kibbee, Cora Witherspoon—It is nonsensical but hilarious fun. Our mid-week customers seemed to enjoy it thoroughly. Cora Witherspoon as Guy Kibbee's wife with social aspirations is a "scream." A picture that is worth a spot on any theatre's program.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

RIDING ON AIR: Joe E. Brown, Florence Rice—Nice little picture full of laughs and good story. Every one pleased. Running time, 68 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

SUPER SLEUTH: Jack Oakie, Ann Sothern—A fine mystery picture with enough comedy in it to make it enjoyable for all. Can be played any day of the week for nice box office. The best turnout by the company this season. That Sothern girl has a very good drawing power. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 29-30.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

SUPER SLEUTH: Jack Oakie, Ann Sothern—Here is a little picture that will please in any spot, all the way. Good story, lots of laughs. Buy it cheap; push it hard. Running time, 65 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

TOAST OF NEW YORK, THE: Edward Arnold, Cary Grant, Frances Farmer, Jack Oakie—Did not click. Away-back-when picture, that has no appeal for the modern generation, and no business to speak of.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

YOU CAN'T BUY LUCK: Vinton Haworth, Helen Mack—Anyone ever hear of the above star? The only luck that the exhibitor will have is to not play it. —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

ANGEL'S HOLIDAY: Jane Withers, Robert Kent—This picture drew well and pleased for a Sunday and Monday showing. It brought some extra business the second day, which usually means pleased patrons telling others. This was doubled with "Midnight Taxi," Fox, which was a good G-man picture. This one did its share to help make a balanced, pleasing program.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BIG BUSINESS: Jed Prouty, Spring Byington—Just a programmer. Barely gets by. Running time, 60 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE OLYMPICS: Warner Oland, Katherine DeMille—This rates as among the best of this series. Where they like "Chan" this will more than please, but for some reason this drew below average for a Sunday and Monday playdate. This was doubled with "A Family Affair," which did not seem to help matters.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FIFTY ROADS TO TOWN: Don Ameche, Ann Sothern—This was better than I expected, from reading reviews on this. It is a good, peppy, romantic comedy drama. If you wanted to examine this closely you would find that where logic interfered with the fun, they let logic go its way, but the customers came to be entertained and this seemed to give full satisfaction to our patrons. This was doubled with Gene Autry in "The Yodelin' Kid from Pine Ridge." This bill proved a good drawing card.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LOVE UNDER FIRE: Loretta Young, Don Ameche, Borrah Minevitch and his Gang—Very mediocre. They seemed hard put to it for a logical scenario; in fact, it is much ado about nothing. The stolen jewels in wartime is thin as dishwater in story.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LOVE UNDER FIRE: Loretta Young, Don Ameche Pleased but will not stand extended runs. Just a programmer. Running time, 75 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT TAXI: Brian Donlevy, Frances Drake —This was doubled with "Angel's Holiday" and was a good G-man picture. This one did its share to help make a balanced, pleasing program.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ONE IN A MILLION: Sonja Henie, Adolphe Menjou, Don Ameche, Ritz Brothers—Splendid box office attraction. The public will pay plenty for pictures like this one.—M. Bailey, Strand Theatre, Dryden, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

THIN ICE: Sonja Henie, Tyrone Power—Great big production. Extends runs in any spots. Makes the box office sing. Running time, 78 minutes—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

WINGS OF THE MORNING: Annabella, Henry Fonda—Good at the B. C. Pleased everybody three days. Exhibitors can't go wrong on this one.—M. Bailey, Strand Theatre, Dryden, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

United Artists

HELL'S ANGELS: Jean Harlow, Ben Lyon—This reissue made us some money the first of the week and would recommend it for any situation. It still carries a box office appeal.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

KNIGHT WITHOUT ARMOR: Marlene Dietrich, Robert Donat—This picture is stark drama with little or no comedy relief. The stars are good, but somehow the picture does not seem suited for small town patronage. Drew fairly well the first day, but was a bust the second day. We have had very little success with London-made films.—C. A. Jordan, Operahouse, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

Universal

AS GOOD AS MARRIED: John Boles, Doris Nolan—Here is an exceptionally fine picture from any angle. It is adult fare and excellent entertainment. Miss Nolan is a newcomer and not known. She gave a good performance, however, and this helps in her later pictures. John Boles is always good. If you can get the cash customers in, they will go away well pleased.—C. A. Jordan, Operahouse, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

FLYING HOSTESS: William Gargan, Judith Barrett—A nice little program picture. Drew an average business and pleased.—C. A. Jordan, Operahouse, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MAGNIFICENT BRUTE, THE: Victor McLaglen, Binnie Barnes—A class B picture that is worth the money. Business just fair, but those who saw the picture were pleased.—C. A. Jordan, Operahouse, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MAN I MARRY, THE: Doris Nolan, Michael Whalen—A better than average program picture starring a coming star, Doris Nolan. Supporting cast pretty light, and the picture has no draw. Business below average.—C. A. Jordan, Operahouse, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

ANOTHER DAWN: Kay Francis, Errol Flynn—One of these English-desert things that can't get by. Running time, 73 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

CALL IT A DAY: Olivia de Havilland, Ian Hunter —A few more like this and theatre owners would have to call it a day. To give Olivia de Haviland the part they gave her in this! I hope she is broad minded enough to forgive Warners for the part. Some highbrows may rave about this sort of thing on the stage, but the way this turned out as a movie is another story. Business below average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CONFESSION: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter, Basil Rathbone—Kay Francis will do well if she will pick her stories. A few like this and she will be through. I have seen worse, but I can't remember when, and that goes for the audience that almost thumbed their noses as they went out.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MELODY FOR TWO: James Melton, Patricia Ellis —Poor, but not quite poor enough to merit the extremely low box office receipts. Marie Wilson walks off with the show. Stars not well enough known to draw. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Oct. 2-3. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Weldon

DAMAGED LIVES: My policy has always been to steer clear of this type. I don't like the type myself, but let this one have Saturday night preview. Pulled the biggest preview crowd in history of my show. Now I will take the razzing for the next six months. Advertising misleading. Picture poor in every way. Nothing to it. Lay off if you want to keep the good will of your patrons. This kind of picture only lowers the standards of the business. Never again.—L. R. Creason, Palace Theatre, Eufaula, Okla. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

LYIN' HUNTER, THE: Krazy Kat Cartoons—These cartoons are the tops. This one is better than ever. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

FOOL PROOF: "Crime Doesn't Pay" Series—Another excellent "Crime Doesn't Pay" short. Pleased. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

OLYMPICS SKI CHAMPIONS: Pete Smith Specialty—This short has been previewed as one of the best. Our reaction is that it is the poorest made by Pete Smith this season. Very slow and dragging. The background of the mountain scenery is very beautiful, but should have been in a Travel Talk. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

Paramount

FOUR SMART DOGS: Grantland Rice Spotlights—A very fascinating short. Play it. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

I NEVER CHANGE MY ALTITUDE: Popeye the Sailor—A good Popeye. Adults will enjoy this as much as the kids. Running time, seven minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT CLUB: Popeye the Sailor—The best Popeye cartoon of the season. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

NIGHT IN MANHATTAN: Headliners—A song and dance short. Had one girl who could really toe tap. It's interesting. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

MOVIETONE NEWS: Always on top. Real fresh and satisfying.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Vitaphone

HOME RUN ON THE KEYS: Babe Ruth—Novelty single reel featuring Babe Ruth that is very good. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

ROMANCE OF ROBERT BURNS: Broadway Brevities—These two reel color pictures are the best of any producer's shorts. Will fit in on any program. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

SOUND DEFECTS: Rufe Davis—Started out great, but they dragged in a little too much of everything, so people were glad when it finally finished. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn.

STREAMLINED GRETA GREEN: Merrie Melodies—This colored cartoon of the taxi is very funny. Running time, 1 reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lenbanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

WHISPERING SHADOW, THE: Bela Lugosi—On the ninth chapter with a strong following. No regrets in playing it. Many have told me they go to see who the Shadow is. Feel it's doing us extra business. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

What Price Institutional Advertising?

Would it be going too far to say that with the development of modern business practice, showmanship and salesmanship are often synonymous? Hardly, for it is more than an open secret that most of the best-selling brands of merchandise today get that way because of the showmanship put behind them. If so, then it's a cinch that, if an ace salesman is regarded as a smart showman, your able theatreman is also to be accounted a keen salesman.

That the manager's ability to do a top job of selling his theatre to the community is to be listed among the most important of boxoffice activities was pointed out in a talk made before the annual Fox Midwest theatres convention, in Kansas City, by Ed Haas, district manager.

"People in one town will tell you the manager is showing great pictures," said Mr. Haas. "People in a similar town will say the manager is showing poor pictures. As a matter of fact, pictures in both towns are identical. The difference is the manager.

"The successful manager is not only a walking salesman for his theatre and his pictures but has a lot of confidence in the product he is selling. He misses no opportunity to tell his friends and patrons that he is personally responsible for bringing to them the finest the world affords in motion pictures.

"The manager and his staff can do a great deal in helping to make a town movie-conscious by a consistent application of this sort of salesmanship."

Confidence in a product and consistent selling to instill that confidence in the buying public are fundamentals of smart merchandising. And since the modern theatre of today plus the generally high quality of pictures give the manager the necessary encouragement to do a steady job of selling his wares, it is in order here to talk some about selling that confidence every day in the week.

Any discussion of the subject must include the place of institutional advertising in the theatre.

Leaders in other lines, to be sure, spend the biggest part of their advertising dollars directly to plug high quality of merchandise. But they also lay emphasis, and with profit, upon reputation, service, equipment and other institutional slants to build customer-confidence.

The theatre caters, in general, to the same classes of patronage. Can it be said, then, that a similar advertising approach is indicated in the vending of motion picture entertainment?

Some years back, it will be recalled, leading circuits went in consistently for institutional advertising, stressing every advantage the theatres offered in addition to the screen and stage shows. Today, the best part of institutional advertising is sporadic and occupies itself with plugging seasonal activities, installation of new equipment, opening of new houses and suchlike.

The quickest reason for the decline of institutional copy is, of course, the cutting down of advertising during the depression. The higher lineage costs today plus the general restriction of budgets can be advanced as a more current cause. And another, favored by the dissenters, is that motion picture entertainment can never be standardized nor "packaged" as other merchandise.

Nevertheless, it may be argued, for the admission charged, the length and quality of the programs, the modern equipment, the atmosphere, the ceaseless attention to customer comfort and pleasure — the motion picture show is one of today's best buys. As such, then, it is pointed out, the theatre has arrived at a high standard of value to be plugged as consistently and profitably as that offered by other well-established merchandising organizations.

Mr. Haas says: "The successful manager is a walking salesman for his theatre." Correct, but how much or how little of that selling should be employed in institutional advertising? It is obvious that replies will depend somewhat upon situations in individual spots and circumstances as apply peculiarly in different communities. However, these do not supply the complete answer.

There are other factors to be considered as well which no doubt will be taken up by interested readers who would like further discussion on the subject.

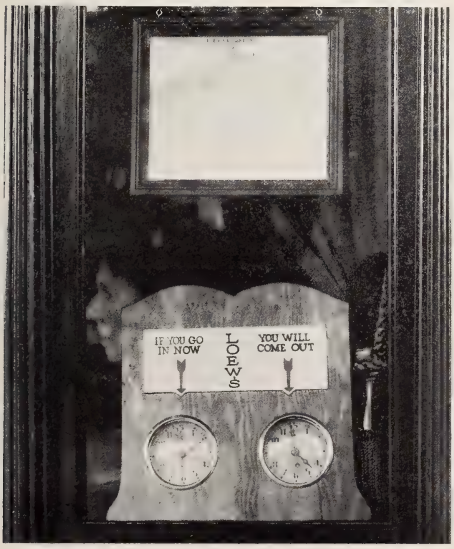
Round Table In Pictures

Outstanding display for the engagement of "Emile Zola" at the Warner Boyd, Philadelphia, was a series of plaques erected in the lobby showing principal roles played by Paul Muni. Exhibit called "The Motion Picture Hall of Fame" included plaques and bust of star as he appears in the picture. Sculpturing is credited to Giuseppe Donato, local artist, and display was reported to be one of the most effective used at the theatre.

Honoring the first Massachusetts theatreman to be awarded a Quigley Plaque, Mayor Mansfield of Boston presents the Silver for August to Joseph A. Di Pesa during ceremonies held in the City Hall. Di Pesa, publicity director for Loew's State and Orpheum Theatres in Boston, won on his entry for "Stella Dallas." Campaign was detailed in the Round Table of September 25th.

Smart display in foyer for advance on "One in a Million" at the King's Theatre (Chalerm Krung), Bangkok, Siam, depicted snow scene built around cutout of Sonja Henie in one of her numbers. Theatre is one of the Von Haverbeck United Cinemas circuit with publicity directed by Round Tabler Erb Samphya.

Realistic front at the Texas, San Antonio, Texas, on "San Quentin" was the work of Assistant Manager Leroy Handley. Prison atmosphere was carried out in great detail including display of cells and convicts. Special uniformed policeman was stationed at mike of a loud speaker in lobby, from where he plugged the highlights of the picture to gather attention of passersby.



From the jungles of Java comes this interesting bally for date on "Jungle Princess" at the Roxy in Magelang. Native boys carrying lettered shields and spears drew float with native girl and stuffed tiger about the city. . . . Above, right, illustrates gag holdup put on by Manager A. P. Fitzpatrick, for date on "Come and Get It" at the Astoria, London. Campaign is detailed elsewhere in this section.

In conjunction with the advance publicity campaign on his New Movie Season drive, Manager Les Pollock sponsored interesting lobby display in keeping with Yuletide as a means of announcing the calibre of the coming attractions at Loew's Rochester, in Rochester. Each picture was made up as a gift package with star-studded tree and other Christmas stuff used for background.

Tobacco shops in Kenosha, Wisc., carried big displays on "Topper" at the Gateway, on tiein arranged by Bill Exton to build up advance interest in the date. . . . Left, is illustrated Sam Gilman's double-clock in box-office of Loew's Regent, Harrisburg, Pa., timepieces synchronized to inform patrons exact time they will spend inside.

QUICK REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Gag Stunts

Street ballys were numerous and varied in Wally Caldwell's "Day at the Races" campaign put over at Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio. First street stopper was three impersonators of the Marx Freres, who with back banners and carrying colored balloons cavorted around the busy street intersections. Another stunt was trick horse gag with men in front and hind legs pulling comic lettered peanut cart on which the impersonators were seated. At given intervals the horse would collapse and the boys jumped from the cart to aid him, distributing feathered ticklers, Groucho mustaches and heralds.

Newspaper contest was planted for which tickets were awarded those supplying gag dialogue for balloons run in connection with scene stills. Three dummies dressed in Marxian fashion were suspended from poles 15 feet high at theatre corner, sugar barrels covered with chicken coop wire, copy on sides reading, "Mad men, keep away," were planted about town. Inside the barrels were tacked photos of the "mad men," who of course were the three stars.

Safety Shorts

Featured at the Warner Palace in Jamestown, N. Y., by Walter League for local prominents during the city's annual safety week drive was showing of two sponsored shorts, "We Drivers" and "Laughs and Flashes," both stressing safe driving practices. Since the latter included shots of the local high school driving class in action, booking gave League an opportunity to obtain civic and school endorsements. Walter put on a special screening and promoted the Mayor for a proclamation which mentioned the shorts and theatre. In addition, students of driving age were urged by the Superintendent of Schools to attend the showing.

Shorts furnished gratis to the theatre were produced by Jam Handy for Chevrolet. Producer also furnished trailers, advertising accessories and had two company exploiteers on the job to assist League on the campaign.

"THIS IS NO BULL"— IT STILL CLICKS

In East Chicago at the Voge Theatre, Manager E. W. Sparr, found the this-is-no-bull gag still good enough for attention on his "Mountain Music" date. Bannered cow that confessed to laughing its clothes off at the picture was aided and abetted by hill-billy duo who gave off mouth-organ music and sichforth.

Fake Holdup

From Paramount's Astoria Theatre, Old Kent Road, London, England, Manager A. P. Fitzpatrick reports highlights of recent activities there, amongst which was a fake holdup for "Come and Get It." Car was hired and driven around streets with captions such as "I'm carrying £1,000, come and get it at, etc., etc." Holdup was staged and photographers rushed along to get in first with the news that someone had taken advantage of the invitation and was helping themselves to the bags of money. Decorating the front of the theatre were large beer casks bearing the words "Come and get it—free beer here tomorrow. (See photo in Round Table picture section.)

For "The Big Broadcast" Fitzpatrick tied up with the Philco Radio Company, whose officials planted display in lobby and offered set to first person correctly giving the names of star artists appearing in the picture. Entry blanks were distributed on which the cast was printed in jumbled lettering. Winner was introduced from stage and presented with set by popular dance band leader who also plugged the picture.

On "Champagne Waltz" Fitzpatrick planted limerick contest through cooperation of local wine merchant who offered cases of his product as main prizes, runners up received monthly pass to the theatre.

Two Ballys

"Convicts" with wrists handcuffed preceded bannered guard in street bally used by John F. Pival, Kramer Theatre, Detroit, Mich., as exploitation on his reissue date for "Big House." Men worked business center during entire engagement of the picture. Second street bally consisted of bannered float on which were dummy convicts and guards with rifles.

Toast, Well Done

What is reported to have been highly effective was the contest worked out with the Cleveland News by Ed Miller and Manny Pearlstein for "Toast of New York" at the Warner Hippodrome Theatre. All expense trip to New York was offered to girl submitting best original toast, second prize was complete fall outfit promoted from local department store; and also offered were a number of cash awards and tickets.

Several radio tieups were made, stores featuring a "Toast" sundae, cards were placed in all playgrounds and busses at the Great Lakes Exposition and display panels planted in public libraries.

Soap Box Derby

The Helena Independent, which sponsors the annual soap box derby locally cooperated with Ted Kirkmeyer, Rio Theatre, Helena, Mont., permitting special license plates on front and back of each car reading "New Faces of 1937." Day following the Derby, all contestants were guests of the Rio to see the picture. In addition to the stickers being used as plates, they were planted on automobiles, buildings and windows. The plates were printed by the newspaper at no cost to Ted, advertising manager also promoting special pink page for the Derby in the Saturday issue which carried prominent mention of "New Faces" and playdates.

Six Months

Six months before opening of the new Hoyt's Padua Theatre, Melbourne, Australia, publicist P. Anderson launched his newspaper campaign, running architectural drawings and constructional details as the building progressed. Much prominence was given to the new features of the revolving stage and "floating screen." For opening merchants took co-op page, cost of which was paid by the advertisers and souvenirs were distributed to patrons.

Insurance

Circularizing all insurance company offices and branches in Toronto, L. Hansher, Radio City Theatre, for "Small Town Boy" sent letters briefly outlining the insurance angle of the picture and signing off with "and may I say that our policy of real entertainment pays big dividends. Get yours by seeing," etc., etc.

Special Shows and Contests Inaugurate New School Season

Working on the idea suggested by Ronnie Perkins, Interstate Circuit short subjects booker, campaign for a "Back-to-School Jamboree" has just been completed by Louie Charninsky at the Capitol Theatre, Dallas with the aid of his assistant, Francis Barr, and publicist M. O. Wright. Featured were contests, prizes and giveaways and outside activities, the occasion also utilized to inaugurate the local high school football season.

Contest was in form of an essay tiein with the local Dispatch with students between the ages of seven and 17 invited to write on "Why I want to go back to school." First and second place winners were awarded unusual distinction of acting as manager and assistant at the theatre for one day. Charninsky reports the two winners selected from over 500 contestants.

Platform with two thrones built in the lobby to seat the "managers for the day" and among the other lobby slants was a broadcast which introduced the winners, captains, coaches and pep squad leaders out of the various schools represented at the matinee. Immediately after the show a football parade was formed starting in front of the theatre and all those attending the special show taking part.

Advertising in newspapers, lobby and trailers emphasized Jamboree, and generous publicity was obtained on the show stressing the contest angle with photos of the winners. Sport pages carried pictures and stories of the football squad and there was also mention of the lobby broadcast in the radio column.

Prizes included school supplies, wearing apparel, pencils, and ice cream in addition to autographed footballs. And added shorts on the program were in keeping with the occasion.

In California, Also

Similar idea to inaugurate the new school season was also put on by various Fox West Coast theatremen, outstanding being the cooperation obtained by Manager Roy Hunt, of the Fox Riverside and Les Solberg, both in Riverside, California. Special matinees sponsored by leading merchants were tied in with what was termed a "Back-to-School Merchandising Event."

Three morning shows were put on, at 8:30 and 11, at the Golden State and at 9:30 at the Riverside. The houses were bought out for the occasion by the cooperating merchants, tickets distributed by individual stores, one to each youngster when applying in person. All performances were reported to have played to complete capacity with further impetus given the celebration by local paper which donated a full page ad with story and art work.

And at York, Pa.

Advertised as their annual "back to school" free kid matinee, leading department store rented theatre from Sydney Poppay, Rialto to put on their show. Plugged by the store two weeks in advance, any child accompanied by an adult was admitted free, and it was not necessary to purchase anything in the store. Stories were run in paper and Fire Chief L. Ellis Wagner and policemen were present to look after the safety of the kids. Sydney reports renting the house from 9:30 to 11:30 at a time when they were ordinarily closed and that they were packed to capacity with Fire Chief permitting standees.

Bell and O'Connell Voted Plaques for September

The month of September is distinguished for being the first in the Quigley Awards when both Plaques were voted to entries on the same picture—"Stella Dallas." To Ray Bell, publicist, Loew's Capital, Washington, D. C., goes the Silver; to Ray O'Connell, manager, Capitol, Lancaster, Pa., the Bronze. Three Firsts and 21 Honorables were awarded, as follows:

First Mentions

V. G. Geisel, Manager, Orpheum, Green Bay, Wis., "Pigskin Champions."

Believes Too Much System Ruins Good Showmanship

Head of Over 200 British Theatres Gives Views on Circuit Management

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

"The theatre manager who doesn't get into a groove doesn't exist. A man strong enough to keep out of a groove is clever enough to be running his own theatre, or alternatively, if he isn't, he is in a good job at the circuit head office."

Thus summarily did Freddie Bernhard, managing director of Union Cinemas, Ltd., one of the three major British circuits, dispose of the vexed question of managerial responsibliity. He just doesn't believe in it, in the wider sense. And he speaks from the experience of conducting a self-created chain of theatres 228 strong, with 30 in the course of construction and plans approved for 52 more. The chain has pioneered in the use of variety and in other ways.

"Personal management is an excellent thing; individual management is quite another thing," he expanded. "The one is based on ownership, the other depends on a professional enthusiasm which, in my experience, lasts for three months. After that, the groove."

"And the answer is supervision?"

"The answer certainly isn't supervisors. All that can be said against the individual manager can be said about the supervisor. His groove is longer, but it's deeper also. He is proud and prominent at all the successful shows, giving his valuable aid to a manager already quite willing to boost a super-film which doesn't need it. Every Friday, somehow, he is an easy jump from London, home and beauty. No, if a man is good enough to be what a supervisor ought to be he is good enough for me in London.

"Then you concentrate all the brains of your organization in London. Your system is one of super-centralization?"

"I don't, and it isn't. The brains in the circuit tend to concentrate themselves in London. If I didn't make the exceptional men head office executives they would leave me, or buy theatres of their own. They wouldn't leave their brains at my disposal in a manager's job. So I have to bring them to London. Doing so, I avoid the real evil of centralization, which is that it may create a rigid system, to be worked by second-class brains."

"You avoid that?"

"My one aim is to avoid it. Of all the businesses in the world theatre management is the one most damaged by rigid rules. The best system of circuit management is to have as little of the schedule as possible. Therefore I have built a head office organization, almost exclusively from managers, and that organization is flexible enough to deal with our problems, not as a problem of schedules and time-tables, but as one of showmanship, of the box-office."

OCTOBER DEADLINE IS NOVEMBER NINTH

Entrants in the Quigley October Awards will take notice that the deadline for the month is midnight of Tuesday, November ninth. Campaigns to be eligible for consideration must be received at Award Headquarters no later than that time.

"For example?"

"For example, I have frequently been criticized for changing, as late as Friday, a film announced for the following Monday. That simply horrifies the dyed-in-the-wool circuit man, and the supervisor of regular habits. It jolts them out of their grooves. But it's just because it's out of the groove I do it. I don't mean I stunt a change of program, but if one seems necessary, I make it, and in fact welcome it. Isn't it a fact that one of the prime elements of showmanship is surprise?"

Aims to Defeat Routine

"What in fact have been the business results of such a change?"

"The first result has been to make the theatre, and the theatre's new film, news. As soon as the manager makes his announcement, people talk about it, pass it on. There are two objections. Some patrons may not hear of the change. Some may be disappointed by it. I admit both objections, but in practice I find the news goes round the town like lightning. In figures, I find a changed program inevitably has meant an unusually good opening day. Remember, the change is always made for good program reasons. My point is that they are also good showmanship reasons. A schedule would defeat them. So would a system of individual responsible management. Of course, minor points must be left to managers, but less than six constructive ideas come from managers in a year. When you ask them a question they give intelligible and often very helpful answers, but you have to ask them the question. The brains of Union are in London, to ask the questions and apply the answers."

"That implies a highly developed intelligence and statistical department at Head Office?"

"It does; and it provides a tremendous lot of important facts and figures. It has taught me that the first rule of this business is to defeat routine; the sort of routine which fills the same space in the same newspapers with substantially the same advertising copy every week. Fifty per cent of theatre advertising and publicity is valueless because it has no news value, no surprise value."

"Positively, it has presumably also supplied very informative data about the tastes of your varying publics?"

"Yes, and most surprisingly, it has provided singularly definite proof that the public doesn't vary in one district as compared with another nearly as much as is generally believed."

"I have here the takings in all our theatres over the last six months. The most unexpected thing they prove is that the percentage success of any film, throughout the circuit is uniform. That is to say a film which is an 80 per cent success in the university town of Oxford is also an 80 per cent success in the industrial town of Barrow, and that is true irrespective of the subject. Another curious thing I have noticed is this: in one of our theatres we frequently give a pre-run to a picture from one of the neighboring studios. The show is not announced, but the news gets about. Now, sometimes the theatre is packed and sometimes it is half empty. Invariably, the film that packs the pre-view plays profitably on the circuit, and just as inevitably the other flops."

"Which suggests that marquee values are still one of the biggest of box-office factors?"

"To some extent, though that explanation does not cover all cases. It suggests to me that certain films have a universal curiosity appeal, and that others have not and that if we could have a scientific analysis of the two classes, and of their titles, we might get data valuable both to producers and to exhibitors. Incidentally, I have just recently found that an indefinitely identified factor, but which I believe to be the influence of fan paper criticism and publicity, has slightly affected the uniformity of the theatre percentage returns on certain pictures. I am trying to trace it down."

"Such an investigation as you suggest would have to be applied to the film output, to be conclusive?"

Tries All Boxoffice Ideas

"Of course, but we are in the fortunate position of controlling all the theatres in certain towns, with the result that we play practically every film produced and are in a position to make due allowances for outside influences on the particular week when we are endeavoring to make an analysis. This monopoly in various towns enables us to try out every audience attraction device in this country. We are in a position to test exactly its particular drawing power. The average exhibitor who owns one theatre here and there, is never quite sure to what extent his additional bookings have been affected by strong programs in opposition.

"By having the figures available for all the theatres, outside influences can automatically be checked by percentage, decrease or increase, in any given theatre with a film of know drawing power."

J C JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

North Platte, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

This town has something like twelve thousand folks, a few from Indiana, some from Missouri and some Irish, but it is a good town even at that. This is another "Gateway to the west," but the boys keep the gate open all the while. It is on the Lincoln Highway, which runs from New York to Los Angeles, and if it weren't for the Pacific Ocean it would probably run on to Hong Kong, China.

We stopped here to call on Mike Zalesny, who operates the Fox and Paramount theatres for the Fox organization. We are glad we did for we found him a very sociable gentleman, who showed us every courtesy and helped us spend a very pleasant evening.

We had another reason for stopping here. We wanted to meet Bobbie Snyder, who used to be the manager at the box office of the Fox theatre, but we found that a couple of months ago she married a guy without saying a word to us about it. There is no darn sense in a girl acting like that. Anyhow, we congratulate the guy she married and we wish Bobbie a whole lot of good luck.

This town used to be the home of "Buffalo Bill." William Cody, you know, used to furnish meat for the railroad camps when they were building the Union Pacific railroad through this country. Bill would go on the range and shoot buffalo for these camps and that's how he came to be named "Buffalo Bill." There are no buffalo roaming these plains today, for the Holsteins and Short Horns have run them out, but even so, to those of us who used to ride these prairies and see buffalo, antelope and deer, today we would like to get somewhere where we couldn't hear the honk of the auto horn or the toot of a steam whistle.

Horn and Morgan still operate the Hay Springs theatre, and the Hay Springs theatre has become the universal rallying place for the most of northwest Nebraska. People have come to learn that when they go to this theatre they are going to be entertained.

Then besides that, they have a general office where the people gather to get insurance of all kinds and to buy real estate, contract their potatoes and hay, and where they transact about every other kind of business, except they don't sell marriage licenses nor dog licenses. In fact, there isn't very much these boys don't do. They were playing "Romeo and Juliet" at a matinee for the school children when we called, and from the looks of the audience we would judge that Hay Springs has a lot of children, and of course the children had to bring mamma along with them.

In case you want any potatoes, Hay Springs would be a good place to get them, for here they grow potatoes like Iowa does corn and like Arkansas does fox hounds and children, and it is here they have the largest potato cellar in the world. Morgan says it holds 125,000 bushels. Morgan says so and we don't doubt anything Morgan says—but then, 125,000 bushels are a whole lot of potatoes. That many would last A-Mike Vogel of the HERALD for several days, provided he had plenty of steak to go with them.

From Hay Springs we drove across the country to Alliance. Someone told us it was 45 miles, and someone was right about it, but if he had added 45 to it, it would have seemed to us to be more nearly correct. There wasn't a town and but one filling station on the road. We met one follow driving a maintainer but we didn't try to sell him the HERALD, though he probably would have bought it. This would be an awfully good country for a theatre if short horn cattle and prairie dogs liked theatres, but Horn and Morgan says they don't care for them.

Here at Alliance we met Jim Hews, who operates two theatres for the Fox organization. The last time we met Jim he was operating two theatres in McCook, the home town of Senator George Norris. That is, it's his home town when he is home, but we understand he prefers Washington to McCook, presumably because he can get fresh oysters in Washington. Anyhow, Alliance is the home town of Jim Hews, and Jim likes it here pretty well and we don't blame him, for Alliance is a pretty good town.

Jim was remodeling the theatre that used to be operated by Harry De Buque and, we judge, from the way Jim is doing it, that when he gets it completed it will be the pride of this western country. Jim is an old friend of ours but we doubt if he is bragging very much about it. You know that Jim is not much of a hand to brag about anything.

This is another potato country. They told us that one farmer had forty acres of potatoes under irrigation that would yield around 300 bushels per acre. If you hain't never et one of these potatoes baked, with country butter on 'em, you hain't never et nuthin yet.

Then we drove across the country from Alliance to Bayard in the North Platte valley, to meet our very good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, who operate the Palm theatre. We had a very delightful visit with them. Bayard is where they hold an annual pageant, out in the hills, and thousands of people come to witness the performance, which is very similar to the one given at Oberammergau (or something like that) over in the old country.

The principal industry around Bayard—outside of the Palm theatre—is sugar beets. Here they grow enough sugar beets to furnish sugar for the whole world, provided they don't want too much sugar. Bayard is a very prosperous town, due principally to the excellent service the public gets at the Palm theatre. You can't beat a good theatre for building up a town.

We wanted to get down to Oshkosh to meet our very good friends Mr. and Mrs. Jensen of the Silver Hill theatre, but we couldn't do it. We drove across the country to Sidney, where we saw the first frost we have seen since a years ago last winter. You know they don't have frost in the Rio Grande valley. If Bob Smith of Mission, Shine Mason of McAllen or J. C. Fanning of Brownsville, Texas, should see frost they'd think the end had come.

Then we drove around to Julesburg, Colorado, to meet Mrs. Zorn and son and daughters, who operate the Julesburg playhouse, and we had a delightful visit with them, just as we always do. Doggone it, there are a lot of good people in Colorado as well as in Nebraska.

Ogallala is where the Goodall Sound System is manufactured and Mr. Goodall advised us that he ships his sound equipment to 32 foreign countries as well as to the various states. He says they are manufacturing a new kind of hood for automobile lights that shade the lights from oncoming cars.

A. F. Kehr has two theatres here. One of them is as fine a theatre as one would care to see. It is complete in every detail.

"DEAK" RIDES AGAIN

OF all towns to come from, Cedar Rapids in Iowa is the fromest. From there have come to the amusement world The Cherry Sisters, Mr. James Cron and Mr. Merlin Hall Aylesworth. It seems that if they are from Cedar Rapids they can sell.

The modern era records three supreme salesmen: the late Sir Gregory Zaharoff, the late Mr. "Diamond Jim" Brady and Mr. Aylesworth, who is never late.

New York, Broadway, Times Square, Big Business and the whole microphonic world first became aware of the velvet dynamics of Mr. Aylesworth when he dawned as the president of the National Broadcasting Company.

Broadcasting needed nothing so much as money and somebody to pay it. Broadcasting as he found it, and as it was and is, was a lot of evanescent sweet nothings crooned and sprayed to the blue sky going round and round and stopping, even yet, where nobody knows. Mr. Aylesworth went about making a saleable substance of this attenuated stuff and collecting money for it where money is, in business. In an amazingly short space of time his personal contact and circulation developed to the point where if you couldn't call him "Deak" you were just naturally nobody in America.

It was said of "Deak" that he could drop from a rocket parachute into the locker room of a golf club on Mars, with one bottle of Scotch under his arm, and emerge an hour later with personal friendship and contracts with all the members. That estimate is in error only in that it would not be necessary for him to take his own Scotch along.

ONE of the difficulties of this radio situation was that he sat where all of the money and most of the publicity came in. There was the making of what is sometimes called a situation. The situation in consequence blew up, in behalf of a rapid recentering of radio publicity elsewhere, and when Mr. Aylesworth came down it was in a temporarily inconspicuous post on the managing board of the Scripps-Howard newspapers.

Thereupon ensued a pervading silence, or at least a relative silence, for months.

Last week the super-salesmanship erupted again in all the effulgence of a special section devoted to grandiose advertisement of motion pictures on an unparalleled scale, by producers and distributors, and exhibitors, in a special section of the Scripps-Howard papers, at a typical cost of $11,500 a page. There were about nine pages of pure advertising matter, appropriately larded with editorial type.

The silence no longer pervaded. It was colossally busted.

The section, running in all of the twenty-and-odd Scripps-Howard papers, was by way of a sensation on paper in the advertising world, and something of a surprise in the motion picture industry in some quarters, including the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., which just then heard of it.

And it was excitement, rival triumph, and a challenge in the offices of competition beginning conspicuously in the great Hearst chain.

The special edition branch of American journalism has been quiet these several years. It is quiet no longer. The advertising managers are at their graphs, charts and quotas. They will for a long time now refuse to listen when the salesmen, rebuffed, say "it can't be done." The answer is "Aylesworth did it."

Meanwhile he says the section will be repeated by the Scripps-Howard papers in the future only in the event of "another demand from the picture companies themselves."

"We have," he observes with modesty, "helped, I think, to make the newspapers aware that Hollywood is a great source of news, one of the three greatest, New York, Washington and Hollywood."

They are, one may add, also Aylesworth-conscious. "Deak" rides again.

DAM MAGIC

THE motion picture as an electrically powered industry can regard with a particular interest the power policies of both corporations and governments. Most lay and popular concepts about power are muddled with notions that have been given currency by propagandists rather than engineers.

The most widely accepted mythology is based on the assumption of cheapness and economy in behalf of hydro-electric sources. The impression is that one merely sets up a wheel in a natural stream of moving water and takes off electrical energy of great value forever after, at almost no cost at all.

The great Passamaquoddy tide-mill scheme, involving many tax paid Federal millions with a high output of nothing but publicity, is perhaps the largest single slice of this type of miracle-bologny since the days of the Keeley motor hoax. It and its ilk partake of the character of those science-magic and super-technology tales which flow from Moscow with intent to make the world believe that a political boss may have dominion over chemistry, physics and all applied science even as he does over the schafskopf millions of the populace. The trend is back toward the ancient state where the boss was king-priest-god, which simplified life, for him, a great deal.

THESE days the news pages and the rotogravure sections are often bedecked with pictures of ponderous dams, theatrical spillways, titantic generator castings, all footnoted with figures on acre-feet, kilowatts, cubic yards and such. With unconscious irony there is frequent comparison in terms and tons and volume with the labours of the pyramids of Egypt. The analogies are far too close.

Modern steam turbine generating plants are so much the most efficient producers of electrical energy that comparisons make hydro-electric projects as economically ridiculous as they are politically conspicuous. Today the burning of twelve ounces, three-quarters of a pound, of coal, delivers as much energy as the total energy output of thirteen men for one hour. Since 1900 the consumption of fuel has been reduced by more than one-half, and there are improvements to come. Seventy percent of the electrical power of the United States today comes from steam turbines. The present prime cost,

This Week

British Rentals "War"

While the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association in England has been talking vigorously about reductions of rentals and the necessity of cooperation between circuits and independents to bring that about, the Kinematograph Renters Society has stolen a march with a new decision on policy which, observers say, will raise prices instead of lowering them. This is a new declaration to make binding the old agreement upon 3¼ hours as maximum time limit of a program.

This and other developments in the United Kingdom are treated in the article on page 71.

Universal Increase

R. H. Cochrane, president of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., reported an increase of $400,000 in the company's revenue for the first nine weeks of the 1937-38 season compared to the same period last year. The early release of "Merry-Go-Round of 1938," "You're a Sweetheart," and "Mad About Music" was also announced.

Universal plans and announcements are detailed on page 34.

initial construction, is about one hundred dollars per kilowatt of capacity. It is engineering opinion that if a plant could operate without any fuel whatever and with no expense for supervision it would cease to be profitable at a cost of one hundred and sixty dollars per kilowatt capacity.

Those figures should make it clear that water power is far from being that miraculous something for nothing that so charms the political and public fancy. When dams, penstocks, waterwheels, generators and transmission lines are paid for and maintained in operation, especially in the face of seasonal variation in water supply, the water-made electricity is no bargain. The best engineering authority holds that a modern steam plant at Niagara Falls could produce electricity cheaper than the falls do now.

It is true that the fuels which produce steam power—coal, oil, and gas—are capital, that steam power means consumption of capital. Assuming that power production remains dependent upon them for a few hundred years, it will then be a problem for our heirs, successors and assigns—and so, at the present rate, will be some maturing debts.

"Illegal Plunderbund"

Theatre chance games, "a wagering plunderbund venally exploiting a human frailty," offend against constitutional and statutory inhibitions concerning lotteries and are illegal in their operation, reads the closely reasoned conclusion drawn in a study of the subject from a purely legal viewpoint published in the American Lawyer. The author exhaustively analyzes all important court decisions bearing on the matter, carefully citing chapter and verse; stresses the point that the usual defense in which it is claimed that consideration, necessary to constitute a lottery, is not present is at best only tenuous; and supports by overwhelming evidence his contention that rulings declaring the games legal have resulted only from "legal legerdemain, forensic fallacy and judicial jugglery."

The argument is summarized on page 25.

Shorts Survey

The customers are interested in more and better short subjects, made to include better story values and combining entertainment with educational or controversial elements, according to a survey conducted with the cooperation of newspaper critics by the publicity department of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer which is conducting a special campaign emphasizing short subjects. Requested by columnists to write in their views on the matter, with the promise of theatre passes for the best letters, the readers responded with enthusiasm and decided opinions.

The results are reported on page 63.

Settlement Asked

A petition for approval of a settlement of two suits brought by the trustees in receivership of Paramount Publix Corporation, against former officers and directors of the company, was filed on Tuesday with Alfred C. Coxe, New York federal judge, by Charles D. Hilles, trustee. The court set November 3rd for a hearing. Under the settlement complaints against all the defendants would be withdrawn and the reorganized company, Paramount Pictures Corporation, would receive $2,150,000. The suits, based on charges that the defendants had mismanaged and misused funds, were for $12,000,000. In his petition, Mr. Hilles said he believed greater amounts could be recovered if the actions went to trial but, he added, settlement was recommended because lengthy litigation would have a "harmful effect." Among those who would make large settlement payments are Sidney R. Kent, $250,000; Sam Katz, $200,000; Adolph and Eugene Zukor, $500,000; Jules E. Brulatour, $100,000; Frank A. Bailey, $100,000; John D. Hertz, $125,000; the estate of Emil Shauer, $50,000; Jesse L. Lasky, $27,500.

Music Barrier

John G. Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, believes the motion picture industry's invasion of the music publishing business creates a barrier that virtually cuts off the field to new music writers. Every song, whether it is liked by the public or not, is plugged with the result the time of orchestras and bands is occupied almost completely by the "tailor made" music written for pictures, Mr. Paine said.

Mr. Paine's opinion along with a brief history of motion picture companies' activities in the music publishing field are recorded on page 17. There, too, appears ASCAP's own admission that it collects some $1,080,000 every year from exhibitors as tribute for music "privileges."

Felix M. Warburg Dies

Felix M. Warburg, senior partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Company, which was Paramount's banking house for many years, died Wednesday at his Fifth Avenue home, New York City. He was 66 years old. During the later years of his life he devoted most of his time to philanthropic and social activities.

"Divorce" Law

The contentions which will be advanced in support of North Dakota's theatre "divorce" law sponsored by Allied States, were revealed this week in an answer filed by state officials to Paramount's charge that the statute is unconstitutional. The action has been placed on the Federal court calendar, in Fargo, and is expected to go to trial next month. The defendants set forth six advantages enjoyed by theatres affiliated with producer-distributor organizations and reply to the constitutionality question by declaring the measure is within the police powers of the state. Unless the act is upheld, the answer states, all independent exhibitors will either be forced to close their houses or sell out to the large circuits.

The main points of the answer are recorded on page 13.

"Strike" Settlement

Settlement of the "buyers' strike" of Philadelphia exhibitors against Paramount was reported near this week, while Minneapolis theatremen prepared to seek a mandatory injunction to compel Paramount to deliver six pictures reputedly promised in the 1936-37 contract, and another suit was filed by an owner in Indiana. Paramount denied a preliminary meeting had been held Monday with Philadelphia leaders but admitted a session "will be held later in the week, probably Friday." There was no indication of the basis on which the settlement would be worked out.

These developments in the Paramount controversy are reported in detail on page 24.

Chicago's Plight

Chicago exhibitors, faced with a demand from the city aldermen that the theatres yield one million dollars more in revenue in order to clear off a third of the city's $3,000,000 deficit, are considering several possible methods of protecting their interests. For one thing, Allied States is studying the advisability of legal action against Balaban & Katz to prevent double featuring. It is reported also that chance games are to be restored despite a ruling of the state supreme court that the games are unlawful.

The Chicago theatremen's problem is reviewed on page 12.

Trust and Tax Laws

Revision of the federal trust laws and tax rate changes will be the principal subjects interesting the motion picture industry in the approaching session of Congress, opening November 15th.

Francis L. Burt, Washington correspondent, analyzes the potential relationship of motion pictures to Congressional activities on page 28.

Intimidation

During testimony presented by attorneys for the Screen Writers' Guild at the Regional Labor Board hearing on its petition for designation as a collective bargaining agency Charles Brackett, acting president of the Guild charged that members of his organization had been intimated by Screen Playwrights, Inc., rival writers' union, into reversing their allegiance under threat of loss of pay. A motion by lawyers for the producers to strike out the testimony because specific instances were not cited was refused.

The hearing and other labor developments are covered in the story on page 16.

"Europe Happy"—Zukor

The capitals overseas from Budapest to London are filled with happy, spending, optimistic people, so Adolph Zukor of Paramount reported Monday in New York at a Waldorf-Astoria hotel luncheon in the jungle decorated Perroquet suite. "There is no war scare." Mr. Zukor has just returned from a sojourn abroad and a Paramount international convention in London. He sees a world upturn for pictures and forecasts that Paramount is to get "from a third to 40 per cent of its revenues from the foreign market." He thinks that Franz Lehar, the world famous composer of Viennese operettas, may come over to conduct in a musical picture. He bespoke a policy of cooperation with the British producers and an end for quota quickies as destructive of good will and business for the screen. The function was attended by ranking officials of Paramount Pictures Corporation and representatives of the trade and lay press.

Mr. Zukor returned Tuesday to his production post in Hollywood, accompanied by Chris Dunphy, his assistant.

Merger Discussed

Committees of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York and of Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey are continuing discussions looking toward a merger of the two organizations, but without definite result as yet. Other exhibitor association activities included the fixing of convention dates in Washington, North and South Carolina, Oklahoma, Nebraska and Iowa.

Donald Duck on Air

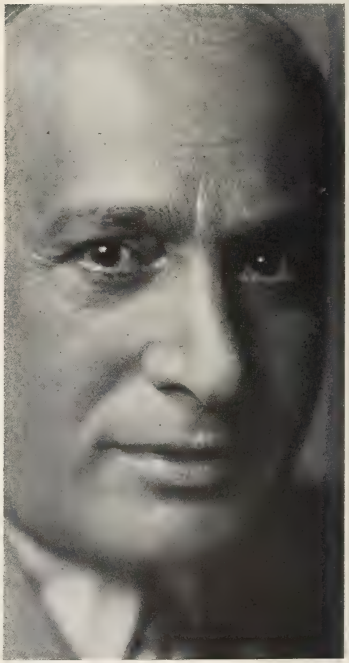
Arrangements have been completed for presentation of a Walt Disney radio program on which the sponsor, Pepsodent, will attempt to bring to life the Disney characters, including Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck. The shows will be broadcast from 3:30 to 4 P. M., E. S. T., over a national network. The program is expected to start the first week in January and indications are that the program will go over the National Broadcasting Company's network. The arrangements were concluded by Roy Disney, who arrived in New York Monday to confer with Lord and Thomas, advertising agency.

Television Attention

Television reached another milestone in this country during the week, "growing up" from a seven-by-ten-inch screen to one of three-by-four-feet, and, at the same time, receiving from the United States Government the first official attention in the matter of allocation of specific air channels, which become effective October 13, 1938.

Details of RCA activities are on page 37.

This Week in Pictures



Max Reinhardt, German impresario, arrives in New York on the French liner NORMANDIE, en route to the Coast to direct Dostoievski's "The Gamblers" for Warner Brothers. He carries his own Scotch when he travels.

Harvey G. Cocks, general manager of Quimby theatres and president of the newly formed Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Fort Wayne, Ind.; Mrs. Helen Quimby, owner of the circuit, and Earl Kincaid, treasurer, attend the reopening of the circuit's newly remodeled Palace theatre there.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, full of optimistic expression and home from Europe, is pictured talking to Y. Frank Freeman and Stanton Griffis at a Waldorf Astoria luncheon in New York.

Al Lichtman Marches On. A vice-president and executive assistant to Nicholas Schenck, last week he was named member of the board of directors of Loew's, Inc.

Two Pathe newsreel men, on assignment to complete a film to be called "The Safety of Transcontinental Flying," were passengers on the transport plane which crashed into the Wasatch mountain range in Wyoming Monday. James Pergola, 37, at right with camera, was a cameraman specializing in feature assignments. He began his career in 1918, lived in Bronxville, N. Y., was married and had a four-year-old son. William Pitt, right, started with Pathe in 1931, resigned to join Carl Byoir and Associates, and returning was named news editor of Pathe last July. Unmarried, he lived in Hollis, L. I.

Ray Branch, owner of the Barry and Strand theatres in Hastings, Mich., is the new president of Allied Theatre Owners of Michigan, a post in which he also served from 1932 to 1935.

They start in the black. Joe Louis, heavyweight champion of the world, signs a contract in Kansas City to make six pictures for Martin Finkelstein, right, and Ed Shanberg, who have organized a production company. Clarence Muse, Negro actor, is witness.

Anna Neagle, star of Herbert Wilcox's RKO production "Victoria the Great," escorted by Mr. Wilcox, is greeted by the Rt. Hon. William Lyon MacKenzie King, prime minister of Canada, at a reception in Ottawa following the North American premiere of the film at the Regent theatre there.

CITY FATHERS DEMAND MILLION MORE IN TAXES FROM CHICAGO'S THEATRES

And Exhibitors Consider Return to Chance Games and Legal Action Against B & K to Stop Double Featuring

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

The City of Chicago wants to take $1,000,000 more a year in revenue from Chicago theatres, and exhibitors are wondering what to do about it.

Just how and where the axe will fall has the theatremen guessing.

Faced with meeting a $3,000,000 deficit, the city aldermen are trying to work out a plan to squeeze one-third of the amount from the local exhibitors. A number of plans have been suggested but so far none has been approved. One proposal was a three per cent tax on gross receipts, but this was sidetracked. Then a tax on admissions, varying according to the cost of the tickets, was suggested. It, too, met with defeat. Now it seems that the plan most likely to be adopted is to raise the license fees to double or triple the present rate.

Action was to have been taken the first of the month but the spread of infantile paralysis, with the enforced closing of theatres and later the limitation of attendance to adults, cut down grosses to such an extent that all moves in this direction were temporarily delayed. However, with business on the upgrade the past few weeks the chances are that the city officials will start series of conferences with theatremen soon to finish the negotiations.

Look to Chance Games

Exhibitors will try to get the socalled chance games reinstated as a part of a bargain with the city officials. Theatremen say that if they must pay increased fees they should have means of increasing revenue, and they feel that the giveaway games offer the best plans. Neither the city officials nor theatre executives will commit themselves on this phase. It is reported, however, that if the license fees are raised very much the city may agree to let the games come back, but probably under other names than those used heretofore.

Evidence that the state supreme court decision, which declared Bank Night and other such games unconstitutional, is not being considered in a very serious light, becomes apparent with reports that downstate theatres soon will return to the giveaway games. In a number of theatres the game never was banned, as several county officers did not prosecute the theatremen using the plan. Now that the publicity, so prevalent last winter, has subsided the games are being brought back.

Independent theatremen in Chicago in addition have an important problem to work out. They plan to get rid of double features in one way or another, and are investigating methods.

Consider Suit Against B & K

One move underway is a study of the possibility of instituting a monopoly suit of some sort against the Balaban and Katz circuit, to which is attributed the return to the dual feature policy in this territory. The independent theatremen say that if they can get legal action of some sort against B & K on this charge the federal government may step in and help them clarify what they consider unjust trade practices on the part of the circuit. Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Theatres of Illinois, is conferring with legal counsel regarding this possible line of effort. At a meeting of the Allied group recently, Mr. Saperstein was instructed to make such an investigation.

In the meantime city film sales by a number of companies are slower than in several years past. Exhibitors blame a high rise in rentals. They also hope that the policy of showing two features on a program will be broken up, and if this does develop they don't want to be caught with the commitments that would be necessary for the running of duals.

Use of Reissues Increases

More reissues are being played than ever before. Dozens of theatres which have delayed in buying the new product are using reissues to make up a shortage of product. Many of the large companies have from five to twenty films available for reissue and the booking of such pictures has been most active in the last few months.

Film companies report sales are ahead of last year, but in looking over these statements one finds that while the gross amount of sales is perhaps larger than the figures for last year, due to the increase in rentals, the number of deals closed is not in proportion to the rental increase over last season.

An exception to the rule, United Artists is reported to have closed more product deals this year than in years. An array of product immediately available is held to be responsible. Twentieth Century-Fox also is reported to have closed most of the territory. Sales of Paramount and MGM, however, are said to have been retarded because of increased prices being asked for product.

Japanese Cameramen Report on Thrills of Taking Pictures

by HIROMU TOMINAGA
in Tokyo

Newsreels have become the biggest attraction at all theatres in Japan since the opening of hostilities with China, and many exhibitors have converted their houses into newsreel theatres.

Patrons of the theatres recently were informed of some of the risks taken by Nichi-Nichi cameramen to obtain pictures in China. One cameraman, who covered the landing of Japanese troops on August 25th, reported he had been with a unit that was the target of a bombing attack.

"I trained the finder of the camera on the airplanes and could see streaks of fire from the machine guns," the cameraman said. "Every bullet seemed aimed at me. Only when the planes had been driven off did I realize I was still alive."

Two others told of attempting to get shots of the Chinese troops and the crowds of refugees. They were stopped on a narrow road by two public safety men and ordered to turn around. While attempting to swing around in their car it became stuck in a ditch. A crowd gathered and had to be held off with bayonets while the safety officers forced half a dozen men to aid in extricating the machine.

In the houses that are still showing feature pictures there is a demand for pictures depicting the bravery of soldiers at the front.

72 Ziegfeld Shows Sold for $28,000

Liquidation of the estate of the late Florenz Ziegfeld was completed in White Plains, New York, last Friday with the sale by auction of the right and title to 72 productions, many of which have been made into motion pictures.

The productions, including "Kid Boots," "Sally," "Rio Rita," "Showboat," "Bitter Sweet," "Sunny" and the "Ziegfeld Follies," were sold for $28,000 to a group of composers and lyricists who collaborated on many of the shows. Included in the group were Irving Berlin, Oscar Hammerstein, II, Jerome Kern, Otto Harbach and Sigmund Romberg.

Through their attorney, Howard Reineheimer, of New York City, they explained they made the purchase to prevent future nuisance suits and to permit them to retain clear title to the material.

STATE ANSWERS CIRCUITS IN DIVORCE LAW FIGHT, PAVING WAY FOR TEST

Court Fight to Prevent Enforcement of North Dakota Law, Barring Distributor Operation of Theatres, Up Next Month

Paramount's legal battle, a test on behalf of all distributor circuits, to prevent enforcement of the recently enacted North Dakato theatre "divorce" law, is expected to go to trial in federal court, Fargo, next month. State officials last week filed an answer to the company's allegations. Allied States Association, sponsoring the divorce bills, aided the state in framing its answer.

In reply to Paramount's charge that the statute is unconstitutional, the officials, through their attorneys, contend the measure is valid because it is within the police powers of the state. In support of the contention that the law was adopted to "regulate and prevent the growth and development of monopolies and restraints of trade," the answer cites six alleged competitive advantages enjoyed by theatres, owned, controlled or operated by producer-distributors. They are listed as follows:

"1. The privilege of having the first run of motion pictures in any given community or competitive area, when, but for such favoritism, independent exhibitors could compete for such first runs.

"2. The privilege of demanding and receiving from the distributors preferential treatment in such important matters as the amount of film rentals to be paid, the selection of pictures to be exhibited and the choice of dates on which to run them, credit availability of prints, etc.

"3. Undue extension of protection or clearance, i.e., the length of time which an independent subsequent run exhibitor must wait before he can play a picture following its exhibition in a first run affiliated theatre.

"4. Buying pictures away from competing independent theatres even to the point of contracting for more pictures than they reasonably need, including all or most of the really desirable pictures, thus forcing such independent theatres to operate with an inadequate supply of pictures including many of low quality.

"5. Instigating producer-distributors by means of provisions in licensing agreements to so regulate the admission prices charged by competing independent exhibitors as to cripple such independents in their efforts to compete with affiliated theatres.

"6. Exemption from many of the onerous and oppressive contract provisions, practices and policies employed by producer-distributors in their relations with independent exhibitors."

As another basis for the law, the answer terms the complainants—Paramount, the Minnesota Amusement Company and the American Amusement—large "foreign" corporations that are not responsive to the "likes and dislikes" of theatre patrons in the North Dakota communities.

Unless the divorce act "is sustained by this court, many and possibly all of said independent exhibitors will be compelled either to close their theatres or to lease or sell the same to the plaintiffs," the defendants declare, "and the prospective aggregate loss to such independent exhibitors as a result of the monopolization of the motion picture business by the plaintiffs is much greater than any loss which plaintiffs can or will sustain as a result of the upholding and enforcement" of the law.

Sponsored by Allied

The act originally was sponsored by Allied States in its campaign against "aggressions" by major circuits and distributors. The answer was drafted by Abram F. Meyers, chairman of the board of Allied States; John P. Devaney and Louis B. Schwartz, attorneys for Northwest Allied; Francis Murphy, of Fargo, and P. O. Sathre, of Bismarck.

In addition to explaining that the statute was designed to regulate and prevent the growth of monopolies, the defendants say it sought to protect independent exhibitors from unfair methods of competition and monopolistic practices of great corporations, to eradicate the evils of competition between single theatres or small circuits and large circuits by preventing the large circuits, "that have grown so large as to become a menace to the general welfare," from doing business in North Dakota; to protect independent exhibitors from the advantages enjoyed by great circuits; to prevent and prohibit abuses resulting from the operation of theatres affiliated with producers or distributors; and to promote the public health, welfare and morals "by rendering motion picture theatres in North Dakota subject to community influence and local control in the matter of their operating policies and the selection of motion pictures to be exhibited therein."

An allegation in Paramount's complaint that the defendants "are not possessed of sufficient means to satisfy a judgment against them for damages which will accrue . . . if relief by injunction is not granted" drew the reply that the charge "is impertinent and immaterial and calls for no answer. . . ."

The answer represents Paramount as the largest motion picture producer, distributor and exhibitor in the United States, with total assets of $116,869,157, and total income in 1936 of $107,347,116. The number of theatres operated by Paramount is set by the defendants at "upward of 1,400."

In a concluding paragraph, the answer reiterates the defendants' contentions that elimination of the theatre divorce law would result in the eventual acquisition by the large circuits of all "home-owned" theatres. This would mean, it is stated, that the theatres would be "placed under the remote control of foreign corporations not cognizant of or concerned with the likes and dislikes of the public in the communities affected and interested only in profits to be earned within and transmitted beyond the borders of the state."

Defendants in the action are William A. Langer, governor; P. O. Sathre, attorney general; A. R. Bergesen, state's attorney of Cass County; W. B. Arnold, state's attorney of Grand Forks County; Roy A. Ilvedson, state's attorney of Ward County; Russell D. Chase, state's attorney of Stutsman County.

Allied States Will Talk Trade Practice Reforms But Will Keep Own Program

Allied States Association would participate in a national exhibitor meeting to draft a trade practice program for presentation to distributors providing it were not asked to forego its legislative program, aimed at large circuit and distributor "aggressions," Nathan Yamins, Allied president, said this week at his own theatre operating headquarters in Fall River, Mass.

Mr. Yamin's statement was made in reply to an offer by the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York to call a national exhibitor meeting at its own expense if Allied and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America would cooperate in the effort to form a united exhibitor front, both in drafting a trade practice program and in placing it before distributors. The ITOA proposal was made in an open letter to Mr. Yamins and Ed Kuykendall by Harry Brandt, ITOA president, on October 9th. No response has been received yet from the MPTOA, which unsuccessfully has been sponsoring its own "ten-point" trade practice program.

"Allied will lend its support to any plan to secure benefits for the independent exhibitors by the methods which you (Brandt) favor," Mr. Yamins said, "so long as it is not called upon to abandon its program for securing redress by other methods in case such a plan fails.

"My belief is that if independent leaders can by informal conferences or by correspondence, with a minimum of publicity and politics, agree upon the measures which are necessary to the protection of the independent theatre owners, and a joint committee can be organized to canvass the possibilities of securing such measures without legislation, the Allied board will authorize its national officers to make the effort. It is my further belief however, that the board will not hold its legislative program in abeyance during protracted negotiations in view of the possibility that the effort may end in frustration when it is too late to proceed with plans for legislative relief."

Nathan Elected President

The New York Drama Critics Circle elected George Jean Nathan president at a luncheon meeting in New York Monday. John Mason Brown is vice-president; Burns Mantle, treasurer, and John Anderson, corresponding secretary.

"BUCCANEER"

by GUS McCARTHY
in Hollywood

ORIGINALLY Cecil B. DeMille planned to base his "The Buccaneer" on Maxwell Anderson's play. However, the central character in that story, Sir Henry Morgan, did not appeal to him. Then, while on a fishing trip with E. V. Richards, he heard from the lips of the director of the largest string of theatres in the South the amazing story of Jean Lafitte, the pirate. The enthusiasm of Hollywood's foremost professor of cinematic history was fired. Back to Hollywood he rushed. The work previously done on "The Buccaneer" was tossed into discard and the decks cleared for an entirely different idea.

The DeMille organization, which dwindles to skeleton proportions between productions, began to expand. Jeanie Macpherson, who has been writing for DeMille for years, started a preliminary outline. The research department began to function. Other writers, Edwin Justus Mayer, C. Gardiner Sullivan, Preston Sturges, Harold Lamb and Grover Jones, in order, checked in. Several scouting expeditions headed by Bill Pine and Frank Calvin explored the Louisiana, New Iberia and Teche country from Cabildo to Guid, the locale of Lafitte's exploits, and New Orleans.

Fredric March, visioned as a natural for the role of Lafitte, was more eager to play it than DeMille was to get him to sign. From the ranks of Paramount's contract players and the free lance colony he selected Akim Tamiroff, Margot Grahame, Walter Brennan, Anthony Quinn, Douglas Dumbrille, Ian Keith, Fred Kohler, Sr., Robert Barrat, Hugh Sother, Stanley Andrews, Beulah Bondi and Spring Byington for feature support characters. His search for a girl to play opposite March in this love story set against a stirring period in American history culminated when Franciska Gaal, a Hungarian artiste whom he had noted in a foreign film and insisted Paramount sign, proved that she was ready for a starring role.

Two units went to work; one on enormous sets built on the Paramount lot and stages, the other on location in the Louisiana bayou country. In Hollywood enormous settings duplicated the backgrounds of all the interior and much of the exterior action. The location crew concentrated on capturing the natural scenic grandeur.

Mr. DeMille has had his film in production for more than two months. He is still far from finished. But the press, which has been permitted to see more of production in this case than it usually does, is convinced that Mr. DeMille will never have to apologize for "The Buccaneer." In that manner with which he takes liberties with unfamiliar history, it should be authentic and educational to a degree. But entertainment is the primary purpose of this story of a swashbuckling pirate who won the battle of New Orleans for the U. S. and who married a scullery maid.

The public will have opportunity to inspect this DeMille lesson in history and romance shortly after January 1, 1938.

A HERALD PICTORIAL PREVIEW

GUILD CHARGES SCREEN PLAYWRIGHTS INTIMIDATED WRITERS INTO JOINING

Testimony Challenged at Labor Board Hearing; Gillmore Silent on Dullzell's Resignation as Executive Secretary of Equity

Testimony that officers of Screen Playwrights, Inc., intimidated writers into joining their organization was admitted into the record this week at the Regional Labor Board hearing in Hollywood, at which the Screen Writers Guild is petitioning for an election for designation of the collective bargaining agent for writers.

Frank Gillmore, president of Actors Equity Association, refused comment on the resignation of Paul Dullzell as executive secretary of the organization, pointing out that the council has not acted on the resignation. Mr. Gillmore also reported that the American Federation of Labor convention in Denver did not touch on the recent bid made by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees for control of all employees in the three entertainment industries.

Charles Brackett, acting president of the Screen Writers Guild, told the Labor Board of the ups and downs of the organization since its revival in 1933. He placed the present total of active and associate members at 523 and said that two attempts had been made to talk to producers on behalf of guild recognition but that the producers had never answered the Guild letters.

At one point Mr. Brackett said that Patterson McNutt, one of the organizers of Screen Playwrights, Inc., threatened writers at Paramount with possible loss of jobs and pay unless they joined his organization which now holds a bargaining agreement with producers. Neil McCarthy, attorney for Playwrights, called the testimony false and said he would demand specific proof.

Later Mr. Brackett testified that many writers resigned from the Guild last year under pressure from the producers but said he could not name specific persons because most of the withdrawals came by telephone. In spite of demands made by attorneys for Playwrights and for the producers he was upheld by William R. Ringer, trial examiner, in his refusal to cite specific instances supporting his charge.

Mr. McCarthy and attorneys for producers moved to strike out the testimony on the ground it was impossible to present refuting testimony because no names had been mentioned but Mr. Ringer denied the motion because, he said, the rules of evidence did not necessarily apply at Labor Board meetings.

The respondent companies also lost a motion to strike out Brian Marlowe's testimony that writers were under the jurisdiction of the producers in their studio jobs. This was an important point in the presentation of Leonard S. Janofsky, Guild counsel, in his effort to show that writers are in the employe classification.

Mr. Marlowe, after testifying that writers were highly paid, that they usually made their own hours, and were their own bosses to a certain extent, said he had a couch in his office on which to sleep but added, "I don't play cards or shoot dice during office hours." In a similar vein Grover Jones testified he had quit a $2,000 a week job at Paramount because his father told him he was underpaid. "You're getting only 40 times as much as you're worth," he said his father had said, "in some other studio you might get 50 times your value."

Gillmore Silent

Although he made no comment on the current tangle in Equity affairs Mr. Gillmore, who returned to New York from Denver on Saturday, was reported attempting to induce Mr. Dullzell to reconsider his resignation. The executive secretary last week criticized the appointment of Miss Edith L. Christianson as successor to Dorothy Bryant, executive secretary of Chorus Equity.

Mr. Dullzell made it clear, however, that Miss Christianson's appointment had had nothing to do with his resignation and insisted that he was adamant in his intention to resign. His criticism was based on the fact that, although Miss Christianson is a member of two AFL unions, she had worked as an organizer for a union affiliated with the Committee for Industrial Organization.

On Union Claims

The IATSE claims to jurisdiction over the Screen Actors Guild, included in its general jurisdictional claims over all Hollywood unions, was not acted upon or discussed at the AFL convention in Denver during Mr. Gillmore's attendance there, the Equity president said. He observed that the IATSE claims have not been pressed or acted upon by the organization itself and advanced the opinion that "they were never seriously intended."

Screen Actors' Guild contracts were to be submitted to the March of Time and Educational studios by the Guild eastern office this week, the board of directors last week having decided that both companies must be signatories to the contract in order to permit Guild and other members of the Associated Artists and Artistes of America to continue working for them. Although both companies have agreed to conform with Guild contract terms in all respects, they asked to be relieved of actually signing contracts, March of Time on the ground that it was a newsreel, and Educational because of technical considerations.

REPRESENTATIVE TIRED OF BEING "BEDEVILED"

Motion picture stars and executives, whose names are placed on "sucker lists" compiled from the treasury department's annual report on incomes, may find relief in the latest edict issued by Representative Doughton, chairman of the house ways and means committee.

But Mr. Doughton has grown weary of seeing the crowds flock to his committee's quarters. He announced this week that the committee's offices will not be the scene of next January's rush. He said he thought arrangements might be made for making the list public at the treasury but as for himself he declared:

"I'm not going to put up with it any more. I'm through being bedeviled by people who want to make up sucker lists."

Allied and ITOA Discuss Merger; Other Units Meet

Endorsement of a plan to merge with the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York for vital problems affecting exhibitor members was voted Tuesday when Allied of New Jersey met at the Stacey Trent Hotel, Trenton. Committees from both organizations met last week, discussed plans for the merger and agreed to hold another session after reporting back.

Other exhibitor organization activities during the week included the election of officers by Allied of Michigan and by Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, and the fixing of convention dates by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington, the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Oklahoma and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska and Western Iowa.

Ray Branch, who previously had held the office four years, was chosen president of Allied of Michigan (picture on page 11); W. G. Thich, of Marshall, was named vice-president, and Edgar E. Kirchner, of Detroit, secretary-Treasurer. The new board of directors is composed of Glenn Cross, Battle Creek; C. R. Beechler, Charlotte; P. C. Schram, Kalamazoo; W. A. Cassidy, Midland; Charles Kingsbury, Morenci; George Wilbur, Wyandotte; John Henry Ross, Battle Creek; James Olsen, Clare, and J. E. Stocker, David Newman and William E. Schuttenhelm, Detroit.

Allied of Massachusetts reelected Samuel Pinanski as president and John H. Brennan as secretary. Other officers are John H. Devlin, Loew's Theatres, vice-president, and Stanley Sumner Cambridge, treasurer.

Directors are Max Melincoff, B. E. Hoffman, Charles W. Koerner, George French, M. J. Mullin, Edward A. Cuddy, H. M. Addison, George A. Jones, Al Somerby, John J. Ford, James H. Doyle, John S. Files and George V. Brown.

The MPTO of Washington will hold its 15th annual convention at Hotel Washington, Seattle, starting Monday. There will be a display of equipment, with trailers, and posters. Ed Kuykendall, national MPTOA president, will be one of speakers.

The Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina will hold its silver anniversary convention at Pinehurst, December 6th and 7th. Charles W. Picquet is president.

Oklahoma theatre owners will gather at the Biltmore Hotel, Oklahoma City, November 8th and 9th. Mr. Kuykendall will attend.

Lawrence Caplan, attorney of New Haven, has been chosen executive secretary of Allied of Connecticut. He succeeds Joseph A. Davis, resigned.

The MPTO of western Pennsylvania held a two day session at the Schenley Hotel in Pittsburgh, this week, with 150 attending. Abram Myers and H. M. Richey were among the speakers. The entire slate of officers was reelected. They are: M. A. Rosenberg, president; W. L. Brown, vice-president; Carl Pope, William J. Walker and Pete Antinopolis, directors; Fred Herrington, secretary, and Joseph Gelman, treasurer.

ASCAP COLLECTS $1,000,000 YEARLY FROM FILMS, THEN ATTACKS INDUSTRY

Society Says Exhibitors' Tribute for Music "Privileges" Represents 21 Per Cent of Its Entire Annual Revenue

Motion picture theatre owners in this country pay the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers more than a millon dollars a year—$1,080,625, in 1936, to be exact—for the socalled "privilege" of "playing" music of ASCAP members. For this privilege, exhibitors claim, they previously pay film distributors in rentals for pictures from which the music is performed.

Practically no other medium exists today in the motion picture theatre than the sound track on the film through which music is "performed," less than 100 theatres in the entire country now employing either band, orchestra or organ. Yet, ASCAP's own figures show it is collecting an average of $85.49 from each of 12,639 motion picture houses every year for the public performance of music which at least 12,500 render from film, and a license to this, as purchased from the distributor, is held by the exhibitor to entitle him to exhibit publicly the full contents of the film.

The existence of the dual music levy on exhibitors, and their various protests against paying tribute to ASCAP, are old issues. New is the disclosure of the extent of the exhibitors' annual payment to the Society, and that disclosure now comes from ASCAP itself.

Last week, the Rockefeller Center home offices of ASCAP in New York resurrected, after many ears of dormance, the publication of a "house organ," called "ASCAP Journal," for its music writing and publishing members. Admittedly undertaken "with some misgivings," the first issue was devoted largely to ASCAP's complaints of the economic "sufferings" of the Society and the insufficient royalties accruing to it from public performances of ASCAP music.

The "house organ" also presented the case of the source whence "the ASCAP dollar comes, and in just what proportion, and just what is done with it after it comes into the hands of the Society." Tabulations by ASCAP show this:

ASCAP DOLLARS COME FROM:

Gross Income of Percentage		No. of Units	Amount of Royalties	Aver. Per Unit
Radio Broadcasting	62	584	$3,239,181	$5,546
Theatres	21	12,639	1,080,625	85
Restaurants, Hotels, Cafes	12	7,972	634,061	71
Dance Halls	3	2,606	132,417	50
Miscellaneous	2	....	.....	..

ASCAP DOLLARS GO TO:

Royalties and Relief to Domestic Members	76%
Royalties to Foreign Affiliated Members	7
Cost of Operation, Salaries, Legal Expenses	17
TOTAL	100%

Then, indulging "in no such reluctance" of "business concerns to disclose the figures portraying their actual financial condition, or the result of their operations," ASCAP's "Journal" reported the following breakdown of income in royalties, at the same time setting forth the familiar arguments heard from the Society in defense of its levies:

"In the calendar year 1936, 12,639 motion picture theatres paid to ASCAP a total fee of $1,080,625.80, or an average of $85.49 each. The official government figures for that year estimate that the motion picture theatres of the country sold to the public $1,000,000,000 worth of admissions. The theatres paid to ASCAP for the right to publicly perform music 1/10,000th of a cent per each admission ticket sold.

"Five hundred and eighty-four commercial broadcasting stations paid to ASCAP during 7936 total license fees of $3,39,181, an average of $5,546 per station. The government's figures for that year indicate that the broadcasters sold to commercial advertisers, $114,000,000 worth of 'time on the air.' Broadcasters paid to the composers and authors of the whole world about 3/10ths of a cent out of every dollar they took in. And, music was the principal contributing factor toward making the broadcasting entertainment so effective in 1936, as to cause the public to buy, according to the government's figures, a total of $440,000,000 worth of radio receiving apparatus and accessories and $45,000,000 worth of replacement and repair parts. During that year, according to the government's figures, manufacturers of radio broadcasting equipment sold to the broadcasters $12,500,000 worth of station apparatus.

"So, to truly visualize the extent financially of the entire commercial radio operation, which is at least 75% dependent upon music for its success, the following figures seem to present a reasonable picture:

"Total receipts by broadcasters from the 'sale of time', $114,000,000.

"Total receipts of receiving set and apparatus manufacturers $485,000,000.

"Total receipts of broadcasting equipment manufacturers from sale of apparatus $12,500,000.

"Total receipts of power stations for power to energize sets (estimated) $150,000,000.

"Grand total of 'radio receipts' $761,500,000.

Total amount paid to ASCAP's members and affiliates for the use of their music $3,239,181.50.

"Percentage of 'radio receipts' thus paid .004+%.

"The government's figure show that at the end of 1936, in a population of 128,853,000, approxi-

DOUBLE BILL FOES PICKET THEATRE

Two organizers of the Anti-Movie Double Feature League of America picketed a Nutley, N. J., theatre last week in their fight for shows with a single film feature.

William R. Clay, make-up editor of the weekly Nutley Sun and George H. Siegel, an insurance broker, carried signs urging abolition of the double feature.

Mr. Clay said his league now has 2,000 members in 12 states and is fighting for "one grade 'A' picture rather than two grade 'C' films."

ASCAP Chief Calls Industry's Participation in Music Business a "Pathetic Barrier" Stifling New Writing Talent

Participation in the music publishing business by the motion picture industry is creating a barrier that stifles the creative ability of new music writers, according to John G. Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

"It is a pathetic thing to me," Mr. Paine said, "that new writers are unable to get hearings because so much of the performing time of orchestras and bands is occupied by the 'tailor made' music written for motion picture scores."

Use of music publishing as an exploitation medium for motion pictures is seen by Mr. Paine as the direct cause of the barrier to new composers. It is good business sense for motion picture producers to trust the writing of musical scores only to writers that already have written hits, Mr. Paine explained. Mr. Paine, however, did not mention the film's encouragement of new talent in Hollywood, and its virtual subsidization of the entire music writing business through the huge sums paid music authors in salaries, as against the comparatively insignificant remunerations received from "Tin Pan Alley."

"You can readily see," he continued, "why they (producers) would not want to take a chance with new writers when there is $700,000 or more invested in a picture. They have to depend on writers whose ability is known."

Cites Independents' Disadvantage

Mr. Paine pointed out that in most cases the primary aim of music publishing houses owned, partially or wholly, by motion picture producers is not to make a profit on sheet music but to increase the box office value of pictures in which the songs are played or sung. Independent publishers, on the other hand, depend a great deal upon the sale of sheet music, he continued.

Exploitation of the pictures comes, to a large extent, from the playing of songs over the radio. Credit always is given to the picture.

As for new writers being unable to "get hearings," Mr. Paine pointed out that a popular orchestra feels obliged to include the motion picture numbers because of the widespread exploitation they receive.

Half of Hits from Films

Of 112 of the nation's song hits in 1935-36, a total of 56 came from motion pictures, according to figures released by ASCAP and published in MOTION PICTURE HERALD September 5th, 1936.

Mr. Paine, however, bemoaned the fact that music publishers affiliated with the picture industry do not confine the "plugging" of songs to those that are hits. Every song in a picture is "plugged," he said, even if the public does not like it. In the case of publishers not affiliated with film producers, Mr. Paine added, they will take a score from a show and will mately 24,500,000 homes in this country had radio receiving sets, (4,000,000 extra sets) and that 4,500,000 automobiles were radio-equipped. Estimating a minimum average of three persons to the radio home, our music was served by broadcasters to 73,500,000 people, and available to them an average of sixteen hours a day. We will omit service to the automobile group on the theory that when they are in their automobiles people are out of their homes.

"It seems reasonable to conclude that the amount paid by broadcasters to our members and affiliates, per person entertained by them, 75% with our music, was a little over 4 cents per annum.

"Sixty-five hundred and seventy-four restaurants paid to ASCAP during 1936 the total sum of $429,351, or an average of $65.31 each. This average fee of $65.31 is for an entire year's use of the complete repertoire of ASCAP. In other words, they paid an average of $1.25 per week. Assuming, inasmuch as no government figures are available as to the 'take' of these restaurants, that they served during the week the absolute minimum of 125 patrons over the whole week, the reward to composers and authors for music was one cent per customer.

"Thirteen hundred and ninety-eight hotels, paid during the year 1936 the total sum of $204,710 for ASCAP's license, an average of $146.43 each per annum, or approximately $2.82 per week. This results in a payment by the hotel of eight-tenths of one cent per person entained by music.

"Twenty-six hundred and six dance halls paid to ASCAP during 1936 a total of $132,417. Dance halls paid, on the average, a fee of approximately one dollar per week for the right. Operators of these establishments pay to composers and authors of the whole world slightly more than one-tenth of one cent per patron entertained."

Net Earnings Set Record

On Wednesday, October 6th, John G. Paine, chairman of ASCAP's administrative committee, reported that the Society's earnings for the third quarter of 1937, ended September 30th, provided the largest net distribution to members of any similar quarter in the organization's history, estimating the amount available for such distribution for the period at $984,000. The Society's earnings today are establishing new income records despite the fact that no revenue is being received from five states where ASCAP is prohibited either from operating, or collecting royalties from exhibitors, broadcasters, hotels or dance halls. Legislation establishing ASCAP as a monopoly in restraint of trade and prohibiting the aforementioned royalty collections now is in effect in Florida, Montana, Nebraska, Tennessess and Washington. Revenues lost as a result are estimated at $150,000 a year.

And while ASCAP is laying the groundwork for carrying a fight to the high courts to have this legislation declared unconstitutional, its opponents, led by the radio interests, are furthering their plans to carry the legislative campaigns into other states meeting this fall and winter, and subsequently.

Followed Exhibitors' Protest

The legislative attack took form after motion picture theatre owners the country over stormed in protest some three years ago against the rates levied by ASCAP. The United States Government was interested and considerable talk of a Department of Justice investigation of monopolization resulted, causing ASCAP to change its flat rate of 10 cents per seat annually for any and all types of theatres, regardless of how many pictures were played, organs used or musicians employed. ASCAP "soothed" the exhibitors, apparently, with lower rates, paid on the basis of type of operation, admission charged, etc.

The radio broadcasters joined film house owners near the end of the film campaign against ASCAP, but enjoyed no such relief as that accorded exhibitors, and the state legislation campaign to have ASCAP outlawed was undertaken.

Any exhibitor, broadcaster, restaurant or dance hall operator found guilty, on ASCAP's prosecution in the courts, of violating the Copyright Law, by which ASCAP assumes its royalty-collecting power, is liable to a fine of $250 for each violation, each single performance of ASCAP music without payment to ASCAP constituting a separate violation.

Directors Order Title "Defreezing"

The board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America this week instructed the title registration committee to proceed with the organizing of a new system to "defreeze" unused titles following specified periods of registration.

At present, regulations make titles available if they have been unused for two years.

The board met to complete business which was unfinished at last week's meeting.

Sherwood Nominated As Guild President

Nominations, which are tantamount to election, have been made by the Dramatists Guild for its election of officers and councillors November 9th. Robert Emmet Sherwood is named for the presidency.

Others nominated are George S. Kaufman, vice-president; Edward Childs Carpenter, chairman of the board; Richard Rodgers, secretary, and the following councillors: Rachel Crothers, Phillip Dunning, Paul Green, John Howard Lawson, Melvin Levy, Elizabeth McFadden, Eugene O'Neill, Arthur Richmond, A. E. Thomas and Sophie Treadwell. Ten of the guild's 30 council members are retired annually, councillors being elected for three-year terms.

Louise Silcox is executive secretary of the guild and also of the Authors League, which will also hold its annual elections next month.

Wilby Confers With Freeman

R. B. Wilby, of the Wilby-Kincey Circuit which operates theatres in the South, conferred in New York this week with Y. Frank Freeman, head of theatre operations for Paramount, on a new five-year operating contract for the circuit.

Mr. Wilby arrived in New York from Atlanta Tuesday.

exhibit only the hits, thereby not flooding the market with "tailor made" numbers.

Warner's Profit

Warner Brothers was the first of the motion picture companies to enter the music publishing field. It was shortly after Al Jolson's rendition of "Sonny Boy" sent the sheet music sales of the number skyrocketing. Ownership of a music publishing house seemed to offer great possibilities and Warner Brothers immediately purchased Witmarks for about $1,000,000.

That was in 1927, and in the first year such hits as "Am I Blue," and "Tip Toe through the Tulips" were published by Witmarks with the result Warner Brothers in those 12 months realized about $500,000 on the $1,000,000 investment.

The business proved so lucrative that Warner Brothers decided to expand, and purchased Harms, T. B. Harms, New World, DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, and Remick for a sum variously estimated at from seven and a half to ten million dollars. Shortly after this purchase, Warner Brothers and Paramount carried on negotiations with a view to a merger of their music company holdings but the transaction never was consummated. However, Famous Music Corporation was formed and supplied both companies, but later the entire capital stock was purchased by Paramount, which still owns the company although the name has been changed to Popular Songs.

Warner Brothers' venture into the musical field was watched with interest by other companies which decided that, as a protective measure against the pioneer company obtaining control of the licensing of musical compositions, they would have to enter the music publishing business too.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer took the first step with the acquisition of at least 51 per cent of the Robbins Music Company and this was used as the outlet for numbers written for MGM.

The Fox Policy

Fox Film Company, now Twentieth Century-Fox, followed a dual course of action. It organized a new company named the Red Star Publishing Company and also contracted with Sam Fox Publishing Company for the Movietone activities of the company. Later, it gave up the independent operation of the Red Star firm and merged all of its music publishing activities under the Sam Fox banner, changing the name of Red Star to Movietone Music Corporation.

Meanwhile, MGM's experience with the Robbins Music Company, from a profit standpoint, was similar to Warner Brothers' experience with Witmarks, and MGM expanded by purchasing Leo Feist, Inc., Miller Music Company and Sherman Clay and Company.

The status of motion picture producers in the music publishing business has remained the same except for the selling by Warner Brothers of DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, to the Crawford Publishing Company.

RKO Radio and Columbia have not gone into ownership of a subsidiary music company but have entered into contracts with Irving Berlin, Inc. Hal Roach Comedies has a working agreement with Southern Music Company and United Artists recently signed a contract with G. Schirmer, Inc.

'ALI GOES TO TOWN' AND HOW! CANTOR FILM A SPECTACULAR HIT

Brilliantly Written And Directed Political Travesty Should Break Records For Boxoffice And Laughs

This new picture of Eddie Cantor's is a shattering hit from every angle, including that of the boxoffice. It is about the best musical extravaganza of the year—probably of any year—and will be a smash draw from top to bottom of the theater roster. Eddie is in top form in a role that needs no forcing to be funny every minute, and he has a story that provides simon-pure comedy from end to end. It is a satirical travesty on current American politics and especially on the New Deal, done in an Arabian Nights setting by a device like that of "A Yankee in King Arthur's Court," with the round-eyed comedian as an American box-car voyager going to town in ancient Bagdad for a political and social triumph.

Musical elements are kept secondary to the development of this hugely funny fairytale, but five numbers are shrewdly sandwiched in and they are all topflight, with at least four headed for hit rating.

Cantor sings two: "Laugh Your Way Through Life" and "Swing Is Here To Sway," a topnotcher that is taken over by the Peters sisters, heavyweight sepia trio, with accompaniment by the Raymond Scott quintet, for a solid hit. Tony Martin has a swell ballad, "I've Got My Heart Set On You," in which he scores emphatically, and he and Cantor blend voices in a clever topical, "Vote For Honest Abe." These pieces are all by Mack Gordon and Harry Revel.

Cantor A Stepper

There is added "Twilight in Turkey," by Raymond Scott, to which the Pearl Twins do an oriental specialty dance with an elaborate Bagdad background. There is also a good dance specialty by Jeni Le Gon, and Cantor himself does a bit of lively stepping.

But the story holds first place throughout. When the little hobo falls off the freight train, he mixes in with a film company doing desert scenes for Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." Knocked out by galloping horses, he wakes up in the field hospital in charge of pretty Virginia Field; is made an extra; passes out in one of the big jars and so is magically transported to the real Bagdad to win the favor of Sultan Roland Young and save his political hide by inaugurating New Deal policies, soaking the rich, starting work projects and abolishing the army.

Magic Carpet Helps

But there are enemies to be foiled. A president can do so many things that a mere sultan cannot. Eddie runs the sultan for president on American lines, but is himself nominated and has to campaign against himself. He wins, but escapes, and in a spectacular Magic Carpet finale, routs the enemies of the sultan and is returned to favor just as the filmers drag him from the jar and throw him out. There is a surprise ending, laid at the Carthay Circle theatre, but no letdown, for the laughs continue to the last foot.

High honors go to the writing cohorts for this well-packed outline with its innumerable facets of pungent humor and rollicking incident. Mark the names: Gene Towne, Graham Baker and Gene Fowler on story, and Harry Tugend and Jack Yellen on script—a marvellous quintet. And David Butler, directing, has brilliantly translated the tale into telling action and scenes of Oriental splendor, while sustaining exactly the right note of playful travesty.

Picture An Eye-filler

The picture is an eye-filler throughout, evidencing much money wisely spent. Ernest Palmer's photography, the outstanding process work in the Magic Carpet sequence, Bernard Herzbrun's sets and Gwen Wakeling and Herschel costumes, all give visual glorification to the swiftly-moving events. Credit also Louis Silvers for notably spirited music direction, and Sammy Lee for his dance direction.

The supporting cast is of highest excellence. Roland Young, as the bewildered and ineffectual sultan, is a comedy riot. Tony Martin, the sultan's friend, wearing a becoming mustache, wins added acclaim. John Carradine and Douglas Dumbrille make picturesque and sinister Oriental conspirators, and Alan Dinehart plays the temperamental picture director with savage glee.

There is outstanding pulchritude on the feminine side. Princess June Lang, Martin's heart interest, Nurse Virginia Field, whose gentle ministrations win Cantor's heart, and Louise Hovick, statuesque as the scheming sultana, make an eye-filling trio. Smaller parts are well played by Maurice Cass, Paul Hurst, Sam Hayes and Ferdinand Gottschalk.

Laurence Schwab, in charge of production under Darryl Zanuck, has taken Ali Baba to town with a vengeance.

FIRST SIGNS SEEN OF SETTLEMENT OF PHILADELPHIA "BOYCOTT" FIGHT

Preliminary Meeting Reported Already Held; Exhibitor Association Suggests Committee from Disaffected Zones

The first signs of a peaceful settlement of the Philadelphia "buyers' strike" against Paramount appeared in sight this week coincident with the announcement from Allied Theatre Owners of the Northwest that it was preparing to institute action for a mandatory injunction to compel immediate delivery of six pictures reputedly promised by Paramount in 1936-37 contracts, and an exhibitor from Indiana filed suit to force delivery of the six pictures.

A preliminary meeting to effect the settlement with Pennsylvania exhibitors was held at the Paramount offices in New York Monday, it was generally reported along Broadway. Although the press department denied that any such conference was held, it conceded that a meeting of exhibitors and Paramount executives "is planned for later in the week, probably Friday."

The publicity department emphasized the point that Neil F. Agnew, Paramount vice-president and general sales manager, steadfastly has refused to negotiate with a committee or "buying combine." The meeting will be with individual exhibitors, the press department announced.

Exhibitors Suggest Meeting Plan

In its official bulletin, "Contact," the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware declared this week:

"Since Paramount officials have indicated their willingness to meet with individual exhibitors to discuss such grievances, we therefore offer the suggestion that Paramount meet with one exhibitor from each of the disaffected zones as a group. Such a committee would include one representative each from Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Pittsburgh, Boston, New Jersey, Los Angeles, Milwaukee and Ohio."

Those who were understood to have attended Monday's meeting were Mr. Agnew, Austin C. Keough, vice-president and secretary; Lewen Pizor, UMPTO president, and Charles Segall and Abe Sablosky, Philadelphia exhibitor leaders.

There has been no indication of the basis on which a settlement would be effected but it is expected identical terms will be offered protesting exhibitors in all territories.

The article published in "Contact" was a page one editorial signed by the secretary, George P. Aarons. It was entitled "A Paramount Peace Plan" and led off with the declaration:

"Once again the Paramount High Command has committed a tactical blunder in its war on its customers. Paramount has decided to sell away from recognized established accounts."

Charges Series of "Blunders"

It continued by placing the blame for the dispute on a series of "blunders" on the part of Paramount.

"Paramount blunders today," the article continued, "when it mistakes every gesture of peace made by the independents as a sign of weakness! Events within the past week must have convinced home office officials that at the end of three months the exhibitors are more grimly determined than ever to carry to the bitter end their fight for the sanctity of contracts and the right to a live-and-let-live sales policy."

"No sane exhibitor wants to see Paramount harmed or the quality or quantity of the Paramount releases depreciated. Our opposition is directed solely against certain of their sales policies. We feel that many of the differences between the disputants could be ironed out by an exchange of views at a round table. We believe that Paramount's refusal to meet with any committee representing an exhibitor organization is not grounded in good business sense if these differences can by that procedure be quickly settled. 'Face saving' is one thing, but to continue a war needlessly is futile and foolish."

On the second page of the publication was a report of a UMPTO meeting held October 5th, at Hotel Broadwood, Philadelphia. The article was headed "Paramount Strike Continued Indefinitely—UMPTO Members Say Paramount Must Come to Them." The account said, "the general attitude at this enthusiastic mass meeting was to the effect that: 'Regardless of the decision of the circuit court of appeals exhibitors still do not have to buy Paramount product.'"

Gary Company Asks Injunction

While Allied of the Northwest threatened to start court action to compel delivery of the six pictures in dispute, the Gary Theatre Company, Gary, Indiana, decided to test the issue itself. It brought action for an injunction against Paramount to force delivery of 10 pictures. Six of the films were those which Philadelphia and Minneapolis exhibitors said were withheld by Paramount; the titles of the other four were not revealed.

The injunction was sought in superior court, Marion, Ohio, but Paramount injected a motion to have the case transferred to the federal court, Indianapolis, on the ground of "diversity of citizenship." The hearing for an injunction consequently cannot be held until after Paramount's motion has been passed upon.

In revealing its plan for court action, Allied also announced an appeal would be taken from a recent decision, giving Paramount a temporary injunction against continuance by Minneapolis theatremen of the "buyers' strike."

BRONX RESIDENTS PREFER DUAL BILLS

Placing little faith in film surveys or polls conducted without personal contact, Barkann Rosinoff and Jack Doyne, editor and business manager, of the Bronx Amusement Guide, decided to ring doorbells.

Mr. Doyne did the ringing—about a thousand doorbells — and brought forth the following results:

564, or 56 per cent, of those supplying answers prefer double feature bills.

461, or 54.1 per cent, are opposed to chance games.

490, or 53.25 per cent, are attracted to theatres by the names of stars; the others merely want to see good pictures.

538, or 59.6 per cent, are not influenced by critics' reviews.

Plan for Purchase Of United Artists Still Undecided

The plan under which Samuel Goldwyn and Alexander Korda will purchase the United Artists' holdings of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charles Chaplin still remained in doubt this week despite the arrival from England of David Rose, vice-president and financial adviser of Samuel Goldwyn, Inc.

Mr. Rose, who was accompanied by E. H. Lever, secretary of Prudential Assurance Company, of England, declined to discuss the deal when he was greeted by reporters on the Queen Mary. Mr. Lever, though, it was admitted, came to the United States to study the transaction from all angles. His company is the heaviest backer of London Films.

Meetings are planned in New York for next week to decide upon a plan for acquiring the stock for $4,500,000. Samuel Goldwyn planned to arrive in New York from the Coast Thursday and next Tuesday Mr. Korda and Maurice Silverstone, United Artists head in England, will arrive from England on board the Ile de France.

Once a plan for lifting the options is agreed upon, the question of distribution deals with Walter Wanger and David O. Selznick will be discussed.

Mr. Lever answered all questions regarding the United Artists deal with: "It all depends." He said, though, that his stay was indefinite and that he had other business in New York.

New York Theatre Valuations Increased Drastically in Year

Numerous drastic increases in the assessed valuation of the New York property housing motion picture companies and theatres are included in the new listing for 1938. The largest increase is that on the Roxy, from $3,325,000 to $4,100,000, a gain of $775,000. The Paramount Theatre and office building assessment has been raised $750,000, from $11,250,000 to $12,000,000. The Music Hall and office building has been increased $100,000, from $11,500,000 to $11,600,000.

The increased assessments on other picture houses are: Palace, $150,000; Rialto, $250,000; Capitol, $150,000; Globe, $150,000; Rivoli, $100,000; Ziegfeld, $170,000; Astor, $50,000 and Strand, $50,000.

Martin Mullin, of the Mullin and Pinanski Theatres, a Paramount affiliate, has been named vice-divisional chairman of the Greater Boston Community Fund. J. T. Clark, of the circuit's managerial force, will be staff secretary at drive headquarters.

CHANCE GAMES IN OPERATION CALLED ILLEGAL IN ANALYSIS OF RULINGS

Excerpts from Numerous Decisions in All Important Cases in State Courts Are Included in Survey Recently Finished Theatre chance games, the object of litigation and legal controversy since their inception, are illegal in their practical operation, is the reasoned conclusion reached in an exhaustive study of court decisions bearing on giveaways in the initial issue of the American Lawyer, new digest of developments in the field of law published by the American Law Book Company.

Quoting at length from numerous state court rulings, the study explains the general spirit and interpretation of various anti-lottery statutes, analyzes chance games from the standpoint of the three elements, chance, a prize and a consideration, necessary to constitute a lottery, and emphasizes those decisions which have held that attendance at the theatre is sufficient consideration to constitute the third element within the spirit of the law.

The author, William N. Hensley of San Antonio, Texas, a post graduate student of law at Cumberland University, Tennessee, has annotated the study fully with case references, and from pertinent cases has selected quotations from decisions which tend to show that all seemingly gratuitous distributions of money or prizes where the purpose is stimulation of attendance are in reality lotteries under the meaning of the laws. Copious footnotes express his opinion that the usual defense offered in court is fallacious.

After reviewing the most important decisions, Mr. Hensley says:

"It is impossible to harmonize or reconcile a number of the decisions which have been discussed. The issue between them is over the element of consideration. There is always an affirmation or denial that this third constitutent element of a lottery is extant. The line of demarcation is in a twilight zone encompassing the crucial question of consideration and those cases which predicate their proscription of 'bank night' upon the discernment by the courts of the element of valuable consideration or upon the grounds of public policy would seem to be supported by the decidedly greater weight and preponderance of the credible authority. . . .

"I am convinced from research that this twilight zone has been conjured up by those litigants to whose pecuniary advantage it is that the issue shall be confounded, and that it is in the bewildering haze of this region that some courts have grappled with and been worsted by deception and sophistical reasoning."

Name Not Important

Summing up his argument the writer says:

"We must not lose sight of the fact that the important factor in the determination of the character of such a scheme as that now under consideration is the substance; the name given to the process used to effectuate the object is of no consequence. It is idle to maintain that statutory and constitutional inhibitions meant to prohibit names and not things. Whatever it may be christened, or however well it may be guarded or masqueraded by cunningly devised conditions or deceptive screens, it is, under the law, what dispassionate and pragmatic analysis reveals it to be; and theoretical applications when at war with practical functioning must be ignored and discarded. If 'bank night' differs from ordinary lotteries, the difference lies chiefly in the fact that it is more ingeniously devised to disingenuously gull gullible courts. Many courts have looked beyond the mere factitious form of the transaction, and sought out and suppressed the obnoxious substance itself. . . . . "

A footnote at this point adds:

"Resort to distinctions too subtle to be meritorius, to the utilization of apocryphal authority and studied or crass indifference to the inculpatory facts, characterize a number of those decisions which sustain the legality of the scheme; legal legerdemain, forensic fallacy and judicial jugglery play havoc with the wholesome and salutary interpretation which should be afforded the lottery statutes and legitimate by juridicial hanky-panky a wagering plunderbund venally exploiting a human frailty—a mercenary exploitation which cannot but operate in a manner inimical to the public welfare."

The conclusion as expressed in the final paragraph is:

"It is submitted that the spirit of the lottery laws is compromised by those decisions which take no heed of that valuable consideration which flows from the overwhelming majority of the participants to the theatre. Our conclusion, deducted from an examination of all the relevant authority, is that 'bank nights' are in their practical operation illegal."

Cases Cited

In the course of his argument Mr. Hensley quotes significant and relevant passages from the decisions in every important case in which chance games have been involved in the state or federal courts, as follows:

The New York state court of appeals unanimously held that a chance game was a lottery although no additional sum of money was exacted for a chance to win. People vs. Miller, 2 N.E. (2d) 38. 39, 271 N. Y. 44. In this case however, the writer points out, the court's declination to receive testimony showing possibility of participation without payment of admission limited the scope of the decision.

A memorandum decision of the same court of appeals sustained the legality of a chance game scheme wherein actual payment of admission to the theatre was not a prerequisite to eligibility. 289 N.Y.S. 649, 160 Misc. 174.

The Kansas supreme court decided that the benefit under the "bank night" plan in the way of increased gross receipts for paid admissions was sufficient consideration. State v. Fox Kansas Theatre Co., 62 Pac. (2d) 929, 144 Kan., 687, 109 A.L.R. 698.

The Tennessee supreme court ruled in the case of State v. Crescent Amusement Co., 95 S.W. (2d) 310, 170 Tenn. 351, that a chance game project did not embrace all the essentials of a lottery.

The Michigan supreme court decision held chance games illegal in the case of Sproat-Temple Theatre Corporation v. Colonial Theatrical Enterprises, 267 N.W. 602, 276 Mich. 127.

A Justice Dissents

In the case of City of Roswell v. Jones, 67 Pac. (2d) 286, the New Mexico supreme court deemed chance games not to be lotteries although a dissenting justice said, "The patrons drawn to the theatre in the hope of gaining the prize money collectively furnish the prize money itself as well as a profit to the proprietor. Thus consideration arises as an inseparable incident to the increased attendance."

An Iowa state court ruled that a chance game was not a lottery in a decision which was offset by a federal court decision in another case case which held. . . . "It is very apparent that the increase in attendance is from those persons who are interested in the drawing and not in the picture, and that they have paid their entrance fee primarily in the hope of being successful on the wheel of fortune." State v. Handling 264 N.W. 608, 220 Iowa 1369 and Central States Theatre Corporation v. Patz, 11 F. Supp. 566 (D.C.S.D. Iowa).

Calls Lottery Completed

The Illinois supreme court concurred with a previous decision of the Massachusetts supreme court holding. "The price for a fair and reasonable chance to win is the cost of a ticket of admission to the theatre, which is the object of the plan, and thus a lottery is completed, even under plaintiff's own definition and contention." Iris Amusement Corporation v. Kelly, 8 N.E. (2d) 648, 651.

The Alabama court of appeals decision held that chance games were illegal when operated in conjunction with "matinee registration."

The supreme court of Texas ruled all chance games in theatres to be illegal in that state upon grounds of public policy. City of Wink v. Griffith Amusement Company, 100 S.W. (2d) 695. Also in a later case the Texas court of criminal appeals adjudged chance games illegal and the proprietors of theatres in which it was conducted amenable to criminal prosecution under the lottery statutes. Cole v. State, June 9, 1937, S.W. (2d).

In the Georgia court of appeals the justices ruled a bank night scheme a lottery, observing: "It cannot alter the fact that the operator may have given free chances to some without the purchase of tickets; even so, the lottery scheme as to a gift enterprise was present to all the rest."

Also cited were various cases involving suits for recovery of prizes by disgruntled patrons and litigation involving copyrights on several varieties of chance games.

ATTENDANCE RAISED, DECLARES AUTHOR

In a footnote to his study in the American Lawyer of the legality of theatre chance games William N. Hensley emphasizes the importance of consideration of augmented attendance as the third element necessary to constitute a lottery in the eyes of the law. Concerning the point he says:

"The intimate causal connection between the awards and augmented attendance which is synonymous with enhanced revenues seems too important to be minimized. The mechanism of 'bank night' is such that that profit on the sale of tickets which would consort with the maintenance of the scheme . . . is made the occasion for the award and also the measure of it, and reciprocally the award operates as the occasion for the profit and also the measure of it. In a word, the award is the proximate cause of heightened attendance, and the perquisites of added attendance are a prerequisite to the award."

FILMS' INTEREST IN TRUST LAWS AND TAXES

Move to Make Admission Tax Permanent Hinted; Copyright Fight at Special Session

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

General modernization by the Administration of the federal anti-trust laws will be the major subject of interest to the motion picture industry to come before the special session of Congress which is to convene November 15th, as indicated by the schedule drafted this week for the session by President Roosevelt.

Of secondary interest, largely because the producers in Hollywood already are maintaining acceptable hour and wage policies and the exhibitors are engaged in purely local activities, is the Administration's labor legislation.

Tax revision, a matter of considerable importance to all branches of the industry, while not to be considered at the extra session, will be taken up by Representative Fred Vinson's subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, which will meet November 4th to begin a study of the situation, on the basis of which a bill will be introduced when Congress returns for its regular winter session in January.

A feature of the tax revision activities will be consideration of the desirability of making the admission tax and other socalled "nuisance" levies permanent law. Motion picture theatre owners stand little chance, if any, of an increase in the admission tax exemption, now 40 cents.

Permanent Tax Hinted

Possibilities that the admission tax may be made a permanent part of the tax setup were voiced by Representative Robert L. Doughton of North Carolina, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, following a visit to the White House, accompanied by Representative Vinson of Kentucky to discuss revenue with President Roosevelt.

The admission tax and other nuisance levies were adopted as a temporary means of raising revenue. Extended by Congress last session, they are now due to expire in 1939.

When the Ways and Means Committee meets next month, it is expected to give consideration to the drafting of a permanent tax law, superseding the present law which consists of several measures amending the original act. Accordingly, a decision is to be made whether the nuisance taxes are to be included in the new legislation or left on their present temporary basis.

Copyright Fight Again

Renewal of Senator Ryan Duffy's fight for enactment of new copyright laws, which would affect motion pictures and other fields, is expected during the special session. The bill was shelved at the last session.

Modernization of the anti-trust laws, approaching the problem of monopoly from new angles, asked by President Roosevelt in his "fireside chat" October 12th, will be embodied in recommendations to be laid before Congress by agencies which for some time have been engaged in a study of the subject.

Administration officials long have been dissatisfied with the present anti-trust statutes under which, it is said, the Department of Justice has no satisfactory standards by which cases may be selected for prosecution, or by which the success of any given prosecution may be predicted with assurance; business enterprise has no safe standards by which it may determine in advance the validity of concerted action, even when the principal purpose is to eliminate waste or reduce costs of production or distribution; and the Government is unable to give commitments as to any combination, because the confusion of precedents and policy is such that a position taken in one case may prove an embarrassment in others.

The wage-and-hour bill, to be taken up early in the session, passed the Senate last session.

Divided on Film Inquiry

The calling of the special session seven weeks in advance of the regular meeting could afford sponsors of the Congressional investigation of the motion picture industry an opportunity to press their measure. So far, there has been no discussion of such a step but, it is expected, there will be considerable free time during the session for the discussion of matters not on the legislative program.

Sentiment with respect to the making of an investigation is sharply divided in Washington. It is not believed that the Administration would favor an inquiry of either films or broadcasting in an election year, particularly as it will depend largely upon both agencies to carry to the country its campaign for support of the farm program and other policies.

In order to prevent Congress from "getting out of hand" and taking up controversial questions, the Administration leadership will seek to "whip" its legislation into shape so that it may be brought up without the idle periods which marked the last session.

Examination Asked In Century Action

The Century Circuit, Inc., has been ordered by New York Supreme Court Justice Charles Paletti to submit to an examination before trial of the conspiracy action brought by Rockbeach, Inc., against Century, Columbia Pictures, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, Big-U Film Exchanges, Inc., RKO Distributing Corporation and the United Artists Corporation.

In the order, Judge Paletti instructed that Fred Schwartz, assistant treasurer of Century, should appear for the examination.

The Rockbeach company charges the defendants conspired to have pictures shown at the Century's Central Theatre, Cedarhurst, before exhibition at the Rockbeach house, the Gem, Far Rockaway. A permanent injunction and damages are asked.

T. A. M. Craven of the Federal Communication Commission said in Washington this week that the United States delegation to the Inter-American radio conference at Havana would seek a general North American agreement concerning the allocation of broadcast frequencies, in addition to a Pan-American agreement on the band between 1,400 and 1,600 kilocycles.

Start Testimony In Boston Case

The taking of depositions was started in Boston Monday in the United States district court there in the anti-trust action against major distributors, the Maine and New Hampshire and M. A. Shea circuits, instigated by Morse and Rothenberg, New England independent theatre operators.

Gabriel L. Hess, attorney for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was questioned Monday and Louis Weinberg, in charge of circuit sales for Columbia, was scheduled for an early hearing.

Next week, counsel for the plaintiffs will attempt to get the depositions of the following during the New York session: Adolph Zukor, Neil F. Agnew, Norman Collyer, Leon Netter, and J. J. Unger of Paramount; Nicholas M. Schenck, David Bernstein, William F. Rodgers and E. A. Schiller of Loew's; Joseph M. Schenck, Sidney R. Kent, John D. Clark and Felix Jenkins of 20th Century-Fox; H. M. Warner, Joseph Bernhard and Gradwell Sears of Warners; George J. Schaefer and Lloyd Wright of United Artists; R. H. Cochrane, Willard McKay and James R. Grainger of Universal; Harry Cohn and Abe Montague of Columbia.

The plaintiff circuit charges that the defendants acted as a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade, as a result of which Morse and Rothenberg were unable to obtain any product whatever for six theatres.

The houses are the Arcadia in Portsmouth, N. H.; Park and Colonial in Nashua, N. H.; Rialto, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Cameo, Newburgh, N. Y.; and the Capitol, Elizabeth, N. J.

Action on Appeal Still Undecided

The question of whether to appeal from the decision handed down in the Dallas conspiracy action against the Interstate Circuit and large distributors was still undecided this week.

New York attorneys for the distributors planned to confer this week on a possible course of action against the ruling, which upheld the right of distributors to enter into contracts, setting forth admission prices and establishing clearance periods, but at the same time, stipulated that such contracts could not be entered into as the result of agreements or conspiracy among distributors.

Columbia, Loew Dividends

Dividends were declared this week by the boards of Columbia Pictures and Loew's, Inc.

Columbia will pay 68¾ cents per share on the $2.75 convertible preferred stock, on November 15th, to stockholders of record on November 3rd.

Loew's voted a regular quarterly dividend of $1.62½ on the $6.50 cumulative preferred, payable November 15th to stockholders of record on October 29th. Loew common stockholders are awaiting action on their next dividend, on November 3rd. They received $8.50 for the fiscal year ended August 30th.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

A Dangerous Satire

The fate of about 90 per cent of Hollywood's most important names, personalities earning from $100,000 to $500,000 a year, is in the hands of a small group of press agents called "Publicity Directors." They're an intelligent, mild mannered lot who expect and get little thanks for gilding ex-waitresses and making geniuses out of pickle salesmen. It's an axiom of the studios that nobody loves the press agent.

Until recently that attitude was confined pretty much to the studios. But of late it has been coming into the open, where it is evident that it can and will do irreparable harm to the industry, stars, directors and most of all the publicity directors.

A few months ago, "A Star Is Born" thrust a vicious caricature of the press agent on to the international conscience. The press agent in "Stand-In" was a panderer, drunk and vulgarian.

Most exhibitors know the press agents only by name. But long and intimate association with such serious minded and diplomatic workers as Harry Brand, Howard Strickling, Eddie Selzer, Jock Lawrence, Russell Birdwell, Frank Whitbeck, Chris Dunphy and fellows like Clarence Logan, Don MacElwaine, Carlisle Jones and Johnny Miles, shows them to be gentlemen of integrity whose standards would compare with those of any picked group of professional man.

There is no doubt that they deeply resent the insulting ribbing that recently has been theirs. In time, they undoubtedly will do something about it in their own efficient and convincing way.

11 Films Start

Eleven pictures started in the week. Eight were finished. Current indications are that there is quality in both the new and completed work.

Monogram started three. "Danger Valley," which R. N. Bradbury is directing, will present Jack Randall, Lois Wilde, Charles King, Earl Dwire, Jimmy Aubrey and Ernie Adams. Featured players in "Boy of the Streets" are Jackie Cooper, Maurice O'Connor and Gordon Oliver. William Nigh is directing. The cast for "The County Fair" includes John Arledge, J. Farrell MacDonald, Fuzzy Knight, James Butler and Mary Lou Lender. Howard Bretherton is directing.

Two started at MGM. With Clarence Brown directing, "Benefits Forgot" will return Walter Huston to the screen in company with Beulah Bondi, Charles Coburn, Ted Healy, Charley Grapewin, Guy Kibbee, Ann Rutherford and Leatrice Joy Gilbert.

GEORGE RECTOR HAS HIS INNING

Emanuel Cohen, in the vernacular, "threw" a party for the celebrated George Rector. The telegraphic invitations were signed by Mae West.

As is usual in such events, the lion of the occasion, Mr. Rector, wandered about like a lost soul. Once in a while, it seemed, he was introduced to somebody or was posed for a picture with someone because it would be good publicity in Cincinnati.

The party was called for 5:00 o'clock and just as soon as anyone came in he or she began looking for Miss West. But Mae wasn't there. She did not make the grand entrance until about 6:30 and then "was so glad to have all you folks come up and see me."

But Mr. Rector was not to be denied. He had his inning when he put together Crepe Suzette a la Rector. The demonstration of skill and finesse of a master, and his line of patter, left little doubt among the guests that Mr. Rector's reputation as the greatest host New York ever knew was entirely correct.

Important players in "A Matter of Pride" are Frank Morgan, John Beal, Florence Rice, Janet Beecher, Cora Witherspoon, Erik Rhodes, E. E. Clive, Herman Bing and Barnett Parker. William Thiele is the director.

Crosby in Policeman Film

For Paramount release, Major Pictures started "The Badge of Policeman O'Roon," which Frank Tuttle is directing. It will feature Bing Crosby, Mary Carlisle, Beatrice Lillie and Andy Devine.

Under its own sponsorship Paramount started "They Knew What Happened." The key players are Lew Ayers, Louise Campbell, Roscoe Karns, Virginia Weidler and Edgar Kennedy. James Hogan is directing.

"Wild Horse Rodeo," Republic, will feature the "Three Mesquiteers," Robert Livingston, Ray Corrigan and Max Terhune. George Sherman is directing.

With H. Bruce Humberstone directing, Twentieth Century-Fox started "Checkers." Jane Withers is starred, supported by Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel and Alan Dinehart.

Two Finished by MGM

MGM completed two productions. "The Four Marys" will present Myrna Loy, Rosalind Russell, Franchot Tone, Walter Pidgeon, Nana Bryant, Leonard Penn, Ruth Hussey and Rita Johnson. Richard Thorpe directed.

Judy Garland, Sophie Tucker, Mickey Rooney, Ronald Sinclair, C. Aubrey Smith, Forrester, Harvey, Elisha Cook, Jr., and Lionel Belmore will be seen in "Thoroughbreds Don't Cry," which Alfred E. Green directed.

Two pictures likewise were checked off the active shooting list at Paramount. Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray are starred in "True Confession," and John Barrymore, Porter Hall, Edgar Kennedy, Richard Carle, John T. Murry, Fritz Feld, Una Merkel and Tommy Dugan are featured. Wesley Ruggles directed. The cast for "Daughter of Shanghai" lists Anna May Wong, Philip Ahn, Charles Bickford, Larry Crabbe, Cecil Cunningham, Evelyn Brent, Anthony Quinn, John Patterson, Arthur Hohl, Frank Sully and Mae Busch. Robert Florey directed.

"Second Honeymoon" was finished at Twentieth Century-Fox. The cast, headed by Tyrone Power and Loretta Young, also includes Stuart Erwin, Claire Trevor, Marjorie Weaver, Lyle Talbot, J. Edward Bromberg, Louise Henry and Jayne Regan. Walter Lang directed.

At Columbia "American Legion" moved on to the cutting rooms. It features Mary Russell, Don Terry, Marc Lawrence, Robert Warwick, Dick Curtis, Arthur Loft, George McKay, Ivan Miller and Jimmy Hollywood. C. C. Coleman, Jr., directed.

Universal finished "Tim Tyler's Luck." Directed by Ford Beebe and Wyndham Giddings, it will present Frankie Thomas, Frances Robinson, Norman Willis, Anthony Warde, Earl Douglas, Alan Gregg, Edward Parker, Everett Brown, Kenneth Harlan, Jack Mulhall, Pat O'Brien, William Benedict and Al Shean.

Something New

There's something new under the Hollywood sun. Under the sponsorship of Jed Buell, long associated with Mack Sennett, an all-Negro musical western, "Harlem on the Prairie," is in production.

Already the subject of much speculation, the picture, which is, to say the least, a novel departure, will star dark Herbert Jeffries, formerly a singer with Les Hite's orchestra, and will feature the Negro comedians Miller and Manten.

Lew Porter, composer of the current hits, "Frijoles" and "Vagabond Dreams Come True," has been engaged to direct the music, which will feature two of his numbers and several other tunes, for which the background music will be song by the colored quartet, The Four Tones, Maceo Sheffield, well known Negro theatrical producer, has been signed to supervise.

'PULLING' OF LA GUARDIA 'TIME' PICTURE IS DENIED

Issue Featuring Mayor Will Go Into RKO's New York Theatres as Scheduled

Published reports of "a furor" reputedly created by the release of March of Time's feature on New York's mayor, Fiorello LaGuardia, candidate for reelection, dropped into the category of exploded rumors this week when Nate J. Blumberg, RKO theatre head, announced that the film would be exhibited in local RKO houses on schedule—one week before the mayoralty election.

Charges "Claque" Used

The New York World-Telegram, reporting on a broadcast made by Mr. Mahoney Tuesday night, said the Democratic candidate for mayor had charged that "Mayor LaGuardia used 50 policemen for a claque when the March of Time movie of the mayor's accomplishments was shown at Radio City.

"He ordered upwards of 50 patrolmen on duty inside the theatre with instructions to organize as a cheering squad. These men met every morning at the corner of 50th Street and Fifth Avenue and were paid the price of admission to the theatre. At 11 P. M. they met at the same corner, turned in their stubs and were discharged. What a spectacle for the Police Department of the City of New York."

The declaration by RKO's Mr. Blumberg came as an answer to an article published in the New York Herald-Tribune in which it was said RKO officials "had begged to be freed from handling the LaGuardia film through fear of Tammany reprisals."

Louis de Rochemont, head of March of Time, likewise expressed wonderment over the source of the newspaper story and added, "So far as I know, there's nothing to it." He also explained the opening of the picture at the Music Hall in New York was delayed for a week because of the fact the feature playing in the theatre at the time, "Lost Horizon," was so long it made it difficult to fit the reel into the program.

On this point, the Herald-Tribune said:

"When the feature (March of Time) was scheduled for its premiere performance at the Radio City Music Hall, in Rockefeller Center, it was reported, inspectors of the Manhattan Department of Buildings threatened to close the theatre because of technical violations of the building law." This Samuel Fassler, Manhattan commissioner of buildings, vehemently denied.

Played One Week

Both Mr. Blumberg and Mr. de Rochemont said the picture played one week at the Music Hall and that was all the time planned for it. Motion Picture Daily reported last Saturday: "The picture was withdrawn . . . after completing seven days of a 14-day run."

Mr. de Rochemont further discounted the reports of threatened reprisals by explaining that when the LaGuardia picture was made "I went down to Tammany Hall and argued and talked to have their side of the story presented in pictures, but they flatly refused. They said they wanted nothing to do with pictures."

March of Time planned, Mr. de Rochemont said, to present films on both Mr. LaGuardia and Jeremiah T. Mahoney, the Democratic candidate who will oppose Mr. LaGuardia at the polls.

To substantiate his assertion that there had been no delay in presentation of the film, Mr. de Rochemont explained that under the contract with the Music Hall March of Time reels cannot be shown at the Embassy, Broadway newsreel house, until the 15th day after they open at the Music Hall. The picture opened at the Embassy Thursday and will go into the RKO neighborhood houses next week, Mr. Blumberg said.

Tammany, when the reel was first released, "kidded" both March of Time and Mr. La Guardia for the "burlesque" but now, according to the headquarters of both candidates, motion pictures are going to be employed in the campaigns. However, definite plans on the type of pictures to be exhibited at clubs and street corners were reported undetermined as yet.

Little Newsreel Attention

Although March of Time officials, in releasing their LaGuardia picture, announced they believed the coming election held nation wide interest, the newsreels have given little or no space to the campaigns. William Montague, assignment editor for Paramount News, said his company had no plans for covering the campaigns. The policy of the newsreels generally is to stay away from local elections.

"Smashing Crime with Dewey," a political film describing the anti-racket activities of Thomas E. Dewey, candidate for district attorney of New York, already has made its appearance on street corners and will be shown up until Election Day.

Meanwhile, a theatrical and film division of the Non-Partisan Committe for the support of Mr. LaGuardia and Mr. Dewey has been formed in New York with Daniel Frohman as honorary chairman. Louis Nizer is chairman; Major Edward Bowes and Theresa Helburn, vice-chairman; J. Robert Rubin, treasurer, and Meyer W. Weisgal, secretary.

The membership includes George Abbott, Luther Adler, Richard Aldrich, Kelcey Allen, Maxwell Anderson, Helen Arthur, Brooks Atkinson, Edith Barrett, Norman Bel Geddes, Owen Davis, Crosby Gaige, Margalo Gillmore, Dorothy Gordon, George Heller, Arthur Hopkins, Lawrence Langner, Sam Levene, Philip Loeb, Leonard Lyons, Guthrie McClintic, Paul McGrath, Victor Moore, Clifford Odets, Donald Oenslager, Brock Pemberton, George Ross, Morris Ryskind, Sam Sax, Arthur Schwarz, Herman Shumlin, Leonard Sillman, Henry Travers, Richard Watts, Jr., and Rita Weiman.

The committee is planning a luncheon at Hotel Astor Monday.

Meadowcroft, Aid Of Edison, Is Dead

William Henry Meadowcroft, assistant and confidential secretary to Thomas A. Edison for a half a century, died of pneumonia last Thursday at his home in Boonton, New Jersey, after two years of failing health. He was 84 years old.

Mr. Meadowcroft was born in Manchester, England, May 29, 1853. He came to the United States in 1875 and became a law clerk and later was admitted to the bar. He followed a member of the law firm he served into the newly formed Edison Electric Light Company, when the incandescent lamp was only two years old.

For one brief interval Mr. Meadowcroft left Edison's service. That was in the middle '90's when he conceived a project to make illuminated signs with electric light bulbs. He made one such sign, the first in the world, for the New York Electrical Club. Mr. Edison did not hold any enthusiasm for the project. Mr. Meadowcroft left to organize a company to do it himself. Then he found that the Edison lamp works would not supply him with the small bulbs he required He quit and went back to his job.

Many years after, only a year or two before Mr. Edison died, he and his faithful Mr. Meadowcroft were returning from a New York dinner. Mr. Edison ordered the car to turn into Broadway and they rode the length of the theatrical section, ablaze with illuminated signs. As they swung toward the ferry, Mr. Edison nudged Mr. Meadowcroft:

"Bill—there was something to that damfool idea of yours, after all."

Mr. Meadowcroft was the philosophic sort to see nothing important but the humor of it.

Mrs. Meadowcroft died in 1918. They had two sons, William Miron and Charles Harry. William followed his father into the Edison service and Charles became a telephone engineer. Mr. Meadowcroft was buried Monday last in Boonton's Greenwood Cemetery.

W. E. Divestment Of Erpi Is Begun

In line with Western Electric's plans to reconstruct Electrical Research Products, Inc., D. C. Collins, vice-president of ERPI, announced Wednesday that effective November 1st ERPI's operating department under L. W. Conrow, general operating manager, will take over the sale of motion picture theatre service contracts in addition to his present duties which heretofore have been concentrated upon service inspection.

In effect a new division is set up which will handle not only actual servicing and equipment installation, as heretofore, but also sales of servicing contracts to exhibitors. It is the organization which will exist if and when Western Electric decides to abandon equipment sales through ERPI, in line with Western Electric's reputed intention to divest itself of ERPI.

The organization to put into effect this new phase of the operating department's duties will be headed by Bert Sanford, Jr., as service sales director; George L. Carrington, operating manager, and Stanley W. Stand, staff representative. In charge of and responsible for sales and operations will be the following district managers: L. J. Hacking, Boston; W. W. Simons, New York; E. V. Wilschke, Philadelphia; A. Fiore, Atlanta; R. Hilton, Chicago; O. Hunt, Kansas City; also F. C. Dickley, Detroit; H. W. Dodge, general manager of the western district, and W. E. Woodward, regional sales director in the Southeast.

Robert Taplinger, who has been signed as director of publicity and radio at Warner Brothers studios, and Thomas Fizdale, who has taken over the offices of Robert S. Taplinger, Inc., were to be guests of honor at a cocktail party Thursday evening at Yvres de Villiers' penthouse atop the Columbia Broadcasting Building in New York.

FILMS NOT FINANCING BROADWAY, BUT SUPPORT WRITER DEVELOPMENT

Companies, Except Columbia, Refuse to Back Plays, but Bureau to Aid Young Writers Will Be Continued

The large film producers evidently have no intention of returning to their former role of "angel" on the wholesale for the Broadway stage, but they definitely do intend to finance and otherwise encourage new playwrights, with the continued purpose of subsidizing a source of material for their film making in Hollywood.

Columbia Pictures' announcement of its re-entrance into play production has failed to re-arouse the interest of its film competitors in the stage, in which several of the majors were active up to a season ago.

However, all the large companies, save United Artists, again announced this week their continued interest in and financial support of the Bureau of New Plays for developing stories and writing talent in colleges.

As a further step in its play producing plans, Columbia declared this week that it not only is ready to enter actual play producing on Broadway this season, but the company also is prepared to sign the "Minimum Basic Agreement" of the Dramatists Guild. It was the increased demands of the playwrights of the Guild through the Minimum Basic Agreement that caused Hollywood producers to withdraw from the Broadway stage. The large companies, last season, openly declared that they would refrain from financing plays after the Guild had adopted the new basic contract giving playwright members of the Guild considerable additional rights, privileges and fees in the sale to Hollywood of their manuscripts.

Contracts with Playwrights

On Broadway it was said this week that several producers were somewhat bewildered over Columbia's reference to the "signing" of the Guild's minimum agreement, inasmuch as play-producing contracts are not made with the Guild but between producers and the playwrights themselves. The general assumption, however, was that Columbia would agree to the Guild's terms in any producing it undertook.

That Columbia "is serious" about its plans to produce Broadway shows, and already has obtained options on a number of plays, was disclosed last Friday by Jack Cohn, Columbia's vice-president, as he sailed from New York on the S. S. Normandie for England, Paris and Prague. Mr. Cohn announced that D. A. Doran had been named head of Columbia's new play-producing department.

Comedies Wanted

Mr. Cohn said that his company was not concerned with the attitude of other film companies toward the Guild's basic agreement: "We can't wait for the author problem to be straightened out. We've got to resort to every means possible to get new plays and talent." He added that the company is particularly in need of comedies. "Everyone in Columbia is striving to make the company the House of Joy," he said.

Additional plays will be inspected by Mr. Cohn in England, where there is also a possibility that Columbia will produce.

Spokesmen for Paramount, Warners, MGM, Twentieth Century-Fox, RKO and Universal, the other companies which discontinued play financing in protest against the new guild contract, were emphatic this week in declaring that their attitude had undergone no change and no production financing would be undertaken by them during this Broadway season.

Play Competition Opens

Last Friday marked the official opening of the second play competition of the Bureau of New Plays for awards, fellowships and scholarships. The Bureau, headed by Theresa Helburn, is sponsored by seven large picture companies, and is aided by an advisory council consisting of Walter Prichard Eaton, of Yale; Frederick H. Koch, of the University of North Carolina, and Kenneth Rowe, of the University of Michigan.

At the meeting last Friday, at Bureau headquarters, Radio City, New York, the board of directors, representing the seven major producers, "discussed and unanimously approved" the Bureau's policy "to encourage creative writing for the theatre by professional advice as well as financial assistance." At the meeting were: Marion Avery, Columbia Pictures; J. Robert Rubin, MGM; Russell Holman, Paramount; Leda Bauer, RKO Radio; Twentieth Century-Fox, Edwin P. Kilroe; Charles Beahan, Universal; and Jacob Wilk, for Warner Brothers.

"Close continued cooperation with the playwriting faculties at colleges had led Theresa Helburn and the board of directors to see that an additional step in bridging the distance between the academic and the professional theatre would be very valuable to students in playwriting," said a statement, which added:

"Therefore, in addition to the awards, the directors will make every effort to see that winners of awards and honorable mention will have practical contact with production in the theatre."

The intention is to secure the opportunity for these promising students to attend rehearsals of professional productions and to study professional production problems and their solution. An experiment in that direction was made during the spring and summer with a few of the winners of awards and honorable mention who watched rehearsals, or, introduced by the Bureau of New Plays, were employed as stage managers or extras.

"The directors of the Bureau," said Miss Helburn, "hope that this will lead in their future plans to a practical course in production for exceptional students selected by the advisory committee in cooperation with the heads of the college departments. For these students, conferences with leaders in various departments of the theatre—directors, scenic designers, actors—would be arranged, and their work would include actual attendance at production rehearsals. Particular attention would be focused on audience problems, which are hardest of all for the beginner in playwriting to realize."

Anyone who has attended college as graduate or undergraduate student since Sept. 1, 1931, as well as those now enrolled as graduate or undergraduate students, is eligible this year.

$500 to Each of Six Best

Awards of $500 will again be made to the authors of the six best plays submitted. At the discretion of the Bureau of New Plays, and on the basis of future promise and financial need, these awards may be increased to scholarship awards of $1,250 or to fellowship awards of from $1,500 to $2,500. More awards may be granted if the material submitted justifies it, or, if in the opinion of the judges the material submitted does not justify the full quota of awards, the Bureau of New Plays reserves the right to grant only as many as it recommends.

The recipients of such scholarship or fellowship awards will be expected to submit at least two plays within the year's tenure of the scholarship or fellowship or within six months thereafter, and in case of production of one or both of such plays, part of the scholarship or fellowship awards shall be considered as advance on royalties to be returned to the Bureau of New Plays for the maintenance of awards.

The Bureau of New Plays was founded May 4, 1936, by the seven film companies "to discover and encourage young playwriting talent for the theatre and to assist authors, not only with financial aid but with criticism and advice, toward a professional goal at a difficult period of their careers."

1936 Best Money Year Since '29, U. S. Reports on National Income

The American public last year had more money to spend on motion pictures and other amusements than in any year since 1929, it is indicated by the annual report on national income just issued by the Department of Commerce.

The national income in 1936, the department announced last week, amounted to $63,800,000,000, as compared with $55,000,000,000 in the preceding year and, it was commented, "this gain of nearly $9,000,000,000, or 16 per cent, was the largest, both absolutely and relatively, for any year of recovery."

The department's conclusions support the Treasury's experience with the admissions tax, collections from which in 1936 totaled very close to $18,500,000, a gain of more than $2,000,000 over 1935, while still further improvement in the national income this year is forecastable from the gain of more than $1,500,000 in admission taxes collected in the first eight months as compared with the corresponding period in 1936.

RELIEF IS SEEN FROM U. S. BUSINESS RULES

Security Act Report for Half Year; Court Upholds Companies on Trade Secrets and Right to Judicial Review

Two decisions made last week, one by the courts, the other by the government, affect the business procedure of motion picture and other lines under New Deal "alphabetical" regulations. In the first instance, the District of Columbia court of appeals halted the Securities and Exchange Commission from disclosing information supplied by reporting companies. In the other, exhibitor, producer, distributor and other employers subject to the old-age pension regulations of the Social Security Act were given a measure of relief from the heavy bookkeeping task imposed by the law, through an order issued by Commissioner of Internal Revenue Guy T. Helvering countermanding the requirement that employers file during October a quarterly information report for the period from July 1st to September 30th.

Instead of being required to report the amount of wages paid to each employee during the past three months, the Internal Revenue Bureau will permit the filing of a report next January, covering the period from July 1st to December 31st.

The relaxation of the bureau's regulations was seen as affording a highly desired measure of relief from an onerous bookkeeping task imposed upon employers by the law, which requires periodic reports in which must be listed separately wage data for every person employed for any time whatever during the period covered. Whether the policy of having these reports made at semi-annual intervals instead of quarterly, as first required, will be continued was not made known, however.

It was pointed out by Commissioner Helvering that the new order applies only to the one report, and that all other returns required by the act must be filed as scheduled.

Judicial Review Preserved

Motion picture and other corporations subject to the control of the Securities and Exchange Commission may not be deprived by the SEC of their right to a judicial review of orders requiring the disclosure of intimate information, publication of which might result in irreparable injury to them, it was held by the District of Columbia court of appeals on September 30th.

By its decision, the court nullified an order of the SEC prohibiting appeals from rulings that information regarding trade secrets, gross sales, salaries, and the like must be disclosed by corporations filing registration statements and annual reports.

The action of the court was of particular interest to motion picture companies, several of which last year sought unsuccessfully to induce the commission to treat their salary and other figures confidentially.

Three Companies Appeal

Court review of the SEC's policy was sought by three companies protesting orders that they must disclose information which they feared would result in damage to them. The appeal to the court followed rejection by the SEC of applications that such information be accorded confidential treatment, the companies contending that compulsory disclosure of the data would constitute unreasonable search and seizure, would amount to revelation of trade secrets, and was not in the public interest, and that the SEC's orders were arbitrary and capricious and without warrant of law.

Criticizing the SEC's policy and procedure, the court in its opinion held that when it is remembered that Congress, in express words, recognized the property right in trade secrets and in information which it is not in the public interest to reveal, and prohibited their disclosure, it is difficult to follow the SEC's argument based on the theory that the protection of this property right is subject to the unfettered decision of the SEC, or the still more far-reaching argument that Congress, in the language used in the act, purposely denied the right of appeal.

No Large Stock Trades

From its own headquarters in Washington, the Securities and Exchange Commission continued reporting on stock and other corporate changes in motion picture and other corporations, reporting last week that trading by officers and directors of motion picture companies in the securities of their own organizations in August was light.

No large trades were reported in August in the securities of any of the film concerns for which returns have so far been made, the most important disclosure made by the SEC being in the release of a series of reports on International Cinema, which had been held for several months for correction, and which showed that in July, 1936, H. T. James, Los Angeles, relinquished to the company 40,000 shares of common stock held through Regan, Day, Inc., and in May, 1937, disposed of the remaining 200,000 shares which he held.

Further liquidation of the Twentieth Century-Fox securities held by the Chase National Bank, New York, under escrow agreement, which it has been disposing of gradually, was shown in the sale during August of 379 shares of common and 758 shares of preferred. At the close of the month, it was shown, the bank still held 345,732 shares of common and 691,664 shares of preferred stock.

In Columbia Pictures, the SEC reported, Jack Cohn, vice-president, New York, acquired 12 shares of common and 773 common voting trust certificates, and at the end of August held 529 shares of common and 39,707 certificates.

In Educational Pictures, Norman C. Nicholson, New York, acquired 250 shares of common and 557 warrants for common, which comprised his total holdings in those stocks at the close of the month.

Disposition of 600 shares of Loew's, Inc., common by David Bernstein, New York, and 25 shares by J. Robert Rubin also was reported. At the close of August, Mr. Bernstein still held 8,680 shares and Mr. Rubin 16,958 shares.

The only other transaction reported was the disposition of 700 shares of Pathe common by J. Henry Briggs, New York, who at the end of August held 100 shares of the stock.

CBS Elects Colin, Dean

At a meeting of the board of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., last week, Ralph F. Colin, general counsel of the corporation was elected a director and S. R. Dean, previously a comptroller, was named an assistant treasurer.

Universal Revenue Increases $400,000 For 9-Week Period

An increase of $400,000 in revenue for the first nine weeks of the 1937-38 season as compared to the same period last year, was reported this week for Universal by R. H. Cochrane, president.

In accordance with the studio's plan to release 12 top budget features during the year, Mr. Cochrane said, Universal has for each of the next three months a big picture on the same production basis as "100 Men and a Girl."

The first of these is "Merry-Go-Round of 1938," a B. G. DeSylva production; the second, another DeSylva production, "You're a Sweetheart," starring Alice Faye, and the third, "Mad About Music," in production and starring Deanna Durbin.

During the week ending September 25th, the gross receipts of the company were at the highest figure since 1929, it was announced. The increase was attributed mainly to "100 Men and a Girl."

Rufus Le Maire, executive assistant to Charles R. Rogers, Universal vice-president in charge of production, resigned Monday, although his contract still had a year and a half to run.

Fred S. Meyer, general studio manager, will leave Universal when his contract expires Saturday.

New Canadian Company

Distribution plans for the Universal product in Canada have been completed with the creation of Empire-Universal Films, Ltd., through the amalgamation of Empire Films, Ltd., and Canadian Universal Films, Ltd. Oscar R. Hanson, who formed the Empire company five years ago, is president of the new corporation.

The vice-president is Paul Nathanson, son of N. L. Nathanson, president of Famous Players Canadian Corporation. Claire Hague, general manager of Canadian Universal for the last 25 years, remains as New York representative for Universal.

A. W. Perry, general manager of Empire, has become general manager of Empire-Universal Films, while the new general sales manager is I. H. Allen, formerly Montreal branch manager of Empire. A. Leduc succeeds Allen as manager of the Montreal office.

Sales managers for Universal product in the six Canadian key centers have been appointed as follows: Toronto, Sam Brint; Montreal, L. Rosefield; Winnipeg, F. L. Vaughan; Calgary, J. A. Wilson; Vancouver, W. B. Adamson; St. John, W. A. Sault.

The following have been named as branch managers of Empire-Universal Films, Ltd.: Toronto, Archie Laurie; Montreal, O. Leduc; Winnipeg, D. V. Rosen; Calgary, J. Palansky; Vancouver, J. E. Archer; St. John, G. M. Hoyt. These managers will have direct charge of sales of Republic, Educational, G. B., Associated British and Herbert Wilcox Pictures, General Films Distributors and Capitol Films, the last five named being British.

TELEVISION MOVES ONTO LARGER SCREEN AND INTO AIR CHANNELS

RCA Gives First Public Demonstration, on a Screen Increased in Size to Three by Four Feet

Three hundred film technicians, inventors and laboratory workers returned last weekend to their test tubes and work benches from the fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, in New York, after having seen television "grown up," in size, if not in technical perfection or commercial practicability.

After four days of technical discussion of new developments in practice and procedure in the mechanical phases of production, distribution and exhibition, the SMPE conventioneers, on the invitation of David Sarnoff, chairman of Radio Corporation, turned their attention, finally, to television. In a 30-minute program put on by Mr. Sarnoff in the towers of the RCA Building, at Rockefeller Center, the SMPE witnessed the growth of the budding media from its former screen size of seven-and-one-half by 10 inches, as shown on November 6, 1936, to the much larger screen size of three by four feet.

It was the first public demonstration of the new RCA cathode-ray projection tube creating a larger picture, and took place as the NBC television transmitter on the Empire State Building sent a program, received from the National Broadcasting studios, back to the RCA Building and the SMPE audience.

The NBC television transmitter was only recently equipped with a new antenna system, advanced by RCA engineers as "materially improving" the field-test transmissions.

A new tube described by RCA as being of "intense brilliance" producing black-and-white images also was demonstrated for the first time.

Mr. Sarnoff addressed the SMPE engineers before the demonstration. He said "television is today an unfinished product," and traced its progress from June 29, 1936, when RCA "brought television out of the laboratory" and "into the open air." "Definite and promising achievements" have been accomplished in the 16 months, Mr. Sarnoff said.

"Where one year ago each separate image was 'scanned' with 343 lines, today we are scanning with 441 lines," he continued, adding: "This standard of picture-definition is now generally regarded as satisfactory.

Color and Brilliance Changed

"During the past year the color of television pictures has been changed from green, to black-and-white, and their brilliance greatly increased. The size of the picture has been increased from approximately five-by-eight inches to seven-by-ten inches—almost double the area. In addition, important progress has been made in projecting television pictures of approximately three-by-four feet onto a screen," which was the screen size witnessed by the SMPE conventioneers.

Mr. Sarnoff disclosed that "the broadcasting service of RCA—The National Broadcasting Company—has also made significant progress, in the development of television programs," referring to lighting and make-up, sound effects, scenic design and studio architecture.

"New techniques for the writer, the director, and the actor are being explored" by NBC, he added, admitting that "practical experiments with outside television pickup equipment will get under way within the next few weeks."

While forced to "borrow much from the stage, the screen, and sound (radio) broadcasting," Mr. Sarnoff said that television, in addition, "must blaze many new trails in order to develop a form of presentation fitted both to the scope and limitations of the new medium."

Other Obstacles Faced

And while "the technical problems yet confronting us are formidable," he added, "they are not the only obstacles which lie in the path of television's commercial introduction to the public on a general scale. In evolving a satisfactory program technique we have already learned that television programs will cost much more money than sound broadcast (radio) programs. If television programs are to be provided through the support of commercial sponsors, advertisers must first be furnished with sufficient circulation to justify their expenditures. Here we have the dual problem of simultaneously creating a cause and effect: we must create large audiences in order to support costly programs, and we must build costly programs in order to attract large audiences.

"To meet the requirements of a nationwide television service, vast sums of money must still be invested in new facilities," the RCA chairman told the SMPE conventioneers. "The present range of useful television signals is less than 50 miles," he added. "The creation of even limited networks, with connection by coaxial

ACADEMY ANSWERS SMPE CHARGES

The 42nd semi-annual convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers reached adjournment at New York's Hotel Pennsylvania, last Friday, without a word from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, in Hollywood, on the SMPE's charges, made on the convention floor, that the Academy unnecessarily is saddling exhibitors with a bill for $1,000,000 to meet the Academy's new standards in projection apertures. Later, however, Major Nathan Levinson, vice chairman of the Academy's Research Council, asserted that the "million-dollar" cost for projection aperture changes is "grossly exaggerated," and explained that if the change is approved, adoption would be optional with each exhibitor.

New officers were elected and some 50 technical papers and discussions filled a five-day program. The convention voted to meet in the spring at the Wardman-Park Hotel, Washington, in April.

FCC Takes First Step to Assign Specific Service Channels, Which Would Become Effective October 13, 1938

Taking its first step in anticipation of the advent of commercial television, the Federal Communications Commission on Monday assigned to that service specific channels in the ultra-high frequencies.

The placement of television this week was part of a revision of distribution of channels to various services on the frequencies between 10 and 300,000 kilocycles, adopted by the Commission October 13th to become effective on that date in 1938.

No changes were made in the assignments between 10 and 25,000 kilocycles, which include the broadcast band and frequencies assigned to motion picture producers and to some short-wave broadcasting stations. The channels between 25,000 and 27,000 kilocycles were somewhat changed, and assigned to broadcast and Government use, and those between 27,000 and 28,000 kilocycles were assigned to general communication and Government use.

In announcing its first permanent assignment of frequencies in the ultra-high frequencies, the commission set aside the 33,540 and 35,540 kilocycle channels for use of motion picture producers and geophysical services, and set aside seven channels between 44,000 and 108,000 kilocycles and 12 channels between 156,000 and 300,000 kilocycles for television. Each television channel is to be six megacycles (6,000 kilocycles) in width, and provides for both the picture broadcast and the accompanying synchronized sound.

The commission also set aside 75 channels between 41,020 and 43,980 kilocycles for regular broadcast stations and 16 channels between 30,830 and 39,820 kilocycles for relay broadcast stations, and in the near future will consider the needs and requirements for high frequency broadcast stations using both conventional and frequency modulation, as well as the needs of educational broadcast systems.

The new schedule of frequencies was based on studies which have been made during the period since extensive hearings were held on the subject in June, 1936.

In its report designating the new assignments, the commission declared its firm intention, first, of keeping television on an experimental basis until it has been perfected and, second, of then preventing the creation of any monopoly in television broadcasting. Television stations licensed after the new allocations become effective will be assigned to channels on an experimental basis with the same requirements as are now impose which will be continued until remaining technical problems have been solved and standard. of transmission and reception are adopted.

"The action taken by the commission today with respect to television is merely one step of many which are required before television ca become a reliable service to the public," it was explained. "Some of these many steps must be taken by the industry in the development of proper standards which in turn the commission must approve before television can technically

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

While shells sang overhead and snipers' bullets ripped through tree branches, Melanie Pflaum, United Press correspondent in Madrid, crouched in a Loyalist trench opposite the Casa del Campo and watched a company of young Red militiamen take their "screen tests."

A motion picture newsreel cameraman was taking action pictures of helmeted soldiers rushing from their dug-outs supposedly to go "over the top" in an attack.

A captain personally selected each man for the scene.

"We always pick the best-looking ones," he explained to the reporter, "so the American girls will see in the movies how handsome our young Loyalists are."

Samuel Goldwyn is happy to announce an addition to his huge production staff in Hollywood, in the person of Irving Sindler, whose title is no less than "Yowl-Shusher." Mr. Sindler at this moment is yowl-shushing some 300 cats who are appearing with the Roaring Ritz Brothers in Mr. Goldwyn's "Goldwyn Follies."

The cats, however, while a part of "Goldwyn's Follies," are, by no means, follies of Mr. Goldwyn, but rather of the Ritzes. The original script provided for only three cats, one each to be carried by the three brothers. In typical Ritz reasoning, they concluded that if three cats brought so many laughs in the picture, 300 would bring 100 times as many.

Adolphe Menjou, appearing in the film with the Ritzes, will never forgive them for their cat-fancying, for in order to make certain that the 300 cats follow Menjou in one scene, the director has Menjou's trouser cuffs sprinkled with fish-oil—Adolfe Menjou of such meticulous, such immaculate dress.

And now that the Jergens toilet lotion people, National Broadcasting Company and Radio-gossiper George Fischer have the Duke of Windsor heading up the motion picture business clear through from here to both Poles, it appears appropriate to report that our own Hollywood movie-writer Gene Towne brings back word from a tour through Europe that the Duke is "on the wagon," presumably, he added, an "inspiration" from his American Duchess, "Wally" Simpson. And Mrs. Duke of Windsor herself is making progress, Gene Towne adds. "She is plain," he explains, "and everywhere she goes women look at her and say, 'What has she got that I haven't got?'" (The answer to that, of course, is: A King of England!)

M. G. Shackelford, film salesman for Monogram working out of Kansas City, has returned from a trip in his territory to report that he had found the country's youngest theatre employee.

Dolores Neeley, sister of Glen Neeley, operator of the Empress theatre at Arma, Kansas, is 13 years young, and has been "on the job" as house cashier for her brother since she was ten. But, then, over in the Kentucky hill-billy mountain parts she'd be a grandmother already.

A striking instance of human courage is described with rare realism in a book written by John Farrow, motion picture director in Hollywood, and titled "Damien the Leper," about the life of Father Damien of Molokai and the leper colony of the South Seas. No priest ever returned from Molokai.

One of the most unusual incidents described by Mr. Farrow concerned the Provincial of Father Damien and his attempt to visit Father Damien at the time the law of isolation of the Molokai Leper Colony became strictly enforced. Damien had not seen anyone from the outside world for several months, and when the little steamer carrying the Provincial blew a blast, the priest rushed to its side in a small rowboat, navigated by some of the more fit lepers. But the Captain would neither allow the Provincial to go ashore, nor Damien to come aboard, reminding him of the new law.

The disappointed priest pleaded that all he wished was a few minutes in privacy with his Superior so that he could make his Confession. But the Captain said he had to obey the law.

"Then," said Damien from the bottom of the accomodation ladder, "I shall make my confession here."

The Provincial took his place at the rail above, and the hubbub of the ship's deck died down to silence. Below, the tiny craft was rising and falling with the motion of the water. And from it Father Damien made his confession. He died shortly thereafter—a leper.

Pennsylvania's most recent freakish censorial eccentricity, the banning of some so-called "political propaganda" features from Spain under the censorship law which has to do with morals alone, reminds of the classic example of something or other when one of the early Mickey Mouses rendered "Clarabelle Cow" attentatively engaged in reading Elinor Glyn's celebrated "Three Weeks." When the cartoon reached the movie houses of Pennsylvania, it caused such a rumpus among the "respectables" that it had to be immediately withdrawn. The clique which succeeded in banning the book as "obscene" did not like the idea of even an imaginary cow reading "such stuff."

The collective groups around outlying Palestine for some time had been furrowing their brows over the matter of motion pictures. The settlers had been feeling a strong desire to see a film occasionally. But the cinema was a luxury which the budget of the cultural committees could not meet. Finally, someone hit upon the idea of buying a motor lorry and projector for an iterant showhouse, and pro-rating the expenses monthly among the various "kibbutzim." Came the day for the first screening. There were many on hand who had not ever before seen a film, and others who had not attended a picture for many years.

The caravan made its first appearance at Givat Brenner. Practically all the 600 settlers had come to see Mickey Mouse, of ancient vintage (1929), but, still, Mickey Mouse. Mickey, however, and his "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" were not a roaring success. Mickey's Ali Baba, the thieves and even the camels made the initial mistake of speaking English and not providing Hebraic titles. The children, particularly, were under the impression that Mickey, Ali, thieves and even camels speak Hebrew.

Sam Goldwyn, in signing Pascha Heifetz, noted concert violinist, accomplished what several other producers, including himself, had failed to accomplish after numerous attempts. But Mr. Heifetz frankly admits that already he shivers with apprehension when he thinks about going before the camera. The fact of the matter is that Mr. Heifetz has the whole winter in which to shiver, for his picture for Mr. Goldwyn will not be produced until next spring.

The violinist has some pretty definite ideas about his picture work. He was asked, for example, by a New York Times reporter, would he object "if Robert Taylor should be allowed to play the 'love interest' in the film. Heifetz replied that Taylor could play the "love interest," "so long as he doesn't play the violin."

Mr. Heifetz was telling a group, which included Harpo Marx, that he was virtually supporting his family when he was only seven years old.

"And before that," cracked the flippant Harpo, "I guess you were just a bum."

In its quest for pictures of the Sino-Japanese War, Universal Newsreel arranged with a Chinese "free-lance" cameraman for the exclusive rights to any pictures which he takes in northern China. The agreement provides that the film be paid for by the foot, but there was no set figure on the amount to be paid.

The cameraman apparently is well aware of this lack of price provision in the agreement, for after shooting some 4,000 feet, he informed Universal's editor, Charles Ford, that the film would become their property at the rate of $5.50 per foot, and that they would have to buy the entire 4,000 feet—paying $22,000; and, getting enough film to clutter up the entire contents of five Universal newsreels.

"Price prohibitive," cabled Mr. Ford. So the Chinaman dropped his price to $1.50 a foot and allowed Universal to pick out 600 feet of the best of the lot.

IN THE COURTS

Paramount Asks Review Of Screen-Credit Verdict

Interpretation of the screen-credit clause of a contract between Paramount Productions and Walton Hall Smith, author, last week was asked of the supreme court, in Washington, by Paramount, appealing from a decision of the ninth circuit court of appeals in Southern California affirming a verdict of a lower court under which Mr. Smith was awarded $7,500 as damages.

In appealing to the Supreme Court attorneys for the company explained that a contract was entered into with Mr. Smith for the purchase of rights to his story, "Cruise to Nowhere," under which he was to be given credit on the film for any picture in which the story was used.

The company produced a film, "We're Not Dressing," which Mr. Smith claimed was adapted from his story, in which he was given no credit.

In defending the suit, the company claimed that while the story had originally been purchased for use as a background for a musical picture, it had been discarded as too heavy and a new story prepared by some six writers who were produced in court to testify they had never read or heard of the author's story, and the author accordingly was not entitled to credit.

MGM Hits Validity Of Copyright Laws

The constitutionality of Section Two of the United States Copyright Law in its relationship to unpublished manuscripts was challenged in the United States district court in New York last week by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, Culver Export Corporation, Loew's, Inc., and Frank Dolan, when they filed a general denial to the copyright infringement suit brought by Henry Rose.

Mr. Rose claims infringement of his story, "Burrow Burrow," in "Man of the People." The defendants claim that Section two conflicts with Article one, Section eight, Clause eight of the United States Constitution in so far as it grants statutory copyright to unpublished works.

Weisman Authorized To Settle Fox Suits

Circuit Judge Martin T. Manton in the United States district court in New York last week authorized Milton C. Weisman, equity receiver of the Fox Theatres Corporation to settle two anti-trust suits against American Telephone and Telegraph, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc., for $22,500. The suits were filed in 1934 for a total of $1,577,500.

Louis Karasik, attorney for Mr. Weisman, said this week that a similar suit of General Talking Pictures Corporation and the Duovac Radio Corporation had been dismissed in the Delaware federal court. He said that the possibility of recovering judgment in the face of that decision was remote and that $50,000 to $75,000 would be required to bring the suit to trial. Mr. Karasik was allowed $6,000 out of $9,000 requested for his services in the suit.

Bartholomew Case Finally Settled

Clement Shinn, judge of the superior court, Los Angeles, this week approved the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract of Freddie Bartholomew under which the boy receives $2,000 weekly for 40 weeks of each year for two years. The studio has options for two additional years. An unusual contract angle cuts the boy actor's salary to $1,250 weekly for the two years of the option period on the ground that the boy will be adolescent and his box office draw may decrease.

The contract also provides for $3,000 weekly for Bartholomew if the studio exercises the contract clause calling for personal appearances, although they are limited to six weeks in each 40-week period.

Under the contract Myllicent Bartholomew, aunt, receives $100 weekly and if the boy travels she receives that sum plus reasonable expenses for herself.

Still to be determined is the fee of William Neblett, Miss Bartholomew's attorney. Mr. Neblett disclosed in court that Louis B. Mayer had already paid him $10,000, but Mr. Neblett is asking for $15,000 more.

Companies Reorganizing Face Possible Tax Levies

The decision in Boston Friday by referee in bankruptcy Arthur Black that Amoskeag Manufacturing Company is subject to the Social Security law, is said by federal officials there, to pave the way for collection by the Treasury Department of huge sums from other corporations undergoing reorganization or liquidation.

The Amoskeag case was viewed by Washington as a national test.

Referee Black decided that a corporation undergoing reorganization or liquidation under section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act cannot be classified as a federal agency and thus escape contributions for Social Security and Unemployment Insurance. Referee Black found that the federal court did not assume control by naming trustees, but only assisted the company to liquidate. Trustees now in control of Amoskeag have 10 days to appeal.

New York Local Wins Court Move

Local 306, New York, gained a partial victory in the New York supreme court this week in its suit to enforce the 10-year contract made with the Independent Theatre Owners Association last January. Justice Samuel Rosenman signed a temporary injunction which requires Paradise Pictures Corporation, owners of the Belmont theatre, to employ only members of the union and to pay the union $275 per week for the operation of the projection booth.

Kay Francis Files Federal Court Suit

Kay Francis filed suit in United States district court in Los Angeles last week asking that her contract with Warner Brothers be annulled. She charges that Warners broke her contract when they gave Claudette Colbert the starring role in "Tovarich."

IN THE CUTTING ROOM

Hollywood Hotel

(Warner Bros.)

A Hollywood Story

This is to be a Hollywood fable, the old success story, set to music, produced on a large scale, with a wellknown feminine newspaper and radio commentator receiving second billing.

Hollywood stories being such as they are and audience familiarity with them being such as it is and the Warner reputation for turning out picturesque musical films being generally accepted, the showmanship interest in this forthcoming addition to Hollywood revelations, which takes its title from an established radio broadcast, rests, from an exhibitor's viewpoint, in information as to who will be in it, who concocted the screen story, who supplied the music and lyrics, and who is directing it.

For names, as the order of their importance in the feature is accepted, "Hollywood Hotel" will present Dick Powell, Rosemary Lane, Lola Lane, Frances Langford, Hugh Herbert, Ted Healy, Alan Mowbray, Grant Mitchell and Louella Parsons. Among others to be seen are Johnnie Davis, Mabel Todd, Allyn Joslyn, Edgar Kennedy, Eddie Acuff, Paul Irving, Glenda Farrell, Fritz Feld, William B. Davidson, Benny Goodman and his Swing band, and Raymond Paige and his orchestra.

Under the supervision of Sam Bischoff, Jerry Wald and Maurice Leo prepared the original story which Wald, Leo and Richard Macauley whipped into screen form. Music and lyrics are credited to Johnny Mercer and Dick Whiting, and the director, Busby Berkeley, in addition to his other accomplishments, also was responsible for the unique finale in "Varsity Show."

The theme has to do with how the starch is knocked out of a temperamental star when a screen novitiate and a greenhorn are engaged to pose as the star and her escort.

Release date: After Jan. 1, 1938.

The Bad Man of Brimstone

(MGM)

Western Melodrama

If, thinks MGM, it didn't give this picture the benefit of class production and didn't pack the cast with names whose box office pull is established, it might have an outdoor action film such as Gene Autry, George O'Brien et al make. Considering what Messrs. Autry, O'Brien and others do at the box office, MGM would not be doing quite right by itself if it did not include in its western such notables as Wallace Beery, Joseph Calleia, Lewis Stone, Guy Kibbee, Bruce Cabot, Cliff Edwards, Guinn Williams, Arthur Hohl, Noah Berry, John Qualen, Raymond Hatton, Charley Grapewin, Robert Barrat and Virginia Bruce. Dennis O'Keefe is a yet untested quantity but the studio thinks mighty well of him.

In this forthcoming feature, on which neither intelligent effort nor monetary expense has been spared, some of the character names are: Trigger, Eight Ball, Blackjack, Buzz, Vulch, Skunk and Loco. There's also a Horned Toad, and Saddlenose. Such identities adequately should key the theme, a tenderfoot from the East tossed in with a lot of boisterous, blustering, swashbuckling buckeroo banditti. Wallace Beery, the astounding Pancho Villa in "Viva Villa," is the Bad Man. The time of this story, which is built on an unusually treated relationship, is the 1880's when bad men really were bad. The locations used are, mainly, Brice and Zion Canyons in Utah, which will make possible the expected scenically beautiful backgrounds. Planned to be a rooting, tooting action attraction, it does not seem, at this writing, that anyone will do any singing in it.

J. Walter Ruben and Maurice Rapf prepared the original story, which was adapted by Cyril Hume and Richard Maibaum. Mr. Ruben, who also directed, is not recorded as a western director, but he did make Wallace Beery's "The Good Old Soak" and "Old Hutch."

Release date: Nov. 19, 1937.

This Woman is Dangerous

(Warner Bros.)

1937 Style Comedy-Romance

The studio publicity department looks upon this as the most important and best all-around story Kay Francis ever has had. It describes it as "sparkling with delightful wit and modern hilarious comedy . . . heart touching at times, yet always full of the 1937 style romance." The key reason for the belief undoubtedly is found in the "1937 style" qualification which unquestionably means that Miss Francis, for the moment, is going to forego seriously toned melodramatic romance and follow in the foot steps of Irene Dunne, Myrna Loy, Carole Lombard and others as a comedienne.

The situations in the story seem to be promising of such a result. Kay deserts her prospective groom, Ralph Forbes, at the altar, marries a genius (naturally quite batty) advertising man, Pat O'Brien, employee of her father, Thurston Hall and Forbes. Romantically things go all right for the pair until Hall believes he is young again and takes up with a blonde; he also takes up the firm's ready cash. Then Kay butts into her husband's business and the story takes queer and hilarious quirks. Eventually Kay is convinced that her place is in the home and that O'Brien really is an advertising genius.

Besides those mentioned the cast has quite a few attractive names. Listed are Herbert Rawlinson, Melville Cooper, John Eldredge, Grant Mitchell, Sarah Edwards, Georgia Caine, Joyce Compton, Josephine Whittell and Gordon Oliver.

The production is based on a Saturday Evening Post story by A. H. Z. Carr, the original title having been "Return from Limbo." Horace Jackson, who did the screen play, numbers among his credits the recent "Suzy" and, some time ago, "Animal Kingdom." Direction is in the hands of Stanley Logan, who made Miss Francis's last picture, "First Lady."

Release date: Tentatively December 16, 1937.

Manhattan Merry-Go-Round

(Republic)

Musical Comedy - Romance

From a standpoint of feature names to be presented as well as because of the prestige of personalities included as background essentials, "Manhattan Merry-Go-Round" appears to be worthy of more than ordinary showmanship attention. Probably the most expensive production which Republic has attempted to date, although the locale is New York the story is no mere recording of glamorous incidents of Broadway and environs. Rather it is a musically embellished yarn of what happens as gangsters move in on the phonograph recording business, to find that they have bitten off more than they can chew.

Principals to be seen are Phil Regan, Leo Carrillo, Ann Dvorak, James Gleason and Tamara Geva, opera singer. Feature players included are Luis Alberni, Henry Armetta, Smiley Burnette, Eddie Kane, Morini Olsen and Gene Autry. Important personalities in for incidental bits are Ted Lewis and Cab Calloway and their bands, Kay Thompson and her ensemble, baseball player Joe DiMaggio, Louis Prima and his band, the Lathrops, and Rosalean and Seville.

Adapted from Frank Nummert's musical revue of the same title, the original screen play is credited to Harry Sauber, whose recent screen play writings include "Racketeers in Exile," "Adventure in Manhattan," "Thank You, Jeeves," and "Sing Me a Love Song." Director Charles F. Riesner recently handled "Sophie Lang Goes West," "Everybody Dance" and "Murder Goes to College." Previously he was with MGM for many years.

Half a dozen composers contributed the music and lyrics.

Release date: November 26, 1937 (Tentatively).

Hitting a New High

(RKO Radio)

Comedy with Music

This is to be the story of a great deception in which several persons are deceived. It is being produced in accordance with the belief that present day audiences, no matter how much of everything else they want, are mostly desirous that their entertainment will make them laugh. A cafe singer with operatic ambitions becomes a feminine Tarzan to be discovered as a singing marvel by an impresario who is more interested in bagging lions and tigers than in hiring divas. Complications ensue which threaten to make the Tarzanic tyro an opera singer, but in the climax she casts her professional and romantic lot with a night club band leader about to embark on a tour of South America.

The comedy appears to be in capable hands, as Edward Everett Horton, Jack Oakie, Eric Blore and Billy Gilbert will handle it. The music, particularly the songs, also appears to be in worthy hands, as it will be sung by Lily Pons, who is forced to become the Tarzanette. Romance, and there is a considerable comedy contrast, also will feature Miss Pons and John Howard. The comedy melodrama will be provided by Eduardo Ciannelli.

Jesse Lasky is the producer and Raoul Walsh director. The original story was prepared by Robert Harari and Maxwell Shane, and Gertrude Purcell and John Twist adapted it to the screen.

It is Mr. Lasky's intention that "Hitting a New High" shall be as good if not better entertainment than "The Gay Desperado." He is giving it extra staging values.

Release date: New Year's week, 1938.

Ali Baba Goes to Town

(20th Century-Fox)

Musical Comedy

There have been no pictures like this. There is no precedent on which to base exploitation or box office expectancy. There is a certain amount of stage history, not precisely parallel, perhaps, but more or less kindred, on which showmen may elect to predicate their calculations as to the production's possible usefulness in their respective communities.

There was, for instance, "Of Thee I Sing," a jocose burlesquing of the Washington scene, governmental institutions and processes—but not personalities—to the late George Gershwin's memorable score. This did very well on Broadway and in most of the big cities of the country, but didn't reach the screen, somehow, although frequently announced as about to be filmed.

There is, in Boston tryout, a George S. Kaufman play in which Mr. George M. Cohan is reported to have amused the critics immensely by caricaturing President Roosevelt and lampooning his works, lyrically and while tap-dancing, but this venture is as yet little more than a moist newspaper dispatch under significantly large headlines, and hardly, until submitted to Broadway and perchance the provinces, a dependable indicator of current public attitude toward the national administration.

There is, also, a Warner Brothers picture, "The First Lady," which deals humorously with back-stage Washington, refraining, as "Of Thee I Sing," from personalities, but this is not to be released until December 4th, and "Ali Baba Goes to Town" is down for October 29th.

There have been other cinema treatments of federal affairs, institutions and offices, such as "The President Vanishes," an innocuous melodrama, and "Gabriel Over the White House," a somewhat doctrinated but manifestly imaginative fiction. These have no bearing on the present speculation.

Eddie Cantor's picture is, like "Of Thee I Sing," a largely and sometimes spectacularly musical comedy. It is also, like Mr. Cohan's Boston vehicle, a direct dishing up of the New Deal, in all or nearly all of its major aspects, and a more or less goodhumored but unmistakakable emphasizing of the not precisely enthusiastic viewpoint. In the course of it Mr. Cantor personally attends to the chore of burlesquing Mr. Roosevelt's phrases and gestures of public address. And into the score is woven, reiteratively, the strain from Gershwin's "Of Thee I Sing" score which Mr. Cantor has taught his radio listeners to sing as "We want Cantor," an adroit if not especially relevant touch.

Mr. Cantor's device for getting into his subject is the dream trick, old as the Bagdad into which it ushers him, fresh from a Hollywood motion picture location and today's affairs, but well executed. Here he finds a Sultan whose subjects are starving in plain sight of his personal plenty, and, winning the sovereign's confidence, proceeds to instruct him in the administering of direct relief, WPA work, taxation, governmental subsidy and so on, telling him these are current American cures for a like condition. Then, to unsnarl a royal romance, he persuades the Sultan to abdicate and get himself elected president, in a campaign conducted with placards reading "Vote for Honest Abe" (the Sultan's name being Abdul). But the people elect Cantor—known to them as "Ali Baba"—and the royal wrath is appeased only after he has boarded his magic carpet ("Inflation" is the magic word that lifts it; "deflation" brings it down) and routed the army of royal enemies marching upon the town.

By way of getting into this dream section, Cantor plays a star-struck youth heading for Hollywood to collect autographs, and afterwards he's seen in the crowd outside the Carthay Circle preview of the film with a radio announcer hailing the first string Twentieth Century-Fox talent, plus such ringers as Douglas Fairbanks, as they arrive, Cantor coming last and stealing the announcer's microphone to sing a song while "Ali Baba" looks on from the sidelines.

This is no place to quote all of Mr. Cantor's references, direct and indirect, to the state of the nation at the time he left and the state of Bagdad after he has taught it the New Deal way. It is the place to say, though, that there is evident attempt to keep the whole thing light and airy, straddling the thin line between punning and panning, which is a neat enough trick for Mr. Cohan to get away with in intellectual Boston and will be a triumph for Mr. Cantor if he gets away with it in the solid south, the middle western areas where the closed banks are open again, and in the CCC camps.

If he does get away with it (there is, as mentioned, no screen precedent for the attempt) showmen have plenty of other exploitation material with which to get the people in to see him do it. To wit:

Roland Young, June Lang, Tony Martin, Louise Hovick (you remember her), John Carradine, Alan Dinehart, Douglas Dumbrille, the Pearl Twins (harem dancers), the Peters Sisters (dark blues singers), and Virginia Field;

Four songs by Mack Gordon and Harry Revel, one by Raymond Scott;

The names of Gene Towne, Graham Baker and Gene Fowler on a story fashioned for the screen by Harry Tugend and Jack Yellen;

The names of Laurence Schwab as associate producer, David Butler as director and, of course, Darryl Zanuck over and above all.

It is also mentionable that the production is offered in the platinum sepia process coming currently into favor.

And on and beyond all of this, there is the name and fame of Eddie Cantor, whose 25th year as a prime factor in American entertainment is to be closed with a nationally noted celebration on October 26th, whose air following is among the most constant and numerous, whose sponsorship of Bobby Breen and Deanna Durbin has brought the screen two new luminaries, whose periodic counsel to his listeners to write to their mothers on Mother's Day is counted a valued contribution to that institution, and whose parenthood of five daughters is as well known as Mrs. Dionne's. If, as if-ed in the foregoing, the comedian gets away with the political aspect of his present occupation, showmen have more than enough material, in Cantor himself, with which to sell the picture.

45 Fathers

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy

"45 Fathers" is exciting comedy that the whole family can enjoy. It can be anticipated that it will greatly interest the youngsters. Built on an engaging and understandable premise, it moves speedily. Action and dialogue are effectively counterbalanced and the characterizations are just what one would expect in this type of film. Its chief exploitation asset is, of course, Jane Withers, but the show also suggests any number of unique methods of quickening curiosity.

Judith Frazier, orphan, becomes the ward of an Explorers' Club. The elderly members draw lots and Bunny Carothers becomes her guardian. The comedy which is the result of Bunny's efforts to educate and make a little lady of tomboyish Judith kept the audience smiling and laughing continually. The greatest laughs came, however, when she, in alliance with her servant friends, Joe and Flo McCoy, endeavored by devious hilarious means to free Bunny's nephew, Roger, from the designs of a socialite, Elizabeth Carter. Her well intended schemes cause all sorts of trouble and harum scarum fun. Eventually they cause Elizabeth to file a breach of promise suit. The action culminates in a courtroom where Judith's mim-

Without Warning

(Warner Bros.)

Murder Mystery

Karloff returns to the screen without the horror makeup of "Frankenstein," et al, and in a straight character role as a falsely imprisoned ex-convict bent on revenging himself upon an old enemy. "Without Warning" also is unusual in that it has but two women in the cast, Marie Wilson, who has a prominent part in the story, and Phyllis Barry, who is seen only in a "flashback."

The locale, although a title card says that the organizations and institutions are fictitious, is easily identified as a United States Army barracks on an island.

"Eddie Pratt" brings his bride of a few hours, "Sally," to the island in violation of Army rules, murder is committed, and the pair, seeking to hide from the sentries, discover the body. The murderer, in escaping, hits "Eddie," who flees with "Sally." In the investigation, "Jevries," civilian supervising construction work for the Army, is exposed as an ex-convict with ample reason to kill the murdered man. About seven other possible suspects are rounded up, but "Jevries" is arrested. He is cleared when the murderer is exposed as an Army officer who attempted to cut in on a gun smuggling racket of the dead man.

The Lady Fights Back

(Universal)

Comedy-Drama

There's been some talk lately, and at least one newsreel mention, of a device called a "salmon ladder," by which fish accustomed to running up certain streams for natural purposes at the romantic season of the year, are enabled to negotiate dams erected by man for unromantic purposes of his own. On that facet of the many-sided march of science may be based allusion to this otherwise fictional offering.

The names available are Kent Taylor, Irene Hervey, William Lundigan and Willie Best, and for good measure Arthur Stringer, author of "Heather of the High Hand," from which the picture is taken.

In the story "Owen Merrill," engineer assigned to dam construction in the salmon country, arouses the ire of "Heather McHale," a mountain girl, whose livelihood is derived from operation of a salmon fishing club patronized by wealthy friends of her deceased father. As the argument warms, so does love, and it all works out when the engineer announces installation of the salmon ladder, making boy, girl and salmon happy.

Previewed at the Pantages theatre, Hollywood, where a good deal of laughter (one burst of it, regrettably, in the wrong place) indicated general satisfaction with the production.—Melvin Keile.

Hollywood Round-Up

(Columbia-Coronet)

Western

In 1936, when his starring vehicles were released through Universal, Buck Jones was established in Fame's annual poll of exhibitors as the No. 1 Western star at the box-office. He since has embarked upon a new production company, Coronet Pictures, Inc., which will release his starring vehicles through Columbia. "Hollywood Round-Up" is the first of the series.

With Jones in the cast are Helen Twelvetrees, now essaying a screen comeback, Grant Withers, seen in many characterizations in other releases, and little Dickie Jones, as well as other more or less able players.

"Hollywood Round-Up" is aimed at the Western fans already developed by Jones and other he-men of the saddle, and also, through the injection of other elements such as the "inside" of making western films, at a wider field than many of its predecessors. It starts out to burlesque the production of "horse operas," but, about halfway along, it changes its mind, apparently, and takes up the story of an innocent man misunderstood in his unwitting participation in a crime.

"Buck Kennedy" is a film stunt man and double for "Grant Drexel," a conceited western star, and "Drexel" has 'Kennedy" fired for friendliness toward "Carol Stephens." "Buck" is hired by a gang of bank robbers who pose as a film location troupe and obtain the use of a bank as a set. The bank is really robbed and "Buck," not in on the plot, is captured. He escapes with the aid of "Dickie Stephens," tracks down the robbers and prevents their escape in an airplane by lassoing the tail assembly of the ship and pulling off the rudder. "Drexel" takes credit for the capture, but is exposed by "Carol" and "Dickie" at the Hollywood Boulevard premiere of his new picture. "Kennedy" then gets a contract to star in westerns.

Previewed at the RKO Hillstreet theatre, Los Angeles, a first run house where an audience waiting to see "Lost Horizon" seemed to be unimpressed.—V. K.

Hold 'Em Navy

(Paramount)

Annapolis Document

To the credit of writers Erwin Gelsey and Lloyd Corrigan, something has been done here that puts a new face on the often used premise of Annapolis Service and topical football. As a result, what comes up on the screen is just as unusual as the most ingenious idea that has been a subject of pictorial story telling in years. "Hold 'Em Navy" contains the full allotment of midshipman parading and fanfare, romance, comedy, glimpses of intimate dormitory and academic life, and football heroics. But the one radical departure it makes is that its hero doesn't win the football game on the field. He actually does win it, however, even though at the moment that the touchdown that beats Army is pushed over he's doing sentry duty, arguing with a girl who caused all the trouble, and at the same time trying to listen to radio reports of the game.

"Tommy Gorham" beat the Army because he had learned all the lessons of Navy tradition. A great football player and a great ladies' man, he is kicked off the "plebe" team when he is reported A.W.O.L. by an upper classman and football player, "Chuck Baldwin," whose girl, "Judy," he is wooing. A year passes. "Tommy" has learned his lessons the hard way and he and "Chuck" are backfield mainstays. The romantic rivalry has continued intense, with "Tommy" seeming to have the edge. Just before the big game, "Judy" learns that "Chuck" has reported "Tommy." To avenge his treachery, she traps him into staying out late, but "Tommy" contrives to get himself into a jam that saves "Chuck" for the big game. Again tossed off the squad, he's walking his post, listening to the game, squabbling with "Judy" as "Chuck" goes over for the winning points.

As directed by Kurt Neumann, the picture is well put together. He extracts full value from the material. Yet it seems that had it been given the benefit of a little more expensive production, and had a few more important names been included in the cast, it might have been one of the surprise shows of the season. As it is, "Hold 'Em Navy," as entertainment in which there is much material for showmanship, will stand comparison with many more costly made features. Plus the element of surprise, it includes practically everything anyone wants to see on the screen, from human interest to spectacle.

Previewed in the Alexander Theatre, Glendale, Cal. Some sort of community trade show carnival cut into the attendance of this usually well patronized preview house. But the tried and true adherents gave every indication that they would be in the mood to do a little scoffing at the absent brothers. The demonstration following the climax more than pleased director Kurt Neumann and the few Paramount executives and publicity department employees present. Manager Lew Harris was of the opinion that the picture would strengthen any program and, in the case of several Class A films he has seen lately, he would be inclined to play it as the top attraction.—G. Counsel for Crime

(Columbia)

Court Room Melodrama

Routine courtroom material is redeemed in this picture by a compact and fast paced story, competent acting on the part of the cast and, in particular, an ironically novel twist for a conclusion. The legal technicalities may interest the members of various legal associations and the human interest story of a forensic battle between father and son should find general audience interest. Mother's love is importantly concerned in the theme. Romance is thinly supplied and, indeed, at the ending of the picture, is completely forgotten.

Star positions are played by accomplished performers, Otto Kruger and Douglass Montgomery, in the father and son roles, respectively. Kruger, who played the defense attorney in "They Won't Forget," carries over his suave and perfect courtroom mannerisms to make his performance the outstanding piece of workmanship in the production. As the young idealist, Montgomery plays his assignment with intense seriousness. Nana Bryant is the mother. Jacqueline Wells as Kruger's secretary has little to do except look decorative, which task she accomplishes quite nicely. John Brahm's direction deserves mention, together with the quartet scripting of Grace Neville, Fred Niblo, Jr., Harold Buchman and Lee Loeb, who worked from the original of Harold Shumate a dramatic and moving yarn.

Montgomery as a neophyte lawyer is taken into the law office of the celebrated but rather shady barrister "William Mellon" (Otto Kruger). The nexus of the problem is the fact that Montgomery is unaware of the identity of his parentage. As a child born out of wedlock to Kruger and Miss Bryant, the young man believes himself to be the adopted son of Senator Maddox whom Miss Bryant has married. When Montgomery realizes the nefarious legal tricks of Kruger, he resigns and joins the district attorney's office in an investigation of his father's ethics. When Kruger commissions a henchman to uncover some incriminating evidence against the investigating committee, he unwittingly plays into the blackmailing hands of his own investigator, who uncovers the unsavory past of Miss Bryant. In a struggle over the damaging records, the blackmailer is killed. Rather than reveal the reason for his act, Kruger allows himself to be put on trial. The bit of irony comes when Montgomery, in a sense of self righteousness and satisfaction, wins the conviction of his own father to a charge of second degree murder.

Social Commentary

A prefatory note explains that the picture is not based on actual events, a common device of the day. The theme, nevertheless, is an American sociological phenomenon which has found favor on the screen chiefly because of its timeliness, the existence and operation of that type of secret society which has as its symbol a hooded robe and has as its creed "Pure Americanism."

The film departs, in story value and cohesion, from newspaper history which not many months age exposed a hooded legion in the middle west, and it makes no pretense of being an indictment, smashing or otherwise, of the social fact on which it is based.

The story shows the formation of the Avenging Angels by a gang of confidence men headed by a smooth talking demagogue and a bumbling politician, for purely commercial and predatory purposes. The professed creed of the Angels finds such popular favor that its leaders are swept into seemingly unbreakable political power. Woven into the fabric is a slight love interest which, when the girl finally is convinced of the leader's viciousness, becomes the instrument of the Angels' dissolution.

Noel Madison and Lila Lee, both familiar to screen audiences, help accentuate the dramatic values.

Viewed as the second half of a double bill at the Criterion, New York. A scattered audience followed the picture closely but gave no other hint of approval or disapproval.—JAMES D. IVERS.

Youth on Parole

(Republic)

Problem Plot

The sociological problem of the paroled convict is given sympathetic and interesting treatment in this study of the problems of readjustment that beset a boy and a girl after serving undeserved jail sentences. Their romance and the added touch of action in their efforts to track down the gang of jewel thieves responsible for their conviction help make the vehicle well balanced entertainment.

The cast credits list no name of stellar import, but Gordon Oliver and Marian Marsh as the youthful leads make an appealing couple. Mr. Oliver, in particular, offers personality and performance. Margaret Dumont, the statuesque stooge of the Marx Brothers, is the surprise of the picture. Cast as an Irish rooming house keeper, Miss Dumont, who once expressed the hope of being recognized as an actress rather than a spring board for Marxian gags, looks positively happy for once and acts as if she relished every moment of her unharried freedom. Supporting players number Peggy Shannon, Miles Mander, Sarah Paggen, Wade Boteler and Mary Kornman. Phil Rosen has given the original screen script of Hershel Rebuas capable direction.

Miss Marsh and Oliver are the unwitting victims of a band of jewel thieves who plant on them some of their plunder. Released after serving two year terms, the young pair begin the task of trying to live normal lives once again. The girl is forced to move from her home to save her family embarrassing explanations. The boy finds that no employer is willing to receive an applicant with a jail record. The boy meets the girl again and the sharing of their common misery leads to love. Both find employment but the past again catches up with them. Finally they resolve to capture the gang who railroaded them. Posing as underworld characters the pair trap the robbers. The fadeout brings generous rewards, a bill of exoneration and the prospects of married life.

Live, Love and Learn

(MGM)

Comedy

The title has a provocative lilt. The player personnel has a measure of pulling power. The picture is essentially a comedy. Harry Rapf is a mature producer and George Fitzmaurice is a director with name value. The time is now and the place is New York. Five writers participated in story preparation.

All this seems to be quite a lot for showmen to talk about in advertising and exploitation. It can be added, if such things have been found to be favorably influential, that the first audience to view a formal exhibition of the production in Hollywood was well pleased.

The story is not a run-of-mine affair easily defined in quick advertising copy. On the contrary, it is of the kind that, save when treated with extreme care as in this case to broaden appeal, is found to please the few immensely while the many fail to comprehend the point. Fortunately, something of this seems to have been taken into account all along the line, for the piece has been built up, rounded out and counterpointed with individual performances, striking characterizations and incidental business which afford, in and as themselves, substantial diversion for the plain people.

The story is about "Bob Graham," starving artist, and "Julie Stoddard," of the Long Island hunting set, and their devotion to his art. She gives up family and friends to marry him and share his attic. Fame overtakes him and he grows to like the luxuries which come from painting favorable portraits of wealthy clients. She deserts him as a means of bringing him back to his art-for-art's-sake status and he finally rejoins her in the garret.

As the story is worked out, the emphasis is on the humorous content, with only a brief session of seriousness, and the ending is slapstick enough, perhaps, to keep people who don't know what art's about anyway from wondering why what happens does. Especially formidable defense against thought is provided by Robert Benchley as an amiable drunkard, E. E. Clive as a British sportsman and Monty Woolley as an art dealer. To the same end have been directed the considerable talents of Charles Brackett, Cyril Hume and Richard Maibaum, who fabricated the screen play from an original by Marion Parsonnet suggested by a story by Helen Grace Carlisle.

Night Club Scandal

(Paramount)

Melodramatic Mystery

When a lot of capable actors, under intelligent direction and supplied with good material, are permitted to do their stuff, it can be expected that the resulting picture will be above par entertainment. Such is the case with "Night Club Scandal." The cast includes no high ranking box office names, but it is made up of a group of players who know what it's all about. It is their ability and experience which makes the film an entertaining show. Paramount lists "Night Club Scandal" as a General Office production, which is taken to mean that it is considered in the secondary attraction class. It may not be that audiences, particularly those patronizing small town and neighborhood theatres, will so consider it.

The title suggests a scandal in a night club, but the picture tells the story of how a man tried to commit a perfect crime. It is realized at once that he is the killer, but by means of a shatter-proof alibi he removes himself from the lists of suspects. A young men, innocent, but involved, is accused of the murder. A police captain builds up a chain of circumstantial evidence that secures his conviction. A glib reporter, because he thinks the condemned man's sister loves him, by actual demonstration breaks down the theory of circumstantial evidence, shows how the killer perfected his alibi, wins release for the suspect but, in line with Paramount's new technique of treating romance, does not win the girl's hand.

Held together by a strong cord of suspense, its melodrama effectively contrasted by comedy, the picture moves rapidly and permits no letdowns or loose spots.

Prievewed in the Ritz theatre, Hollywood. One gauge which this reporter uses to test audience interest is to count the number of walkouts. There were very few in this instance, not more than four or five. The remainder of the crowd, and it was good sized one, was visibly interested. A few, of course, and there's always a group of them in every theatre, who know long in advance just how everything is going to turn out, were inclined to be facetious at first. After a while, though, the quality of the picture made them respectful.—G. M.

Lucrezia Borgia

(European Films)

(Historical Expose)

The family skeleton of the infamous Borgia clan is rattled furiously and theatrically in this subject produced in Paris. In this film transcription of their lives and lusts, the presentation seems to be more suited to a tabloid Sunday supplement than the motion picture screen.

The production, equipped handsomely with elaborate sets, a well regulated series of mob scenes and an adequate running translation of superimposed titles, pulls no punches. It plainly and concretely credits to Cesar Borgia the murders of his brother and brother-in-law, though history does not agree. Alexander VI is portrayed as a feeble old man whose reasoning process seems to have become atrophied. Lucrezia, as played by the comely Edwige Feuiller, appears to be quite beautiful but rather dumb in the management of her marital difficulties. Gabriel Gabrio's Cesar runs the range of emotion from A to Z and back to A, while Aime Clariond as the wily Machiavelli presents an early Renaissance edition of a Broadway gossip collector.

Although the lovely Lucrezia is the title character of the production, it is her brother Cesar who dominates the play as he moves the femme fatal from one husband to another. There is very little continuity of plot.

Extremely limited in appeal, the production also faces possible complaint in Catholic circles, for the material details data patently open to misinterpretation.

Alcatraz Island

(Warner Bros.)

Melodrama

Alcatraz, the federal prison in San Francisco Bay, through detective and newspaper feature stores, has become as familiar in the public mind as have the federal operatives dubbed G-men, originally by the underworld, in many successful features. For that matter there have been a number of prison stories which have paid dividends at the theatre.

With these proved antecedents, "Alcatraz Island" proves valuable in title and theme, and besides there is a story component which emphasizes the cosmic force of paternal, if not domestic love, competent performances by a cast headed by John Litel and Ann Sheridan, and an outstanding juvenile in Mary Maguire.

The story, aimed at an exposition of the inner workings of the Alcatraz penitentiary and the dread in which it is held by the underworld, strains at times to attain its objective.

A wealthy racketeer who has escaped punishment because of the jury bribing ability of his lawyer, is made to appear better than a reprehensible character by emphasizing the point that he never resorts to murder. He is tripped by an income tax indictment and sent to Leavenworth prison. A gangster enemy attempts to kidnap his daughter and is sent to the same prison. Both are transferred to Alcatraz.

The gangster is stabbed under circumstances which point to the racketeer as the murderer. In a surprising, if not incredible, climax a G-man and a district attorney with whom the daughter, by now a young woman, is in love, obtain his acquittal. Only a few months of his original sentence remain before he will be free to enjoy his daughter's love, and presumably resume his somewhat remarkable business.

Vaudeville Comedy

Exhibitors may well emphasize this as the all-time high in screen use of vaudeville and floorshow talent, with Bert Lahr, Jimmy Savo, Billy House and Dave Apollon proving once and for all that stage comedians are as funny in pictures as behind footlights if allowed to do their stuff their own way. Alongside these may be billed as cinema personalities, permitted likewise to be themselves, Mischa Auer, Alice Brady, Louise Fazenda and Richard Carle, plus Joy Hodges, a rangy soprano with notable voice possibilities, and John King, in the subordinated romantic leads.

a B. G. DeSylva production directed by the seasoned Irving Cummings. But it probably is not within the capacity of quick copy to inform the customers accurately as to what to expect, for the picture is by some fortunate or inspired combination of widely assorted contents and circumstances as scatteringly effective as a blast of buckshot. It tied a pessimistic preview audience in knotted stitches.

Whether or not for billing purposes, the names of Monte Brice, Henry Myers and A. Dorian Otvos clamor for emphasis, because signed to a story and screen play that manages to weave into a coherent fabric as mad and miscellaneous an assortment of personalities and performances as ever packed the Palace.

The story concerns four vaudevillians played by Messrs. Lahr, Savo, House and Auer, who raise from orphaned infancy the girl child of a fallen aerialist. At 19 she falls in love with a wealthy young man whose aunt doesn't care for stage people, whereupon they impersonate fictitious noble family connections, an Indian Swami gifted in levitation, a lumberjack and other imaginary persons whose influences combine to produce the happy ending.

Things like this have been done before, but not like this. Devices employed for equatorial laugh production range from straight staging of Mr. Lahr's famous woodchopper routine and Mr. Savo's classic "River, Stay Away from My Door" to old-fashioned trick photography whereby Mr. Auer's Swami concentration lifts Mr. Lahr periodically into thin air. Mr. Apollon's stageband act also is worked in with no change save curtailment, and Miss Hodges' song numbers are staged as if in proscenium. The Misses Brady and Fazenda are equally unfettered by characterization. The net result of all this latitude is a knitting together of an extraordinary number of extraordinary individual achievements which added up to throw hardened press folk and plain citizens of a quiet California community into the aisles.

Previewed at the Alexander Theatre, Glendale, Cal., to a mixed audience which laughed its approval in volume and frequency sufficient to suggest the picture may be another of those unpredictable rabbits Universal has had a way of pulling out of its hat at appropriate moments throughout its long and sometimes careening career.—W. Club de Femmes (Girls' Club)

(Mayer-Burstyn)

Girls Without Uniform

Recent reports have carried the pleasing announcement that the accomplished French playwright, Jacques Deval, has instituted steps to become an American citizen. Monsieur Deval has evidenced his talent in a long list of noteworthy plays, particularly "Tovarich," produced on the New York stage last season and soon to be released in film with Claudette Colbert and Charles Boyer. However, after seeing "Club des Femmes," it could be suggested that M. Deval enlighten himself concerning a certain American institution set up by the organized American industry for self protection and known as the Production Code, particularly as it concerns such topics as sex perversion and the sale of women, together with scenes of passion and undue bodily exposure.

In this Gallic version of "Girls Without Uniform" theme, done in a "Grand Hotel" manner, the locale is a huge residence club endowed by a wealthy French woman to shelter unprotected young business and professional girls from the blandishments of the wicked city of Paris. But the actual membership of the institution would seem rather to be candidates for a psychopathic hospital; not one of them appears normal, happy or rational. The main woe of one of the girls is how to smuggle her lover into her boudoir. Another young thing suffers from a lesbian fixation. A third miss is arrested for rifling the trousers of her companion of the evening. Even the help around the house feels the touch of perversion, for the telephone operator practices the avocation of some minor-scale procuring.

The plot concerns the separate stories of Claire and Alice. As played by the beauteous Danielle Darrieux, recently arrived to appear before the American cameras, Claire's illicit love affair is projected as conduct quite touching, beyond morality and strictly licit. When a fire reveals that a man has invaded the girl's room, the matron is properly horrified while the rest of the girls appear envious. When in due time the expected happens, the transgression is overlooked entirely while the entire household is transfigured under the spell of vicarious motherhood.

In the meantime, the parallel story of Alice has advanced to tragic resolvement. Suffering from an abnormal sexual complex, though Else Argall's playing of the unfortunate character seems to make the role rather one of a victim of somnambulism, Alice is unnaturally attracted to Juliette and when the evil companionship of Helene betrays her friend into a tragic difficulty, Alice kills the telephone operator in revenge.

The production is given careful and expensive treatment. The acting of the principals and the support is finished. Literate English titles do full justice to the script. However, though the entire work is interesting from a technical standpoint, the serious objections that can be raised to its moral or rather immoral implications narrow the field for exhibition. Indeed, it may prove too adult for the adults.

This number of the Paragraphic series cleverly presents a number of crazy inventions, some of them actually registered at the Patent Office. A "teched" inventor explains some of the thinks he has worked out while maintaining a very serious mien which is calculated to keep audiences guessing. He has a gadget to offset noisy conversation at the theatre, a mechanical apparatus for eating corn on the cob a way to save soap, and a complicated cigar lighter.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Playing the Ponies

(Columbia)

Stooge Roughhouse

Just as in the eating of olives, one cultivates a taste for the crazy, slapstick antics of the Three Stooges. In the latest edition of their exploits, the boys first are seen as proprietors of a hash joint. Disgusted with this trifle of a business, they are anxious to locate in a more lucrative occupation and swap their establishment for a race horse. How they realize their ambitions by feeding their entrant Chili nuts makes for some hilarious sequences.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Romance of Radium

(MGM)

Outstanding

An exceptionally fine subject has been fashioned out of the thrilling discovery and development of this rare chemical treasure. The playing of the material is timed with the serialized publication of the life of the Curies in the Saturday Evening Post. Advance advertising and prominent billing should bring to the notice of the general public and the school children, in particular, information concerning the exhibition of this outstanding short feature. The concluding sequence in which the priceless and dangerous substance of radium is photographed under hazardous circumstances offers dramatic suspense worthy of a major production. For once, the ebullient Pete Smith is awed to a proper state of reverence by the nature of his material. Running time, 10 minutes.

Silly Night

(Educational)

Gags and Gals

The interesting and accomplished cartoonist, Jefferson Machamer, continues his sketches of what he fondly refers to as his "gals" and, between sketches, banters words with the bevy of beautiful girls always at hand. The script of these Machamer subjects varies little, perhaps accounting for the feeling that the subject is not up to the standard of earlier issues. Appearing as members of the cast are Joan Christie, Ruth Clayton, Stanley and Elaine and Henry Jines.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Going Places, No. 39

(Universal)

Interesting

That parlor sport known as ping pong to the initiate but table tennis to the professional player is the subject of this latest issue of the Going Places series. As performed by a quartet of expert exponents of the game, before slow motion camera, the perfect playing is revealed as something more than swatting a pill ball back and cross a table. Lowell Thomas contributes his enthusiastic line of commentary.—Running time, 10 minutes.

U.S. FILMS TIGHTEN HOLD ON DANISH MARKET THOUGH RELEASES DECLINE

Nineteen of 29 Pronounced Successes in Season Come from Hollywood, but So Do 6 of 14 Box Office Failures

by CHRIS WINTHER
in Copenhagen

Twenty fewer feature pictures were released in Denmark in the motion picture year from September 1, 1936, through August 31, 1937, but the number was 32 larger than for the 1934-5 season. The total was 316 in 1936-37, as against 336 in 1935-36 and 284 the previous season.

American productions still hold the leading position on the Danish market with no serious threat from other countries. Germany, however, which hitherto has held a steady second place, is in serious danger of dropping to third if the continual rise in the importation of French productions is not checked. A drop of five in British releases is counterbalanced by a corresponding increase in the number of Swedish productions released.

The lineup for the season 1936-37 was as follows:

	Releases	Percentage of Total
American	193	61.1%
German	40	12.6%
French	28	8.8%
Swedish	20	6.3%
British	15	4.8%
Danish	9	2.9%
Austrian	5	1.6%
Russian	4	1.3%
Polish	1	0.3%
Czechoslovakian	1	0.3%
Total	316	100%

Of the 193 American productions released in the past season 34 were from Paramount, 29 from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 26 from Warner-First National, 24 from Twentieth Century-Fox, 23 from Columbia and 16 from United Artist. None of the other American producers has its own distributing offices in this country so it is almost impossible to list exact figures on other producers. However, not less than 10 Universal productions and not less than 8 from RKO were released through independent distributing companies, who also handled the remaining 23 American pictures released during the period in question.

The most pronounced development of the past three years is without doubt the growth of interest in French pictures. In the 1924-25 season they constituted only 5.6% of the total releases; in the last season the proportion rose to almost 9%. According to information received here, local independent distributors at the time of writing have approximately 50 French pictures on hand, and new French productions are being imported, so that it is not entirely impossible that later this season the market will be flooded with French pictures.

The reason for the great interest taken in French productions must be sought in the fact that, as there are comparatively few Danes who understand French as well as they understand English or German, only the very best French pictures were imported. In time it was only natural that the public should discover that French pictures always were rated very highly by the reviewers and that this finally should result in the French pictures being stamped as first rate productions. Finally this led to the belief that it was a definite mark of culture if one were able to enjoy the French pictures. At present only a very few of the better educated Danes are willing to declare that a French picture is poor entertainment. Of course the distributors were not slow in seizing upon this advertising angle, and brought several French pictures of decidedly inferior quality into Denmark. In the past month several newspapers have come out into the open and made fun of the public for snubbing French productions.

American Percentage Rises

American productions, although nine fewer were released than in the preceding season, rose one per cent in the share of total releases on account of the drop in the total. Czechoslovakian, Italian, Polish and Swiss pictures released are generally those that play up the unusual and get a quite good box office on account of their originality.

Swedish productions are generally well liked in Denmark, especially because at first only the very best were brought here. In the past season an attempt has been made to force more of them through on the basis that most Danes are able to understand Swedish. However, many of them did not do as good business as expected, as the Danes prefer a good picture from countries other than the Scandinavian to those of poorer quality but with an understandable language.

It is only natural that the Danish pictures generally are successes, as the great majority of the population, although being able to read foreign languages, seldom are well enough versed in them to follow a conversation and must rely on subtitles to tell the story. Hence a picture where there are no subtitles and where the language is the public's own, can be sure of good receipts no matter what their quality may be. The average Dane will declare that the Danish pictures are far below average and yet will go to see every Danish production released during the year. Actually, however, the Danish pictures, when one takes into consideration the limited means that can be spent upon them, really are not as inferior as claimed.

For comparison with the foregoing seasons the releases in the past three seasons are listed below:

	1934-35	1935-36	1936-37
American	183	202	193
German	39	57	40
French	16	20	28
British	13	25	15
Swedish	12	14	20
Danish	11	10	9
Austrian	2	2	4
Russian	3	4	4
Polish	2	0	1
Czechoslovakian	1	1	1
Total	284	336	316

Of foreign pictures that have been successes the past season musical films rate highest, next comedies. There have been 29 definite successes, ten of them musicals. Among these were two of Columbia's Grace Moore vehicles, two of RKO's Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers pictures and two German productions with Benjamin Gigli. The other successful musicals were MGM's "Great Ziegfeld," "San Francisco" and "Born to Dance," and Universal's "Showboat." Nineteen of the 29 direct hits were American, four French, three German, and one each came from Austria, England and Sweden.

In the American group MGM takes the lead with five successes including the biggest hit of the year, "The Good Earth," while United Artists released the most talked of picture of the year in "These Three."

While taking the lead in the number of successes, the American producers also presented most of the pictures which were considered failures. Of a total of 14 definite failures, six were American, Germany accounted for four, France two, and Sweden and Poland one each.

Of the 316 features released, more than

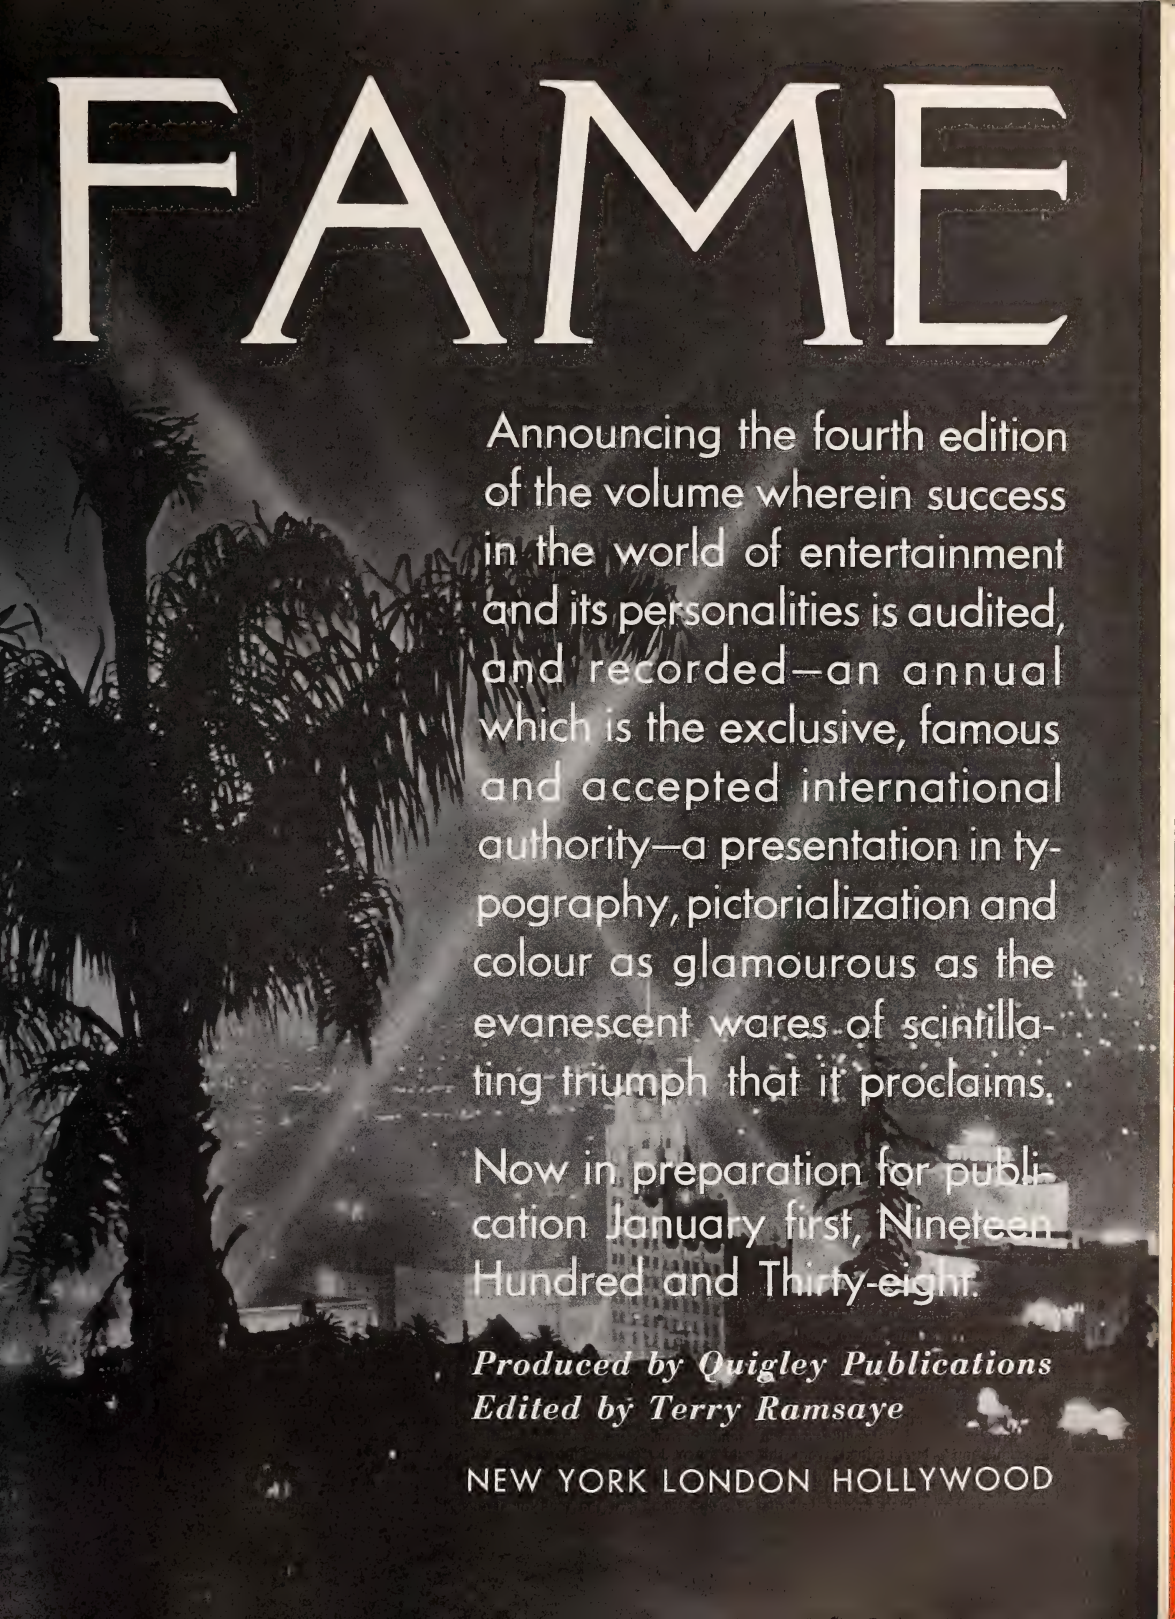
"WINTERSET" IS BARRED IN DENMARK, SWEDEN



The ban on "Winterset" was made almost simultaneously by both the Danish and Swedish censor boards. The boards felt that deletions could not be made in a way that would leave an understandable story.

In both countries the censor boards admitted the artistic value of the picture but claimed that the intensity of violence displayed in the last half of the film would have a dangerous influence on youth.

In Sweden the decision was appealed but without a change of opinion. No appeal has been made in Denmark.

The stage version, however was permitted and even was being played in Sweden at the time of the decision of the censor board. The play probably will appear in Denmark this winter.

50 per cent can be classified as melodrama and comedy, mystery taking third place in the lineup, with musicals running a close fourth. In a comparison of American pictures released in Denmark, however, westerns take third place, closely followed by mystery subjects, while the musicals come in a poor fifth.

Tabulating the releases according to the nature of the contents the following analysis is arrived at:

	Percentage of Total	No. of Releases	American Releases
Melodrama	29.4%	93	56
Comedy	25.0%	79	30
Mystery	11.7%	37	28
Musical	11.1%	35	19
Westerns	9.2%	29	29
Historical	4.4%	14	6
Adventure	3.5%	11	10
Gangster	3.1%	10	10
Classicals	1.6%	5	3
Biographical	0.6%	2	1
Juvenile	0.3%	1	1
Totals	100.0%	316	193

Practically all pictures released have their Danish premiere in Copenhagen, sometimes with a simultaneous release in two or three of the larger towns in the provinces. Occasionally, as was the case with MGM's "Camille," a picture may open in the provinces a few days in advance of the first showing in the capital, but this plan usually is avoided as the Copenhagen press-reports as a rule are of great value in selling a production in the provinces.

The Censorship Situation

All motion pictures to be shown in Denmark must be passed by a board of censors appointed by the minister of justice and responsible to him.

Although this board is a part of the department of justice it is financially independent, being maintained by collecting fees on all material submitted to the board by the distributors. On regular feature pictures and ordinary shorts a fee of one half a cent is paid for each meter (about 3 feet) while newsreels and subjects of educational value pay only half as much. Each still to be used as display material and each poster must pay a fee of 3 cents a copy.

A film submitted to the censor board faces three possible actions, these being indicated by discs issued by the board. A red disc signifies that the board has found the film suitable for showing to a general patronage, a yellow disc excludes all children under 16 years of age from admission to the house where the picture is being shown, while a white disc excludes the picture from being exhibited publicly, although not closing the possibility of showing it in clubs where only members are admitted. If a film is to be shown for such a "closed" group a special permit must be obtained from the department of justice. This permit does not, however, give permission to more than one group at a time. Each group desiring to see the picture must make an individual application for the permit, as the club must be able to prove that its members have some special reason qualifying them as a suitable audience for the banned picture.

Governed by Law of 1933

The findings of the censor board are based upon two sections of the law of March, 1933, governing the industry. The first of these reads: "Pictures which the board of censors shall consider able to influence harmfully the minds of children, or to minimize their respect for the law, may not be passed for showings for children under 16 years of age."

This paragraph is interpreted in such a way that there is a growing tendency to prohibit for children practically all gangster or crime pictures. In the same way pictures that have a touch of the ghastly, brutal or coarse, or with a somewhat "sexy" angle, generally return from the censor board with a yellow disc (barring children 16 years old or younger).

In order to avoid a fate of this nature for a picture which the distributor figures would net a considerably better box office when the child-patronage is not excluded it is a fairly common practice for the distributor to make his own deletions "toning the picture down a little" before submitting it to the censor board.

The second of the mentioned paragraphs reads: "The censor board shall not pass pictures for public showing if they may be considered violating the laws of common decency, or if their showing may be expected to induce brutality, or if the picture may be considered morally harmful in any other way."

The reasons for banning a picture outright are essentially the same as the reasons for excluding them from screenings for general patronage in such a way that the brutality, sex-angle, horror or coarseness is found in a greater degree than in pictures receiving the yellow disc. As examples of films that have been given the white disc can be mentioned "The Bride of Frankenstein" (for ghastliness), "Scarface" (for having too much of the gangster element), and now most recently "Winterset" (for the intensity of brutality in the last half of the picture). Of course a motion picture is not always banned in entirety by the censor board except in such cases where the deletions found necessary by the board are of such a nature or so extensive that they would render the remainder of the picture meaningless.

The mere fact that the board has passed a certain sequence in a picture that will be released for general patronage does not imply that stills from this sequence can be utilized for display purposes. This was the case with a still from the latest Danish release, "Det Begyndte om Bord," depicting two men struggling. The still was not permitted for display purposes but the scene was not deleted from the film.

After a picture has been banned it is possible for the distributor to appeal from the censor board's decision to the minister of justice, but this appeal very rarely is attempted. There is the alternative of arranging showings for clubs, but this procedure is also rather rare, as the additional expenses, for example in subtitling, are too large to make it worth the distributor's while, as the income to be expected from club showings is always doubtful, what with the limitation of the number of clubs for whom it can be shown.

Besides the regular censor board there is an unpaid committee of three whose members represent different cultural groups in the country.

Danish Board Most Lenient

There is no official cooperation among the censor boards of Denmark, Norway and Sweden, although these three boards do exchange findings. The Danish board is considered the most lenient, and it is a fairly common practice to have a picture passed in Denmark before submitting it to the censor boards in the other countries. There is no doubt that the Swedish board is somewhat stricter than the Danish, as illustrated when "Fury" was passed by the Danish board but banned in Sweden.

A film must be subtitled before being passed by the censor board, but when a distributor has a picture which he fears may not be passed, the general practice is to submit the untitled film for a preliminary decision before any expense is incurred by translation and subtitling.

Western Electric Sued in Vienna

by HANS LORANT
in Vienna

A suit charging extortion by Western Electric and another action accusing two members of the Vienna branch of fraud have been started here by 20 Austrian exhibitors. The exhibitors sought to have their contract with Western Electric annulled.

The exhibitors claimed that Western Electric took advantage of them in 1929 and 1930 in leasing of sound apparatus at an annual rental of 8,000 schillings for 10 years, which, they pointed out, in the 10-year period would have amounted to 80,000 schillings, this solely for rental of the apparatus. The exhibitors declared the cost of supplying the apparatus could be no more than 30,000 schillings for 10 years.

The charges for service also were termed an excessive burden on the exhibitor.

The exhibitors also filed a suit in criminal court in Vienna against John Hepburn, general manager of Western Electric's Vienna branch, and Gerard Maurice, chief technician, charging fraud. They declared that the defendants instructed their engineers engaged on the control service to spend as many hours on the job as possible, as the service was paid for by the hour.

The Vienna branch of Western Electric replied that at the time when the contract was signed there could be no question of pressure of circumstance or of inexperience on the part of the exhibitors. The defense said that exhibitors were perfectly free to deal with other firms leasing sound apparatus at that time, for instance, Klangfilm sound equipment, which, the company claimed, also was on the market and cost almost as much as Western Electric apparatus.

Grand National to Have Three Anna Sten Films

Grand National will release three of the six pictures scheduled for production this year by Dr. Eugene Frenke, director-producer. The first two will star Anna Sten and are titled "With Pleasure, Madame" and "Gorgeous."

Victor Schertzinger will produce and direct another Anna Sten picture for Grand National with the title "Love Me Again."

Dinner For Ira Cohn

Ira Cohn, manager of the Twentieth Century-Fox Pittsburgh exchange, will be the guest of honor at a testimonial dinner at the William Penn Hotel on December 6th. The occasion marks his 17th anniversary with the same company and the ninth of his association with the Pittsburgh office. Exhibitors from all over the tri-state district are arranging the dinner, with C. J. Kellenburg as general chairman.

Kansas Club Plans Ball

The Kansas City Variety Club will hold a ball at PlaMor, November 15th. Proceeds from the ball will go, as usual, into the charity fund, and the affair will take the place of the annual charity ball of the Motion Picture Fund. Earl Jameson and Arthur Cole are arranging the ball.

MGM ASKS PUBLIC, PRESS FOR TASTES IN SHORTS

Better Stories Asked, Also Entertainment and Educational or Controversial Elements

Short subjects with greater story value and combining top entertainment with educational or controversial elements are wanted by the theatre customers, motion picture critics of the daily newspapers told Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer after a general survey to determine popular reaction.

The newspaper writers, asked by Fred C. Quimby, in charge of MGM short subjects, to solicit letters from their readers on the subject, responded with enthusiasm and in most cases devoted much column space to the answers. Loew's theatres in each of the cities contacted cooperated by awarding passes to the authors of the best letters selected by the critics. The survey also provided an occasion for many of the newspaper critics to express at length their own views.

The mass of information and suggestions received was classified by the MGM publicity department under the direction of Herb Morgan, who is working with Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity, and Silas Seadler, advertising director, on a special campaign emphasizing Metro's short product, and much of it is to be used as a basis for future production schedules.

A definite stand was shown by the poll against band leader pictures, routine miniature musicals, and glorification of night club entertainers. There was considerable criticism of material used in cartoons.

Suggestions for new material included requests for abbreviated versions of Shakespeare, compressed biographies of famous painters and writers, something on the order of Noel Coward's one-act plays or O. Henry's short stories, more human interest stories, and intelligent dramatizations in the field of science and industry.

Opinion about travel shorts was mixed. Almost everyone who discussed the subjects expressed an interest in this type of material, but many patrons were dissatisfied with the present treatment. The general feeling seemed to be that travel shorts should be dramatized rather than merely photographed.

Many readers took theatre managers to task for dismissing the short subjects on programs with the phrase, "Also selected short subjects." They pointed out that with features of equivalent merit the shorts frequently determined which theatre they attended and that producers were missing a great avenue of public appeal by not advertising their short subjects with their features.

Newspapers which gave the survey exceptional space and attention included publications in Indianapolis, Harrisburg, Houston, Baltimore, Dayton, Richmond, Akron, Dallas, La Crosse, Milwaukee, Charlotte, Springfield, O., and Washington.

The idea generated a general discussion of the whole matter among other newspaper film writers.

HOUSE ORGAN ISSUED ON SHORT SUBJECTS

In connection with its campaign to emphasize short subjects Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has started publication of a new house organ, the MGM Short Story, (Presenting the Junior Lion's Tale). The first issue, dated October, carries a report of the recent shorts survey, an article reviewing stars who have achieved prominence through the medium, a feature on Pete Smith, technical stories on the creation of a new cartoon, "The Captain and the Kids," and the making of "The Romance of Radium"; a story on how shorts are received in foreign theatres, and examples of short subject exploitations.

The publication is edited by Herb Morgan, includes Howard Dietz, Silas F. Seadler, Oscar A. Doob, Howard Strickling and Frank Whitbeck on its editorial advisory board, and will be sent free to any exhibitor.

Craig Will Open Columbia Course

John D. Craig, who made the thrill sequences for "Eskimo," "Trader Horn," and "Cannibals of the Deep," opens Columbia University Film Study's new series, "Motion Picture Parade," in New York next Wednesday. Mr. Craig will speak on "Adventures Making Adventure Pictures." The program will be illustrated with films selected by the speaker.

J. B. Priestley, novelist, and Paul Rotha, leader of the English documentary school, will discuss "Filming Ideas," on the following Wednesday, November 3rd, and Mr. Rotha will speak again on November 17th, on "Filming Facts."

Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and author of "A Million and One Nights," will discuss the "March of the Movies," on November 10th.

Jungle Film Rights Sold

Luis Rojas de la Torre has sold the New England rights to "Man Hunters of the Caribbean," to Harry Segal, for the Kentucky, Southern Ohio and Tennessee territory to Big Feature Rights Exchanges, and for Northern Ohio to Imperial Pictures of Cleveland. The picture is based on the adventures of Andre Roosevelt and Erskine Loch in the jungles of Central America.

Projection Highlights Of the SMPE Convention

by F. H. RICHARDSON

An especially gratifying phase of the highly successful fall convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was the number of progressive projectionists present. Not only does this offer convincing evidence of awakening interest in the technics of projection, but also of a desire to be posted on new developments in theory as well as practice.

Joseph D. Basson, president of Local 306 IATSE & MPMO, New York City, was vice chairman of the special projection session and acted as official representative of George Browne, International president, who was unable to be personally present because of the A. F. L. convention in Denver. Among others on hand were: Thad C. Barrows, president Local 182, Boston; Nathan D. Golden, chief of the motion picture division of the Department of Commerce, who is a member of Local 160, Cleveland; Harry Rubin and Jessie Hopkins, respectively president and secretary of the Projection Practice Committee of the SMPE; Lester Isaac, supervisor, and M. D. O'Brien, assistant supervisor of projection, of Loew's, Inc.; John W. Sawyer, supervisor of projection of Shea Theatres, Buffalo; F. E. Cahill, supervisor of projection of Warner Theatres; Otto Nelson, who for 45 years has been in charge of projection for the National Cash Register Company, Dayton, Ohio.

Chauncey Greene of Minneapolis read a paper before the projection session, as did Theodore P. Hover, Lima, Ohio. Others present were Cecil Woods, well known to all old-time projectionists (Woods has superintended the installation of sound equipment in a total of 802 theatres in this and other countries during the past 11 years); J. J. Seeley of the RKO theatre, Fall River, Mass.; George Edwards, who has endeared himself to us all by his work in projection through many years; G. A. Bishop of Fall River; J. E. Woodland, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Charles W. Beals, Glove theatre, NewYork; M. Glassin, Park theatre, New York; H. Hollender, Colony theatre, New York; Max Prilex of New York; L. Lewis Edwards, Trenton, N. J.; Philip Shafran, New York; H. E. Starke and Philip Sugarman of Providence, R. I.; P. E. Kline, who manages all projection matters in the Panama Canal Zane; W. H. Ingram of Rochester, N. Y., Local 253; D. Bradfield, Nat Shaub and Morris Puchalsky of New York; H. A. Starke, Los Angeles; W. P. Stone, Asheboro, N. C.; W. W. Jennings and Earl Roberts, Local 203, Easton, Pa.

Joseph W. Engle of Local 640, out on Long Island, was on hand, as were Victor A. Wellman of Cleveland, our old friend John Griffiths of Ansonia, Conn.; Leo Cimikoski, Local 459, Norwich, Conn.; C. H. Gleason of Waltham, Mass.; Frank J. Bettelli, Camden, N. J.; Charles T. Reed, Harrisburg, Pa.; W. H. Ingram and R. J. Fisher, Rochester, N. Y.; Irl Gordon, Akron, Ohio (who read a most excellent illustrated paper on sidewise misplacement of the sound track); H. B. Smith, Springfield, Mass. I also noted the following members of Local 306, New York City; Irving J. Meltzer, Morris Holtzman, Clarence W. Mead, Samuel Roseman, A. Kessler, Paul J. Larson (honorary life member of 306), Edmund McD. Bendheim and W. W. Byrne.

It might be added that at the banquet there were 26 members of Local 306. I am justifiably proud to say that your scribe was installed at the head of their table.

The projection session was universally pronounced an outstanding success. Its only drawback was lack of sufficient time. One full morning session had been allotted to it, but it hung far over into the afternoon and might well have consumed a second full session. I am quite certain the papers presented were in the nature of eye-openers to many of the studio engineers who were present.

The report of the Projection Practice Committee, in unanimously disapproving the change in projector apertures proposed by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, pointed out clearly the impracticability of the proposed change. In fact, one of the papers presented in the projection session was based upon the fact that even now the space between sprocket holes and pictures area is so small that the sound track occasionally impinges on the sprocket hole or picture area, one of the other being quite frequently over-stepped. Slides showing photographs of this condition, all representing prints of recent pictures, were shown.

Committee Appointed by Academy to Study Noises

A committee, under the chairmanship of Thomas Moulton of United Artists Studios, has been appointed by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to investigate set equipment noise conditions and to conduct a series of experiments being lined up with a view towards reducing the noise contributed to recorded sound by arc lights and other set equipment.

The committee will be particularly concerned with reducing noise on the set during the actual taking of a scene, aiming to improve the quality of sound recording by reducing the amount of extraneous noise in comparison to the wanted dialogue. Membership of the committee, in addition to Mr. Moulton, consists of Olin Dupy, George Groves, Ralph Townsend and Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the Research Council of the Academy.

HUNGARIANS WANT U.S. PICTURES BUT HOME PRODUCT LIMITS FIELD

Noticeable Increase of Local Production to 45 Films This Season Restricts Market Despite the First-Run Demand

by ENDRE HEVESI
in Budapest

The film market in Hungary this season will be dominated by the 45 Hungarian pictures scheduled for release. Twenty-two of these locally made films already have been completed; the others are either in the making or will be started within the next few months.

Local production being on such a large scale, the inevitable result will be that imported foreign films, with the possible exception of American ones, will play a less important part on the market than hitherto.

American pictures are booked extensively by the Budapest first-run theatres, despite the growing national production activity. Budapest first-run cinemas thus far have booked 20 20th Century-Fox pictures, 12 from Paramount, 12 Warner, 16 United Artists-London, eight RKO and four Columbia pictures. Metro, besides the films it is going to exhibit at its own theatre, has placed 16 films in other Budapest first-runs.

First-Runs Want U. S. Films

These figures show that there is a great demand for American films on the part of the Budapest first runs. The situation is less cheerful for them, however, in the Budapest second-, third- and fourth-week neighborhood theatres and in the provincial houses. Hungarian motion picture theatres are not permitted to show more than one feature in one program. Consequently the Budapest neighborhood cinemas, in which pictures usually run for one week, do not need more than 52 films a year. Obviously, these in most cases will be chosen from among the new Hungarian productions which are more popular with the patrons of these theatres than foreign films. According to the law, 20 per cent of the pictures shown in all Hungarian theatres must be locally made Hungarian ones.

The Budapest second-runs, however, will show more than the required number of Hungarian pictures because these invariably have better box office results in these theatres than the foreign product. The 40 or 45 Hungarian films produced this year will be divided among the Budapest second-run theatres so that each will exhibit at least 20 or 25 locally made pictures. Consequently, these theatres will not be able to show a great number of imported films.

Provincials Favor Nationals

The chances of imported films in provincial theatres are still worse. In a city of 50,000 inhabitants, for example, there may be two theatres, one playing every day, the other on Saturdays and Sundays only. The duration of the film season is 40 weeks. The theatre playing every day shows two programs a week and so needs 80 features a year. The other books 40 films throughout the season. The total number of films required by a town of this size is 120. Forty-five of this number are Hungarian pictures, since all Hungarian films, even the inferior product, are exhibited in provincial theatres. This means that no more than 70 to 75 foreign pictures will be included in the program of cinemas in a provincial city of that size. This number includes the product of all the American, German, Austrian, British and Italian companies that import films into Hungary.

In smaller towns and villages, the chances of foreign films are even worse. A small town or village with only one cinema requires 60 feature films a year; 40 or 45 of these are Hungarian and the rest only—15 or 20 films—may be foreign.

It is obvious from these figures that, with the exception of Budapest first-run houses, the market open to foreign pictures in Hungary is extremely limited, yet it is flooded with product from other countries. Approximately 200 foreign films will be imported this season, chiefly American, but also many from Germany, Austria and France. In addition, there are still about 100 foreign pictures left over from last season. These are offered at a very low price, which naturally causes a slump in booking prices of new pictures, already lowered by the strong competition of 200 imported films.

Looking at the business results of last year, it appears that it would have been rational to decrease the number of foreign importations, particularly because, instead of last year's output of 24 Hungarian films, 45 pictures are to be made locally this year. The local branches of American companies as well as the independent Hungarian distributors have been particularly anxious to import a large number of films. The Hungarian market will not be able to cope with this number.

Possibly the companies which import first-rate product, and have exceptionally able managers here, may profit by this policy, but the majority of importers in all likelihood will sustain losses in the coming season. No foreign film can pay its way if it is shown only in the Budapest first-runs; yet most of them, of course, with the exception of super product, will go no farther than this. Very few imported pictures will be released in second-week, neighborhood and provincial cinemas, yet without these a picture has small chance of being a financial success.

Costs and Profits

The cost of launching a foreign film in Hungary, including prints, subtitles, taxes, publicity and other expenses, ranges from 15,000 to 25,000 pengos, not counting the license. The maximum profit obtainable from a release in a first-run is 25,000 pengos, the minimum 3,000. The average, however, is around 8,000 pengos. This is very little when compared with the initial costs.

At the start of the season, it is interesting to observe the keen competition between American and Hungarian films. The season opened with two big American features, "The Good Earth" and "On the Avenue," and two fairly good Hungarian films, "Hotel Kikelet" and "Segitség! Orökóltem!", fighting for supremacy in the smartest first-run cinemas. "Hotel Kikelet" particularly is scoring large box office takings, but the two American films are pronounced equally successful artistically and are having even greater success financially. This proves that a really good American picture can stand the competition of even a good Hungarian film in the first-run houses. Naturally, in the smaller Budapest theatres and in country towns, this state of affairs no longer obtains. In these houses no American picture, however good, can hope to command the same popularity as does a Hungarian film.

By the way, MGM, the only American company with a theatre of its own here, is reported considering abandonment of the house when the lease expires next summer. It is reported that the company will allow the Royal Trust to take it over. The Royal Trust supplies film for 12 first-runs and subsequents.

In return, the trust is expected to release MGM product in all of its theatres, thus giving the American company a considerably wider market than it enjoys at the moment.

If the deal goes through, only two independent houses will be left in Budapest, all the others being operated by Istvan Gero's Royal Trust.

MAYOR PROCLAIMS "AMUSEMENT WEEK"

The Electric theatre, Kansas City, Kan., last week celebrated its 31st anniversary.

Mayor Don C. McComb proclaimed the period "amusement week" in honor of the house, which is the oldest in the city, and called attention to the "high standard of entertainment service" the theatre has rendered, its "long record of clean, wholesome entertainment."

A. F. ("Peck") Baker, who has been in active charge of the house since it first was opened on October 6, 1906, and George Baker, his son, made it a big week with "Artists and Models" the first half of the week, and a big stage show and picture the last half. Admissions were raised 5 cents, from 15 to 20 on matinees, 25 to 30 cents at night, for the latter part of the week.

The big program is reminiscent of the theatre's early days when it was "the world's largest theatre for 5 cents."

The theatre has been rebuilt and enlarged several times, the last time in 1922.

Robert Wm. Paul Named Honorary Member of SMPE

At the convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at the Pennsylvania Hotel, N. Y., October 11 to 14, the name of Robert William Paul was proposed by the honorary membership committee of the Society for honorary membership in the organization. The proposal was made before the Society by John I. Crabtree, chairman.

On a unanimous vote of the Society, Mr. Paul was named an honorary member. The citation was read by Glenn E. Matthews, as follows:

To the BOARD OF GOVERNORS:

The honorary membership committee has the honor to present the name of Robert William Paul for honorary membership in our Society.

This man distinguished himself and enriched the history of this industry by his ingenious design of many instruments necessary to the development of the motion picture. He was also one of the first producers and exhibitors of motion pictures. During Mr. Paul's association with the motion picture industry for 16 years (1894-1910) his work embraced all branches of activity in the development of the motion picture. When Mr. Paul became interested in this field in 1894 the status of the art was somewhat as follows:

Edison and Dickson completed their first camera using rollable film in 1888-89 and began making short lengths of picture (47 feet long). The studio where the bulk of these films was made was completed in February, 1892. Many films were produced for examination with the Peep-hole Kinetoscope between 1892-95 when Dickson left Edison. The camera was so large and heavy that the pictures were all of vaudeville subjects. No satisfactory projector had been developed by Edison or his co-workers up to December 1895 when he learned of the Armat Vitascope and shortly afterwards was given a demonstration.

Jenkins and Armat gave the first public demonstration of their projector (Phantoscope) in September, 1895, at the Cotton States Exposition in Atlanta, Georgia. Armat then made important changes in the machine and subsequently remodeled it to make it of commercial value. The improved projector, known as the Vitascope, was used for a public exhibition in New York City, April 23, 1896.

Lumiere began his researches on a camera and projector in 1894, and demonstrated it in March, 1895, at an industrial conference. The first exhibition for which admission was charged was given December 28, 1895, in Paris. The work described below under Sections 1-7, inclusive, is considered, therefore, to be contemporaneous with the work of Lumiere and Armat. It is concluded, therefore, that Robert Paul pioneered in the evolution of the motion picture camera and projector and influenced greatly the development of the motion picture industry in Great Britain.

Mr. Paul's accomplishments may be summarized as follows:

1. Designed and built a camera with cam-driven intermittent movement (1895) (with Acres).

2. Designed and built printing and developing apparatus.

3. Designed and built an improved camera with a modified Geneva movement (1895). This camera was light and portable as compared with Edison and Dickson cameras.

4. Designed and built a projector with 7-tooth wheel intermittent movement (1895-96). See "English Mechanic," Feb. 21 and March 6, 1896, for description.

5. Designed and built an improved model projector having a revolving drum shutter cut away on two sides and equipped to show lantern slides as well as motion pictures. Used arc or limelight (Brit. Pat. No. 4686, Mar. 2, 1896).

6. Designed and built three-slot star wheel intermittent projector with 30 degree shutter having light to darkness ratio of 11 to 1 (1899) (Brit. Pat. No. 487, 1899).

7. Gave first entertainmen with projector known as "Theatrograph" at a Finsbury Technical College, London, Feb. 20, 1896. (Same date as first showing of Lumiere projector in England.)

8. Built first motion picture studio in England used for commercial production at Muswell Hill, N. London (1899). Described in Strand Magazine.

9. Gave many exhibitions in and around London and supplied pictures made under his direction for numerous exhibitions.

10. Made pioneer investigations in trick photography and slow-motion studies of scientific nature for distribution.

11. Made some of earliest news or topical pictures during 1896 in Portugal, Spain and Egypt, as well as England. Pictures shown with Paul's projector on the S. S. Norman on trip to S. Africa, April, 1896, probably first pictures exhibited at sea. Photographed Prince's Derby in June, 1896, and Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee in 1897. Sent two cameras to Boer War in 1899.

Mr. Paul began his career as a manufacturer of electrical and scientific instruments in London in 1891. He gave up the motion picture work in 1910 to devote himself exclusively to his original business. In the intervening years since that date he has made a notable reputation for his skillful design of instruments until his health forced his retirement a few years ago.

Budd Rogers Adds Canadian Managership for Maxwell

John Maxwell and Arthur Dent of Associated British Picture Corporation in London announced Wednesday the appointment of Budd Rogers to supervise the sale and distribution of their product in Canada. This now gives Mr. Rogers complete charge over sales in North America, having handled the affairs of the company for the last two years in the United States as vice-president and general manager of Alliance Films.

A deal has just been concluded with Empire-Universal Films, Ltd. for the distribution of Associated British product in Canada and Mr. Rogers soon will confer with Oscar Hanson, president, and A. W. Perry, general manager of Empire-Universal.

Associated British Picture in England has bought the controlling interest in the Union Cinemas of the United Kingdom, adding about 165 theatres and giving Associated British control of approximately 700 theatres in the United Kingdom.

Reisman Decorated With Honor Cross

Phil Reisman, foreign sales manager for RKO, has joined the ranks of those in the motion picture industry who have been decorated by the French government with the Legion of Honor Cross. Mr. Reisman was honored before sailing for New York on the Ile de France.

Among others in the motion picture industry who have been decorated are Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Sidney Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox; Adolph Zukor, chairman of the Paramount board of directors; and Harry Warner, president of Warner Brothers.

Wilcox Joins in Three Canadian 'Victoria' Openings

"Victoria the Great," Herbert Wilcox production, released through RKO Radio, opened in Toronto Monday, in Montreal last Friday, and had its western hemisphere premiere in Ottawa on the preceding Wednesday. Mr. Wilcox and Anna Neagle, star of the picture, attended all three openings, returning to New York following the Toronto showing for the premiere of the picture at the Radio City Music Hall, New York, October 28th.

On their arrival in Montreal Friday, Mr. Wilcox and Miss Neagle were presented with the freedom of the city by Mayor Renault and the City Council. Miss Neagle decorated the Victoria Monument at Victoria Square and inspected the Victoria Rifles, Queen Victoria's Canadian regiment.

Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor General of Canada, and Mrs. Tweedsmuir were hosts at a dinner preceding the Ottawa opening. Ned E. Depinet, vice-president of RKO Radio, also was present at the dinner.

RKO Radio last week issued a 72-page campaign book on the picture. The book is printed on 80-pound coated stock bound in a four-page offset cover in full color. Six insert pages printed in sepia cream stock introduce the subject matter with the more spectacular scenes from the production.

Word from London this week indicated that Mr. Wilcox will make two pictures for distribution by British Lion, using its Beaconsfield studio, following his next production, "The Romance of Madame Tussaud," for Imperator, releasing through RKO Radio.

National Decency Legion Classifies 18 Productions

Of 18 new pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week nine were approved for general patronage, six were listed as unobjectionable for adults, one was cited as objectionable in part and two were condemned. The pictures and their classification follow.

Class A-1, Objectionable for General Patronage: "Boots and Saddles," "The Great Garrick," "Luck of Roaring Camp," "Roll Along, Cowboy," "Stand In," "Texas Trail," "Thanks for Listening," "Wallaby Jim of the Islands," "Youth on Parole." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "Alcatraz Island," "Danger-Love at Work," "Double Wedding," "Evforduo" (Hungarian), "52nd Street," "Ora Ponciano" (Spanish). Class B, Objectionable in Part: "Angel." Class C, Condemned: "Adolph Armstrong" (Swedish), "Lucrezia Borgia" (French).

Leave of Absence Granted

Twentieth Century-Fox has granted a six months leave of absence to Louise Hovick (Gypsy Rose Lee). Since joining the company she has appeared in "You Can't Have Everything" and "Ali Baba Goes to Town." "Ali Baba," in which Eddie Cantor is starred, will be released October 29th.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended October 16, 1937, from 65 theatres in 13 major cities of the country was $989,029, an increase of $76,179 over the total for the preceding week ended October 9, 1937, when 66 theatres in 13 large cities aggregated $912,850.

DISTRIBUTORS "SCOOP" EXHIBITORS IN BRITISH DISPUTE OVER RENTALS

KRS Lays Down Decree To Put Teeth Into Old Agreement Limiting Program Length to 3¼ Hours

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

The Kinematograph Renters Society, representative organization of distributors in the British field, has got its blow in first in the rentals war recently foreshadowed by declarations in the Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association.

The CEA so far has done little but express the belief that rentals must come down and that cooperation between circuits and independents is necessary to bring them down.

The KRS, on the other hand, has announced decisions of policy which definitely, in the view of most observers, will raise prices to a still higher level. The offensive, it seems, has been snatched from the hands of exhibitors by KRS rulings, made public last week, in the matter of program limits and flat-price bookings.

For a long time a program time limit of 3¼ hours has been agreed upon between the CEA and the KRS, but in practice it very frequently has been inoperative. To make it more effective the KRS now has laid it down that a program shall consist as a maximum of two features, one short and a newsreel, or as an alternative it shall not play longer than 3¼ hours. To enforce this limit, KRS members propose to abolish flat-price bookings for first features, charging percentage terms on all films classed "A", whether played in single or double bills.

This decision will hit hardest those circuits and super-theatres which have specialized on long bills, often adding stage shows to two features and a newsreel, and have been able to buy their pictures advantageously. By the rank and file of exhibitors the view is taken that, under cover of the pretense of limiting overlong programs by making them uneconomic, distributors are seeking to boost rentals all 'round, by imposing percentage in every situation where the exhibitor still has found it possible to buy flat. A recent attempt to apply a similar policy in "monopoly" situations is being recalled.

Arthur Dent's Statement

The most surprising sequel to the KRS move was the issuance of a statement by Mr. Arthur Dent, executive chief of the Distributing Branch of Associated British Pictures, dissociating that company from the new policy.

Apart from providing unusual evidence of the fact that even in the ranks of distributors there may be two policies, Mr. Dent's statement quite incidentally revealed that ABP is not a member of the KRS. Inquiries elicited that, on the recent absorption of Wardour Films, Ltd., previously distributing branch of ABP, by the parent company, its membership of the Society automatically lapsed, and that, it seems, no new application was made by ABP.

Envisaged as a possibility by Mr. Dent, as a result of the KRS policy, was the situation that film prices as a whole might be controlled arbitrarily for the entire United Kingdom from the KRS offices, and a monopoly situation created. He cited American precedents to prove the danger of such developments, and the situation in Australia, where exhibitors in certain situations had to obtain the consent of two big groups before they could play independent product.

Threats of a "booking holiday," directed at selected distributors, were made by W. R. Fuller, general secretary of the CEA, in announcing that the new KRS policy would be considered by the CEA Council at its next meeting.

What exhibitors fear is that the definition of a first feature or "A" film may prove elastic in practice, and that percentage may become standard even in situations where it has been possible to maintain the flat-price principle. Primarily, of course, it will be applied in the case of two "A" films playing the same bill.

Joint Protest on Quota Bill

Informal talks between committees of the CEA and of the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries may lead to more formal cosultation between these organizations, with a view to establishing a united front in opposition to certain of the Government's proposals for new Quota legislation, as outlined in the famous White Paper.

Exhibitors oppose many more features of the White Paper than do the Film Group, which represents the interests of British producers. Essentially, the CEA policy still is founded on the quality clause, entailing a viewing test for all British films, as against the minimum cost (£15,000) basis accepted by the Government. Realizing, nevertheless, that the minimum cost principle is likely to be adopted, the CEA, as an alternative policy, will advocate various safeguards which also find favor with an important section of the Film Group.

UNITED FRONT SOUGHT ON QUOTA

Board Commission Favored

Most vital of these is that the advisory committee, composed of trade elements, shall be supplanted by an official commission or committee nominated by the Board of Trade.

The second main point of agreement is in regard to the "double quota" proposals of the White Paper, under which a film costing £45,000 counts two for quota. This is opposed by exhibitors on the ground that it would reduce available British footage; as a minimum concession, they ask that such films also should rank twice for exhibitors' quota. Producers, for the most part, also are opposed to this clause and even more strongly to the suggestion that it shall be extended on an arithmetical scale, so that a £45,000 picture would count as three, a £60,000 picture as four, and so on.

The probability appears to be that, in due course, at least a section of producers and exhibitors will come together in a joint policy, based on the need of protecting independent British producers against American domination of the British studio field, which is held to be threatened by the double quota plan and by the fact that qualification of a below-minimum film for quota rests, in the present plan, on approval of a committee composed of trade elements opposed to such films.

The Film Group as a separate unit is expected to ask exemption for British films from the six-months booking period, the leveling up of the distributors' and exhibitors' quotas (which, the White Paper proposes, shall be "stepped" in favor of exhibitors), and provisions for easy revision of quota scales and other features of the bill.

The KRS has declined an invitation from the British Films Advancement Council to meet members of Parliament associated with it for discussion of the new Films Bill.

GB Balance Sheet

The outstanding feature of the report and accounts of Gaumont British Picture Corporation, Ltd., for the year ended March 31st, was the provision for losses on film production and distribution amounting to £766,089. This total was reduced to £566,089 by a special reserve of £200,000 created last year, and compared with a "net profit from theatres, including income from investments," etc., of £561,701.

By the transfer of £435,278 from the reserve added to £147,021 brought forward, the available balance became £577,192. Income tax absorbs £57,679; interest on first mortgage debenture stock, £233,926; debenture sinking fund, £70,931; reserve for depreciation and amortization, £13,950; and preference dividend (to March 31st), £178,750. The net balance was £31,953, which was carried forward.

The directors' report stated: "The high cost of film production showed no appreciable fall during the year under review, and the non-recovery of a proportion of such costs from our American organization has resulted in heavy losses being sustained by Gaumont British Distributors, Ltd. . . . Your directors have considered it prudent to cease production at the Shepherd's Bush studios."

Increased profits were reported in the case of the subsidiary companies, Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd. (£9,557), and Denman Picture Houses, Ltd. (£56,179), and of the associated General Theatre Corporation, Ltd. (£61,072), and Moss Empires, Ltd.

Ostrers' Strategy

The Ostrer brothers stole a march on their opponents at the meeting of Gaumont-British stockholders on Friday. The gallery, crowded with 700 shareholders, who were reported to have been chosen by the Ostrers, voted five to one in favor of the directors, approved the financial report and reelected the directorate by large majorities.

It was freely charged that employees were given shares and instructions to shout down any criticism of the proceedings.

The noisy scenes began when Charles Nordon, acting for a stockholders' committee, moved an amendment rejecting the financial report and demanding a Board of Trade investigation. They were continual interruptions on fictitious points of order, shouts of "sit down," concerted cries of "paid agitator" and continual coughing.

Mr. Nordon declared that the Ostrers had to account for £4,500,000 of £7,000,000 handed to them. The accounts really showed a net loss, he said.

W. H. Drown seconded Mr. Nordon's motion amid frequent interruptions. He referred to "obstructive agitation by paid employees."

Jeffrey Bernerd, GB executive, retorted, "So are you employed by Mr. Maxwell (John Maxwell, head of Associated British Pictures)."

Mr. Drown said that Mr. Bernerd drew £9,000 a year; shareholders got nothing.

"It's £9,500," replied Bernerd.

Isidore Ostrer presided. He said that the preference dividend was paid because the cumulative arrears on the issue would be due next year if no dividend were paid this year.

Maxwell Buys Union Circuit

Mr. Maxwell has purchased for £450,000 the stock holdings of the late David Bernhard in Union Cinemas, Ltd., giving ABP control of the circuit and at the same time making ABP, with 700 theatres, the largest theatre group in England, according to Mr. Maxwell.

Two directors of Union Cinemas will be supplanted for ABP men and the future business of Union will be operated in conjunction with Mr. Maxwell's other theatre interests.

Prior to his death Mr. Bernhard had said that Union had 228 and was building 30 other houses. The ABP-Union tieup will give Mr. Maxwell's group at least 100 more theatres than GB.

CEA Drops Publicity Bureau

The CEA has dropped its plan for a publicity bureau, and Frank Tilley, who had been named to handle the department, has been appointed temporarily to assist W. R. Fuller, general secretary of the CEA, on publicity work in connection with the new Films Bill.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Laughton's Next

Charles Laughton, after completion of "Vessel of Wrath," first of the Mayflower productions for Associated British Pictures release, is to make "St. Martin's Lane" under Tim Whelan's direction, at Elstree. Following that film the previously announced schedule of the Pommer-Laughton organization is likely to be revised. The third picture probably will be a story of English newspaper life, from an original which Bartlett Cormac is writing.

Recent absorption of the Morning Post, oldest British newspaper, by the Daily Telegraph, inspired the film theme. Laughton is to appear as the son of the owner of a historic paper. In youth he joins the staff, rises to the editorship, and for 50 years devotes his life to the paper. The finale, probably, will be on the lines of the actual last scene in the Post office a week ago, when Editor Gwynne put on his hat and walked out with his usual "Good night, gentlemen."

The background will be the last half century of English history, seen from the newspaper angle, and Fleet Street itself will be reproduced in the period which has witnessed its greatest changes.

Cormac, who wrote "Front Page" and "Gentlemen of the Press," is said to be aiming at something very different from the fast-talking American thriller dealing with newspaper-land. The period he has to cover is that of the pre-telegraph era, when newspaper men were dignified and top-hatted; research in press files and consultation with Fleet Street veterans already is planned to make the atmosphere authentic.

As with "Fury," written by Cormac, a news item has inspired a photoplay. Another recent British instance was the Pommer production, "Farewell Again," directed by Whelan.

For ABP's own production at Elstree in the near future is an adaptation of Edgar Wallace's thriller, "The Terror," which will be the first directorial effort of Richard Bird, film player and stage producer.

Also shortly to go on the floor is Arnold Bennett's famous comedy "The Card," for which a lead has still to be found. Cary Grant, wanted for the part of the sharp-witted provincial boy, is not available.

The cast of "The Terror" will include John Lodge, Iris Hoey, Arthur Wontner, Wilfred Lawson, and Alastair Sim.

London and Color

Raymond Massey, fiercely bearded and clad in wide, white baggy trousers, embroidered coat and turban, has been playing the part of a frontier chief in spectacular battle scenes for "The Drum," second of the color features for London Films at Denham, to be finished in two weeks, close on the heels of the first color picture, "The Divorce of Lady X," which is in the cutting room.

The exterior lot at Denham this week was the scene of the destruction of an Indian fort by shell fire, followed by a charge by Gordon Highlanders, most picturesquely costumed of British troops. This scene links up with actual exteriors secured in the Himalayas, which color experts rate as good as anything yet filmed in color.

CHARLES LAUGHTON has the role of the beachcomber in "Vessel of Wrath", first Mayflower-ABP production.

René Clair Film

While Jack Buchanan plays in New York in the stage production of "Between the Devil," the Jack Buchanan screen production of "Break the News" approaches completion at Pinewood, where they are shooting sequences with Maurice Chevalier and June Knight to link up with the Buchanan-Knight scenes completed before Chevalier sailed.

"Break the News," directed by the French René Clair (it is his first picture since "The Ghost Goes West"), has French (Maurice Chevalier), British (Jack Buchanan), and American (June Knight) leads and music composed by the American, Cole Porter.

Chevalier and Buchanan are cast as chorus boys who, denied at the last moment the chance to play a double act in the show in which June Knight is the star, decide on a publicity stunt in order to force themselves into footlight prominence.

"Break the News" probably will have a New York premiere during Buchanan's stage engagement there.

Longest Take?

Currently for "Vessel of Wrath" at Elstree, Charles Laughton has made an attempt at a new "longest take" record in a scene in which, as the drunken beachcomber Ginger Ted, he is up before the Resident of the tropical island and earnestly discusses with his judge the most suitable punishment for his offense against white dignity. The shot lasts four and a half minutes without a break.

Tyronne Guthrie, stage producer at the "Old Vic," has been cast as brother to Elsa Lanchester, lady missionary of the picture.

Waxwork Romance

Herbert Wilcox is to make, as his next "Imperator" production for RKO world release, an adaptation of "The Romance of Madame Tussaud," the biography, by her grandson, of the founder of the famous Waxwork establishment in London's Marylebone Road.

The picture will be all-color and important scenes will have the French Revolution as a background. Madame Tussaud's apprenticeship to wax sculpture had his setting.

Simultaneously, it is announced that, for Herbert Wilcox Productions, Mr. Wilcox has contracted to make two pictures for British Lion release, using that company's Beaconsfield studios. First of these will be "No Parking," which will star Gordon Harker, Cockney star. Second will be "Nippy," the romance of a teashop girl originally scheduled as an Anna Neagle vehicle. Jean Gillie will now play the waitress, with the support of Harker and of Ralph Reader, who also will write special musical numbers and arrange dances. Reader, formerly a stage producer, played in the Wilcox "Gang Show," and took that picture to America.

Itemized

Ian McLean has a contract with Warner-First National.

Margaret Vyner, Australian ex-fashion model, has joined the cast of the Jessie Matthews "Sailing Along."

Religious features scheduled by Gaumont-British Instructional include "As We Forgive," "The Unseen Power" and "What Men Live By."

CRICK TO DROP POST AS HOYTS CHAIRMAN

Will Give All His Time to Duties as Australia Managing Director of 20th-Fox

by CLIFF HOLT
in Melbourne

Expressing the view that it was impractical to serve two companies with such divergent functions as distribution and exhibition, Stanley S. Crick has announced that he will not seek reappointment as chairman of directors of Hoyts Theatres, Ltd., at the company's annual shareholders' meeting, early in November. Mr. Crick, who is managing director of Twentieth Century-Fox in Australia, has been chairman of the Hoyts board for the last seven years.

Mr. Crick said he regarded distribution as his main responsibility. Despite his company's important stock-holding in Hoyts, he declared he felt it his duty to clarify the 20th Century-Fox policy of protecting the interests of the vast number of independent exhibitors who have made, and still make up, the business of Twentieth Century in Australia.

Mr. Crick's announcement came as a surprise to the trade here. His successor will be named when the Hoyts shareholders meet in Melbourne.

Five Cinesound Features

In the next twelve months Australia's almost lone producing unit, Cinesound Productions, will deliver five features. The company has voted an expenditure of £100,000 ($500,000) for production costs.

Cinesound executives say that their new policy of almost continuous productions will reduce the studio's overhead. Their confidence in local production arises out of the success achieved by "It Isn't Done." Indications of a repetition of that success are given by "Tall Timbers," which has clicked in Brisbane, the scene of its world premiere.

Lloyd Hughes, who was brought from Hollywood to star in "Lovers and Luggers," now in the cutting stage, will be retained to play the lead in "The Broken Melody." This is a story by Frank Harvey, scenarist of "It Isn't Done." An operatic sequence will be the highlight.

Newspaper's Overture

Victoria's leading national daily newspaper, the Melbourne Herald, has made a practical gesture towards the motion picture industry in the form of a donation of space for institutional advertising to the value of approximately £400 ($2,000). The industry is using up the space by taking 10 inch three column advertisements each alternate day over a month.

The Melbourne Herald's action is the aftermath of an application by the Victorian Exhibitors Association for a reduction of advertising rates for such time as children under 16 are banned from cinemas during the infantile paralysis epidemic. The Herald receives the bulk of the amusement industry's advertising, and theatremen held the view that, along with other newspapers, the Herald had unnecessarily exaggerated the seriousness of the spread of the illness.

In response to the association's application for advertising concessions, the Herald tempered its refusal with a contribution of space to augment the industry's combined efforts to bring the public back to pictures.

Compensation by the State Government for the heavy losses suffered during the infantile paralysis by theatre managements in Melbourne and suburban areas will be applied for if the public health authorities insist that the ban on attendance by children under 16 be continued.

After maintaining the ban for the last six weeks and cancelling all suburban matinees, the Victorian Exhibitors Association has decided to lift the restrictions on juveniles provided they are accompanied by adults. Matinees, however, will not be resumed for the present.

The Association said that an indefinite continuance of the restrictions without modification could not fail to result in a serious cumulative loss for all exhibitors and in bankruptcy for some. It was pointed out that while the decision involved some slight modification of the present restrictions, since children were admitted to all other public entertainments including the annual Royal Show and assembled in large numbers at football matches and elsewhere, no reasonable objection could be taken to the step.

The statement concluded: "In view of the heavy losses which exhibitors will continue to incur while those restrictions are in force, it is hoped that should the Consultative Council request their continuance it will recommend to the Government that, as such restrictions are imposed as public health measures for the benefit of the community as a whole, financial compensation should be made to the industry.

Conn Sets Four Deals, Signs Marshall Neilan

Ambassador Pictures, Maurice Conn, president, concluded releasing arrangements this week on the 16 features of the 1937-38 program, with Harry Segal, for New England; H. C. Bissell and C. C. Linehan, in Cleveland; Anne O'Donnell's Monarch Pictures, in Detroit, and with Louis (Pop) Korson's and Edward Boreth's Masterpiece Film Attractions, in Philadelphia and Washington. Mr. Segal, in Boston, opened new offices, to operate as Ambassador Pictures of New England, Inc. The Bissell-Linehan interests incorporated as Ambassador Pictures of Northern Ohio, Inc.

Maurice Conn returned to New York this week from Hollywood and brought word that he had signed Marshall Neilan to direct, starting first on "Sweethearts in Springtime."

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

DEVIL IS DRIVING, THE: Richard Dix, Joan Perry—A propaganda picture that lacks the punch to put over its message under the classification of entertainment. Running time, 66 minutes. Played September 28-30.—G. E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntingon, Ind. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN HOLLYWOOD: Richard Dix, Fay Wray—Terrible. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Oct. 6-7.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural patronage.

LOST HORIZON, THE: Ronald Colman, Jane Wyatt—A lavish production that pleased all patrons. Has a weird, fantastic plot centered about an infinite Utopia. It offers plenty of food for thought. Needs some exploitation, but has been presold enough to take care of itself. We did a very good business and it held up strong on fourth day. Running time, 118 minutes. Played Oct. 3-5.—Peter Panagos, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

RACKETEERS IN EXILE: George Bancroft, Evelyn Venable—We played this with the Louis-Farr fight. The modern version of an evangelist racket. Just a fair programer; will get by on mid-week but not strong enough for Sundays. Running time, 67 minutes. Played October 2-3.—Fischer and Bickler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

RUSTY RIDES ALONE and FIGHTING FOR JUSTICE: Tim McCoy Westerns—Tim is still good in his westerns or must be, as he gets them out. Real good, with good music.—Mrs. Gene Michael, Best Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Coal mining patronage.

TWO GUN LAW: Charles Starrett, Peggy Stratford—Just an ordinary western. Nothing to crow about. Running time, 56 minutes. Played September 29.—Fischer and Bickler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE STUTTERING BISHOP, THE: Donald Woods, Ann Dvorak—Just a programer that got by. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

CONFESSION: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—Just a programer that got by. Running time, 73 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

DRAEGERMAN COURAGE: Jean Muir, Barton MacLane—Nice little programer that will get by in any spot. Pleased all. Don't be afraid of this one. Running time, 60 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

EMPTY HOLSTERS: Dick Foran, Patricia Wallthall—A Western that pleased. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Oct. 1-2.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery—A very good comedy that did well at the box office. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GREEN LIGHT: Errol Flynn, Anita Louise—A good show in anybody's house. We invited the ministers and they had nothing but praise for it. The chorus was great, but not enough of it. Running time, 84 minutes. Played October 3-4.—M. L. DuBose, Majestic Theatre, Cotulla, Texas. Small town and country patronage.

PRAIRIE THUNDER: Dick Foran, Ellen Clancy—This last western by Foran is a real wild western—Indians and everything. Had my western fans on edge and did they ever eat it up. It's one of the best we've had for some time. Running time, 54 minutes. Played Oct. 5.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn.

PRINCE AND THE PAUPER, THE: Billy and Bobby Mauch, Errol Flynn, Claude Rains—Best costume picture we have run this year, but give the credit to the Mauch twins. They went over big with both children and adults. Get in touch with your English teachers on this picture. They'll help you put it over. Running time, 120 minutes. Played October 8.—M. L. DuBose, Majestic Theatre, Cotulla, Texas. Small town and country patronage.

GB Pictures

KING SOLOMON'S MINES: Paul Robeson, Ann Lee—Before playing this subject I would recommend that every exhibitor turn back the pages of the Herald and read the recent review of Bruce Allan. Sell yourself the picture first, then go out and sell it to your customers. Unfortunately, there is no first run for the GB pictures in any of the nearby cities. Therefore, we have to pioneer with them. "King Solomon's Mines" will bring into your theatre people you seldom see, for it is one of the classics of fiction. I concur in everything that Mr. Allan said in his review. Running time, 78 minutes. Played October 10-11.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

Grand National

ARIZONA DAYS: Tex Ritter, Eleanor Stewart—Was another good western if your fans like musical westerns. Ritter's are different as he seldom shoots anyone or kills them.—Mrs. Gene Michael, Best Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Coal mine patronage.

DAMAGED GOODS: Pedro de Cordoba—A fine picture with a great lesson. Played it in our A house to increased business and had many compliments on it. You owe it to your public to play this.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DAMAGED GOODS: Pedro de Cordoba—We were just a little afraid to play this but took a chance. Went over big. We had a special matinee for High School and teachers told us was the best thing we ever did for the town.—J. A. Fair, Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa. General patronage.

HITTIN' THE TRAIL: Tex Ritter, Jerry Bergh—Well, Mr. Inks, this was an exceptionally good picture of Ritter's. The music was perfect and if your sound on the film wasn't good, I think I'd have it checked. This man is going over, and going over big, and we don't get bad prints from Grand National; and, what's more, Tex Ritter can't be compared to Autry and his voice and acting. Played September 14-15.—Mrs. Gene Michael, Best Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Coal mine patronage.

SING, COWBOY, SING: Tex Ritter, Louise Stanley—Pretty good. More action and less singing would make these westerns better. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Small town patronage.

SMALL TOWN BOY, THE: Stuart Erwin, Joyce Compton—We played the Grand National picture, "The Small Town Boy," at our theatre during the week of September 26, 1937, and did a very nice business on same. This was the first Grand National picture we have played, and if the rest are as good as this picture and draw as nice a patronage as this picture did we shall be very well satisfied. Our patrons were very much pleased with this picture and we had a very favorable reaction from them with plenty of good comments included.—Henry L. Mader, Circle Theatre, Circleville, Ohio. Rural and small town patronage.

SONG OF THE GRINGO: Tex Ritter, Joan Woodbury—This in my estimation is Ritter at his best. They got right up in their seats when he sang "Rye Whisky," and why not. We are very proud of the way he sings and talks, which is very distinctly. Played August 6-7.—Mrs. Gene Michael, Best Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Coal mining patronage.

SWEETHEART OF THE NAVY: Eric Linden, Cecilia Parker—Nice program picture. Well liked; played to good business.—J. A. Fair, Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1938: Robert Taylor, Eleanor Powell—This melody in no way compares to the former pictures. Loew's, we feel, misses the genius of Thalberg. Judy Garland is the whole show. Powell dances in no way compared to her former work and Taylor as usual is very stiff. The picture did not draw and the lobby comments were just so. Loew's will have to do better than this to hold up their standard on musicals. Played Oct. 10-12.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1938: Robert Taylor, Eleanor Powell—A big cast of established names guarantees business at the box office but the film follows a too familiar pattern. There is nothing new or novel to mark it as a 1938 edition. Running time, 114 minutes. Played October 3-5.—G. E. Lanacaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

BRIDE WORE RED, THE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone—A slow-moving vehicle with a simple theme that fails in its purpose. Either Crawford's slipping or the patrons were tipped off on this one, but when playing it one should sharpen their red pencil for not only will the bride wear red, but the box office as well. Running time, 103 minutes. Played Oct. 10-13.—Peter Panagos, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

EMPEROR'S CANDLESTICKS, THE: William Powell, Luise Rainer—Little slow but think it was thoroughly enjoyed by all who saw it. Running time, 89 minutes. Played September 19-20.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb., Small town patronage.

CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS: Freddie Bartholomew, Spencer Tracy, Lionel Barrymore—Undoubtedly this is one of the year's most superb pictures. The stars all gave excellent performances and the story is fine. Still, we only did a fair business for some reason. Running time, 116 minutes. Played Oct. 1-2.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS: Freddie Bartholomew, Spencer Tracy, Lionel Barrymore—Excellent. Top notch entertainment.—Rubin Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—Did good business on this and it is a credit to any theatre that is to play it.—J. A. Fair, Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa. General patronage.

MARRIED BEFORE BREAKFAST: Robert Young, Florence Rice—Good for any day. Not big.—J. A. Fair, Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa. General patronage.

PARNELL: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—Why waste Clark Gable and Myrna Loy on pictures that only students want to see? These two actors belong to the masses and not the classes. And Billie Burke trying to be a sweet sixteen. The casting director must have been out. Edna Mae Oliver was superb. Positively not a small town picture. Played October 6-7.—M. L. DuBose, Majestic Theatre, Cotulla, Texas. Small town and country patronage.

ROMEO AND JULIET: Norma Shearer, Leslie Howard—Was surprised at the draw for this one. Had a school matinee and that helped a lot. Was a grand picture and certainly was glad that we played it. Much better than "Midsummer Night's Dream" for audiences. Running time, 127 minutes. Played September 22-23.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THEY GAVE HIM A GUN: Spencer Tracy, Gladys George, Franchot Tone—Everybody raved about this picture, and the box office take said it was good, too. Played September 26.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

TOPPER: Constance Bennett, Cary Grant—Everything about this one is sufficiently "screwy" that it might have been made in an insane institution. But it is sufficiently "different" that the patrons will not walk out on it, though I have a feeling that they would not care to see another of the same type. Running time, 97 minutes. Played Oct. 8-9.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

TOPPER: Constance Bennett, Cary Grant, Roland Young—Say this is the screwiest thing we ever ran. Play it at extra time. People will talk about it all day on the streets and that makes people want to see it. Well made and will do business and that will buy coal.—J. A. Fair, Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa. General patronage.

Monogram

HOOSIER SCHOOLBOY: Mickey Rooney, Anne Nagel—Played to 'way above average Friday-Saturday business. Many favorable comments. Running time, 65 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa.

Paramount

ARTISTS AND MODELS: Jack Benny, Gail Patrick—Good picture, O. K. in any spot. This did not do as good as it should have but a lot of sickness cut in on the receipts. Running time, 97 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ARTISTS AND MODELS: Jack Benny, Gail Patrick—A loosely knit story with unimpressive dazzle and only a few models. Plenty of artists, however. A hatful of big names to draw them in. Humorman Benny is quite funny in spots and pleasingly witty and human throughout. Ben Blue drew the loudest laughs. In fact, the whole thing pleased, though business was only slightly above average. The only adverse criticism was of Ida Lupino, on whom some patrons were not sold. Played Oct. 6.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., Waldo Theatre, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

BLONDE TROUBLE: Eleanore Whitney, Johnny Downs—This is the first of the 1937 contract and if this is a sample of what we are going to get for the season am sorry we own this product. There is absolutely no reason for a producer to waste two such corners as Whitney and Downs on such a picture. It may do on the lower half of a double but did not stand by itself. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Oct. 6-7.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE OR NOTHING: Bing Crosby, Martha Raye—Went over very good to a satisfactory gross. No question but Martha Raye is added box office and the specialty numbers were outstanding. Running time, 90 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa.

EXCLUSIVE: Fred MacMurray, Frances Farmer—Good program picture. Running time, 81 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

EXCLUSIVE: Fred MacMurray, Frances Farmer, Charlie Ruggles—Dandy newspaper story, liked by all who saw it. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 26-27.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

FORLORN RIVER: Larry Crabbe, June Martel—Pretty good western. The Zane Grey's are not as good as they used to be. Running time, 56 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Small town patronage.

HILLS OF OLD WYOMING: William Boyd, George Hayes—Must be a good Western. Anyhow, we did a nice business with it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Sept. 24-25.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY SERIES: All of these do business for me. Some a little slow but they don't mind that.—Mrs. Gene Michael, Best Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Coal mining patronage.

I MET HIM IN PARIS: Claudette Colbert, Robert Young, Melvyn Douglas—A perfectly cast picture, we think. Robert Young is as popular in my town—with the ladies—as is Robert Taylor. Personally, I think he's a better actor, and just as handsome. Melvyn Douglas was perfect. Why don't they use him more? Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 26-27.—M. L. DuBose, Majestic Theatre, Cotulla, Texas. Small town and country patronage.

I MET HIM IN PARIS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas, Robert Young—A very good comedy but didn't do much business with it here. Played October 1.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

JUNGLE PRINCESS, THE: Dorothy Lamour, Ray Milland—Sure was surprised that this was the picture it was. They sure did eat it up and did very well on it. Played August 19.—Mrs. Gene Michael, Best Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Coal mining patronage.

MIDNIGHT MADONNA: Warren William, Mady Correll—A maudlin and dull picture if I ever saw one. There may be an audience for this type of film but I can't find one in my town. Played October 3-4.—G. E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

"FOR THE GOOD OF THE BUSINESS"

This is my first report on pictures for some time and I am glad to do it for the good of the business.

This is the first department I turn to when I get the HERALD.

—J. A. FAIR,
Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa.
General patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Bob Burns, Martha Raye—We were glad to have had the privilege of playing this picture on our anniversary. It did exceptionally well in spite of the provincial election. Opinions were divided but box office excellent.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can.

NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE: William Boyd, George Hayes—Paramount is certainly the tops with their westerns and this is no exception. The photography and the story is very good. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Oct. 8-9.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

PLAINSMAN, THE: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—Can't say too much for this one. Leave it to Paramount to do up a good western. Although we did not make so much, we had those that came satisfied. Played July 6-7.—Mrs. Gene Michael, Best Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Coal mining patronage.

SOULS AT SEA: Gary Cooper, George Raft—I guess the ladies up here in this lake district like their men and movies a little rough, for they seemed to like this one okay. Running time, 92 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa.

SOULS AT SEA: Gary Cooper, George Raft—Went in and saw it myself as there were plenty of seats available. A strangely impersonal spectacle that failed to grip me immediately after seeing it. The production was a vague blur of ship sinking amidst Hollywood hurly-burly, oily miscast Raft and coasting-easily-through-its-scenes Cooper. I remember it now as clearly as I remember "Ben-Hur." The audience received it blithely and several voiced their disappointment. Played Oct. 3.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., Waldo Theatre, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

WAIKIKI WEDDING: Bing Crosby, Martha Raye, Shirley Ross, Bob Burns—Believe it or not they liked this, which is very unusual for miners. We didn't make anything but broke even. A good picture with all the pigs and Martha Raye. Played August 24.—Mrs. Gene Michael, Best Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Coal mining patronage.

WILD MONEY: Edward Everett Horton—A fair cast couldn't overcome the handicap of trite and hackneyed material. This one belong in the "cellar" group. Running time, 69 minutes. Played October 10-11.—G. E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

Republic

HAPPY-GO-LUCKY: Phil Regan, Evelyn Venable—Seemed to be a rather "screwy" story and we failed to sell it to our people. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Sept. 28-29.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

SEA RACKETEERS: Weldon Heyburn, Jeanne Madden—Nice program picture but the cast had no draw. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 22.—Fischer and Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strassburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

THREE MESQUITEERS: Robert Livingston, Ray Corrigan, Sid Saylor—An excellent western. Saylor got plenty of laughs.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala.

RKO Radio

FLIGHT FROM GLORY: Chester Morris, Whitney Bourne—This one sneaks up on you and surprises. Very dramatic and very good. Running time, 70 minutes.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MAKE A WISH: Bobby Breen, Basil Rathbone—Make a wish that they will keep on liking Bobby Breen and don't let this picture change their minds. Some said they liked it; others claimed they would rather have had a repeat of beloved "Rainbow on the River"; the rest coasted out into the night in silence. Did below average business for Saturday night. Played September 25.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., Waldo Theatre, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

MEET THE MISSUS: Victor Moore, Helen Broderick—We did unexpectedly well for this comedy and as far as we could learn it satisfied. Played October 2.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

ON AGAIN—OFF AGAIN: Wheeler and Woolsey—Not as good as other Wheeler and Woolsey pictures but they pack them in and that is what we want. No kicks. Only wish we had more such pictures. Comedy is what they want.—J. A. Fair, Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa. General patronage.

RIDING ON AIR: Joe E. Brown, Guy Kibbee—Joe E. Brown always does business at my theatre. Just the kind of foolishness people want.—J. A. Fair, Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa. General patronage.

SHALL WE DANCE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Here is a good musical comedy with a fine story and a good cast but not as good as some of the other Astaire-Rogers pictures. Somehow didn't do so good at the box office. Running time, 111 minutes. Played September 18-19.—Fischer and Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

STAGE DOOR: Katharine Hepburn, Ginger Rogers, Adolphe Menjou—A box office natural when the word gets around. A fast-moving, sure-fire hit. Not a dull moment in the entire picture.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SUPER SLEUTH: Jack Oakie, Ann Sothern—Some will like, others won't. One of those things. Average entertainment. Played September 3-4.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

TOAST OF NEW YORK: Edward Arnold, Frances Farmer, Cary Grant, Jack Oakie—Fine if you can get them in.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

BIG BUSINESS: Jed Prouty, Spring Byington—Where they like the Jones Family, it ought to go over good. It's a swell comedy. Played September 29.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

CAFE METROPOLE: Loretta Young, Tyrone Power—Only a pretty good program picture. Loretta Young no good here. All of her pictures did not make any money for us. Running time, 82 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—When the reissues of Will Rogers pictures first started, the business in Sodus was considerably better than average; then it gradually lessened until we played "David Harum." Business was a pleasant surprise. Favorable weather helped. Played October 6-7.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

FIFTY ROADS TO TOWN: Don Ameche, Ann Sothern—Just a fair to middling picture. Played September 21.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED OUT WEST: Paul Kelly, Judith Allen—Just another cheaply made westerner that just gets by. Played September 28.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THIS IS MY AFFAIR: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Taylor—Outside of the impressionable young feminine element who think Robert Taylor is "too beautiful for words," the cash customers around here don't care too much for him and consequently this one didn't do much. However, it's a fair picture. Played September 24.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LOVE IS NEWS: Loretta Young, Tyrone Power—A fast and altogether pleasing performance thoroughly enjoyed by fair sized audiences. Played September 29-30.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

NANCY STEELE IS MISSING: Victor McLaglen, Peter Lorre—Fair business for this stirring drama. Well liked. Played September 25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

ON THE AVENUE: Dick Powell, Madeleine Carroll, Ritz Brothers—Very good picture. Ritz Bros. excellent in this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

SLAVE SHIP: Wallace Beery, Warner Baxter—This slave ship stuff don't go here. It's a darn good production and well put on. Just won't ring at box office.—J. A. Fair, Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa. General patronage.

SLAVE SHIP: Wallace Beery, Warner Baxter—The action fans, the men, thought this was great. However, the women thought it was too brutal. Business OK, so it's a good picture as far as I am concerned. Played September 17.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THAT I MAY LIVE: Rochelle Hudson, Robert Kent —Just a programer. Just got by. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

THIN ICE: Sonja Henie, Tyrone Power—Another marvelous Sonja Henie feature with Tyrone Power. Joan Davis adds the comedy and she has Martha Raye backed off the map. Her "Olga from the Volga" is a riot. A fine production all through. Our audience loved it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THIN ICE: Sonja Henie, Tyrone Power, Joan Davis —The one and only Sonja, the winged mercury on skates, supported by a ballet that are plenty good themselves. Good business and the little lady is a good draw and all hail to her. Not forgetting Joan Davis, who is in a class all by herself in putting over "Olga from the Volga." She had the house in stitches on this one. The gal is clever.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WAKE UP AND LIVE: Walter Winchell, Ben Bernie, Alice Faye, Jack Haley—A great show. Comedy, music, dancing, romance, just about everything that can be packed into one feature. Pleased 100 per cent. Had been shown all around so not so good at the box office, but pleased those who came. Running time, 91 minutes. Played October 6-7.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WEE WILLIE WINKIE: Shirley Temple, Victor McLaglen—Too bad they are killing this little star with such material. Why do they do it? Did above average business but not half what she used to do. Hope her next is better. If not it will be just too bad for the producer.—J. A. Fair, Elite Theatre, Laurens, Iowa. General patronage.

WESTERN GOLD: Smith Bellew, Heather Angel—When they walk out on a picture on Bargain Night, you know what kind of a picture it is. Based in Lincoln's time, it had so many false heroics that it was ridiculous. It is slow and boresome to the extreme. A picture where they laugh in the wrong places.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WIFE, DOCTOR AND NURSE: Loretta Young, Warner Baxter—Modern up-to-date picture that is sure to please. Swell title to exploit. We played up the sex angle in the form of teaser ads and got swell results. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Sept. 26-29.—Peter Panagos, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind. General patronage.

WILD AND WOOLLY: Jane Withers—Entertaining programer that gets by nicely and pleased all. Running time, 60 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

WINGS OF THE MORNING: Annabella, Henry Fonda—One of the best in a long time. Wish more people could have seen it. Annabella very good and Fonda also does extra work. Color is good. Steve Donohue, famous jockey, appears in this picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

YOU CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Ritz Brothers—I personally thought this picture an inferior musical for all its ballyhoo. Did below average business. The Ritz Bros. were not very funny, and Don Ameche does not draw well here. Some of the patrons enjoyed it, others were not enthusiastic. Played October 7-8.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., Waldo Theatre, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

YOU CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING: Don Ameche, Alice Faye, Ritz Brothers—Audience seemed to like the picture and it is okay as musicals go, with a large dose of the Ritz Brothers. I am afraid that Fox is going to wear out their welcome if they use them too much, as they seem to be doing. They are starred in "Life Begins in College." They are a type of Marx Brothers, but not so clever, and Metro is smart enough to cast them in one picture a year.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

YOU CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Tony Martin—Good music, humor, speed, it has all of them and a cast that delivers. Incidentally, our voice goes to Tony Martin when it comes to singing a hit tune! Running time, 98 minutes. Played September 19-21.—G. E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

United Artists

ELEPHANT BOY: Native Cast—Very good picture of its kind but it's the same old story; I cannot make a thing with this company's product. Was very much disappointed with their pics this year. Too many foreign-made pictures to suit me.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

ELEPHANT BOY: Native Cast—Nothing to this picture. Has no story whatever but the sound is good on it. Played October 7.—Fischer and Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

STAR IS BORN, A: Janet Gaynor, Fredric March —This was one feature from United Artists that pleased everyone and it was a pleasure to play it. Nice color and very good sound. One of the best of the year. Advertise it and make some money. Above average business. Running time, 105 minutes. Played September 25-26.—Fischer and Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

STELLA DALLAS: Barbara Stanwyck, Anne Shirley, John Boles—And then came "Stella Dallas" to make them love movies, love your theatre, and love you for showing it. Through red eyes, milady, milady's maid, farmers, housewives, doctors, lawyers, gentlemen in brown suede shoes, truck drivers and even the unmovable, upsophisticated tow-headed college lads, say softly, "Beautiful, great—I can't talk now!" Drew very well. Stanwyck's "Stella Dallas" and Muni's "Zola" are the two outstanding characters of the movie seson.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., Waldo Theatre, Waldoboro, Maine.

WHEN THIEF MEETS THIEF: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Valerie Hobson—The audience stayed away in droves because they heard it was English, and don't like Jr. anyway. Still it was approved by those who came, and was not a bad story or production by any means. Played Sept. 27.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., Waldo Theatre, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

Universal

BUCK JONES PICTURES: I have played "Empty Saddles," "Boss Rider of Gun Creek," "Left Handed Law" and "Sandflow," and as my customers are Buck Jones fans, they did average business. He is OK for me.—Mrs. Gene Michael, Best Theatre, Freeburn, Ky. Coal mining patronage.

CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD: John Wayne, Louise Latimer—A story of a railroad firm competing against a trucking firm in a race across the country to a post in California. The one who reached the ship's post first received a million dollar contract. Well, the trucks were Ford V-8 and they beat the train. Okay for those who don't think. We starved on it here. It's a Hudson-Essex manufacturing town, and I guess they weren't sold on the ability of this Ford. Tie up with your Ford dealer on this one, he should give you a car for showing it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

EMPTY SADDLES: Buck Jones, Louise Brooks—Good western but should never have been titled as was. People thought it had something to do with the song by same title. Jones no longer is top western star for me. Dick Foran now holds that position.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

LUCKIEST GIRL IN THE WORLD: Jane Wyatt, Louis Hayward—Played by the most unfortunate situation in the world as far as the boxoffice was concerned. Don't feel bad if you don't play this one. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

MIGHTY TREVE, THE: Noah Beery, Jr., Barbara Read—Good little picture, played on bargain nights.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MYSTERIOUS CROSSING: James Dunn, Jean Rogers—Very good program picture. Wish I had known there were so many colored people in this picture. I could have advertised this fact to my Negro trade and increased my box office receipts. I have found that Negroes in my town will come to almost any picture that has some colored people in it, but I have to let 'em know about it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SANDFLOW: Buck Jones—We played this with a British production and we were able to save our face. We are most thankful to Buck Jones—he gives us a break at the box office.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

WINGS OVER HONOLULU: Wendy Barrie, Ray Milland—Just a picture. We played it on a Saturday night and our usual Saturday night patrons played beano or went riding. Played October 2.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., Waldo Theatre, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

ANOTHER DAWN: Kay Francis, Errol Flynn—Not so good. Too draggy. This did not give very good satisfaction. Kay Francis is slipping here. Running time, 74 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CALL IT A DAY: Olivia de Havilland, Ian Hunter —If anyone liked this one they neglected to tell me, but the ones who did not like it did not neglect to report on it. I believe this is one of the worst features I ever ran. The English accent makes it almost impossible to understand, which is no doubt just as well, as the plot is non-existent. Hope I never hear of another English show. Didn't take in enough the second night to pay the help. Running time, 89 minutes. Played October 9-10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN: George Brent, Beverly Roberts, El Brendel—A magnificent production in color. Warner should be proud of this feature. Beautiful scenery, wonderful acting and a grand story all combine to make this one of the screen's finest achievements. George Brent and Beverly Roberts combine their talents to make a performance worthy of the highest. El Brendel supplies his inimitable comedy and the balance of the cast performed equally as well. This was our opening picture of the 1937-38 season and we picked a winner.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison Theatre, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

GO GETTER, THE: George Brent, Anita Louise—I was uncertain about this, but was agreeably surprised. Turned out to be very fine.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

KID GALAHAD: Edward G. Robinson, Bette Davis —Very good picture that gave general satisfaction. Running time, 100 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

KID GALAHAD: Edward G. Robinson, Joan Blondell—Excellent picture. Should satisfy anywhere. Played September 19.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MELODY FOR TWO: James Melton, Patricia Ellis —Only a fair program picture that fell flat at the box office. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SAN QUENTIN: Humphrey Bogart, Pat O'Brien —Excellent prison story with a good eye for detail. Humphrey Bogart is rapidly building up a following since his work in "Dead End" and "Marked Woman." Pat O'Brien pulls in some of the so-called "he-men" who usually stay clear of everything but 7 shot westerns. Good acting and good action. Drew well and pleased most everyone. Played September 29.—C. T. Cooney, Jr., Waldo Theatre, Waldoboro, Maine. General patronage.

SINGING MARINE: Dick Powell, Doris Weston—Very good musical. Dick Powell's singing very good. The direction and story also good. Running time, 105 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SINGING MARINE, THE: Dick Powell, Doris Weston—Very agreeably surprised with this one. The Powell pictures have not been so hot lately. This one is a great improvement over his last. And that little Weston gal is a honey. What a smile! And a voice, too. Running time, 105 minutes. Played October 3-5. —Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SING ME A LOVE SONG: James Melton, Patricia Ellis—A very good picture. Did not do much business. Believe they were afraid they wouldn't like Melton's singing. I think he was good as far as the singing was concerned. Hugh Herbert and Catlett extra good; so was Jenkins.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala.

SLIM: Pat O'Brien, Henry Fonda—Our patrons liked this a lot and so did we. Running time, 80 minutes. —Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

VARSITY SHOW: Dick Powell, Fred Waring—Good, but by no means a special. Was much too long but fairly entertaining. Spectacular finale. Ted Healy stole the show, Jimmy Davis is terrible, Waring was good. Hope we have more of him and his. My patrons still won't come to see Powell. Average was 10 cents. Running time, 120 minutes. Played October 3-4.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural patronage.

WHITE BONDAGE: Jean Muir, Gordon Oliver—Another one built for the duals. But not bad. Its greatest difficulty was its drawing power. It just doesn't have any. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 1-2.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

CROOKED TRAIL, THE: Johnny Mack Brown—Pretty good western. This star is plenty good and is popular here but producers do not give him any too good material. He could be made into a big star in the western field with the proper stories and production, or that's my belief.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

JACK OF ALL TRADES: Jack Buchanan—The exhibitor was forced to resort to heavy doses of aspirin, and stayed away from the popular hangouts after the show. It's the greatest misfortune we have been saddled with, such pictures as these British pictures. We work hard to build up a clientele only to have them leave us after such pictures as these. We dropped two reels the second night, but wish the express company would have lost it in transit.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

Short Subjects

Columbia

BURY THE HATCHET: Monty Collins, Tom Kennedy—Only a fair comedy. Just a few laughs but not so hot. Running time, 18 minutes. Played September 29.—Fischer and Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

CASH AND CARRY: Three Stooges—Fairly good slapstick. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn.

COMMUNITY SING: No. 1—This is the first of this series. We played it before the feature and felt it put some extra warmth through the audience. It's like feeding a man before talking business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

COMMUNITY SING: No. 1—Very good.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SPRING FESTIVAL: Color Rhapsodies—A very good colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

CRYSTAL BALLET: Treasure Chest—Good. Some excellent skating sequences. Running time, one reel. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOVE IN ARMS: Two-Reel Comedies — Very good.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

EQUESTRIAN ACROBATS: Pete Smith Specialties—A fine single with outstanding horseback riding. Give it preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GRAND BOUNCE, THE: Pete Smith Specialties—The history of a check that was made of rubber and might bounce. Very clever.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Paramount

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 9—Very poor except for the subject of two cub bears. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

RKO Radio

FOREIGN SPORTS: Sports with Bill Corum—They substituted this for another sports reel. Pass it up. No good. Running time, seven minutes. Played September 18.—Fischer & Bichler, Mattray Theatre, Strasburg, N. D. Small town patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: No. 1—One of the best of this series we have seen. Do think, however, that all producers are giving too much attention to the Chinese-Japanese trouble. The subject of insect pests is very timely for this farming community. Running time, 17 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

PATHE TOPICS, NO. 7: These singles are improving and as good as any on the market of this kind.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

COUNTRY COUSIN: Silly Symphonies—This Disney really deserves the award. It has the mouse-land situation down to perfection. Play it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

Universal

PUPPET SHOW: Oswald Cartoons—A fine Oswald cartoon and novel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Vitaphone

ALPINE GRANDEUR: Colortour Adventures—For some reason the sound on these travel tours does not compare with their other shorts nor is the coloring as good as Loew's travel talks. This one is better than their earlier issues, but will stand a lot of improvement. Running time, 9 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

DAVID MENDOZA & ORCH.: Melody Masters—A very poor short for this company whose standard is usually high to pass to the exhibitor. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

DOUBLE TALK: Edgar Bergen, "Charlie McCarthy"—Excellent.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi's Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

ELISEO GRENET & ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Very good Melody Master. Some swell dance numbers. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HI DE HO: Cab Calloway and His Orchestra—One of the best Calloway shorts in a blue moon. Although I think there is a little too much of Cab and not enough of his band in this, it is worthy of a spot on any program. Running time, 11 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

HOTEL a la SWING: Eddie Foy, Jr.—Good Broadway Brevity with some good dance and novelty numbers. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan.

JOE PALOOKA IN "TAKING THE COUNT": Shemp Howard, Robert Norton—The split recording of these Palooka comedies does not register so hot. The subject itself is good and the kids like it; if only the recording was better. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

RIMAC ORCHESTRA THE: Melody Masters—A very clever musical with a South American setting doing a lot of hot dance of south of the equator. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SHE WAS AN ACROBAT'S DAUGHTER: Merrie Melodies—Every exhibitor will enjoy this humorous cartoon built around a theatre bringing back many situations that you will appreciate in your own house. The duck with the baby duck that asked so many questions appealed to us all very much here.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

SUNDAY ROUNDUP, THE: Broadway Brevities—This two-reel, all-color, based on the pastor (Dick Foran) getting the saloon to close on Sunday, including a good fight and several ace vaudeville skits, is ace entertainment.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

VITAPHONE FUNSTERS: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—Our audience, which is rural, has no opportunity to see stage vaudeville. This series of shorts is enjoyed very much by our patrons. All producers should use more of them in their product. Running time, 8 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

VAUDE-FESTIVAL: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—These Vaudeville Reels are the tops for us in a small town. This was one of the best. Running time, nine minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

WHALE HO: Vitaphone Novelties—This short is only fair. Long drawn out and dull. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

Miscellaneus

LOUIS VS. FARR FIGHT: Very good fight picture. Have to pay too much money for these fight pictures. Running time, 3 reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHANGE DOES IT

Any business that leans heavily upon personal initiative makes progress through change. Findings of keen-minded observers result in changes to more profitable policies and methods of operation. Changes to better positions make it possible for those advanced to spread their ability and resourcefulness over a wider horizon. By the same token, elimination of deadwood-manpower often changes the color of bookkeeping ink from red to black.

Few industries there are more susceptible to change than this business of the motion picture, and especially so in the exhibition branch where progress is traced distinctly through shifts in personnel to bigger jobs. Better conditions nationally no doubt have to do with it but the ability of the many so recognized in the past few months presents strong evidence that the fortunes of exhibition are being consistently advanced.

Your Round Table has carried week-to-week reports on the promotions of theatremen to more responsible posts—from city to district manager, from manager to city manager, from manager of less to more important houses, from assistant to manager, and, equally as gratifying, from chief of staff, doorman, usher, utility man to assistant.

Set down together, the names bulk impressively and those that come quickest to mind are listed now to bring home to others "champing at the bit" that the ladder of advancement is still high—the rungs still wide.

Gentlemen, we give you:

Paul Kunze, Harry Rose, Wally Allen, Bob Suits, Larry Graburn, Howard Knevels, Bill Novak, Len Bishop, Russ McKibbon, George Jones, Roscoe Drissel, Boyd Sparrow, Bill Brown, Don Jacobs, Pearce Parkhurst, Martin Waldman, George Daniels, George Peters, Wallace Forkins, Tom Ward, Dean Thurman, George Allen, Clarence Sletz, Frank Murphy, Dean Emley, William Kamas, George Elders, Arthur Ofe, Jerry Sager, Alfred Jones, Brock Whitlock, Charles Yearby, Edgar Doob and Howard Michaels, among others. There are more, of course, and numerously, but the number spotlighted here will serve to show in what direction the wind doth blow.

The relation of theatre manpower to general industry progress was stressed by your Chairman a few years back in saying:

"You can't keep a good man down. The boy with something to say has got to be heard."

There is no evidence today that superiors are any less willing to listen.

A MATTER OF JUDGMENT

Newsreel pictures of the Shanghai bombing were shocking, to be sure. But war is hardly a picnic in the country and those who patronized the houses showing the Chinese shots were generally advised of what they could expect to see.

Over on the Jersey side, at the Newton Theatre, in Newton, Sidney Samuelson booked Universal's initial release of the strife and publicized the contents of the reel in no unmistakable terms. However, to insure that none would be offended, Samuelson advertised special showings at stated hours for the benefit of those who preferred their entertainment minus the war stuff.

It is not often that theatremen have occasion to tread lightly in referring to their bookings. When these times arise, good judgment usually dictates a sound course of procedure.

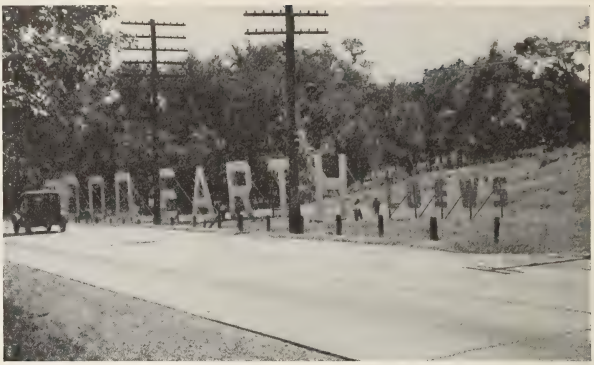
THE MOVEMENT SPREADS

Folks down around West Memphis, in Arkansas, must have studied, and with much interest, the excellent 12-page special tabloid newspaper mailed all over the territory to announce the opening of the new Crittenden Theatre. Conceived and edited by Manager Norval E. Packwood, the effective mailing-piece, in layout and text, did a top job of selling the house in all departments.



The boxoffice dividends to be had from the publication of theatre weeklies, special issues and suchlike becomes more evident these days, especially in those sectors where available newspaper facilities and circulation are not up to scratch.

The promotion of Round Tabler Al Sindlinger, by producer Louis de Rochemont, to the post of advertising manager with March of Time calls immediately but not only for three rousing cheers. The step-up also calls for a bit of pointing to the one big thing shared in common by the men selected for bigger jobs. In most every instance, they are active Round Tablers. In the majority of cases, they have scored high in the Quigley Awards.

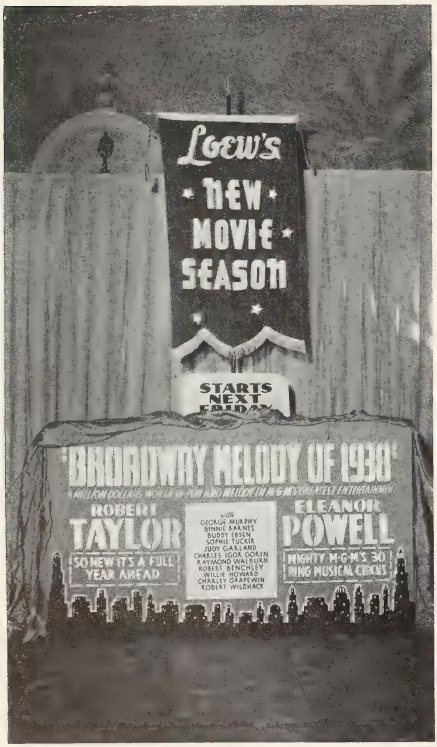
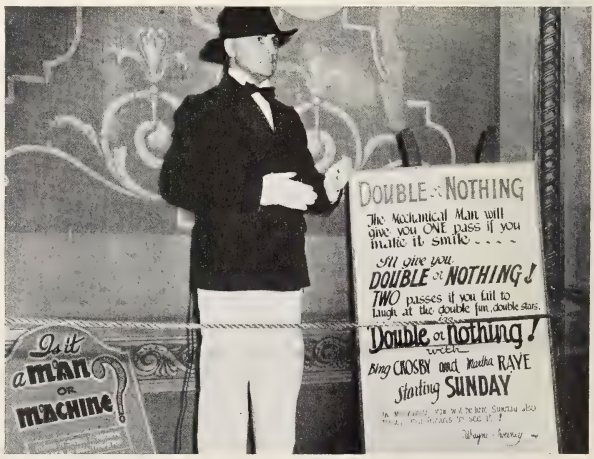
Round Table In Pictures





Reported to be the largest sign in Nashville, Tenn., was the one erected by Manager Will Crull, for "Good Earth" at Loew's Vendome, and spotted on important highway three weeks ahead. Entire sign placed three feet above ground covered 200 feet.

To sell the many stars in "Life of the Party," at Warner's San Pedro, San Pedro, Cal., Manager Harry Schlinker had a group of youngsters carrying individual signs with cast, title and theatre. . . . Mechanical man lobby stunt worked well for Manager Wayne Sweeney, on "Double Or Nothing" at the La Porte, Laporte, Ind., the Round Tabler tieing in title with copy offering guest tickets to those who could make "him" smile.

Inaugurating his New Movie Season with "Broadway Melody of 1938," Manager J. G. Newkirk, Loew's Granada, Cleveland, created an artistic transparency lobby display to plug the showing. Flash was illuminated from the rear, colored lettering and white skyline adding to the effect.

Plaque Winners For September

Previous winner of a Bronze Plaque, Ray Bell scored again in the September Competitions, taking down the Silver for his entry on "Stella Dallas," at Loew's Capitol, Washington, D. C. The same picture also won for Ray O'Connell, Warner's Capitol, Lancaster, Pa., who was voted the Bronze for his efforts and which makes him a first-time scorer. Details of both campaigns reported by the entrants are reported elsewhere in this section.

Night glitter signs were planted by Manager Eric Wahlquist on main highways adjacent to Melbourne, Australia, to create especial attention for the date on "I Met Him In Paris," the unique idea allowing the theatreman to get around the restrictions against street ballyhoo.

Bell listed a high score of accomplishments in executing exploitations of various kinds. Among those carried out at the theatre, he reports effective the tiein with a local recording laboratory which set up a studio in the lobby and offered free voice recordings to patrons. The best of the auditions were broadcast every morning, these including a number of plugs for the picture and theatre.

The ever-compelling turtle gag was gainfully employed by Ray O'Connell as a ballyhoo planted in downtown window. Individual letters of the title were painted on the turtle shells and a large sign placed in the background carrying the details of how guest tickets could be won by observing passersby. When the "animules" lined up so that they spelled the title correctly, those who noted the occasion were rewarded.

QUICK REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

"Star" Day

Businessmen in the vicinity of the Logan Theatre, Chicago, were organized by Sam Krimstein to put over a star-value day in connection with the opening of "A Star Is Born." Stories were run in papers, merchants' ads included plug for picture and gala occasion, special banners and street celebrations formed part of the campaign.

Sam further coordinated the business men's advertising into a back page of the leading community paper, purpose of which was to plug a misspelled word contest for which tickets were awarded. Another highlight of Krimstein's campaign was a "star is born baby contest," concluding two days ahead of opening so that winner could participate in parade and appear at opening performance. Cooperating department store provided mothers of all entries with gratis picture of their babies. These photos were displayed in lobby and designated by numbers so that patrons could make their selections by ballot. Sam reports a total of 76 babies entered ranging from five months to five years and promoted gifts were presented to the winner.

Bally

City Manager E. L. Drake and Manager J. R. MacEachron at the Paramount, Jackson, Tenn., for "Day at the Races" dressed one of the ushers as Groucho and sat him on an old bannered carriage with p.a. system over which he broadcast on the picture every 15 minutes. Carriage covered downtown area and surrounding towns.

For "Mountain Music" staff was dressed in overalls and straw hats with cashiers in ginghams and hair done in braids. For street stunt boy and girl paraded in shotgun wedding fashion with father behind carrying back banner reading "We're on our way to," etc., etc.

Old Time Fiddlers

Two weeks ahead of opening of "Mountain Music" at the Palace, Burkburnett, Tex., Stanley Gartside put on old-fiddlers' contest. Contest was held last night of picture and cash prizes were awarded the winners. For lobby gag, large box was planted containing peep hole, copy above reading "Look who's going to see," etc.. etc. On peering into slot, patrons saw themselves reflected in mirrors.

Entire staff wore hill-billy beards during run and were dressed as mountaineers. Three days ahead Stan ran teaser ad offering free admission to the first ten appearing at boxoffice if it rained any day up to opening and guest tickets were also awarded to those attending opening in best hill-billy costumes.

Screwy Stuff

Daily papers tied in with Bert Leighton, Grand Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., on a "Topper" chuckle contest run in the classified section, tickets going to those readers correctly selecting lines from three different ads to form comedy sentences. Department store used fashion stills of Constance Bennett with copy to the effect that the star was one of the world's best dressed women, and invited customers to view their fall fashions and see the picture.

Through some gentle kidding on the part of opposition manager, Bert landed extra newspaper publicity when he planted "invisible" goldfish in bowl in lobby, and his rival secretly placed a couple of finnies in the bowl. Hardware store featured a "left hand screw driver similar to that used in "Topper," girls visited various swimming pools with cut-out letters stitched to their backs reading "I'm the invisible girl in," etc., and boys walking around ledge of building carried signs "If you think we're crazy, see," etc., etc.

Impersonators

Going into the surrounding towns, Jim Redmond, Bonham Theatre, Fairbury, Neb., for "Day at the Races" sent three lads dressed as the mad brothers on the streets, their antics attracting crowds which were handed heralds on the picture.

Special free kid show was held in which all merchants in town cooperated by distributing gratis tickets to the youngsters. These had been purchased from Jim at 10 cents each. Cones, balloons and other souvenirs were also promoted for giveaways and each cooperating merchant advertised the show.

Safety Week

Special safety week sponsored by various civic organizations and ushered in with a proclamation from the Mayor was the highlight of Harry Sefton's "Devil Is Driving" campaign at the Orpheum Theatre, Wichita, Kan. Police Judge issued a statement endorsing the film and fined speeders and traffic violators by ordering them to attend a performance of the picture. Large trucking organizations were approached to purchase tickets for their drivers and "attention-motorists" cards were distributed at all transportation companies, where drivers handed them to fares.

CONTEST RETURNS REPORTED HIGH BY SEPTEMBER PLAQUE WINNERS

Numerous Competitions Put On by Theatremen Voted Quigley Silver and Bronze; Both Entrants Score on "Stella Dallas"

Topped by some nine contests of various kinds and including what was reported to be one of the most unusual newspaper campaigns put on locally was the entry on "Stella Dallas" submitted by Ray Bell, publicist for the date at Loew's Palace, Washington, D. C. Brief outlines of what Bell did to win the Quigley September Silver Plaque are set down as follows:

Newspapers cooperated for instance on a contest in which readers were asked whether or not they would give up their children to insure progeny a better break in life. Another slant was based on whether the husband or children should have first call on a mother's devotion. Bell also promoted the critics to invite with them to the prevue of the picture readers sending in most interesting letters on why they should be allowed to review the attraction.

Another contest required readers to name outstanding mother-love pictures of the past. Photos of stars of the features referred to were run without identification in conjunction. Identification slant was also utilized wherein photos of line at boxoffice were run in cooperating newspaper with those whose heads were marked by "lucky stars," given guest tickets. Then another space-promoter was a classified tiein and to interest the hundreds of employees in leading department store the Loewman offered lucky number tickets to be given away at personal meetings and which was widely publicized throughout the establishment.

Leading night club was tied in to give away autographed pair of shoes worn by star in picture, stunt built up with series of display ads by the club.

Ad Club Honors Goldwyn

Of interest also was a promotion arranged with the local Advertising Club to present an award of distinction to Samuel Goldwyn in recognition of the high standard of the picture. The papers made much of this slant, running stories and photos of the presentation which took place at a regular meeting attended by some 200 leading advertising men.

Racetrack tiein earned more than the usual share of sport page publicity. Bell succeeded in having one of the featured races at nearby track named "Stella Dallas Handicap," which was worked up to the point where the tiein secured banner heads, and photos of the winning jockey and owner receiving the Dallas trophy. All publicity of course mentioning the title and theatre.

Still another slant that earned a bit of extra publicity had to do with tiein arranged with local recording studio, patrons invited to "can" their voices through a recording apparatus installed in the lobby. This was hooked to a radio program, sponsors mentioned on explanatory posters. Radio too was employed for a contest idea for not only did Bell plant the dramatization, but also offered prize to the radio artist selected for the best job on the program, photo of prize presentation accompanying the tiein. In all, some five stations cooperated in various ways to publicize the picture.

The advance newspaper publicity planted 16 days ahead continued up [illegible] the entire engagement.

numerous stories, articles and art. Photo serialization running six days was another standout and breaks obtained in rotogravure sections, class magazines and other media. Unusual tiein made with local newspaper to promote classified department allowed Bell to distribute at the various theatres a four page "Movie Loewdown" printed free of charge by the paper.

The advertising campaign also embraced numerous co-op ads, majority of these being four and five column. Smart window displays to follow up this advertising were also arranged for, Bell securing ace spots on styles, men's pipes and other exploitation stills. Popular eating places were sold the idea of advertising "Stella Dallas" luncheons, supposedly containing the favorite dishes of the star and this tiein plugged by counter cards and window banners. Newsstand cards to announce publicity on star and picture in various fan magazines were tacked about town with theatre credits included.

Among the host of other slants might be mentioned Quaker Oats tieup for window mention in grocery stores all over the area, bookmarks at main library and branches, "Dallas" sundaes at five-and-tens, Postal Telegraph tiein, Liberty magazine carriers [illegible] to theatre, etc. Date of [illegible] lobby

Featured exploitations in both the Bell and O'Connell campaigns are illustrated in the Round Table photo section of this issue.

OCTOBER DEADLINE IS NOVEMBER NINTH

As previously announced, deadline for Quigley October Award entries has been set for midnight of Tuesday, November 9th. Campaigns, to receive consideration, must arrive not later than that time. Also to be stressed is that entries, to be eligible for the November Awards, must be on single pictures played during that month.

NEWSPAPERS AND CIVIC OFFICIALS AID NEW MOVIE SEASON DRIVES

Theatremen Utilize Widespread Exploitations to Announce Coming Dates; Street Parades and Prize Contests Featured

The wealth of strong attractions for the new season has been seized upon eagerly by Round Tablers in different spots to publicize their Fall Inaugurals. Prominently recorded here are outlines of various slants conceived and executed by Loew-men in and out of the metropolitan area and details also from theatremen in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio and Canada.

At this writing the Fall Festival of the Loew New York Theatres under the supervision of Charles C. Moskowitz, is entering the home stretch of a six weeks' campaign. Circuit men in Greater New York, Westchester, Jersey City, Newark and North Bergen are competing in a contest and rolling up points in putting over ideas evolved at weekly meetings held by Oscar A. Doob, Loew Theatres ad head, and his staff.

Street Parades Prominent

Among the exploitations already accomplished are over 100 [illegible] displaying intense activity in various fields. The parade idea also being stressed in these parts, for instance in Meriden, Conn., at Loew's Palace, where Manager J. G. Samartano arranged a very smart turnout of the local armory band, fleet of bannered new Chevrolets, members of the local motorcycle club and three of the "Broadway Melody" girls in cellophane costumes as they appear in the picture. Before the parade Samartano arranged to have the Mayor pro- [illegible] the new season in front of the city [illegible] for long shot of the Meri-

Unique tiein was made by Ray Bell for the benefit of the Loew Theatres in Washington, D. C., wherein the Washington Post printed some 20,000 special tabloid copies entitled "Movie Loewdown," at no cost, and distributed at the theatres. Front page was devoted to cuts and captions of coming attractions with rest of copy given to paper's classified ad service.

In Kenosha, Wis., Bill Exton broke out with a full page topped with his campaign title "Farewell 1937—Welcome 1938," which was followed through in all the advertising. In bidding farewell to 1937 in print, Exton credited the year for living up to the promise of big pictures announced last season, enumerating a number of these which he promised to better in entertainment value with the coming year's product.

Ten local merchants were tied in by Ernie Moule, at the Capitol, Branford, Canada, for a special five-page newspaper layout, plus a foyer fashion show. Each page was topped by a theatre streamer and included with the co-op ads were photos and publicity of the shows booked for the new season.

Contests Planted

Newspaper tieins were used, too, in Rochester, Minn., by Manager Harry Salisbury at the Time Theatre, who announced his "Fall Movie Jubilee" with a double truck tied into a "scrambled names" contest. Entrants were supposed to decipher names of the stars in the ads and match these with names of coming pictures shown at the Time and also the Chateau, another Minnesota Amusement house in the same spot.

Before moving into Lexington, Ky., Wally Allen hit the papers in Athens, Ohio, for a co-op page at Schine's Athena. Allen arranged setup which gave the theatre a co-op ad with each merchant on individual coming pictures plus a window display with title, play dates, etc.

PETER PANAGOS

in Marion, Ind., is the publicity director and assistant manager of the Indiana and Lyric Theatres for Great States Circuit and started directly after graduating from the University of Illinois in Fond du Lac, Wis., as doorman; promoted to assistant city manager and worked in that capacity until he made his present connection, replacing Ralph Cokain, long time Round Tabler.

is the resident manager of the Franklin Theatre, Bay City, Tex., and comes well recommended by his district manager and Round Table member of long standing Wallace J. Butler. The only circuit that Ellis has ever worked for is the Long Outfit, of which the Franklin is a house, starting as doorman and then working in different jobs until Mr. Long put him in the Colonial and then into the present house. We look forward to hearing plenty from this newcomer, especially with the recommendation received from his boss.

is the publicist for Loew theatres in Queens and started in the home office as office boy; after six months worked on Loew's Weekly and assistant newspaper contact man. Went into the regular publicity field when Loew's took over the Hollywood and Apollo, two east side houses. Later became junior publicity man with six east side theatres, and after a year and a half at that was promoted to the five Queens houses.

DAN RICHETELLI

is in Torrington, Conn., managing the State Theatre. Richetelli started as poster clerk for First National Exchange and later went with Educational Films. Worked evenings at the Paramount as usher and in 1025 left to become booker for Educational, after that company dissolved Dan worked as agent for the Hancock Insurance Company but the lure of showbusiness was too great and back he went to manage the Capitol in Bridgeport and from that point to Torrington, where we hope to hear often from him.

is in Wheeling, West Va., managing the Victoria Theatre for the West Virginia Theatrical Enterprises, and judging by the nice things he says about the HERALD, we anticipate hearing from him frequently. Remember, Smith, signing on the dotted line is just the beginning; we expect to receive reports on how you are putting your shows.

TERRY C. W. LEUNG

manages the Queen's Theatre, for General Amusements, Ltd., Circuit in Hong Kong, China. Leung started in showbusiness at the age of 20, was assistant at the Queen's for four years and was then transferred in the same capacity to the Alhambra, where he remained another four years, was later promoted to manager of that house and then shifted back to his present situation in a managerial capacity also. Your brother showmen here are always interested in reading of the exploitations of overseas men, so please continue to keep in touch with us.

manages the Palace and Ritz Theatres in Colorado, Texas, taking tickets after school. Worked at that a year and then went to the Palace to usher, worked on the floor weekends and was relief operator until he finished school. From there he was appointed assistant manager, then was promoted to manager, at which post we now find him.

MORE ON WINNING CAMPAIGNS

and front displays being in keeping with the strength of the rest of the ingenious campaign put on by the aggressive Loewman.

Another distinctive job on "Stella Dallas" which earned for him the September Bronze was created by Manager Ray O'Connell at Warners' Capitol in Lancaster, Pa., winner listing 51 individual tieins executed in the campaign, some of the outstanding said to be first-timers put over locally.

These included an affidavit sworn to by the manager before a duly inscribed authority in which O'Connell swore that the picture was the greatest production to play the theatre and followed this with a number of other clauses referring to the stars and strength of the attraction. The affidavit was blown up to half-sheet size.

State Convention of the Elks which terminated with a mammoth street parade day before picture opened was also seized upon by the theatreman for attention to the date. Since outside advertising was not allowed, O'Connell had a squad of his ushers tagging in at the end of the procession, each of the staff carrying banners reading "Strike to see 'Stella Dallas,'" etc.

Radio Debate Staged

Contests here, too, were employed profitably and featured by a radio debate on the subject of "mother love." Four representatives, men and women of the community, debated on the subject from both sides, and listeners were invited to write in giving their ideas on the subject. Guest tickets were given as prizes.

Leading store was also tied in to give prizes of "Stella Dallas" dresses to those coming to the theatre as nearly like the star in the picture as their personal wardrobe permitted. Store advertised the tieins, plugged it in window and quite a bit of excitement was created in the lobby of the theatre at appointed time, where the judges met to choose the winner.

Tiein with local photographer for a "mother-and-daughter" candid camera stunt was also profitable. Photographer took shots of the couples on the streets and in stores and certain ones posted in the lobby with the usual tickets given for correct identifications.

Bathing beauties at popular pool carried back banners among the crowds and another device to gain attention was effected by the use of lettered linoleum strips placed on the sidewalks in the downtown sections. Another dependable attention-attractor used by O'Connell was the gag of freezing window cards in ice.

Turtle Stunt Clicks

Most amusing and interesting also was O'Connell's use of the turtle stunt in prominent window, with which he succeeded in blocking a bit of traffic. A number of turtles were obtained and upon the back of each, one letter of the title painted. Passersby were invited to watch and guest tickets given to those present who observed when turtles were in position to correctly spell out the title.

Good newspaper campaign was also put across with a number of co-op ads secured. Reported as additional first-timers in the town were a completely bannered street car and also the planting of a giant banner on the face of prominent building on the downtown square. Letters to leading mothers in the entire sector, heralds dropped from airplanes, window displays in spots difficult to get, giant lettered circles at filling stations, banners at factories and radio sketch were some other of the two score and ten ideas.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are produtcion numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1937-38 season.

J C JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Red Cloud, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

"Roast beef with brown gravy, roast pork with dressing, stewed chicken with dumplings." And then some one turned on the radio, and after they had ballyhooed gasoline, face powder and soap for a while we got a cross-legged shanty jazz orchestra with a lot of squeaks and squawks which they called music. Good gosh, gee whiz, why didn't they let the Indians keep this country.

Glen Van Wey of the Sun theatre at Gothenburg was a pretty busy man when we called. Glen had a number of men cleaning the front of his theatre and preparing to add a beautiful marquee, and when he gets through with a lot of other improvements he will have a theatre Gothenburg can be proud of. They can talk all they please, but that boy Glen is bound to give Gothenburg a place to go and enjoy themselves. As Judge McAmly said in "Emmet Bonlore," "They can't keep a good man down."

Cozad claims the honor of being the largest hay shipping point of the United States. She also claims to have two of the largest alfalfa mills for making alfalfa meal. We can prove that by our own judgment, although we don't know very much about it, but we did see these mills in operation and it was a revelation to us, and it will be to you also if you will stop there and see them.

Mr. Hagadone operates the Rialto theatre, which has become famous all up and down the Platte valley for the excellent pictures he is showing, but if we lived there we'd register a pretty strong kick with the city council. When we called, a street carnival company was just moving out. They had been allowed to occupy the streets for several days and then they left the town to clean up the rubbish, which was a plenty. We never could understand why a city council would allow a foreign carnival company to monopolize their main streets to the exclusion of the people who are paying taxes for the running of the city government, but then there are a lot of things we could never understand. For instance, we never understood how old Ann was.

Lexington is right in the heart of the alfalfa country also. One can see alfalfa stacks in every direction as thick as oat shocks in an Iowa field. Ralph Folkenburg is right up against it. Ralph, you know, operates the Majestic theatre, and the town is having a scare over infantile paralysis and every public place has been closed, except the Majestic, and those under 18 are not allowed to go to the show. This makes it pretty tough on Ralph, but Ralph is a pretty tough hombre himself. We will bet our last dollar on Ralph, and we might even give some odds; in fact, we will make it two to one.

We called at Holdridge to see our old friend Mr. Porter, who has been operating the Holdridge theatre ever since Heck had pups, and found that he had recently sold his theatre. Whenever a man has operated a theatre as long as Mr. Porter has and then finds himself out of the business, his wife has to hold a pretty tight rein on him. Just now he is like a Missouri bullhead out of the water: he don't know which way to jump to get back in. We know just how he feels, for we have had the same feeling.

Alma is located on the bank of the Republican river, the stream that did so much damage last spring when it rose and spread over the country to the extent of three or four miles wide. It was along this river so many lost their lives in the flood.

We wish we could remember the name of the operator of Alma's theatre, but we can't. We do remember, however, that we had a very pleasant visit with him and we remember also that he has a very nice theatre that Alma is no doubt proud of.

George Hall, the operator of Franklin's famous playhouse, evidently heard that we were coming to call on him and he lit out for Omaha like the old Nick was after him. George ought to be ashamed of himself. He needn't have been scared, for his subscription to the HERALD doesn't run out yet for some little time, but then maybe he was afraid he'd catch the itch 'er something. George is all right with the exceptions of seven or eight things, the most of which don't amount to a whole lot, his principal fault being that he overworks himself trying to pile up what he didn't do the day before. Anyhow, he has a very comfortable theatre where the Franklin folk can enjoy themselves.

We skipped Hastings this time because we were there some time back. That's probably the reason why Hastings is going to hold a celebration. It seems that some towns will celebrate almost anything. It reminds us of Grandma Sykes back in Indiana. Grandma always put on a celebration on September 10th, because that was the date that her husband, Zeb, came home sober.

This town of Red Cloud was named after an Indian chief. It was here that the Sioux tribe had their village on the banks of the Republican river and Red Cloud was the big boss, and it was here that he used to go out and shoot buffalo and deer for Mrs. Red Cloud and the children until the Pale Face tribe came in and scared the buffalo and deer away and Red Cloud decided to try his luck on the Happy Hunting Grounds. Some people claim that Bert Beams is responsible for a lot of that for building the Majestic theatre, but Bert denies it. Anyhow, he built the Majestic right close to where Red Cloud had his wigwam and the Pale Face tribe gather at the Majestic seven nights a week and hold their powwow while Bert beats the tomtom. There is this about Bert, however, he never gives the tribe a poor show; they have come to know that. There are only a few of us that haven't any faults and Bert is one of them. Bert's slogan is, "When you want to see a good show, come to the Majestic."

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

October 22, 1937

My dear Mr. Talley:

I congratulate you upon the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of Movietone News and upon its record during that particularly interesting period. The years which have passed since the inception of Movietone News have witnessed not only the pioneer period of a new medium of intelligence but have seen that medium brought to a high degree of perfection.

Yours is a great and boundless field in which I trust you will ever go forward with increasing success and usefulness.

Very sincerely yours,

SAYS MR. JONES

MR. GROVER JONES told the National Labor Relations Board in Hollywood the other day a story, maybe the story, of his decadence from a coal miner to an extra playing Indian at a dollar-a-day, to gag man, to "scenarist," at $3,500 a week.

The press records that Mr. Jones said that in Hollywood: "Nobody knows a damn thing of what they are talking about—it's all a terrific gamble." He documented his account with specific citations.

Between the Brown Derby and the Trocadero you can get a hatful of that any day. That indicates there's a lot of it available.

Looking over some employment lists, some budgets, and some pictures, one cannot disagree with Mr. Jones as violently as a patriotic intent might suggest. In fact, if I were out there I'd throw in with him. But I am not, and from where I sit, looking over the Garden of All Nations in Rockefeller Center, which is a broad outlook, it must be observed that Mr. Jones ought not to say it and Hollywood ought not to deserve it. As Sidney Skolsky says, "I love Hollywood," but, unlike Mr. Jones and Mr. Skolsky, I live with New York.—TR.

LORIMER, AMERICAN

SOMETHING of America, essential, capable, respectable, went to the grave this week with the passing of Mr. George Horace Lorimer, so many years the editor of The Saturday Evening Post. Outstandingly for three decades he was the evangelist of a creed of success with decency, of which many an industry has need today.

Older readers can remember when Mr. Lorimer did a deal of writing himself, and when he drew upon his experiences in the service of industry and Mr. Phillip Armour of Chicago for those famous "Letters of A Self Made Merchant to His Son."

Interesting acknowledgment of the significance of the institution of "The Post" as a reflection of the man, came from the advertising patronage of great American institutions and industries seeking, perhaps unconsciously, to align themselves with a policy for which they had no individual voice. In formative years of the motion picture industry, its conspicuous leaders took space with Mr. Lorimer's paper conspicuously, and not for the purpose of selling seats. There was something he had given his paper that was deemed of association value. Mr. Lorimer made respectability pay dividends in fame and dollars and was buried with honor.

YOU need not bother about trade balances, economic indices, carloadings or port tonnages. If you are interested in just how tough the rest of the world is getting, regard the eighty-second annual report of the Registrar General for Scotland, made public in Edinburgh, showing that not only has emigration sharply declined but that the hardy Scots are returning home to their hills and heather. And the Scots, they say, prefer the American accents of Hollywood to the British.

YOU CAN HAVE IT

PROGRESS in the arts of the new technology is substantially continuous. Newest is a machine that will listen to the radio for you. The McClatchy Broadcasting Company, with four California stations, would be after installing a facsimile radio newsprinter in the home. This machine is to be turned on at night and when you arrive downstairs in the morning there will be the news of the world, in words and pictures, on a roll, awaiting you for examination along with the coffee—and such subsequent utilization as content and texture may suggest.

PERSPECTIVE

THE President of the United States, experting in journalism, told the assembled Washington correspondents the other day that the story of his designation of his son, Mr. James Roosevelt, as a coordinator of the executive activities of eighteen of the largest governmental agencies, did not belong on page one, that it rated about two paragraphs on the inside of the paper. If that is what he thinks of "Jimmy," what would one fancy he thinks of the job?

THE NAME MARKET

IT would seem that there always has been a star and fame problem. Turning through the pages of some ancient volumes on horticulture, we discovered an amazing excitement at the turn of the eighteenth century over the auricula, which was being cultivated in many, many named varieties. By 1716 Mr. Richard Bradley had to observe that there were getting to be so many varieties and that "noble and distinguished people" were decreasing so rapidly that soon there would be "none left to give names" to the flowers. Richard should see how things stand now. We could christen a lot of weeds.

SPEAKING of what Mr. M. H. Aylesworth once romantically and euphemistically mentioned as "the wedlock of the arts," the announcement that Major Lohr of the National Broadcasting Company is to pass on future attentions of radio commentators to the cinema suggests that at last the groom's gabby boys are to be made to stop their ungallant chatter about the bride's sons and daughters. The whole lot of them, from both sides of the household, should be taken to the woodshed for basic attention.

A WIDE RANGE of extra-mural attentions to the motion picture from persons of name and importance is presented in an index of articles appearing in the National Board of Review magazine, just issued. Covering several years of issue, it is the most complete compendium recording the attitudes and wish-pressures of the most continuously articulate educators, students and group leaders of the country. It is in fact the "intellectual fan" encyclopedia.

This Week

"De-Freezing"

The board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America this week voted to have the title registration committee "de-freeze" the titles of 30,000 pictures produced in the United States. Under the new plan titles of released pictures are protected for four years and then the original registrant is permitted to include it in his reserve list of 250 titles. All titles on the reserve list remain the exclusive property of the registrant but those not placed on the list will be made available to others.

See page 36.

Letters on "Dignity"

The opinions of several persons associated with the motion picture industry on the subject of cloaking the business with dignity were contained in letters filed with the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut by Bernard A. Grossman, attorney and chairman of the organization's committee on theatrical law. All agreed that dignity has its place in the industry but they differed on the degree of dignity which would be beneficial.

Excerpts from the letters are included in a story on page 54.

Reciprocity

Under a new reciprocal trade treaty signed by Mexico and France pictures made in the studios of these countries will be exchanged for mutual exhibition when "cultural or other non-commercial" reasons make such an exchange desirable. First films to come under the treaty are the Mexican production, "Judas," and the French feature, "Visages de France."

The treaty is explained in the story on page 63 and James Lockhart's news letter from Mexico City a denial by the federal labor department that it is backing production is on page 32.

Middle Class Drama

Alfred Hitchcock, Gaumont British producer who made "The 39 Steps," refused to make another film of that type until he found suitable story material, his contention being that a picture's story foundation is more important than stars, director or setting. The result of his search for material is "The Girl Was Young" from a story by Josephine Tey, "A Shilling for Candles." In further coincidence with Mr. Hitchcock's principles is the fact that its setting and characters are English middle class, a type for which he has crusaded.

A pictorial preview of the production is on pages 16 and 17.

Gossip Curb

Indications that radio broadcasting companies would take steps toward more careful supervision, even censorship, of screen gossip commentators were seen in the news that Lenox Riley Lohr, president of the National Broadcasting Company in the future will personally scrutinize and approve or reject all contracts for such types of program. Embarrassment and indignation of film executives and stars over the lengths to which some such commentators have gone in their coloration and distortion of Hollywood "news," culminating in unofficial protests resulted in the step.

Background and reasons are explained on page 13.

Chicago Bill

Chicago Loop theatre owners are facing a bill for $500,000, the estimated cost of changing electrical equipment if the Commonwealth Edison Company approves a present proposal to change its current supply in the Loop area from direct to alternating current. Theatre owners have arranged for legal counsel to represent them in opposing the move.

William F. Crouch discusses the possibilities on page 36.

$6,000,000 Conferences

Alexander Korda, British producer and head of London Films, arrived in New York from England this week and immediately went into conference with Samuel Goldwyn and E. H. Lever, a representative of the Prudential Assurance Company of England, in an attempt to work out details for the purchase by Mr. Goldwyn and himself of the United Artists stock hold by Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks. Mr. Korda said there is a "group," which he declined to identify, prepared to furnish the cash needed for the $6,000,000 deal. A total of 21 other persons associated with the film industry arrived on the Ile de France.

The Goldwyn-Korda deal is discussed on page 14.

Paramount Armistice

Philadelphia exhibitors, after a three-hour meeting, voted this week to declare a one-week armistice in their "buyers' strike" against Paramount. During the week individual exhibitors will study Paramount's new contracts and will report back at a meeting next Wednesday as to the practicability of the settlement. Pete Wood, Ohio exhibitor leader, opposed acceptance of the plan on the ground it would be detrimental to Ohio exhibitors.

The terms of the proposed settlement and other trade practice developments are recorded on page 15.

Writers Testify

Hearings in Hollywood before the Regional Labor Board on the Screen Writers' Guild petition for a collective bargaining agency election concluded abruptly after testimony by members of Screen Playwrights designed to show that writers are creative talent and after the recording by attorneys for the producers of exhibits designed to show the separation of production from distribution. No decision will be announced until after the National Labor Board in Washington has studied the recommendations of the trial examiner. Of chief interest will be the ruling on whether or not production is interstate commerce.

The Writers' Guild situation and other labor developments are treated on page 20.

Tax Index Up

Theatre admissions, reflected in the Bureau of Internal Revenue tax collections, showed considerable gain in August. Total for the month was $1,722,468, an increase of more than $123,000 over the previous month and of $52,000 over the corresponding period last year.

Statistics on page 36.

MPTO Elections

A week replete with exhibitor organizational meetings and elections saw the elevation of three to be president of their respective groups and the reelection of a fourth. L. O. Lukan became head of the Northwest MPTO, Samuel Pinanski was elected president of Massachusetts MPTO, W. F. Crockett was chosen to head the Virginia MPTO, and M. A. Rosenberg was reelected president of the MPTO of Western Pennsylvania. Exhibitor associations of Iowa and Nebraska, Oklahoma and Arkansas set early November dates for their meetings.

The meetings and elections of the various exhibitor groups are detailed on page 18.

German Restrictions

Official United States Government sources in Germany report that the Reich is making operations of the home film industry even more difficult than heretofore, increasing taxes further, and prohibiting the formation of any new enterprises in production, distribution or exhibition.

R. M. Stephenson, U. S. attache in Berlin, describes new conditions in the German film business in reports to the Department of Commerce at Washington, as explained on page 19.

Classroom Films

With the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and the United States Government presently engaging in efforts to determine the position of motion pictures in America's classrooms, and, at the same time, arriving at ways and means for opening that prospective market, the movement this week spread over the South, at the first Southern Audio-Visual Education Conference, at Atlanta, where 600 educators discussed the subject.

The progress of films in schools is described on page 33.

Japanese Action

The latest restriction by the Japanese Ministry of Finance, barring further film importations, except newsreels, may be lifted at the beginning of the new calendar year, depending upon the situation in China by that time, writes Hiromu Tominaga from Tokyo. This was the third of a series of limitations upon foreign distributors. First there was the limitation of shipments of money out of the country, and on August 20th came a special consumption tax levied 20 per cent ad valorem on specific import commodities.

Additional detail concerning the unusual problem of American distributors in Japan appears in the article on page 63.

Anti-Dual Leader

Samuel Goldwyn, producer, has appointed himself leader of a country wide movement against double feature programs. He announced he would support the Anti-Double Feature League of America and said he would produce only pictures of such length it will be virtually impossible for exhibitors to attempt to play other pictures with them. The league gained a partial victory in its birthplace, Nutley, New Jersey, when the manager of the town's lone theatre, the Franklin, adopted a policy of showing single bills on three days of each week. The Century Circuit, which operates 29 theatres in Long Island, is conducting an experiment which may result in single features being played in all its houses.

Details of these and other developments concerning double features are on page 66.

Bank Night Ban

After more than five months of litigation, Bank Night has been declared a lottery by the Nebraska supreme court. The decision upheld a conviction obtained by Beatrice authorities against the Beatrice Theatre Corporation, a Fox West Coast affiliate. Other developments in the chance game field included the fining of three exhibitors in Detroit for operation of Screeno games in their houses.

Reports from all parts of the country on chance games are recorded on page 58.

Library Tieups

The uses exhibitors can make of the public library to exploit motion pictures are explained by Gretchen J. Garrison, of the New York Public Library, in an article published by the National Board of Review Magazine. Where there is a definite connection between a picture and a book, Miss Garrison stated, librarians are glad to cooperate by displaying stills, scrapbooks of reviews and, sometimes, theatre programs.

Miss Garrison's article is discussed on page 46.

"Fake" Benefits

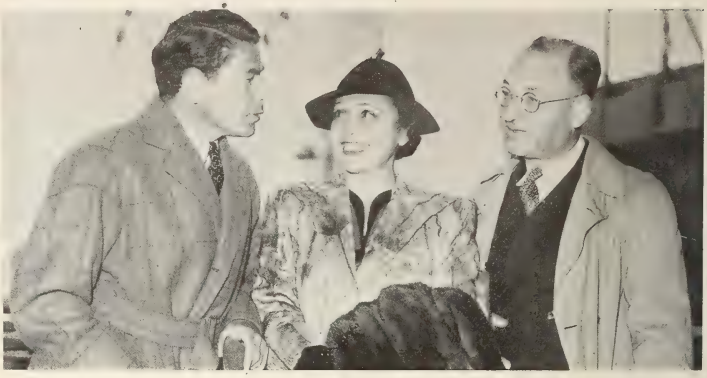
The New York Theatre Authority, seeking to exercise control over all benefit shows throughout the country, has proposed the Screen Actors Guild, the American Federation of Radio Artists and the American Guild of Musical Artists join its ranks. With the members of these organizations pledged not to appear at any benefit performances unless they are approved by the Authority, Alan Correlli, Authority secretary, believes that fraudulent benefits will be eliminated.

The plan is discussed on page 32.

For Flat Rentals

Exhibitors in England are prepared to fight for flat rentals, an aftermath of the policy announced by the Kinematograph Renters Society that henceforth distributors will classify all features as "A" or "B" and supply the "A" product on percentage only.

Developments of the week in England are described on page 71.



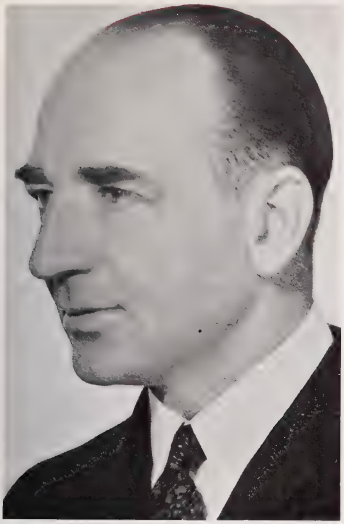
All-Time Low

The legitimate theatre in 1937 hit an all-time low, statistically speaking, in the number of plays produced, number of "hits," and number of producers in activity; and a new high in the number of failures.

Surveying the Broadway stage for the past 17 years, The Billboard finds little hope, if any, for the future of the drama, as reported on page 55.

This Week in Pictures

MR. AND MRS. PAUL MUNI, above, arrive in New York on the Santa Paula from California to begin what the actor plans as a long and careless vacation. With them is Jacob Wilk, head of the Warner Brothers story department, one of the first to greet the couple in port.



Natalie Garson, at left, a Metro contract player loaned to Twentieth Century-Fox, as she appears in "Dangerously Yours," to be released November 12th. She is a daughter of Murray Garson.

Confining his statements to the press to a promise that he will never produce a picture designed for a double bill, Samuel Goldwyn, left, this week was in conference in New York with Alexander Korda and financial advisers on details of their impending purchase of the United Artists interests of Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin for a price reported variously as $6,000,000 and $4,500,000. Mr. Korda arrived from England Tuesday.

Bing Crosby, right, is invested as an honorary Doctor of Philosophy in Music at Gonzaga University, Spokane, of which he is an alumnus. Dr. Crosby will be given faster moving screen vehicles in the future, studio announcements of his assignment to "Top Speed," to be produced and directed by Wesley Ruggles, indicate.

All future contracts for screen gossip programs, sponsored or sustaining, must have the approval of Lenox Riley Lohr, above, president of the National Broadcasting Company, according to a company announcement.

Oscar Homolka, Ray Milland and Barry Fitzgerald, above, and Frances Farmer, left, in production stills from Paramount's screen dramatization in color of "Ebb Tide," Robert Louis Stevenson story of love and futility in the South Seas. Designed by the woman sculptor, Malvina Hoffman, the trophy was presented at the banquet of the National Safety Congress in Kansas City by Dr. Miller McClintock, chairman of the motion picture award committee, the announced purposes of which are "to encourage production of motion pictures having traffic safety values and to encourage as many showings as possible."

BROADCASTERS CENSOR HOLLYWOOD GOSSIPERS

President of NBC Decrees That Air "Columnists" Must Obtain His Personal Approval Hereafter

Radio broadcasters finally are turning attention to the film "gossip commentators" who have been plaguing the studios and stellar personalities of Hollywood on the air for years, ridiculing the industry and those within it with prattlings and tattlings bordering either on the libelous or slanderous, or both, besides airing, distortedly or otherwise, the marital and private affairs of the stars.

Major Lenox Lohr, president of National Broadcasting Company, this week took the first step to check at least the spreading of air-gossiping, when he informed Don Gilman, NBC Hollywood director, that any future contracting or arrangements for or with film gossipers, either on a sustaining or advertiser-sponsorship basis, must have his pesonal approval and must pass the test of his personal investigation. It was expected in Hollywood that Columbia Broadcasting and Mutual Broadcasting, completing the triumvirate of coast-to-coast air systems, will adopt similar measures.

Unconfirmed went a report that extra-stringent censorship would henceforth be exercised by the broadcasters over the air gossipings. Present "censorship" of the commentators' manuscript seems to have precluded any direct charges of libel or slander, but it has fallen far short of satisfaction in halting the embarrassing of producers, pictures and personalities.

Added this week to Hollywood's protests against radio gossipers' "keynote peeping" on the air was that of George Trendle, circuit owner in Detroit.

On a visit to Hollywood, Mr. Trendle declared that studios should banish "purveyors of confidential and discrediting information."

He said, "The truth has never hurt anyone, but when the truth is distorted it can become dangerous and easily injure some one or even the industry."

Follows Fischer's Gossip

Hollywood's continuous protestations against this type of "tabloid journalism" on the air evidently reached its loudest after Gossiper George Fischer's Jergens Lotion NBC broadcasting from Hollywood on October 10th that England's former King Edward, the Duke of Windsor, was en route to the film capital to become "czar" over the entire "international motion picture world."

Previously, and down through the years since voice took to the air for commercial broadcasts, apparent efforts have been made by various air gossipers to make sensational comment on Hollywood and its workers. In recent months, the producers have been complaining bitterly, but unofficially, that unfair and highly exaggerated critical attacks have been made on new productions, frequently even while still in the making, and more frequently before it was possible to judge their box office value. The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, speaking for the organized industry, unofficially admitted as much this week.

The recently-cemented "friendship" of radio and films in Hollywood is due for a severe test, it appears.

No less than six national and five local Hollywood and Pacific Coast air "columnists" presently are vying with one another for "exclusive" or "scoop" stories on the more or less private lives of Hollywood's players, producers, or other "name" personalities.

While desirous, apparently, of effecting censorship of such undesirable "news," the studios seem to be in a position where they cannot engage in direct conflict with the gossipers, because of the combined wide audiences to which legitimate publicity news of the players and pictures might be addressed, with its attendant publicity values. But, it was learned this week, the producers in Hollywood are considering appealing directly to the heads of the networks and local stations asking them to invoke more drastically than heretofore the Federal Communications Commission's rulings that broadcasters and broadcasting officials themselves must at all times provide safeguards against program material insofar as libel, decency, slander and correctness are concerned.

Too, Hollywood is understood to believe that the forthcoming direct radio tieups of large studios with national advertisers and with national networks, and also the dependence of radio upon films for other forms of talent cooperation, now place the producers in a new and strong position to exert considerable influence on the broadcasters.

Local and Coast Stations Next

Major Lohr's move at NBC is the first step in the new direction, and with reports that CBS and Mutual Broadcasting are preparing to follow, the studios next could turn attention to the local Hollywood and Pacific Coast stations, where, it is felt, pressure could be brought to bear through the refusal by various devices of local station requests for studio tal-

DEAL TO BUY UNITED ARTISTS IS FAR FROM SET, SAYS KORDA ON ARRIVAL

Selznick Decision to Leave If Goldwyn and Korda Get Control Is Reported; New Financing Is Declared Ready

The widely heralded conferences at which details are to be decided upon for the purchase by Samuel Goldwyn and Alexander Korda of the United Artists stock held by Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks, got underway in New York this week immediately after the arrival from England of Mr. Korda.

Before rushing off to meet with Mr. Goldwyn and E. H. Lever, a representative of Prudential Assurance Company, a British concern, Mr. Korda, head of London Films, granted a lengthy press interview on board the Ile de France. Despite the numerous questions put to him, Mr. Korda disclosed only that the potential deal involving $6,000,000 is "far from set."

"I came here to settle details of the deal," he declared. "If they can't be set, then there won't be any deal. The final closing of the deal depends upon the conferences."

On board the Ile de France with Mr. Korda were 21 other theatrical personalities. They included Maurice Silverstone, a director of the Odeon circuit of theatres in England; Sam E. Morris, in charge of foreign activities for Warner Brothers; Jack Cohn, vice-president in charge of distribution for Columbia; Phil Reisman, head of RKO's foreign activities; Marcel Hellman, formerly associated with Criterion Films in England; King Vidor; Major General J. G. Harbord, chairman of the RCA board; Lothar Mendes, director, who has been away from the United States for four years; T. Hayes Hunter, former American director and now an agent in England; Barney Glazer, former Paramount producer and now associated with Warner Brothers; Herman Maier, in charge of WB theatre construction, and Erik and Ludwig Charell, who are associated with the same company; and eight players and writers signed by Louis B. Mayer on his recent trip abroad.

Says Financing Is Set

Mr. Korda insisted a "group" was prepared to finance the purchase of the United Artists stock but he declined to name the group. "I can't say who will put up the money and I am not at liberty to say who has the money to put up," he said.

The English producer then explained Mr. Lever's participation in the conferences by pointing out that Prudential is the chief backer of London Films and that he (Mr. Lever) is "acting as an adviser and a very much interested party."

Other comment made by Mr. Korda included: There is no plan for a stock issue in the United Artists deal; he will not produce pictures in the United States; he "hopes" David O. Selznick and Walter Wanger will remain with the company; there might be some truth in the report that John Hay Whitney may participate in the financing, and Mr. Korda and his associates "are determined that there should be a British film industry."

Mr. Selznick, however, will not remain with United Artists if Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Korda obtain control of the distributing company, Motion Picture Daily said, quoting an "official spokesman" for Mr. Selznick. Mr. Selznick's contemplated deal with RKO collapsed Wednesday, the same source said, because the parties were unable to agree on terms.

Expansion plans for the Odeon circuit are going forward, Mr. Silverstone announced, adding that the circuit expects to increase its number of houses from 320 to about 400 within the next three or four months. "There is not the slightest truth to the stories" that John Maxwell, chairman and managing director of the British Picture Corporation, Ltd., intends to buy an interest in the Odeon circuit, Mr. Silverstone said. "And I should know," he declared.

Mr. Silverstone favors the plan advanced by the Kinematograph Renters Society to cut overlong programs. There is no fight between the KRS and the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association over the issue, he continued, although "some exhibitors can't see it, but on the other hand, a lot of others do."

"I think the breaking up of the overlong programs will be a grand thing, both for distributors and exhibitors," he added.

Warners to Make 16 in England

Warner Brothers plans to produce 16 pictures in England next year and none in any other foreign countries, according to Mr. Morris. His traveling companion, Mr. Maier, estimated the new Warner Brothers' theatre being erected on the site of the old Daly's, will cost about $400,000 and will seat 2,000 persons.

RKO is continuing its policy of opening foreign offices, Mr. Reisman said. Generally speaking, he said, conditions abroad are good.

Columbia is awaiting the new quota decision next month before making any commitments for English productions, Mr. Cohn announced and, at the same time, reported he knew nothing about an impending deal whereby Max Schach would produce four to five "A" films for world distribution and eight to ten for the British market. Mr. Schach is managing director and producer for Capitol Film Corporation, Ltd.

General Harbord was pessimistic over the outlook for television in England. It is in the same state as it has been, he said. "Television is not ready yet."

The MGM contingent that arrived included Leopold Jessner, German stage and film producer; Baroness Lili Hatvany, of Budapest, author of "Tonight or Never"; Konstantin Gorian, Viennese opera star; Bruno Frank, playwright and novelist; Julien Duvivier, French film producer whose last picture was "Carnet de Bal"; Mireille Balin, French actress; Arthur Riech, who has appeared at the Scala Theatre, Vienna.

RADIO PURGE URGED BY PAYNE

A move to abolish blood-curdling programs from the radio was instituted this week by George Henry Payne, a member of the Federal Communications Commission in Washington, when he recommended a house-cleaning within the commission that would not only change the procedure in granting licenses to broadcasting companies, but would raise the standards of radio programs.

Radio "Gossipers" Are Under Fire

ent on "guest-star" appearances on programs emanating from those smaller stations.

The ordinary means of studio-imposed censorship of material deemed unsuitable is felt to be ineffective in the radio commentating situation, inasmuch as virtually all the radio gossipers have informants inside studio walls. The air columnists even have charged that much of the material complained of comes not only from studio "insiders," if not from press departments, but also is supplied by representatives of the stars themselves, bent on gaining nationwide publicity attention on the air, no matter how or with what kind of material it is accomplished.

Evidence that radio is well aware of the ill feeling being created by the "key-hole" type of air film-gossip commentating was seen in the broadcast of Alistair Cooke, who, on October 20th, started a new series over NBC's Red networks with the following explanation:

"This series is being started in the hope certainly of offering constructive and useful criticism about the theatre and the movies. I don't know whether I know just what Hollywood means by 'constructive barbs'; I think even a Comanche would be hard put to it to know how to shoot an arrow constructively. Arrows give you a quick and deadly wince between the shoulder blades, or you don't even know they are there. But I don't know that we need share this idea of a movie critic as a man with a pop gun who sneaks around dark alleys. One critic at least here and now resents the idea that the man with the pop gun has any right to invade boudoirs, or even night clubs or swimming pools. What the movie stars do with their spare time may make titillating gossip. It has nothing at all to do with film criticism."

Mr. Cooke, better known to British air audiences, was born in Manchester, England, 1908. Graduated from Jesus College, Cambridge, 1930, he came to America this year.

22 To Participate In MGM Radio Show

Robert Z. Leonard, director, will serve as master of ceremonies November 4th when the first of a series of weekly radio broadcasts is presented by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for Maxwell House. "Firefly" will form the basis of the first program with Jeanette MacDonald in the lead.

Others who will take part are Sophie Tucker, Eleanor Powell, Pete Smith, Ted Healy, Una Merkel, Judy Garland, Buddy Ebsen, Igor Gorin, Helen Trot, Betty Jaymes, Ileana Massey, George Murphy and Dave Gould.

"Good News of 1938" was announced this week as the title of the program, and, at the same time MGM said Freddie Bartholomew and Fannie Brice will head the November 11th broadcast, with Spencer Tracy, Reginald Gardner, Betty Jaynes, Artie Auerbach, Judy Garland, Meliza Korjua, and Val Rosing. Louis B. Mayer, MGM production chief, also will appear.

ARMISTICE BRINGS SETTLEMENT TERMS TO TERMINATE "BOYCOTT"

Paramount to Submit New Contracts for Study by Exhibitors; None of the Six Pictures To Be Played Under Old Contracts

A one week armistice of the exhibitor's "Buyers' strike" against Paramount was declared in Philadelphia this week when the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners held a three hour meeting to discuss a final settlement plan.

During the week, new contracts will be submitted by Paramount for study by the exhibitors but none will be signed until after another UMPTO session next Wednesday. At this meeting the exhibitors will report back on how the proposed settlement will work out in practice. A vote will then be taken on whether the settlement is acceptable.

The plan met with minority opposition from the floor after it was explained by Lewen Pizor, president, but the motion to establish a one week armistice period was carried unanimously.

Fight Waged Four Months

The battle against Paramount has been waged for the last four months on charges that the company failed to deliver six pictures listed in the 1936-37 contracts and included the same films in the 1937-38 contracts.

None of the six pictures will be played on the old contracts under the settlement terms outlined to Philadelphia exhibitors, according to Paramount. All of the six disputed pictures will be included in the new season contracts, wherever such contracts are made with "strike participants." The playing terms, however, will be subject to negotiation between the company and its individual accounts.

The time limit on old contracts was extended for three months on pictures not yet played. This will include short subjects. Signing of new contracts for the company's newsreel will involve no obligation to take the old releases.

It was generally agreed that old pictures on last year's contract, which were weak or had been played out by opposition, would be cancelled although individual deals could be made for any of them. In case of dispute on these pictures, an arbitration board would be set up.

The selling plan for features in the new season calls for four at 35 per cent; eight at 30 per cent and the remainder at 25 per cent or outright buys.

Pete Wood, Ohio exhibitor leader, attended the meeting, which was the largest held in the history of the organization, and opposed the settlement plan as detrimental to Ohio exhibitors. But, at the same time, he commended the Philadelphia exhibitors for their militant attitude in waging the fight.

The basic agreement which was submitted at Tuesday's meeting was drafted in New York last Friday when Lewen Pizor, president of the UMPTO and two other exhibitor representatives, Abe Sablosky and Charles Segall, conferred with Paramount's representative Austin C. Keough, vice-president and secretary; Neil F. Agnew, vice-president in charge of distribution, and J. H. Unger, eastern and southern division sales manager.

Abandons Claim

It was at this session that Paramount agreed to abandon its claim to the right to examine the books of exhibitors to determine profits on percentage pictures. Adjustments of old contracts and negotiations for new agreements will be handled by Paramount's sales force with individual exhibitors which is a stipulation the company insisted upon since the "buyers' strike" started four months ago.

Although the agreement was designed to serve as a model for settling similar disputes in other areas, Northwest Allied continued with its plan to file an appeal from a temporary injunction obtained by Paramount in Minneapolis against the exhibitor "buyers' strike."

Hearing Gary Appeal

The Gary Theatre Company, of Gary, Indiana, also has continued its fight for the delivery of ten Paramount pictures which, it charges, were promised for the 1936-37 season. A hearing on the theatre company's petition for a mandatory injunction to compel delivery of the films is to be held in the federal court at Indianapolis Friday. Originally the Gary organization brought the action in the state superior court, Marion, Ohio, but Paramount successfully moved to have it transferred.

Other Court Developments

Among other court developments in trade practice litigation this week was the refusal by the United States supreme court to review an order of the seventh circuit court of appeals. The order, obtained by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation against the Indianapolis Amusement Company, granted MGM and other distributing companies the right to examine the amusement company's records.

The distributors, MGM, Universal Film Exchanges, United Artists, Twentieth Century-Fox, Vitagraph and Education Film Exchanges, are defendants in a $450,000 damage action brought by the amusement company on charges they conspired in the use of uniform contracts. The amusement firm claims it was forced to pay higher prices for films and forced to take inferior product with the result the company went into liquidation.

In seeking to examine the company's books and records, the distributors contended the greater part of their defense will consist in proving the exhibitor's losses were not the result of their acts but were from other causes.

An appeal to the United States supreme court from the decision handed down in the district court, Dallas, against distributors is planned. The court ruled the distributors had conspired in the making of contracts with the Interstate Circuit.

$2,100,000 Damages Sought

Damages of $2,100,000 are being sought by Morse and Rothenberg, independent New England theatre operators, in an anti-trust action brought against the eight major distributors, the Maine & New Hampshire and the M. A. Shea circuits. The plaintiff charges inability to obtain product for seven of its theatres which are in competition with houses operated by the defendant circuits.

Depositions have been taken from E. A. Schiller, of Loew's theatres and Felix Jenkins, attorney for Twentieth Century-Fox. George Ryan, counsel for the plaintiff, said the deposition of Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, which was taken in the E. M. Loew anti-trust case in 1931, will be used.

It was planned to end the taking of depositions and the entering of exhibits on Friday. About 350 exhibits have been introduced, most of which are contracts made by the defendant distributors with the defendant circuits.

Three Chicago film exchanges, Universal, United Artists and Columbia, have moved their offices from 831 South Wabash Avenue, to the recently completed film exchange building at 13th Street and Wabash Avenue.

BOGUS AGENTS COLLECT OLD AGE INSURANCE

Criminal prosecution by the Department of Justice of bogus collectors of funds in connection with the Social Security Act's old age insurance program was requested in Washington this week by the Social Security Board.

The board advised the Department of Justice that it has received information of several instances where money has been collected through such misrepresentation, and requested the department to investigate them and institute criminal proceedings. In announcing its action the board declared:

"The Social Security Board has no old age benefits collectors, old age insurance collectors, or any other kind of collectors or financial agents. It has authorized no one to collect any fees from participants in the old age insurance program. We wish to caution everyone against making any payments whatever to persons representing themselves as agents of the board and who guarantee the payment of old age insurance."

HITCHCOCK SEES DRAMA IN

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

A STAUNCH practitioner of the theory that stars, directors, costumers and scenic designers are subordinate to the story in the making of a motion picture, Alfred Hitchcock was adamant in a decision not to attempt another film of the type of "The 39 Steps" until he found another story that contained elements of parallel value.

The director found the nucleus of such a story in Josephine Tey's "A Shilling for Candles." Retitling it, for screen purposes, "The Girl Was Young," he selected a cast and immediately started production at Pinewood. According to Mr. Hitchcock the new picture has the feeling of "The 39 Steps" not because it was directed by the same man but because the story values in both scripts are equivalent. It has the suspense, comedy and unexpected situation that made the previous film one that audiences remembered.

Another of the director's theories is that excessive expenditure for elaborate production is not necessary and is too often an attempt to cover story shortcomings. On the other hand, his budget opens wide when the achievement of the exact effect he is seeking is in question. A special camera and setting were used for a scene which, running no more than two minutes on the screen, is the focal point of the story and the climax of the chase on which the picture is built.

The story is told against the background of the English countryside and coastal towns in the south. It moves through lorry driver pull-ups on the main road, provincial workhouses, magistrates courts, seaside hotels, country inns, deserted grist mills, rural police stations and farmhouses. All its characters, in accord with the setting, are middle class English types.

Mr. Hitchcock has appointed himself the champion of the English middle classes and has announced a crusade against films "of chromium plating, dress shirts and Oxford accents." More to his liking are stories of the people who fill the trams and trains at rush hour. In support of his stand he points out, "America has exploited the drama of ordinary people and made it a feature of eight films out of ten."

In "The Girl Was Young" Nova Pilbeam is given an adult starring role she has earned through her work in previous Gaumont British vehicles including "Nine Days a Queen." Opposite her is Derrick DeMarney, a comparative unknown, who appeared previously in "The Shape of Things to Come." Mr. DeMarney will be introduced to America this winter in the stage production "Young Mr. Disraeli" and his screen future is certain if he follows in the path of others who have had similar beginnings. Madeleine Carroll and Robert Donat were unknowns when they appeared in "The 39 Steps."

Others in the supporting cast include Percy Marmont, Mary Clare, Basil Radford, Phil Ray, Edward Rigby, George Curzon, John Longden, George Merritt, J. H. Roberts, John Millar, Fred Royal and Anthony Keeley.

The film will be released by GB in America in December.

LUKAN, ROSENBERG, PINANSKI AND CROCKETT, HEAD EXHIBITOR UNITS

Oklahoma Theatre Owners Will Gather November 8 and 9; Arkansas Independents Meet November 7 and 8 at Little Rock

In a week marked with unusual activity in organized exhibitor circles, four state organizations elected presidents, three of them at annual state conventions, four others set their regular convention arrangements, and two new exhibitor groups were in the process of formation.

Elected to head their respective exhibitor groups were:

L. O. Lukan, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the Northwest;

M. A. Rosenberg, reelected by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania;

Samuel Pinanski, elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Massachusetts;

W. F. Crockett, heading the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Oklahoma set November 8th and 9th as the dates and Oklahoma City's Biltmore hotel as the place for this year's convention.

The Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas will meet at the Hotel Marion, Little Rock, November 7th and 8th.

Exhibitors of Oregon and in Fort Wayne, Indiana, formed new organizations.

Kuykendall at Seattle

The Northwest MPTO meeting was held in Seattle, and was concluded on Monday with a talk by Edward Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who outlined the organization's 10 point program and urged cooperation with national aims. The annual ball, held Monday night, was presided over by Mary Carlisle, Paramount player.

In addition to Mr. Lukan, the Northwest organization elected Milton Kenworthy of Moscow, Idaho, first vice-president; Paul Aust of Seattle, second vice-president; Cecil Gwinn, third vice-president, and James Hone was reelected treasurer.

While in Seattle Mr. Kuykendall made known his intention to attend the special meeting of the MPTO of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois November 5th at St. Louis.

Western Pennsylvania Elects

Officers elected by the MPTO of Western Pennsylvania, besides the reelection of Mr. Rosenberg, at the annual two day convention held at the Hotel Schenley in Pittsburgh were: W. L. Brown, vice-president; Fred Herrington, secretary; Joseph Gelman, treasurer, and the following directors, Carl Poke, William J. Walker and Pete Antinopolis, Abram F. Myers, H. M. Richey, Allied leaders, address the gathering.

The meeting of the MPTO of Massachusetts in Boston resulted in the election of Mr. Pinanski, president; John H. Devlin, vice-president; Stanley Summer, treasurer, and Joseph H. Brennan of Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, Inc., secretary.

The board of directors includes: Charles W. Koerner of RKO, Max Mellincoff of Warners, M. J. Mullin of M and P, B. E. Hoffman of Warners, George E. French of the RKO Keith Memorial, John J. Ford of Maine and New Hampshire Theatres, Al Somerby of the G. E. Lathrop Theatres, James H. Doyle of the Broadway in South Boston, and John S. Giles of the George A. Giles Theatres Company.

W. S. Wilder, III, Retires

Mr. Crockett was elected president of the MPTO of Virginia following the resignation of William S. Wilder, owing to ill health. The meeting, called by the board of directors, was held in Richmond. Also resigning was George Jones as vice-president and member of the board. Allen Sparrow, who succeeded Mr. Jones, recently transferred to Boston by Loew's, as manager of Loew's, in Richmond, was elected to the board to complete the unexpired term.

Ben Pitts of Fredericksburg, was elected vice-president to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Charles A. Somma, who was elected Chairman of the Board. Harold Wood is secretary, Sam Bendheim, Jr., treasurer, and Robert Barton, Jr., counsel.

The annual midwinter convention of the MPTO of Virginia will be held in Richmond January 27th. The convention committee includes Hunter Perry, Herman Ruben and J. E. Loth.

Myers Is Speaker

The value of regional conference activity in the work of Allied was stressed by Abram F. Myers, national general counsel, in an address at the annual convention of Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana in Indianapolis Wednesday.

Preliminary arrangements for the annual MPTO of Oklahoma meeting at the Biltmore in Oklahoma City November 8 and 9 were discussed at a meeting of directors and officials. Invited guests include Mr. Kuykendall, who will present his 10 point program, M. A. Lightman, Fred Wehrenberg, Judge Roy L. Walker, Colonel H. A. Cole, Dave Palfreyman and Bob O'Donnell. The directors meet again on Monday to complete details of the program.

The annual convention of the ITO of Arkansas scheduled for November 7 and 8 will be held at the Hotel Marion, Little Rock. J. F. Norman of Little Rock is president of the group.

A meeting of 32 Oregon exhibitors in Portland culminated in the discussion of plans for an early organization and election of officers to become an Oregon unit of the MPTOA. The meeting was called by a special committee consisting of Ted Gamble, of the J. J. Parker Theatres of Portland, William Ripley, operating houses at Longview and Kelso, and president of the Washington MPTO unit, and Art Adamson, operating leading houses in Albany and Vancouver.

Fort Wayne, Ind., exhibitors formed the Fort Wayne Motion Picture Exhibitors Association. Harvey G. Cocks was elected president, George Heliotes, vice-president, and H. Brokenstein, secretary-treasurer.

The Independent Exhibitors, Inc., New England organization, met in Boston on Tuesday to discuss product prices. According to Arthur K. Howard, business manager, New England exhibitors have taken 77 per cent of the percentage deals sold in the east and 74 per cent of the deals sold at prices higher than last year's scales.

Allied Theatres of Iowa and Nebraska will hold its annual meeting on November 4th at Iowa Falls, Ia., in the Chamber of Commerce clubrooms and Wisconsin's Independent Theatres Protective Association will convene November 3rd at the Hotel Schroeder, Milwaukee.

Briskin Says He Will Quit RKO

Samuel J. Briskin wants to resign from the position of production head for RKO, a post he has held for two years, it was reported on the Coast Wednesday. Although no definite reason was given, it was generally understood that Mr. Briskin and Pandro S. Berman, RKO producer, have had repeated differences over policy.

Leo Spitz, RKO, president, planned to arrive in Hollywood from Chicago Thursday for the reputed purpose of adjudicating the current situation.

It was announced several months ago that Mr. Briskin had signed a new three year contract, but now it is understood the papers were never signed.

Mr. Spitz is expected to assume charge of the studio until a new deal is made with Mr. Briskin or with a successor. Mr. Briskin, it is said, will receive between $100,000 and $150,000 from RKO to settle a temporary agreement under which he has been working for the last few months.

Milliken Explains Industry's Viewpoint to Albany Women

Parents must educate themselves to take an active interest in the pictures their children see, Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, told the Mother's and Women's Clubs of Albany, N. Y., at a joint meeting on Tuesday.

In the forum which followed, opposition to the double feature system, the "low level of audience intelligence" and "unintelligent shorts" was expressed by members, with Mr. Milliken explaining the industry's side of the picture.

Churches, schools and libraries, he said, have come to realize the important part they play in influencing pictures.

Mr. Milliken addressed members of school boards in Syracuse Monday night.

Hutchinson Expected to Clear Hoyts - Greater Union Status

Walter J. Hutchinson, in charge of foreign activities for Twentieth Century-Fox, is due to arrive in Los Angeles, Monday from Sydney, Australia. At that time the status of Hoyts and Greater Union in Australia is expected to be revealed. While in Sydney, Mr. Hutchinson conferred with Charles Munro, managing director of Hoyts and Stanley S. Crick, managing director of Twentieth Century-Fox in Australia.

According to the five-year agreement Hoyts and Greater Union have been operating under, notice of extension of the pooling agreement must be given by December 31, 1937. Greater Union has been reported favoring a discontinuance of the deal.

NAZIS INCREASE TAXES AND HALT ALL NEW PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

Permits Will Be Granted Only If the Companies Are Considered Necessary for Adequate Supply of Product

The Reich Government of Adolph Hitler in Germany evidently is employing measures even more drastic than those used heretofore in a desperate effort to save its home motion picture business both from domestic disintegration and from the effects of any isolation on the outside.

Through United States Government reports from R. M. Stephenson, Department of Commerce Attache in Berlin, to Washington, it is learned that the Reich has extended the regulation prohibiting the building of new theatres, to include prohibition of any and all new or revived companies in production, distribution, or exhibition. Permits for new enterprises may be obtained only if the Government is convinced that the new project will be beneficial to the increase of an actual and proper product supply to German theatres.

Finances sufficient to carry a new company for at least six months also must be guaranteed.

The taxation problems of the German industry likewise are multiplying, according to Mr. Stephenson's report to Washington.

Conditions for New Companies

On the embargo on establishment of new film enterprises, the Commerce Department at the Capital quotes Mr. Stephenson as follows:

"By a new decree of the Reich Film Chamber the regulation prohibiting the building of new film theatres has been extended. In the future no new enterprise whatsoever, the aim of which may be production, distribution, preparation or performance of films, can be undertaken without the permission of the Reich Film Chamber. This measure also applies to the proposed revival of enterprises which had suspended business temporarily.

"The president of the Reich Film Chamber is empowered to grant the permission for the establishment of a new firm under the following conditions:

"A. If it is necessary from the standpoint of the German film industry, particularly for the supply of films to German cinemas.

"B. If sufficient business capital is available, i.e., according to the official explanation, if the financial liquidity of the firm can be guaranteed for at least 6 months. In case of film producing firms it is prescribed that the capital must be at least sufficient for the production of three films. With distributing firms, the funds must be sufficient to enable the firm to buy licenses for at least six of the latest films."

In a subsequent report, Mr. Stephenson described the increase in film distribution rates in Germany as follows:

"The more the cinema receipts have increased in recent years the stronger has grown the demand that theatre proprietors should pay more than heretofore toward financing film production. So far distribution rates have varied between 25 and 35 per cent of box office receipts minus the amusement tax, which varies according to the size and type of theatre. According to the latest estimates, cinema cash receipts for 1936 amounted to 237,000,000 marks. Of this total, 70,000,000 marks went to the distributing (producing) companies, of which for copying, cultural films, newsreels, and other expenses, about 25,000,000 or 30,000,000 marks had to be deducted. The net income which the distributing-producing companies received from the home market, therefore, amounted to 40,000,000 to 45,000,000 marks, or only 15 to 20 per cent of total cinema receipts.

"On the other hand, the financial situation of the theatre proprietors has greatly improved as the number of visitors has increased during recent years while current expenses have remained about the same.

"A decree now published by the Reichsfilmkammer establishes new distribution rates for the season 1937-38. By this decree the minimum rates are 30 per cent for towns up to 6,000 population and 32.5 per cent for larger places. The distribution rate increases by 2.5 per cent if the amusement tax has been reduced—as a result of awards for excellence—and by 5 per cent if the amusement tax is entirely waived. By these measures the higher profits arising from tax exemption will in future largely benefit the film producers instead of, as heretofore, the cinema owners. It is probable that the rate for the big distributors will not exceed 35 per cent. The new regulation means an average increase in the distribution rates of 2.5 to 3 per cent and an average increase in profits for the distributors of 8 to 10 per cent. The distribution rates for newsreels have also been somewhat increased."

NEWSPAPERS DROP "STAR" EVALUATIONS

After several years, the New Orleans Item, an afternoon newspaper, and the Tribune, morning edition of the same publication, have discontinued the practice of "starring" productions at the downtown motion picture theatres.

It has been noticed that a film receiving one star sometimes has drawn more at the box office than one receiving four or five.

License Denied to Film, "False Shame," in New York

Dr. Frank P. Graves, Commissioner of Education for the state of New York, this week recommended rejection of an application for a license to show the film "False Shame," on venereal disease, and dismissed the appeal of Jewell Productions, Inc.

Commerce Bureau Issuing Law Series

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, Washington, is issuing, beginning in November, the Comparative Law Series, a monthly publication merging all the former periodical bulletins of the division.

The first issue contains, among others, the translated text and a discussion of the adoption of a new copyright law in Latvia, which country formerly adhered to the old Russian copyright law.

The Series, according to an announcement, will contain descriptive and critical analyses, transcripts, translations, or summaries of foreign laws affecting American industrial and commercial interests; notices of foreign decisions, tax regulations, insurance reports, labor legislation, developments in the patent field, trade-marks, copyrights, unfair competition, combinations in restraint of trade, restrictions against foreigners, and other phases of foreign industrial property law; a summary of federal legislation affecting foreign commerce; notices of legal literature received in the Division Library; announcements, indices and statistical material.

Throckmorton New President Of RCA Manufacturing Co.

G. K. Throckmorton this week was elected president of RCA Manufacturing Company, Camden, N. J. Mr. Throckmorton has been executive vice-president of the company and the operating head following the retirement in April of E. T. Cunningham, former president. RCA Manufacturing Company is a half owner of RKO Radio and parent of the National Broadcasting Company, of television and radio, and RCA Photophone Company, manufacturers and sellers of theatre and studio sound equipment.

Mr. Throckmorton has been in radio since 1926. He was born in Indiana and attended Purdue and Cornell Universities.

National Decency Legion Classifies 12 Productions

Of 12 new pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week, nine were approved for general patronage and three were listed as unobjectionable for adults. The pictures and their classification follow.

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Brothers of the West," "Heidi," "Hold 'Em Navy," "Rough Riding Rhythm," "Texas Trail," "Trapped by G-Men," "Trigger Trio," "The Wrong Road," "Young Dynamite." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "The Awful Truth," "Live, Love and Learn, "La Crise est Fini" (French).

LONG FIGHT AHEAD FOR LABOR CONTROL

Regional Board Ends Hearing of Writers Guild Plea for Collective Bargaining Election

Although hearings have concluded before the Regional Labor Board in Los Angeles on the Screen Writers Guild petition for a collective bargaining agency election, it is expected that no decision will be announced for several weeks and long litigation is in prospect after the ruling is made.

The National Labor Board in Washington will receive the recommendations of William Ringer, trial examiner, in the Guild matter and then will rule on whether production is in interstate commerce and whether writers are employees and as such entitled to invoke the Wagner Labor Act.

With the close of the hearing came reports from the Authors League of America that plans are under way to grant financial and membership autonomy to the Screen Writers Guild in an attempt to reclaim the allegiance of Screen Playwrights and preserve a united front for writers.

Before the hearing concluded in Los Angeles, attorneys agreed to the introduction of stipulations by lawyers for the producers which included exhibits showing the corporate structure of producing and distributing companies. These were designed to show the separation of production from distribution so far as interstate commerce is concerned.

Writers Final Witnesses

Final testimony was given by Grover Jones, Howard Emmett Rogers, Patterson McNutt and James McGuiness, all writers who sought to show that writers are creative workers rather than mere employees.

Neil S. McCarthy, attorney for Screen Playwrights, ended his presentation in a surprise move by announcing he would call no more witnesses. Leonard S. Janofsky, Guild attorney, introduced a copy of the original contract of the American Society of Cinematographers with the producers, which showed that producers as a unit negotiated with the cameramen.

Educational Contract Near

Educational Pictures informally advised the New York office of the Screen Actors' Guild last week that it would sign the Guild's contract within a few days. The company's action left March of Time as the only important eastern producer which has not come to an agreement with the Guild. March of Time's application for further consideration of its claim to being a newsreel rather than a producing organization was to be acted upon by the Guild's board of directors this week.

The proposal for autonomy for the Writers Guild represented a reversal of the Authors League's original proposal to unite the Guild more closely with its other member units which are the Dramatists, Radio Writers and Authors Guilds. The original proposal precipitated a bitter war among Hollywood writers and led to formation of the Screen Playwrights by a group in Hollywood which claimed the Guild was not a "local" organization but was conducted for and by New York factions.

In order to make the Guild autonomous, numerous changes will be made in its constitution and in that of the Guild. The council of the League last week approved the amendments, virtually assuring their approval by the membership of the organization when they are voted on at a special meeting in November. The change, it was said, while granting the Screen Writers Guild "complete control of its own affairs," at the same time will preserve an affiliation with the League and its member organizations which will assure the Guild of the advantages of unanimity of action in times of emergency.

Office Workers Organized

The American Federation of Labor drive to organize white collar workers in the motion picture industry was declared last week by the United Office and Professional Workers of America, CIO affiliate, to be a company union move. The CIO statement was issued in New York by Anne Berenholz, organizer.

"This attempt of the AFL comes on the heels of the collapse of company unionism in the motion picture industry," the statement said. "Universal Pictures Company hoped to stop the organizational drive of the CIO by setting up a company union. This effort failed and the membership of the Universal Employees' Guild voted to affiliate with the CIO.

"The Motion Picture Division of Local 16 has been carrying on effective organization work and now has substantial groups of members in every film office."

WRITERS EXPLAIN JOB'S VICISSITUDES

National Labor Board representatives at the Screen Writers Guild hearing in Hollywood heard frank descriptions of a writer's job from Grover Jones and Patterson McNutt, writers who were among the final witnesses called by counsel for Screen Playwrights.

Mr. Jones said Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer paid him $2,000 weekly to pep up jaded writers in conferences by telling them funny stories. He also told of a seven-months poker game at Paramount of which half the stakes went to underpaid secretaries of writers and expressed the theory that nobody knows anything about writing for the screen but that the man who puts up the best bluff can earn $3,500 a week.

"Screen writing," Mr. McNutt said, "is a ditch digger's job mentally. Every time you do a story you have a baby. You work 24 hours a day, sleep with it, and wake in the middle of the night. You may get an idea from anywhere, a barber, or out of the air."

Skolsky Writing for 'Mirror'

Sidney Skolsky, former comumnist for the New York Daily News, has been signed by the New York Daily Mirror to do a daily column on Hollywood. Mr. Skolsky was replaced on the News by Ed Sullivan.

Radio Affiliates and Musicians Agree

The trade agreement between the Independent Radio Network Affiliates and the American Federation of Musicians, after several months of negotiations, has finally been worked out by the federation's international council and the IRNA committee.

The agreement was completed at a meeting held in New York this week and is now in the hands of attorneys for both sides for final polishing and revision.

The agreement, in part, stipulates that the expenditure for the IRNA group for musicians' salaries is to be raised $1,500,000 annually. To this is to be added the $600,000 increase for musicians' salaries which the network key stations have agreed to spend annually.

Meanwhile the AFM met last week with the transcription and recording group to seek a settlement with them. A committee was appointed to handle negotiations. It is composed of Lloyd Egner, National Broadcasting Company; A. J. Kendrick, World Broadcasting Company; Jack Kapp, Decca Record Company; Sewart Sprague, Brinckerhoff Company; Francis J. Quillan, attorney for the World Broadcasting Company, and Merritt Tompkins of Muzak.

Film on LaGuardia Gets Early Booking

RKO Radio has set in the March of Time, in which is depicted the career of Fiorello LaGuardia as mayor of New York, for release Wednesday and Thursday in all of the neighborhood first-runs of the company's greater New York circuit. This will give the picture its first and only New York neighborhood showing prior to Election Day, November 2nd. It had been reported in New York newspapers that RKO Radio would hold up distribution until after Election Day for fear of political "reprisals."

Film executives this week attended a Hotel Astor luncheon of the Non-Partisan Theatrical and Motion Picture Division in support of Mayor LaGuardia and Thomas E. Dewey, running for district attorney in Manhattan.

A stage, screen and radio luncheon was held in the Hotel Victoria Thursday by the Theatrical Division of the Mahoney-Taylor-Schneider campaign, opponents of the LaGuardia ticket. Joseph Gransky is chairman of this division.

National Board of Review Magazine Issues Index

The National Board of Review Magazine this week issued an index of articles which had appeared in the magazine in the last few years. Arranged chronologically and by topic, the index covers various phases of the motion picture, including censorship, children and the motion picture, church and the motion picture, critical articles, critics and reviewing, dance and the motion picture, educational use, foreign lands, industry, junior review, libraries, literature, Little Theatres and special community use, museums, music, public, social values and book reviews.

read the reviews! reap the harvest!

"'conquest' definitely a ten best! outstanding screen entertainment!"

"Superb acting of Garbo and Boyer and magnificent production send this over big. Definitely a Ten Best, scoring on all counts. First, the brilliant performances of Greta Garbo as the Polish Marie Walewska, and of Charles Boyer as Napoleon. Secondly, the powerfully dramatic and romantic story. Never has Greta Garbo appeared more glamorous, and seldom has she approached the dramatic fire and emotional intensity that she literally pours out in scene after scene. It is a great love story, as well as a powerfully dramatic document. The production has everything that makes for outstanding screen entertainment." —The Film Daily

"You'll thrill to 'Conquest'." —George Fischer, NBC

"Don't fail to see this latest and greatest film effort of the great Garbo. In this sumptuously mounted Metro picture she will again enthrall you with her magnificent artistry."

—Gordon Fawcett, Fawcett Publications

"vast audiences will give picture smash returns!"

"A great screen tale, told with greatness, is Metro's multi-million production 'Conquest'. . . superlative are the performances of Greta Garbo and Charles Boyer, with support of the same high calibre down through the handpicked cast—the kind of co-starring delivery the public and the critics have a right to expect from the full surge of Garbo's and Boyer's finest artistry. Neither has ever before reached these heights of dramatic power, and the spell they lay will remain long in the minds of the vast audiences which will give the picture smash returns! . . . As great also is the direction of Clarence Brown." —Variety, (Coast)

"One of the best of the season." —Alexander Kahn, United Press

"Exciting love story every woman will understand. Boyer's performance establishes a new romantic high...I've never seen Garbo in a better performance."—Ed Sullivan, N.Y. Daily News and Syndicate

"'conquest' one of the finest pictures I have ever seen!"

"It is one of the finest pictures I have ever seen. Both Garbo and Boyer gave top performances . . . I don't see how any actor will have the courage to play Napoleon after Boyer's perfect portrayal. It is the finest performance I have ever seen on the screen."- -Ruth Waterbury, Photoplay

"'Conquest' is indeed that for M-G-M. This romantic portrayal of Napoleon and Marie Walewska is a new triumph for the ever glamorous Garbo and always inspiring Charles Boyer."
—E. J. Smithson, Hollywood Magazine

"Overwhelmingly magnificent and impressive, here, by all odds, is one of the greatest pictures ever produced. Its artistry and magnitude would alone assure its financial success; but it wisely incorporates those elements of popular entertainment demanded in epical pictures by audiences —spectacle, speed and, above all, sex. This triumph, will live long in the memory of patrons and showmen." —Associated Publications

"a sovereign victory . . . . a veritable triumph!"

"A sovereign victory for quality and prestige of the films may be predicted when 'Conquest', starring Greta Garbo and Charles Boyer, reaches the screens of the country...This picture gives new meaning to the worn-out adjective lavish, supporting cast, settings, costumes, everything has been combined to create a new and distinguished cinema achievement...Garbo is amazingly beautiful—singularly adept and subtle in her portrayal. Boyer's Napoleon is a veritable triumph of sincere and painstaking care and authority. Director Clarence Brown has brought the production to a fine and glowing fulfillment." —Edwin Schallert, Los Angeles Times

"The great Garbo is." —Jimmy Starr, L. A. Herald-Express

"'Conquest' superb. Garbo is lovely and fragile...Her performance is exactly right."
—Virginia Wright, L. A. Evening News

"'conquest' beyond anything the screen has ever known!"

"M-G-M's 'Conquest' magnificent... stirring story of Napoleon's romance with Polish countess one of the screen's finest offerings... Regal magnificence beyond anything the screen has ever known surrounds great Garbo and Charles Boyer in this romance of Napoleon and the glamorous Marie Walewska . . . Intense, vibrant and eloquent biographical play . . . A tour de force from every angle... M-G-M has gone beyond all precedent in the making of this majestic production... Will challenge world-interest... A stunning pageant of European history is unrolled with consummate artistry and, at its centre, two compelling figures live again. Garbo and Boyer, co-starred, draw companion portraits that touch real greatness and whose sympathetic appeal is powerful." —Hollywood Reporter

"For 'Conquest' superb is the word." —Motion Picture Daily

"A truly great picture in every sense, with Garbo and Boyer giving beautiful performances. Brown's direction is magnificent. Without a doubt it is one of the finest pictures ever produced." —Elizabeth Wilson, Silver Screen

"boxoffice all the way!"

"Picture is box-office all the way . . . It is great woman's picture . . . Make a note to see Greta Garbo in 'Conquest' . . . Pick of the pictures." —Warren Stokes, Jay Emanuel Publications

"Great Garbo's latest picture 'Conquest' will please all lovers of screen spectacles. Clarence Brown's direction is impressive throughout." —Louella O. Parsons

"Lavish, beautifully produced. Garbo excellent. Boyer, the best I have ever seen." —Sheilah Graham, Nana Syndicate

"Unusually fine picture." —Robbin Coons, Associated Press

"A great stirring drama with Napoleon and Walewska consummately brought to life by Boyer and Garbo." —Harrison Carroll, King Feature Service

"Best Garbo picture I have ever seen." —Milton Parker, International News Service

"m-g-m's 'conquest' the best picture of this year!"

"'Conquest' the best picture of this or any other week this year. Most poignant historical love story every told or seen. A picture like this comes along to revive our childlike faith in the movies as an art and the best entertainment in the world. Garbo—in this—climaxes her career with a performance which forever establishes her as the Eleanora Duse of the screen. Boyer as Napoleon at last finds a role in which his tremendous powers and talent have full scope. Clarence Brown has turned out a fine picture. It will set Metro's trademark as the highest quality and give them priceless prestige for years to come. It's the sort of picture one can go and see two or three times with pleasure every time . . . so run, don't walk to the nearest entrance of any theatre which plays Garbo and Boyer in M-G-M's 'Conquest'." —Lloyd Pantages, NBC in brief, it's time for new box-office records!

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

A News Source

Statistics gathered from the Motion Picture Producers Association and the several studios reveal that over a three-year period the number of photoplay editors and special story writers who visit Hollywood in search of material with which to interest their readers has increased by 135 per cent. This is in addition to the number of writers from New York and a score of other cities who have assigned their reporters here permanently in order that they might get first hand information.

Going over the records at MGM, it is found that 54 photoplay editors visited the studio in 1935 for special stories. In 1936, the number more than doubled, as 112 checked in. The all-time record was set this year when 131 editors and special writers were received.

One-third of this number are repeat visitors, correspondents who have returned annually for one, two or three years. Although regular newspaper observers who come from every corner of the land dominate in the number of visitors, the magazine field also has been well represented. Such publications as Saturday Evening Post, Fortune, Ladies' Home Journal, the Conde Nast and Hearst publications as well as Collier's and Sunset magazines, have sent members of their editorial staffs to the film capital.

While studios directly service practically every newspaper in the land with hundreds of thousands of words daily, the importance of having locally known commentators journey to Hollywood is inestimable.

The Light Season

Usually, at this season of the year, production slows down. The studios, which must plan weeks and months ahead, have long since completed the showcase pictures which are scheduled for the holiday period and will be released during the winter months. Consequently but eight new films were started and only five finished in the past week. Included in the new work, however, are two or three being planned as follow-ups of the already completed big picture program.

At Twentieth Century-Fox, two productions started. The first, "Blonde Moll," currently considered an average picture, will have Ricardo Cortez, Phyllis Brooks and Lyle Talbot as its headliners. Bert Levy is directing. On the other hand, mainly because of the success which has been won by earlier pictures featuring the same star, "Hot and Happy" is a subject of more important consideration. As Roy Del Ruth directs, Sonja Henie is being starred with Don Ameche, Ethel Merman, Jean Hersholt, Cesar Romero and the Condon Brothers, currently listed as the principal supports. Further cast assignments will be made.

Warners Also Start Two

Two pictures also were started at Warners. The leading players in "A Slight Case of Murder" are Edward G. Robinson, Jane Bryan, Willard Parker and Edward Brophy. Frank Lloyd is the director. Bette Davis, Henry Fonda and George Brent have been teamed to feature "Jezebel,"with Walter C. Kelly and Fay Bainter heading the support. William Wyler is directing.

Columbia began work on "Wonder Child." With Benjamin Kline directing, the cast includes Edith Fellowes, Leo Carrillo, Jacqueline Wells, Scott Colton, Thurston Hall, Margaret Irving and Inez Polange.

For Twentieth Century-Fox release, Sol Lesser started "Tarzan's Revenge." It will present Glenn Morris, Eleanor Holm, George Barbier, C. Henry Gordon and Hedda Hopper. D. Ross Lederman is directing.

Universal started "International Spy." Featured players are William Hall, Jane Wyman, Esther Ralston and Robert Warwick. Joseph Lewis is the director.

"A Family Vacation" began at MGM with George B. Seitz as director. Cast assignments are Lewis Stone, Cecelia Parker, Mickey Rooney, Charley Grapewin, Sara Haden, Fay Holden, Ann Rutherford and Eleanor Lynn.

Monogram Finishes Two

Two of the completed productions are credited to Monogram. In "Ranger Valley," produced and directed by R. N. Bradbury, Jack Randall, Lois Wilde, Charles King, Earl Dwire, Jimmy Aubrey and Ernie Adams will be seen. "The County Fair," which Howard Bretherton directed, will present John Arledge, J. Farrell MacDonald, Fuzzy Knight, James Butler and Mary Lou Linder.

At Columbia, "Start Cheering," which formerly was titled "College Follies of 1938," was finished. The revue will present Walter Connolly, Jimmy Durante, Raymond Walburn, Gertrude Niesen, Joan Perry, Charles Starrett, Ernest Truex, Virginia Dale, Hal LeRoy, Broderick Crawford, Charles Chase, Romo Vincent, Jimmy Wallington, Gene Morgan, Thurston Hall, Arthur Hoyt, Minerva Crecal, Jeni LaGon and the Four Blackbirds, the Three Stooges and Johnny Green and his orchestra. Albert S. Rogell directed.

Universal finished "A Prescription for Romance." It will feature Mischa Auer, Wendy Barrie, Kent Taylor, Dorothea Kent, Frank Jenks, Henry Hunter and William Lundigan. S. Sylvan Simon directed.

Warners finished "Penrod and His Twin Brother." Billy and Bobby Mauch are starred in the title roles with Spring Byington, Charles Halton, Jackie Morrow, Bennie Bartlett, Frank Carven, Billy Wolfstone, Philip Hurlic, Max Wagner, Eddie Collins, Bernice Pilot, Donald Hulbert, Jerry Tucker and Jack Cunningham in support. William McGann directed.

PARAMOUNT SIGNS JOHN AND ELAINE

John Barrymore and his wife, Elaine Barrie, whose romance the newspapers a year ago gave a Shakespearean tinge, and twinge, with a "Caliban" and "Ariel" word overture, are being united on the screen by Paramount with three-year contracts, signed last weekend.

William LeBaron, managing director of production, says the two will be cast in Marlene Dietrich's "French Without Tears," with Miss Barrie as the "other woman."

After "French Without Tears," according to Mr. LeBaron, Mr. and Mrs. Barrymore will be co-starred.

Barrymore has just completed a comedy role in "True Confession" and follows with "Romance in the Dark."

"French Without Tears" will be Miss Barrie's first feature picture appearance. She has appeared in one short, an independent production entitled "How To Undress Before Your Husband." It has not been shown in New York.

Cartoon Staff

With completion of the new two story cartoon building in Culver City, Cal., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer last week announced the complete staff assembled for this new division of the studio. In addition to Harry Hirshfield, humorist and creator of the comic strip "Abie Kabibble," who will work on cartoon ideas, the staff includes 29 key men. Cartoon directors comprise three men, Robert Allen, William Hanna and Isadore Freleng. All were formerly with Harman-Ising, while Mr. Freleng also has had experience with Mintz, Disney and Schlesinger.

C. G. Maxwell, formerly with Disney and with Harman-Ising, is production supervisor. Edmund Schultz, who has been with Mintz and Universal, becomes head of the in-between department, and L. S. Goble is head of painting and inking. Story gag men include "Pinko" Colvig, formerly with Disney; Ray Kelly, formerly with Van Beuren; Kin Platt, who was with Disney; Henry Allen, formerly with Harman-Ising; Joseph Barbera, formerly with Terrytoons, and Allen Freleng, formerly with Schlesinger. Bert Lewis, who for six years scored cartoons at the Disney lot, is in charge of music, E. J. Moore is in charge of the camera department, and Charles Thorsen is head of designing original characters and settings.

Animators are Ben Clopton, Sam Stimson, Carl Meyer, Bill Nolan, A. J. Zander, Richard Bickenback, and Cecil Surry. Jack J. Stevens has been signed as cameraman, and F. McAlpin as sound technician. Willie Hopkins and Earl Karpe will handle finish layouts. Other layout men include Ernest Nordli, Dan Gordon and George Gordon.

The first MGM cartoon series under the new expansion program will be the syndicated feature "The Captain and the Kids."

ELIMINATION OF "FAKE" BENEFIT SHOWS PLANNED

Theatre Authority Seeks to Include Screen, Radio and Musical Artists

Elimination of all "fake" benefit shows throughout the country is the expressed aim of the New York Theatre Authority's proposal to add to its membership roster the names of all players associated with the Screen Actors Guild, the American Guild of Musical Artists, the American Federation of Radio Artists and the American Federation of Musicians.

All four organizations have been apprised of the plan and the officers have indicated they favor it, according to Alan Correlli, authority secretary. Definite action is expected to be taken when each organization's board of directors meets within the next two or three weeks, Henry Jaffe, attorney, said. He predicted adoption of the plan by all groups.

At the present the Authority exercises control over benefit shows in which members of Actors Equity and the American Federation of Actors participate. With the addition of the other four organizations, the Authority would be in a position to block any benefit show which is not being staged for a legitimate cause, said Mr. Jaffe, who is counsel for the radio and musical artists' organizations.

As an example of one practice the amalgamation would eliminate, Mr. Jaffe pointed out that as matters now stand a promoter, unable to obtain the Theatre Authority's sanction, often turns successfully to one of the groups not associated with the Authority.

Pay 15% to Authority

The plan has been in operation in New York for several years, Mr. Correlli explained, with the result the number of benefit shows has been greatly reduced. Those that are authorized by the Authority pay 15 per cent of their receipts to it.

As Mr. Correlli explained the operation of the organization, all the moneys collected are distributed among charitable organizations caring for indigent actors and actresses. During its existence, the Authority has collected and distributed about $50,000, Mr. Correlli estimated, pointing out that operating expenses are confined to his salary, that of his secretary, and the cost of maintaining the office in New York City.

Under the national plan, although details have not yet been worked out, the officers and representatives of the three organizations probably would be used to check on benefits throughout the country and collect the Authority's 15 per cent of the gross, Mr. Jaffe said.

Must Account for Expenditures

Another point in favor of the expansion, Mr. Jaffe said, is the fact that actors and actresses appearing at benefit performances are assured they are indirectly aiding a theatrical charity organization. When the fund is distributed, Mr. Correlli explained, each organization is obliged to submit a financial statement showing how the money was expended. No part of the Authority's contribution, he continued, may be used for operating expenses; it must all go to the persons being aided by the organization.

The non-appearance rule also would apply to socalled "celebrity nights," to which patrons are drawn by the use of stars' names.

Stock Changes Recorded in Grand National, Paramount

Disposition by Stanton Griffis, New York, member of the Paramount board of directors, of 23,000 three and one-quarter per cent Paramount convertible debentures through Hemphill, Noyes and Company, in August, were reported last week by the Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington in its semi-monthly summary of the transactions of corporation officers and directors in the stocks of their companies.

A report for July filed with the Commission showed that Mr. Griffis disposed of 23,000 debentures in that month also, and that his holdings in that class of security have been reduced from 88,000 at the beginning of July to 42,000 at the close of August.

The SEC also reported that Jack Barnstyn, New York, officer in Grand National Films, acquired 1,000 shares of the company's common stock during August. Mr. Barnstyn became an officer of the company on January 12th last, at which time, he reported, he held no securities.

"International Day" Is Held by AMPA

This week's luncheon-meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, held Thursday at the International Casino, in New York, was designated as "International Day," with the following guests invited: Sir Gerald Campbell, British Consul-General in New York; David M. Dow, Secretary of the Commonwealth of Australia in the United States; Douglas C. Cole, Canadian Trade Commissioner in the United States; Eugene P. Thomas, President of the National Foreign Trade Council; Right Honorable R. W. Close, K. C., Minister in Washington for the Union of South Africa; Charles B. Cochran, London theatrical producer; Herbert Wilcox and Anna Neagle, producer and star of "Victoria the Great"; Leslie Banks, co-star of the Theatre Guild's "To Quito and Back"; Humphrey Lee, President of the British Club in New York; R. H. Noonan, President of the Canadian Club; Ned Depinet, President of RKO, and C. C. Pettijohn, of the MPPDA.

Representatives also were invited from the various British societies in New York, including the St. Andrew's Society, Canadian Society, Canadian Club, Canadian Women's Club, British Club, Daughters of the British Empire, St. David's Society, British Great War Veterans of America, St. George's Society, British Luncheon Club, British Overseas League, British School and University Club, Ulster Irish Society and the British Empire Chamber of Commerce in the United States.

Mexico Denies Backing Films

by JAMES LOCKHART
in Mexico City

The Mexican labor department announced recently that it is not in the motion picture business in any of its for-profit phases in denying reports that it is backing some productions being made by Mexican companies. The only films the Government sponsors, says the labor board which has jurisdiction over all work matters, are shorts that depict public works, industrial and agricultural progress, and scenics that are designed to stimulate tourist traffic.

The Argentine is looming as a first rate market for Mexican motion pictures, according to the Mexican Ambassador at Buenos Aires, who has informed the ministry of foreign relations that pictures made in Mexico, as well as Mexican screen and radio stars, chief among them Tito Guizar, are doing very well in the land of the pampas.

Mexican producers are spending more for production, now being convinced that it is good box office to present high grade pictures. Some three years ago $15,000 per feature was considered a near bankruptcy figure. It was, but not the way the producers figure, for there was very little public demand for cheap films. Now $40,000 is about the average cost for a feature and the price is expected to soar, now that the public, in larger numbers, is willing to pay from 40 to 55 cents to see home made pictures.

Radio entertainment has been pepped up with the introduction of girl announcers, a novelty for these parts. Two large Mexico City stations have pioneered in this radical departure. It was predicted that the innovation would be short lived as everyone was so accustomed to male voices. The girls, who were chosen for pleasing voices, carrying power, personality, diction and other qualities have proven popular and apparently have firmly established themselves on the radio.

The Mexican Radio Experimenters League has founded its first air station, a 100-watt unit operating on a 7,104 kilocycle frequency.

Attendance in China 60% Off, Says Britton

Attendance at the film theatres in the six leading cities of China is 40 per cent of normal, according to Leon Britton, general manager of Peacock Motion Picture Company, distributors of RKO Radio product in China, with headquarters in Shanghai. Mr. Britton is in New York on business and will return to Shanghai next month.

China has 180 theatres wired for sound, he said. Admission to first run houses runs from 60 cents to $2 in silver (Mex.), or 17 to 60 cents in American money.

Southio Acquires Warner Houses

Southio Theatres, Inc., a Paramount subsidiary, with headquarters at Hamilton, Ohio, has taken over the Kentucky and State theatres, at Danville, Ky., formerly Warner operations.

600 EDUCATORS ACT TO BRING FILMS TO CLASSROOM IN SOUTHERN STATES

Audio-Visual Education Conference Is Voted Permanent Status; MPPDA Finds 849 Shorts Available for Schools

The movement to place motion pictures in America's classrooms as a teaching and learning medium to supplement text books spread this week over a wide area in the South, encouraged by 600 registered educators and authorities on the school films subject, who met in Atlanta for the first Southern Audio-Visual Education Conference.

In New York, individual board members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, following their quarterly meeting of two weeks ago, were studying the confidential report of the MPPDA's special committee of educators, on the progress to date of the Hays plan to place the organized motion picture industry in the educational films field.

While nothing tangible has been set up in the matter of distribution, the MPPDA's directors heard the educators' committee report that 849 short subjects from the vaults of major distributors were found to be suitable for school use without any changes, out of a total of 1,500 subjects reviewed between May 1st and October 15th.

Meanwhile, Harry M. Warner, president, Warner Brothers; Stanton Griffis, chairman of the executive committee of Paramount Pictures, and E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, will proceed as an MPPDA distributor-membership committee to study ways and means for the industry's actual invasion of the field.

U. S. Department Making Study

In Washington, the Motion Picture Division of the United States Department of Commerce, under supervision of Nathan Golden, is progressing with a nationwide government study of both the educational and the non-theatrical fields as they relate to films.

In an effort to gather "fairly accurate figures" as to the size and scope of this particular phase of motion pictures, the Commerce Department now has questionnaires in the mail intended to reach producers, distributors, laboratories and manufacturers of film and motion picture equipment in the 16mm. and 8mm. fields.

Some idea of the varied interest of educators and others in school films and the extension of that work may be gleaned from the wide assortment of subjects taken up at last week's Southern Audio-Visual Education Conference. Principal speakers and their topics were:

"The Motion Picture—A Great Teaching Medium," by Dr. B. H. Darrow, educational director, Buffalo Evening News Radio Station; "Seeking New Educational Objectives Through the Use of Films,' 'and "Teaching Motion Picture Discrimination to Children and Youth," by Dr. Edgar Dale, director, Bureau of Educational Research, College of Education, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio; "Recent Developments in the Use of Visual Aids to Instruction," by Dr. Ellsworth Dent, educational director, Victor Division, Radio Corporation of America; "The History and Present Status of Instructional Sound Films," by Dr. H. A. Gray, Research Associate, Erpi Picture Consultants, Inc., New York; "The Educational Motion Picture Policy and Program of the United States Department of the Interior," by Fanning Hearon, director, Division of Motion Pictures, U. S. Department of the Interior, Washington, and "New Developments in Educational Motion Pictures," by Donald P. Bean, director, University of Chicago Press.

Closer Relations Sought

Dr. J. C. Wardlaw, Conference chairman and director of the University System of Georgia Division of General Extension, opened the three-day meeting with the statement that the purpose of the conference was to promote visual education in the schools and bring a closer working relation among the schools, films, radio, and related industries.

The interest in this field was evidenced by the 600 registrants, and the daily attendance of over 1,000 at the meetings, which consisted of addresses by the leading educators in the field, musical selections, demonstrations of films, and exhibits. The Atlanta Journal hour broadcast the conference from the floor of the conference room over its stations, WSB and WAGA.

Fanning Hearon, the only member of the Federal Government on the Atlanta program, also exhibited his two-reel sound film, "Price of Progress," the tragedy of the white man's destruction of America's natural resources.

Mr. Hearon, described as one of that little group of young men in government seriously concerned with "doing something" about the new business of producing documentary motion pictures, asked about the effect of this new visual education movement on the film industry, said:

"It is a healthy condition and the industry should be pleased. This new interest in a new type of film can lead only to more business in the production of films to meet the steadily increasing demand. The production units now trying to meet the demand, the government agencies and the companies doing commercial shorts haven't a chance to fill the orders when they really start coming in. And they will come in, because all over the country these visual education conferences are being held and ideas and plans are taking form.

"As one striving to make entertaining educational films to cope with the new order of things in the colleges and schools, I warmly welcome the motion picture industry to our midst as a friend of many folks working in it and as one who recognizes Hollywood and her subsidiaries as the greatest motion picture makers of all time."

Dr. Gray of Erpi Picture Consultants said he believed that "the production and distribution problems of the theatre and the school field are separate entities and should be dealt with accordingly, since the motion picture industry cannot be expected to assume the responsibility for educating the nation."

The most certain way to assure an increasing and adequate supply of educational films suitable for the school class rooms was for the schools to make the most extensive use of the material now available, said Dr. Dent of RCA.

Mr. Dent added that the teachers need have no fear that the increased use of motion pictures and other audio-visual aids will eliminate or reduce the need of their services. On the contrary, he said, proper use of these media will increase the students' interest in the subjects and will create the desire for more voluntary reading, which, in turn, will result in the asking of more questions.

One of the developments in the audio-visual field is the lack of "Type Abstence," Dr. Dent said. "In other words, a photograph has not been displaced by the glass slide. The film slide has not replaced the glass slide, the silent motion picture has not displaced the projected still picture, and the sound picture has not replaced the silent film. There seems to be a definite place for each of these aids in the educational scheme."

Director Bean of the University of Chicago Press, in his address on New Developments, declared, "It is surprising that the main obstacles to the development of the proper use of the entertainment film itself, in the schools, in the past have been school people and the motion picture industry. Opposition on the part of the industry to the widespread use of feature pictures in schools is, of course, fundamentally a desire not to jeopardize entertainment outlets in favor of less lucrative financial outlets. This accounts for their slowness in releasing feature subjects to schools in 16mm versions.

"School people themselves have been, in my judgment, the main obstacle to the proper use of the entertainment film in school work. Teachers who would otherwise strongly oppose the introduction of any extraneous material into the classroom have disrupted school work and herded several classes of children into dark, crowded rooms to see second-class entertainment programs and comedy and advertising films with almost studied stupidity, either from the entertainment or the educational point of view. Entertainment film should be used as entertainment, and the time and place of the showing arranged separately from regular school work while school films should be carefully selected and shown at the proper time in the regular classroom.

Cites Product Available

"I hear some of you object that the proper kind of entertainment material is not available in 16mm. version, and I admit that such material has been scarce. In that connection you will be interested that Films, Incorporated, has announced the addition of twenty-five full-length features to its library for school distribution, including such important films as: 'Alice in Wonderland,' 'Little America,' 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch,' 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde,' 'Peter Ibbetson,' 'So Red the Rose' and 'The Crusades.'

"If your school needs social programs the films are now available, and I don't think I need to emphasize again my feeling that it is important to keep such showings distinct from classroom work. The showing of entertainment films in the classroom should, in my judgment, be limited to films that are carefully selected from the point of view of subject matter of that particular class. Most entertainment films need to be abbreviated or edited for such classroom showings."

"There are two very significant recent developments along this line," Dr. Bean continued. "The MPPDA have recently announced access to their vaults on behalf of an Advisory Committee of Educators, headed by Mark A. May of the Institute of Human Relations at Yale."

The implication of this announcement was that after the Committee had previewed the feature material and short subjects of commercial film producers, some arrangements would be made for release of such as were found adaptable for school use under conditions that would not jeopardize their release to commercial exhibitors. Further announcements of the results of this Committee's evaluations will be watched for with considerable interest, it was said at the conference.

Paramount Series Listed

The other development which the educators called of special interest in this connection was the announcement by Paramount of a series of educational shorts edited for school work from current feature releases.

"Some of you," said Dr. Bean, "have seen the first two of these releases, 'The Spirit of the Plains,' adapted from 'The Plainsman,' and 'Seeing Salem.' 'Men and Oil,' the third release in this series, has been adapted from the current feature, 'High, Wide and Handsome.' All these films will be useful for school work. The producer, of course, hopes that they will have publicity value for the features on which they are based. If Paramount continues to consult school people and to prepare films as valuable for school work as 'Men and Oil,' I predict that they will be widely used in schools and will be sufficiently valuable as publicity to lead other producers to follow suit."

The conference closed with a resolution to make a permanent organization of the association, which was organized in August by a group of thirty southern educations, and with the drafting of a resolution for continuance and enlargement of the field of audio-visual education.

The Conference voted to petition Governor E. D. Rivers, to "ask the state of Georgia to give moral and financial support to such a motion picture program for the State as the Department of the Interior has for the nation, and that the Division of Motion Pictures of that Department be urged to assist in planning and aiding such organizations.

British Film Must Be British: Wilcox

The one and only way in which British pictures "can win a place in the elusive American market and gain international appeal is by being out and out British in tone," Herbert Wilcox, producer of "Victoria, the Great," told the British Luncheon Club in New York Monday. Mr. Wilcox, Anna Neagle, star, and Charles De Grandcourt, co-author of the screen story, were guests of the Club.

"We British producers used to imitate Hollywood in our efforts to win world-distribution for pictures," Mr. Wilcox said. "That was the wrong way and 'Victoria the Great' has proved it to me."

Mr. Wilcox said that world distribution on all pictures he will make in the next 10 years is guaranteed by the contract he has just signed with RKO Radio.

The picture opened Thursday at the Radio City Music Hall, New York. Miss Neagle and Mr. Wilcox, who attended the opening, plan to attend the premieres of the picture in Washington, D. C., and in Hollywood.

Mr. Wilcox on Thursday invited motion picture and other persons to a midnight supper in honor of Miss Neagle, at New York's Ritz-Carlton Hotel, on the occasion of her departure from New York.

The picture is in its sixth week at the Leicester Square theatre in London.

Fox Purchase of Chase Holdings Meets Setback

Long standing negotiations for purchase of the majority of the common stock in Twentieth Century-Fox now held by the Chase National Bank of New York met another setback this week in the reiterated intention of T. L. Tally and the Corbar Corporation to press their action to set aside the Fox West Coast bankruptcy on grounds of fraud.

Joseph M. Schenck, Darryl F. Zanuck, William Goetz and other interests identified with Twentieth Century-Fox have been awaiting final clarification of this situation before proceeding with their deal for the stock acquisition.

Mr. Tally and Corbar Corporation have been pressing the litigation for months. A lower court held against them on October 11th and a rehearing sought before the United States supreme court was refused.

William Neblett, attorney for the plaintiffs, in a move to have the case tried in state courts on the ground that the federal court litigation failed on a jurisdictional issue, filed suit on the same basis in Los Angeles this week. The complaint charges that Fox West Coast Theatres on February 26, 1933, conveyed to Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation valuable and profitable properties and the next day filed a petition of voluntary bankruptcy proceedings.

E. W. Hammons Says Costs Increased 32.5% in Year

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, said in New York this week that production costs for Educational short subjects had increased 32.5 per cent over last year. The added expense is attributed to labor and new salary regulations put into effect by the Screen Actors Guild.

Earlier in the season when the program was laid out, it was anticipated that the new season's product would cost approximately 20 per cent more than last year, but new conditions have been responsible for an additional 12.5 per cent, it was said.

Bush with Twentieth Century-Fox

Rodney Bush, former eastern advertising representative for Walter Wanger, last week joined the Twentieth Century-Fox advertising department, in New York. He succeeded John Thomas, who resigned to become associated with Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborn, advertising agency. Mr. Bush's first assignment for Twentieth Century-Fox will be a special campaign for "Old Chicago."

The Midwest Talent Association, in Omaha, Neb., this week elected David B. Clifford president, and Penny Pennington vice-president, succeeding Dante Picciotti and Harry Brader. Mr. Brader is returning to the Minneapolis symphony orchestra as violinist, turning over the directorship of the Omaha civic orchestra to Mr. Picciotti.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

Lucille Gleason rode out from her Hollywood home to the Republic Pictures studio the other afternoon to see how Jimmy Gleason, her husband, was getting along in his big new job of producer for Herb Yates. One half-hour passed, then another, and no Jimmy. Impatient, Mrs. Gleason toddled over to stand under the transom of her husband's office door, heard absolute quiet, stormed in—and found friend husband knitting a sock!

WAR NOTES:

Martha Raye, working for Paramount in Hollywood in "The Big Broadcast of 1938," plays the part of a jinx woman on a ship whose crew goes on strike against her. A sign in Chinese, reading "Put the Jinx Woman in the Laundry," was needed, so a Paramount sign painter had a Chinese "extra" paint the Chinese characters for him.

Fortunately for Paramount, Chinese Anna May Wong is appearing in the same picture. She saw the scene with the sign. She saw the sign. It read: "BOYCOTT JAPAN."

Vandalism at Paramount: Every item of Japanese art used to dress an art dealer's apartment setting for "Daughter of Shanghai" was found destroyed the other morning at the studio.

A group of San Franciscans has proposed to the 1939 Golden Gate Exposition management that a lease be given to them at the fair for a concession where the public, paying ten cents per person, can step up and hold $1,000,000 in cash in their hands. The group figures that few persons have seen $1,000,000 and would pay a dime to boast they had.

If we are to believe the studio press agents, there's not a single prospect for the concession in all of Hollywood.

QUICK, WATSON, THE NEEDLE

When a call comes in for a doctor who may be attending the RKO Paramount theatre in Cincinnati, Manager Joe Goetz has the screen opening enlarged, and the message projected above the picture so as not to interrupt the screening.

The other evening "The Good Earth" had just gotten to the scene where O-lan, working in the field, apprises Wang, her husband, that she is going to have a baby. At that very instant, the screen was enlarged, and directly above the scene appeared the flash: "DR. MENDELSOHN IS WANTED."

Several doctors were needed afterward to bring the audience out of its convulsions.

The newspaper and trade press far and wide recorded the settling of the Freddie Bartholomew suit against Metro. They told how the studio agreed to pay the youngster $2,000 a week for 40 weeks of film work, and $3,000 weekly for six weeks of personal appearances annually—a total of $98,000. The contract, however, really goes further than the $98,000, for Freddie signed a separate contract, personally, with Louis B. Mayer, under which he is to receive from the corporation $1 a week pocket-money to spend on his own, on anything, at any time.

It wasn't so many years ago that an attempt was made to establish New Orleans as a motion picture center. Some of the leading actors assembled for the purpose were Andy Rogers, Leatrice Joy Zeidler and "Baby LeRoy," known to his parents as W. W. Today we return to New Orleans, to find Andy Rogers fighting hard in the Marine Hospital to remain among the living. Young Wally Young has culminated a most successful career as Tulane University's best cheerleader and now aspires to follow in the footsteps of his lawyer father. And news dispatches carry word from Hollywood to New Orleans that Louis B. Mayer has signed Leatrice Joy Gilbert, 13-year-old daughter of Leatrice Joy and the late John Gilbert, to an acting contract. She will make her debut, ironically, in "Benefits Forgot."

Those in Hollywood who saw the stormy straining-at-the-leash of Miss Grace Moore, while working for Harry Cohn and Columbia Pictures, will remember how close motion pictures and the opera came to an absolute severance of relations. Things quieted down, however—with the aid of the United States Marines. And the cordiality that has existed since between the two arts has been inspiring. But it may not last long, for Paramount is about to disrupt the entente cordiale. But vigorously.

Grand opera is about to be given a new reason—this time, a real reason, to protest against Hollywood's treatment of its operatic darlings. Calling Gladys Swarthout, Metropolitan Opera star, on a hurry-trip to its studios to appear in "The Yellow Nightingale," Paramount now informs the little lady, whose training was in the most dignified traditions of the "Met," that the script calls for her to be on the receiving end of one long and heavy barrage of over-ripe tomatoes, to be hurled by a group of expert marksmen just as hard as they can heave them. John Barrymore is in the cast, too, but Paramount insists that the tomatoes are for Miss Swarthout.

Never any rest for the weary, the motion picture now is embroiled in an argument between Lily Pons and the opera, over skirts and brassieres and panties of feathers, which tickle.

The controversy started at the RKO Studios in Hollywood, when Miss Pons un-donned her operatic robes and donned three ounces of feathers to play the lead in "Hitting a New High."

Nobody complained—in fact, Miss Pons had an appreciative audience around the studio, until Pietro Cimini, the celebrated symphony orchestra maestro, left his podium in San Francisco for a visit to the studios. To his amazement, he discovered Lily, in her feathers, standing on top of a white piano and singing Polonaise from "Mignon."

Pietro Cimini fumed and stormed a denunciation. "Putting opera in tights seems unnecessary, undignified," he choked. "It's breaking faith with the opera," he charged, evidently forgetting that Mary Garden put "Salome" in less than tights.

But Miss Pons wasn't a bit ruffled. "I wasn't wearing tights," she retorted. "That was suntan powder."

PLAN TO "DE-FREEZE" FILM TITLES IS APPROVED BY MPPDA'S BOARD

30,000 Titles Already Listed in Compilation of Names of All Pictures Ever Produced in the United States

Buried in the musty files of motion picture producers are 30,000 film titles, completely forgotten by many, dimly remembered by only a few.

Relegated to obscurity after at one time attracting thousands upon thousands of persons to the nation's theatres, many of the titles now are destined to be resurrected. Again marquees and billboards may carry such titles as "American Maid," "At First Sight," "At the Mercy of Men," "Battling Jane," "Beautiful Enemies," "Beloved Traitor" and thousands of others first used years ago.

The task of restoring the titles to the light has been undertaken by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, whose board of directors this week approved a resolution directing the title registration committee to "de-freeze" the titles of produced motion pictures, effective January 1st.

Compilation of a list of the names of all pictures produced in the United States since the beginning of motion pictures has been started, and already contains more than 30,000 titles.

No Bearing on Registration System

While affecting the titles of produced pictures, the resolution has no bearing upon the present title registration system. This means, the MPPDA explained, that producers still will be given a maximum of 18 months' protection on a registered title, and if, after that time, production has not started another company may step in and register the same title. This system has been followed for the last ten years.

But, although titles of produced films are to be "de-frozen," producers will retain a measure of protection through the setting up of a reserve list. Each title of an original story will be the sole property of the registrant for a period of four years from the calendar year in which the picture is produced. After that time, the producer may place the title on his reserve list, which gives him continued sole ownership until he elects to drop the title from the list. The reserve list is limited to 250 titles for each producing company. Those titles not on reserve lists will be available to others after the four-year period.

Exceptions to Plan

The MPPDA pointed out, though, that the "de-freezing" process will not include titles of copyrighted material such as the titles of books and plays that have been adapted to the screen. Titles in this category will remain the exclusive property of the registrant.

Albert W. Howson, chairman of the title registration committee, said his group has had the plan under consideration for some time and added that he believed it would work out to the mutual benefit of all companies.

The new plan is scheduled to go into effect January 1st and in the meantime the committee will decide on details of operation.

One of the first steps to be taken will be to have each of the companies submit the titles for its reserve list. The lists, it is expected, will include the titles of each company's outstanding pictures.

Tax Figures Show Gain for August

A general revival of theatrical attendance throughout the country in August is indicated by figures released by the Bureau of Internal Revenue showing that admission tax collections in September (representing business of the preceding month) jumped to $1,722,468, a gain of something over $123,000 as compared with the August total of $1,599,242, and $52,000 above the September, 1936, revenue of $1,670,044.

For the nine months ending with September collections aggregated $14,474,812, compared with $12,859,944 in the corresponding period last year, a gain of approximately $1,600,000.

In the third New York (Broadway) district, the bureau reported, admission tax collections jumped from $393,838 to $442,546 but were nearly $75,000 under the $517,180 collected in September, 1936.

The difference between the September collections and those of both the preceding month and the corresponding month last year were shown to be entirely in box office receipts. Taxes collected at the box office in September totaled $407,698 against $350,938 in August and $489,455 in September, 1936.

The bureau also said that revenues from free or reduced rate admissions totaled $546 in September against $2,651 the preceding month; tickets sold by brokers, $2,582 against $2,651; tickets sold in excess of the box office price, $555 against $498; permanent use or lease of boxes and seats, $210 against $270; and admissions to roof gardens and cabarets, $30,954 against $36,205.

The Virginia censor board this week reported that for the first three months of the fiscal year starting July 1 the board's receipts are running $1,701 ahead of the same period a year ago. The total is $9,720. The revenue is based on a charge of $2 per 1,000 feet of original film and $1 per 1,000 feet for duplicates.

Harry Foster, an agent in England who is affiliated with the William Morris agency in New York, arrived in New York last week to offer American producers a number of stories and plays held by Gaumont-British. Mr. Foster will go to the coast after a two weeks stay in New York.

Chicagoans Face New Electric Cost

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH
in Chicago

Chicago's Loop theatres may have to spend more than $500,000 in rebuilding or installing new electrical equipment if plans of the Commenwealth Edison Company to change electrical current in the Loop from the direct to the alternating type go through.

Legal counsel has been arranged for to present the views of the theatremen and other Loop businessmen regarding the change. As all areas outside the Loop have alternating current the Edison company is endeavoring to install the same type current in the downtown district.

Roy Faskett, Balaban and Katz technical expert, said that to change the electrical equipment in the Chicago theatre alone would cost approximately $100,000. All motors would have to be changed and motor generator sets would have to be installed in the projection booth and the entire electrical switchboard back stage would need altering. Other Loop theatres involved in the change are the Palace, Oriental and State-Lake. These houses, like the Chicago, have stage shows and the electrical requirements are more pronounced than in other Loop theatres.

In fighting the plans proposed by the Edison company theatremen and others interested, question the power company's right to make the change without agreeing to share in the expense of the changes. To date the company has offered no such assistance.

The State Street Association, one of the more progressive businessmen's groups in the city, is fighting the proposed plan and judging from the large amounts involved, if the entire Loop district is affected, a bitter battle will result before the plan is accepted or dropped.

Charlie Chan at Monte Carlo

(Twentieth Century - Fox)

A Continuation

Norman Sproul, for a long time manager of the Fox theatre, Redondo Beach, Cal., said, "I'd rather play a Charlie Chan than anything." Although Redondo Beach lies in the immediate environs of Los Angeles, it is so isolated that it hasn't very much competition and consequently the theatre plays something like 600 pictures a year. Undoubtedly Mr. Sproul was eager to play the "Chans" for the simple reason that invariably they made money.

After about 15 or 16 of these pictures which feature Warner Oland (of late, he has not appeared in anything else), there isn't much can be said about the next one. If there is, and we pick at random, choosing MOTION PICTURE HERALD, Sept. 11, 1937, and turning to "What the Picture Did for Me," J. W. Noah, Liberty theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, said it when he commented "This clever Oriental has never forced us to put out the S.R.O. sign, but not once have we lost money on his pictures."

The showmanship value of an attraction could not better be established. The "Charlie Chans" do not lose money. In all Hollywood there is not a producer who would not swell up with pride until he burst could the same remark be made of his product. In all the pictures, Charlie is up against his "greatest" something or other. He always succeeds in such a way that people believe and understand him, and he succeeds in providing simply what is expected of all pictures—entertainment.

In "Charlie Chan at Monte Carlo," a resume of what happens is hardly necessary, Warner Oland will be accompanied by Keye Luke, Virginia Field, Harold Huber (fine in "Chan on Broadway"), Robert Kent, Sidney Blackmer, Kay Linaker, Edward Raquello and George Lynn. Robert Ellis and Helen Logan wrote the original, Charles Belden and Jerry Cady adapted, and Eugene Forde, who made "On Broadway" and "In London," is directing.

Thoroughbreds Don't Cry

(MGM)

A Race Track Yarn

Not much guessing should be required to understand that this will be a race track picture, in background and in production effects which will make for exciting action. Thematically, however, it is the story of a boy's regeneration.

The locales are England and America, particularly the Santa Anita race track. Many famous horses will appear.

Based on a story by J. Walter Ruben, for which Eleanore Griffin did the screen play, the picture is being directed by Alfred E. Green, who, in his off-the-screen activities, is a devoted follower of the turf. That track authenticity, as well as quality of romantic, comic and human interest content, will be all that is expected is borne out by Green's record, which includes the handling of such films as "More Than a Secretary," "Here's to Romance" and many Edward G. Robinson pictures.

A young American jockey, holding only a poor opinion of an English youth of his own age, becomes an innocent tool of a gang of track crooks, throws a race and thereby causes the death of the English lad's grandfather. When things look bad for his erstwhile enemy, the jockey, influenced by some intimate friends, comes back to win the Derby, make friends with the boy he did not like and return with him to England.

Mickey Rooney is the jockey. The English youth is English Ronald Sinclair, whom MGM has been grooming as Freddie Bartholomew's successor if necessary. C. Aubrey Smith again has one of those sympathy winning character roles which he so expertly portrays, and Judy Garland and Sophie Tucker, outstanding in "Broadway Melody," are Mickey's friends. Supporting players listed are Forrester Harvey, Elisha Cook, Jr., and Lionel Belmore.

If all goes as expected, MGM may have in this a picture that has some of the qualities which made "Captains Courageous" and "The Devil Is a Sissy" so interesting.

She's Got That Swing

(RKO Radio)

Comedy-Romance

Although much copy pertaining to character of story content and production values will be available, it appears that the names to be presented in "She's Got That Swing," which is not to be a musical, may be depended upon to carry a good share of the exploitation load.

It will be the fifth picture in which Gene Raymond and Ann Sothern have been co-starred, its predecessors having been "Hooray for Love," "Walking on Air," "Smartest Girl in Town" and "There Goes My Girl." It also marks the fifth film in which Victor Moore and Helen Broderick have been presented as featured players. Further, it will present such recognized comedians as Billy Gilbert, Parkyakarkus, last in "The Life of the Party" and "New Faces of 1937," and Solly Ward, whose work in "Flight from Glory" brought much favorable comment. Other players to be seen are William Brisbane, Jack Carson, Alan Bruce, Richard Tucker and Alec Craig.

Marriage for money is the motivating theme. A penniless society girl and a young millionaire are the central figures. The subject has been approached from a comedy standpoint. Creditors band together to finance the girl's matrimonial adventure. She does not care for the suitor they propose as a husband, but she does indulge in an on-again off-again romance with a personable lad who makes her marry him in spite of herself.

The production is based on an original story by Joseph Hoffman and Monroe Shaff. The screen play was effected by Harry Segall, credited with "There Goes My Girl" and "Super Sleuth," and Maxwell Shane, who did "Saturday's Heroes," "This Way, Please" and "You Can't Beat Love." It is being produced by Albert Lewis, maker of "The Gilded Lily" and "Meet the Missus," among many others, and direction is in the hands of Joseph Santley, who has done four more productions for RKO-Radio.

Release date: To be determined.

Penrod and His Twin Brother

(Warner Brothers)

Comedy and Melodrama

Although suggested by Booth Tarkington's characters, the original story used here was prepared by William Jacobs and Hugh Cummings. In a great many ways it is a followup on "Penrod and Sam." Not only will it have Billy and Bobby Mauch, who were in that picture in addition to being featured in "Anthony Adverse" and "The Prince and the Pauper," but it also will present "Rodney Butts," "Verman" and all the others of the Tarkington personnel.

Undoubtedly the production is being aimed at juvenile audiences although it is expected to have adult appeal as well.

"Rodney" gets "Penrod" and his dog into trouble. But "Rodney" is kidnaped by gangsters. Almost simultaneously "Penrod's" gang of Junior G-men discover another boy and dog who are the "spit'n' image" of "Penrod" and his pet. They go to work to find "Rodney," and discover that the other boy and his dog were responsible for getting "Penrod" into trouble. Carrier pigeons and the dogs play a great part in finding the boy and rounding up the kidnapers.

Grown-ups to be seen in support of the youngsters include Spring Byington, a fixture in the "Jones Family" series of Twentieth Century-Fox, Frank Craven, Charles Halton, Donald Hulbert, Max Wagner and Eddie Collins. The younger supporting contingent lists Jackie Morrow, Bennie Bartlett, Billy Wolfstone, Jerry Madden, John Perrone, Billy Lechner, Philip Hurlic and Ernie Wechbough.

The production is being directed by William McGann, who did "Penrod and Sam" and the current "Alcatraz Island."

Swing Your Lady

(Warner Brothers)

Comedy

Lest anyone be mistaken let it be known that this is to be a wrestling picture. It is to be a comedy wrestling picture and no more an expose of the art of bone bending than a musical picture as the title might lead one to suspect.

It may be that it will be a rather ribald comedy, as it seems that for a great portion of its way a barnstorming "world's champion" will wrestle a feminine blacksmith, but not in the ring. His wrestling with the lady will be confined to trying to convince her that he is in love with her. The actual wrestling will feature Nat Pendleton, who doesn't hold the present crop of wrestlers in any too great esteem, and a hulking bearded giant yclept Daniel Boone Savage, who goes around Los Angeles clad in overalls and khaki shirt, carrying a lantern no matter how bright the day, and accompanied by a mangy hound dog.

Pendleton's promoter is Humphrey Bogart, a half way comic in "Stand-In" and a thorough going menace in "Dead End." His trainer is Frank McHugh, who will have Allen Jenkins as his assistant. The feminine blacksmith is Louise Fazenda. The presence of these players in the film establishing the comedy keynote, that

Distributors Lose In Appeal from Argentina Ruling

by N. BRUSKI
in Buenos Aires

The criminal court of appeal has upheld the lower court decision of Judge Artemio Moreno committing for trial the members of the Argentine Film Distributors Association for violation of the anti-trust laws of the country.

The court also had imposed a bond of 15,000 pesos on the property of each member. Practically all the large American companies are members of the Argentine organization.

As a result of the decision, one of Argentina's leading evening newspapers, La Prensa, published an editorial severely criticizing members of the association.

"Notwithstanding that the Federal Constitution forbids the restraint of trade within the jurisdiction of the Republic, represses trusts, etc.," the paper said, " a monopoly had been controlling the exhibition of motion pictures, fixing prices and meddling in matters pertaining to the administration of the motion picture houses. . . .

"In view of the evidence brought against the motion picture monopoly in the case in question, it is imperative that the legal authorities should intervene, imposing the fullest penalities provided.

"The damage done by this monopoly is obvious and can be summed up in the admission prices the theatre-goers have been paying for several years, in the lack of freedom exhibitors have for preparing their programs and the subjection of the owners of theatres to conditions which in many a case have led them to bankruptcy."

So far in the proceedings, the defendants have not been permitted to present evidence but they will be entitled to when the case comes before the sentence judge.

There is no doubt that at this stage the association can prove to the satisfaction of the judges that there is no ground for the charges and that without the present organization and method of exploiting pictures the motion picture business cannot survive.

The association has published statements in the leading newspapers explaining how it operates so that the good faith of the people is not marred by news spread by those who condemn the existence of the organization.

The directorate of the association, upon whom fines probably will be levied, includes: Guy P. Morgan, United Artists; Harry Novak, Warners; Sigfried Bauer, M-G-M; John Nathan, Paramount; Charles Morgen, Columbia; Monroe Eisen, Universal; Adolph Wilson, Terra; Charles Glucksmann, Radio Lux, and Julius Joly of Joly Company.

The public prosecutor has asked sentences of 15 months' imprisonment or fines of 20,000 pesos each against the 18 defendants.

quality will be accentuated by the presentation of the Wheeler Brothers and Elvira, long featured in vaudeville and musical comedy. Others of more or less prominence in the production are Eddie Acuff, Leon Weaver, Olin Howland, Joan Howard, the juveniles Tommy Bupp, Sunny Bupp and Sue Moore, and Sammy White, who is included for a specialty.

Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson concocted the original story which Joseph Schrank and Maurice Leo adapted. Ray Enright, a comedy specialist director, is handling the piece and Sam Bischoff is the producer.

Release date: Tentatively Dec. 12, 1937.

Daughter of Shanghai

(Paramount)

Melodramatic Adventure

Despite the topical significance the appellation might imply, this production will have nothing to do with or be in any way related to the warfare now being waged about Shanghai. In character it is a melodramatic adventure story based on the alien smuggling racket and the manner in which a Chinese girl, in alliance with a Chinese attache of the Immigration Service, breaks up the ring. Naturally a romantic thread—few producers nowadays dare to make a picture which does not contain some semblance of a love story—is woven into the melodrama.

Inasmuch as writing and adapting credits are yet to be decided upon, it is not, at the moment, possible to identify those who had a hand in creating the story. Still its theme is quite familiar. The director, Robert Florey, is a specialist in handling melodramatic material. His latest picture is the comedy "Mountain Music," but his recent career lists such works as "King of Gamblers," "Outcast," "Hollywood Boulevard" and "Preview Murder Mystery."

Undoubtedly the showmanship asset upon which exhibitors are most likely to concentrate is the fact that "Daughter of Shanghai" will mark the return of Anna May Wong to the American screen. She and Philip Ahn are the leads. In other cast assignments are such familiar names as Charles Bickford, Larry Crabbe, Cecil Cunningham, J. Carroll Naish, Evelyn Brent, Anthony Quinn, John Patterson, Arthur Hohl and Mae Bush. In addition several Chinese actors appear in minor character parts.

All the action takes place in America, the locations being San Francisco, New York, a West Indies Island and a ship bound for the Pacific Coast.

Release date: January 21, 1938.

March of Time On NBC Network

The March of Time Radio program has been transferred from the Columbia Broadcasting System to the blue network of the National Broadcasting Company. The program is broadcast through 40 stations.

The sole reason for the change, the company announced, was to obtain a better spot. The new time is 8:30 to 9 P.M., Eastern Standard Time, whereas over the CBS stations the program was heard from 10:30 to 11 P.M.

Guild Honors Young

The Screen Actors Guild last week in Hollywood voted that the best acting job for the month of September was done by Roland Young in "Topper." Donald Meek was adjudged the best supporting actor for his work in "Toast of New York."

Librarian Tells How Film Tieups Aid Book Reading

Tieups which exhibitors may effect with public libraries for exploitation of motion pictures are cited by Gretchen J. Garrison, of the circulation department of the New York Public Library, in an article published in the October issue of the National Board of Review Magazine.

In the story, entitled "The Library and the Films," Miss Garrison reports: "Librarians have watched with interest the filming of well-known books. In general, providing there is a definite connection, they are glad to call attention to worthwhile pictures by means of stills, scrapbooks of reviews, special 'Books and Films' exhibit corners, and occasionally, the showing of local theatre programs."

As to whether motion pictures decrease the reading of books, Miss Garrison comments: "No matter what the arguments on either side may be, there is always a noticeable demand for books from which films have been made, whenever such pictures are released.

"However, it is not always the story of the picture that is wanted. Readers are interested in film production and history, in motion picture photography, and in books about historical periods which have been the scenes of various films."

Children's reading, Miss Garrison wrote, is influenced by motion pictures and she supports the statement by quoting other persons.

"Miss Anne Carroll Moore, superintendent of work with children, does not believe that motion pictures have taken the place of reading for children," the article continues. 'They are, rather, a stimulus to reading,' she says . . .

"Miss Mabel Williams, superintendent of work with schools, says that the influence of films on reading is most noticeable among the students at vocation and industrial high schools. These young people are non-readers ordinarily, though their interest in motion pictures can be led to an interest in books from which films have been made. Through these films, they have become conscious of books and reading as a pleasurable experience."

Conquest

(MGM)

Historical Romance

More than five months of production time, and talent of every description, creative, artistic, technical and mechanical, were lavished upon "Conquest." Every effort was exerted in the intent that "Conquest" should be a big picture, that it should be screen merchandise of entertainment value that would return profits in proportion to the extraordinary investment made.

This production of the story of Maria Walewska and Napoleon has a history of its own. Greta Garbo read the Waclaw Gasiorowski novel and recommended it to the late Irving Thalberg as a picture for her. Subsequently the making of the story was assigned to Bernard H. Hyman.

Intensive exploratory and research work began early in 1936 and actual shooting commenced in February, 1937.

Hundreds of thousands of feet of film were photographed and several secret previews were held prior to its being shown to press audiences last Friday in the Four Star theatre, Los Angeles, and on Monday and Tuesday in New York.

"Conquest" will open at the Capitol theatre in New York on November 4th, following the two-week holdover showing of MGM's "Double Wedding." This is a deviation from the company's usual procedure of opening its outstanding pictures at the Astor theatre on a two-a-day, reserved seat basis.

In their customarily uninformed manner, Hollywood commentators explained the booking into the Capitol as a device to protect the Garbo prestige because, in the reviewers' judgment, Charles Boyer's performance was dominant. The commentators did not carry out their syllogism to the conclusion decreed by logic that the public would come to its decision on that and any other matters whatever the theatre chosen for the premiere.

MGM's current road show at the Astor, "The Firefly," closes at that theatre on Sunday evening, October 31st, under present plans, but it may continue until after New York's city election day, Tuesday.

United Artists has a lease on the Astor for the showing of "Hurricane," starting November 9th. At the same time it was pointed out that several other Broadway houses would be available were "Conquest" to be roadshown.

Another explanation advanced for the opening at the Capitol was that theatres need higher bracket pictures and to roadshow "Conquest" would tie up the production from general exhibition for two or three months. That would be sacrificing the prestige and grosses of roadshowing to satisfy requests from the field.

Eleven months were spent in preparation of the production, the home office said. Charles Whitaker, technical expert, was sent to Europe for research work upon which the construction of settings was based. The palace and ballroom of Prince Joseph Poniatowski, Polish patriot, in Warsaw, was "built to scale." Another massive set was a reproduction of Castle Finckenstein in Prussia where Napoleon and Marie Walewska lived.

Other sequences given special attention include the Retreat from Moscow, Elba, a ballroom sequence, and military reviews, in which 2,000 players were employed.

Ninety-one sets were constructed, ranging from a tiny room to a palace.

Other factors in the cost of the production were the remaking of several important sequences and the several delays before the return of Miss Garbo from a vacation in Sweden, the while an unusually large production and player staff drew full salaries.

Essentially, "Conquest" is behind-the-scenes romantic history. But, directly, it is a love story. Although there are more than 30 principal speaking parts, and thousands of extras, Greta Garbo and Charles Boyer dominate the production, and Boyer so dominates Miss Garbo that his performance is sure to establish him as a candidate for any or all of the year's "best actor" awards.

While the background of their love story is panoramic, its detailing is intimate. Poland and its liberation from the rule of the Czars was Marie Welewska's great passion. Conquest, power and the establishment of dynasties was Napoleon's. They met, this man and woman, and, as men and women do, they fell in love. That she might be near the "man of destiny," that her dream of Polish freedom might be realized, she parted from her husband, and Napoleon, who was not above gracefully accepting a ribbing from Countess Pelagia, found comfort in the companionship. Through the turmoil of war (always suggested by allusion) into the intrigue of Austrian, Polish and French courts, Marie followed Napoleon. Following the impressively reproduced retreat from Moscow, she rejoined Napoleon in Elba, where, for the first time, he saw the child of their love. She aided him in making his escape to the hundred days that culminated at Waterloo. With little Alexander and Laetitia, Napoleon's mother, she looked through a window as a British warship sailed for St. Helena, carrying the Emperor to exile and obscurity.

Under the direction of Clarence Brown this love story, which Helen Jerome dramatized, and Samuel Hoffenstein, Salka Viertel and S. N. Behrman adapted from the Behrman adapted from the Gasiorowski novel, comes up on the screen as an appealing thing. Impressive as is the production detail, it is secondary in importance when considered in relation to the force and charm of the motivation. As that story is told, with Herbert Stothart's musical score aiding in establishment and embellishment of the various moods, interest concentrates primarily on Boyer's work, the efforts which Miss Garbo makes to match his stride, and the contributions of Reginald Owen, Henry Stephenson, Dame May Whitty, Alan Marshal, Leif Erickson, Maria Ouspenskaya, Claude Gillingwater and C. Henry Gordon.

Previewed as noted. No great amount of speculation is required to understand why the film took so long to make. Such an extraordinary venture does not permit use of ordinary methods in its exploitation. To be talked about in ways that should not fail to arouse great specialized and popular interest are a regiment of famous names, a wealth of picturesque production technique of superior quality, and a love story of appeal.—GUS MCCARTHY.

Borrowing Trouble

(20th Century-Fox)

The Jones Family

Those who have had the experience of playing them know the amusement and exploitation value of the Jones Family series. "Borrowing Trouble," the latest edition, presents the familiar roster of players and introduces an interesting juvenile, Marvin Stephens. This episode not only retains all the elements of the predecessors but presents a somewhat different situation.

This time the tranquillity of the Jones family is disturbed when "Roger," under the influence of "Herbert Thompson," makes a chum of "Tommy McGuire," who only father "John" thinks is a bad boy. True, the disadvantages of improper environment have made him a problem child. Nevertheless association with "Roger" begins to work wonders.

Eventually, while trying to do the right thing, "Tommy's" older brother, "Lester," and his pals, "Joe" and "Charlie," who live on the seamy side, create a situation that makes it look as though "Tommy" helped rob "Mr. Jones'" drug store. With the assistance of "Chief Kelly" and "Judge Walters," "Mr. Jones," who is now sympathetic toward the boy, ascertains the true state of affairs. In an exciting chase sequence, the thieves are trapped.

ly interested. A peculiar circumstance surrounds the previewing of some of the 20th Century-Fox pictures. When a big picture is shown in a deluxe house, it is sometimes necessary to fight one's way through a horde of executives, directors, writers, publicity men, as well as a varied assortment of hangers-on. No one had to fight his way into this one. Sol Wurtzel and Max Golden were the only executives noticed in the lobby. But the process was reversed on completion of the showing. It was necessary to fight one's way out of the theatre through a mob of patrons who just seemed to want to stand around and talk. Yet there was no great array of stars present to be gawked at. —G. Look Out, Mr. Moto

(Twentieth Century - Fox)

Blood Curdler

It is rather manifestly the purpose of this production to touch off the emotional fireworks customarily ignited by the serial, or chapter play. The names for the marquee are Peter Lorre, Rochelle Hudson and Robert Kent. And there is something, of course, in the popularity of the Mr. Moto character. Beyond a listing of these, the wholly safe campaign will consist of emphatic understatement.

The place is deep Africa. "Mr. Moto" is discovered as an archeologist poking about amid temple ruins. "Victoria Mason" deserts her round-the-world plane and comes down by parachute to do unexplained things. Here, too, by coincidence, is found "Marty Weston," a free lance cinematographer. The ruins turn out to be in the domain of a native chief who seems to have been exposed to a white man's education that didn't take. Wherefore much excitement revolves around feats of magic, poisoned darts, homing pigeons, underground passages, etc., until it develops that "Mr. Moto" and "Miss Mason" are secret agents sent to put down a native revolution, which they do, the doing involving a number of violent deaths and much merry machine gunning.

The story is by Willis Cooper and Norman Foster, the director, from the character by J. P. Marquand, and the screen play is by Lou Breslow and John Patrick. It is a Sol M. Wurtzel production.

The Missing Witness

(Warner Bros. - FN)

Crime Melodrama

"Missing Witness" is based, apparently, on the now famous Dewey investigations of New York's rackets, produced by Warners' Bryan Foy as another of the timely pictures for which Foy's production department has become noted. It parallels in some instances the actual story of the racket investigations of Mr. Dewey, outside of the Luciano affair, which apparently served as basis for an earlier production of the same studios, "Marked Woman."

For marquee use, "Missing Witness" has John Litel, Dick Purcell, Jean Dale and Marsha Ralston, plus several veteran character actors.

The original screenplay by Kenneth Gamet and Don Ryan takes the audience away from formula, with William Clemens, director, making added novel gestures in his contributions.

When a restaurant proprietor repudiates his identification of the racketeers who wrecked his cafe, the city's crime ring is exposed and "Inspector Lane" is appointed to bring the leaders to justice. Hiss assistant is "Bull Regan." "Mary Jennings," secretary to a stock broker, "Ward Sturgis," suspects he is the head of the ring, and sees "Lane" and "Regan." "Sturgis" disappears, a murder is committed, and the body is thought to be that of "Sturgis." However, "Sturgis" is captured, made to confess by a ruse, leaving the way open for the romance of "Regan" and "Miss Jennings."

Previewed at the Warner theatre, Huntington Park, Cal., where a capacity audience, uninfluenced by studio claque, thoroughly enjoyed the production, while awaiting a scheduled drawing for an automobile.—VANCE KING.

Federal Bullets

(Monogram)

Action Play

Accent is on action in this latest pictorial elaboration of J. Edgar Hoover's Bureau of Investigation. The routine G-Man plot is treated to a new twist. The chief villainy is perpetrated by a nice, homey, grey haired old woman who uses her mask of sweetness and light to conceal her underworld activities.

Milburn Stone has the chief G-Man role, his first leading assignment, a result of his work in "Thirteenth Man" and "Atlantic Flight."

Terry Walker, a former song and dance girl and recently seen in "23½ Hours Leave" and "Mountain Music," is given the task of supplying the film's few moments of romance, but has no opportunity to manifest her musical talent.

In the character of the arch fiend, Mrs. Crippen, Zeffie Tilbury takes the overdrawn role in the full stride of a seasoned trouper. The supporting cast numbers Matty Fain, Selmer Jackson, William Harrigan, Warner Richmond, Betty Compson and Helen MacKellar. The versatile Karl Brown exhibited his talents by scripting and directing the piece.

"Tommy" is the Federal agent assigned to investigate the humanitarian work of "Mrs. Crippen," who is suspected of using her charitable enterprises as a smoke screen for underworld activity. By working the old ruse of pretending to be a gangster, the sleuth works his way into her organization. At the moment, the pet bit of nefarious business is to "spring" the murderer, "Barber John." Engineering the convict's escape as he is being taken to the death house, the "Crippen" tactics precipitate a storm of action and gun play. "Tommy's" identity is uncovered, but the forces of law and order come to his aid. He resumes his romance with Miss Walker while "Mrs. Crippen" is left to drop a tear over the slain "Barber John," who is revealed as her son. This sudden revelation of the harpy's maternity will stun if not confuse the audience. Many may think that the old girl is pulling another of her nasty tricks.

The Ruler

(American Tobis)

German Drama

Gerhart Hauptmann's play, "Before Sunset," has been translated to screen form by the German company Tobis under the title of "The Ruler," yet "Matthias Clausen," as played by Emil Jannings, Brooklyn born character actor, is no monarch, dictator or government head, rather a harassed father and rugged industrialist.

As in his past successes, notably "Variety," "The Last Laugh" and "The Way of All Flesh," the work of Jannings dominates the production, even if the years have aged him and rounded him a bit.

With the death of his wife, "Clausen" finds scant comfort in the clinging affections of his children or in the hectic direction of his iron works. It is only with the hiring of a new, and pretty, secretary that the aging man feels his life has any meaning. But when he proposes to bring into the house a stepmother, the selfish children rebel and an attempt is made to have the parent declared incompetent. The scheme is thwarted when "Clausen" disinherits them, marries the stenographer and bequeaths "his industrial empire to the New State, his fittest successor."

Propaganda colors the production when "Clausen," in recommending further industrial experimentation, pleads the cause of nationalistic self-sufficiency, and in dictating his final will, which reads more like a political speech than a disposition of property.

Primarily set for German speaking audiences, a running compilation of English titles interprets the action adequately.

In the Far East

(Amkino)

Soviet Melodrama

Purporting to be an expose of the workings of Trotzkyite sabotage and Nipponese imperialism to undermine the progress of Red culture in the Far East, this jumbled account makes one wonder if some traitorous Muscovite comrades did not have a part in making the production. In construction, acting and photography the picture appears to be a rush order job intended to capitalize on the timeliness of the current undeclared state of war in the Orient.

The story is in two parts. Chiefly concerned with trying to demonstrate that the Soviet civilization brings blessings of progress to the backward and downtrodden districts of the Siberian wilderness, the film makes an occasional side excursion to picture the efforts of Chinese partisans in Manchukuo to be freed of Japanese control. The main portion of the plot may be described as a melodrama in which the "good comrades" beat the "bad comrades" by blasting a road through a mountainside. The Trotzkyite espionage is soundly defeated.

A set of weighty and incoherent English titles does not clarify the exposition of the story any too well.

Tomi

(Danubia)

Drama

In announcing the premiere of "Tomi" in New York, Danubia Pictures, distributing the picture in this country, described the child star Gizi Pecsy, in the title role, as the Shirley Temple of Hungary, because of Gizi's achievement in "Edes Mostoha."

In "Tomi" the eight-year-old portrays a boy, and realistically so, but while the child has talent, her performance leaves one unmoved, for it is emotionally on the dreary side, unrelieved from a sense of tension, even though a sub-title, "The Frozen Child," might explain that away as a demand of the script.

In direct contrast is the performance of Klari Adam, five-year-old girl. With expressive face, Klari Adam speaks what undoubtedly are the best lines in the picture, for while there are no English superimposed titles, the audience's laughter at everything she said indicated their complete approval. Young Miss Adam, who played Sutyi, the little gypsy girl, departed abruptly from the screen near the middle of the picture, as did the laughter of the audience.

The story is modern and is laid in a Hungarian village. "Tommy" and his mother have a hard time of it—"Tommy's" father died in an accident in America. The mother works hard and long, and dies of a weakened heart. "Tommy" goes to live with pompous relatives, who, with the exception of the daughter, constantly berate him.

"Tommy" spoils a plan to marry the daughter off to a rich neighbor. Then he runs away and falls asleep on his mother's grave. With the snow falling, the child dreams of meeting mother and father in heaven.

Meanwhile it has become known that "Tommy's" father won a large money prize in an architects' contest in America and the money now belongs to "Tommy." Found by a searching party, he sails to America with the daughter and her love.

Reviewed at the Modern Playhouse, New York, upper east side theatre in the Slavic district. The only audience response was during the appearances of Klari Adam.—PAUL C. MOONEY, JR.

Living on Love

(RKO Radio)

Comedy

This production is essentially a comedy of situation, and the basic one lends itself to catchline copy such as many showmen may elect to employ in support of name billing. The action transpires in and out of a cheap rooming house, and is concerned principally with the love affair which develops between a young man and a girl who, without meeting each other as themselves until the end of the picture, occupy the same rented room, she sleeping nights and he days. The comedy is developed along altogether clean lines and without resort to any of the questionable humor such a foundation might suggest.

"Eli," proprietor of the rooming house, reduces his losses from non-paying roomers by persuading "Mary" to use "Gary's" room when he is away at his night work. He is an artist and she an electric razor saleswoman. They meet outside under fictitious names and fall in love. Meanwhile they have been waging violent roommate warfare by means of vitriolic notes and vindictive pranks. Ultimately a fellow roomer, interrupting a lovers' quarrel to take "Mary's" side, precipitates disclosure of their identities to each other. Acrobats and others figure in a somewhat slapstick happy ending.

Franklyn Pangborn, Tom Kennedy and Solly Ward add importantly to the comic content of the screen play by Franklin Coen, based on John Wells' novel. James Dunne delivers his staple juvenile portrayal, and Whitney Bourne is adequate opposite. Maury Cohen, producer, and Lew Landers, director, kept the production free of comparison with the not dissimilarly placed "Stage Door."

Previewed at the Hill Street Theatre, Los Angeles, where it evoked little appreciable response, possibly because programed in an embarrassing position relative to the same company's extremely effective "Stage Door."—W. R. W.

Different

Ideally suited for inclusion on the same bill with "The Good Earth" is this miniature feature showing further unique revelations of the Oriental character. The locality of the title is the setting for a native Chinese play which is produced yearly at festival time and religiously attended by the peasant folk. The quaint playlet, acting and audience are carefully reproduced and intelligently explained. The distinct nature of the oddity should prove interesting screen material for the Occidental eye.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Mechanical Handy Man

(Universal)

Amusing

Oswald this time is an ingenuous inventor of a mechanical handy man equipped to do almost any bit of farm work. Aided by his willing confederate, the Dumb Cluck, Oswald attempts to sell the robot to a prospective customer and tries to demonstrate the milking ability of the machine. Old Bessie is selected as a subject but proves recalcitrant. The device runs riot, with much dashing hither and about. Finally, Oswald is forced to smash the troublesome thing. The whole affair has its moments of amusing byplay.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Miss Lonely Hearts

(Educational)

Song and Comedy

A meeting of a "lonely hearts" club gives the girl members an opportunity to display their talent in song, dance and comedy. There has been an air of frigidity, what with the males gathered in one group and the females unnoticed and unattended. The girls take matters into their own hands and soon a variety show is in progress. The boys quickly defrost. Among the players are Harriet Hutchins, Aileen O'Connor, Anita Jacobi and The Michael Sisters. Music is given by Andy Anderson and his orchestra.—Running time, 10½ minutes.

Show For Sale

(Universal)

Fair

An impresario with more confidence than conscience attempts to sell a floor show to a hotel. The talent to be offered is paraded out for inspection. The hotel management seems to be of a gullible disposition, for the promotional line of talk, together with entertainment run off, wins a complete bill of sale. However, the material offered is of medium grade and consists of a collection of such perennial vaudeville turns as adagio dancers, a roller skating team and Negro tap dancers. Somehow the acts are reminiscent of similar and better routines.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Smart Way

Comedy

Willie Howard, comedian and impersonator of a professor of French, is in his second subject for Educational a disgruntled husband who seeks in the manner of the Borgias a future as a widower. Howard's lawyer is for doing it the "smart way." This consists in lavishing attention and bringing to a fruitful denouement the slightest whim of the unknowing wife, so that from too much night clubbing and rich food she will expire without a hand being laid upon her. But when the allotted time is up Howard and the lawyer are practically dead on their feet while Howard's wife is still raring to go. Louis Sorin, Charles McClelland, Eddie Hall, Aileen Cook, Ed Garvie and Marie Hartman appear in the subject.—Running time, 17½ minutes.

FILM LEADERS ANSWER FEDERAL BAR EXECUTIVE ON "DIGNIFYING" INDUSTRY

Both Blame and Defend Film Business Itself as B. A. Grossman Decries Prevalent Strikes and Spectacular Lawsuits

Letters of comment on a recent article in MOTION PICTURE HERALD formed the basis of a supplementary report filed last Thursday night with the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, by Bernard A. Grossman, New York attorney and chairman of the organization's committee on theatrical law.

In his original report to the association (discussed in the HERALD, issue of October 2nd), Mr. Grossman had proposed the launching of a movement to cloak the motion picture industry in dignity. In the latest report, he expanded on this theme by denouncing "organized reprisals and strikes and spectacular lawsuits in the film industry."

"They can result only in burdensome legislation, burdensome regulations and general mistrust in banking and financial fields," the attorney said.

Prominent among those commenting on the movement in letters to Mr. Grossman were Edwin C. Mills, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers; William G. Van Schmus, managing director of Radio City Music Hall in New York; Henderson M. Richey, general manager of Allied Theatres of Michigan; William H. Pine, general manager of Allied Theatres of Michigan; William H. Pine, executive aide to Cecil B. DeMille; Walter Vincent, vice-president of the Wilmer and Vincent circuit of theatres; Milton C. Weisman, receiver of Fox Theatres Corporation, New York; and Morris Loewenstein, national secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Blames and Defends Industry

In general, all agreed dignity has a definite place in the industry. Mr. Mills wrote:

"I think there is no question but that the gist of your comment as reported in the article is based upon completely sound premises. And also, that there is no question but that the motion picture industry is responsible for the lack of respect with which the average informed mind thinks generally of motion picture executives.

"However, I'm not prepared to go all the way. The industry has produced some very sound men—clear thinking, honest dealing, upright and righteous in their personal and business characters.

"In the very nature of things there have been some 'sharpshooters,' and because the business is one charged with romantic and dramatic interest, the bright glare of publicity is always upon it, and the idiosyncrasies and peculiarities of a few are emphasized somewhat to the detriment, from the standpoint of public respect, of the many who are sincere, hard-working, earnest and capable men.

Dealing in Imponderables

"The public should not, and has no right to, expect the same formulae of either financing, management or practice from an industry which deals in such imponderables as artistic temperament, dramatic construction and other such elements incident to the production of photoplays. . . .

"The industry must move fast if production schedules are to be maintained. All sorts of weird and grotesque mistakes are made, and these are lampooned in play . . . and made the subject of timely gibes by columnists and others who make their living poking fun at others. . . .

"The motion picture industry is no exception to the rule where a large industry is concerned, that local legislatures, often dominated by demagogues, seek to harass by regulation and taxation its operation. . . .

In conclusion Mr. Mills voiced an opinion about bankers by stating they "demonstrated a few years ago that they weren't so terribly able, even if they were enormously dignified."

Following the Crowd

Excerpts from other letters received by Mr. Grossman follow:

WALTER VINCENT: "I agree that more dignified advertising is in order. I do not lose sight of the fact that, after all, the theatre is more or less of a circus, and do not forget this, that the public is constantly informed as to box office results on every picture long before it reaches the theatre-going public, ladled out to them by the socalled fan magazines, and, strangely enough, the motion picture theatre clientele follows the crowd and pays but little attention to the intelligent critic."

MILTON WEISMAN: "I wholeheartedly agree with Mr. Grossman's conclusions."

Urges Careful Planning

HARRY E. HUFFMAN, president of the Rocky Mountain Theatres Association: "It is a sorry picture to see a supposed industrial leader publicize himself by capitalizing on his grammatical errors. No addage is truer than 'familiarity breeds contempt.'

"Every thought and action, every bit of advertising or exploitation should be carefully planned—should be so comparable as to demand and receive as much respect and dignified recognition, as the highest type banking institution, corporation or any other big business."

PIERRE ARNAUD, president of Conquest Pictures Company: "You are absolutely correct. More observation of this sort with more comments in the press will help the industry. . . . More power to you and by all means keep it up. . . . The article is creating a lot of good talk around. . . . It is food for thought."

H. M. RICHEY: "The subject is one which deserves serious thought. . . . You have arrived at a most logical conclusion."

"Big-Shot" Bragging

MORRIS LOEWENSTEIN, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America: "I am heartily in accord with your campaign for more dignity in motion picture industry matters. Many leaders are careless in the respect for their own endeavors. Their action reflects discredit and loss of respect for this fine business. Too much of the wrong kind of publicity from studios to theatres, too much big-shot bragging and too much intimate disclosure of what should be carefully guarded facts about salaries and intakes, are responsible for legal and legislative repercussions."

HERSCHEL STUART, treasurer of Monogram Pictures: "It certainly stands for good business and good logic."

WILLIAM G. VAN SCHMUS: "We (the exhibitors) try to do everything we can to glorify pictures . . . we respect the intelligence and sincere effort that has gone behind the making of them . . . we do not run any pictures which ridicule the industry as a whole or its methods, or that make it a public spectacle. The industry is intelligent enough to correct it."

Sheep and Goats

Mr. Pine: "It must not be overlooked that color and even eccentricity, in its time, has helped build personalities; but an astute editorial mind should be used in separating what is harmful from what may be useful. The color of the man can be stressed to help him in his career, but the emphasis on eccentricity, as it has been handled in the industry, accents the shortcomings of motion picture producers and executives, and it has outlived its usefulness. In fact, it is even debatable whether it ever was very useful. In any event, it is high time that antidotes were devised for the practice of ridiculing producers, or others connected with the motion picture industry. It is time, instead, that those they have helped, those who work for them, those who work because of them, indeed the world at large, started giving them their due.

"In any industry, other than the picture business, a man's humble beginnings are used to glorify him. In the motion picture industry, too often they are used to ridicule him. This situation has long needed reform by means of intelligent and sustained publicity. Despite the fact that the motion picture industry employs the best publicity minds in the world this has not been done. Perhaps Mr. Grossman's movement will be the impetus to get the ball rolling.

Country "Publicity Mad"

DR. JOSEPH BREWER, president of Olivet College, Olivet, Mich.: "There is no way of judging how much film executives have laid themselves open to by this sort of publicity. It seems to me that the country has gone publicity mad. It doesn't seem to make any difference what it is, so long as it gets into print. I am delighted you are taking this line . . . it may help to make the movie executives take themselves a little more seriously in a dignified way, and if it accomplishes that, you will have achieved a splendid and constructive piece of work."

EDWARD SARGENT BROWN, writer: "I am tempted to exclaim 'Hooray!' Let me congratulate you upon your fine exposition of the subject and offer my sincere hope that your efforts in this direction will be productive of constantly cumulative results. The goofy part of the motion picture business must be refined or eliminated. Other great industries engage public relations counsel to establish respect and admiration for the character and ability behind the product. That is one of the necessities of the motion picture business, and I honestly believe that the newspapers will welcome the change even though it would give them less gags for their gossip columns."

COTTON IS AWARDED IN ALABAMA THEATRE

D. B. Dixon, manager of the Princess theatre at Gadsden, Alabama, believes in boosting home grown products.

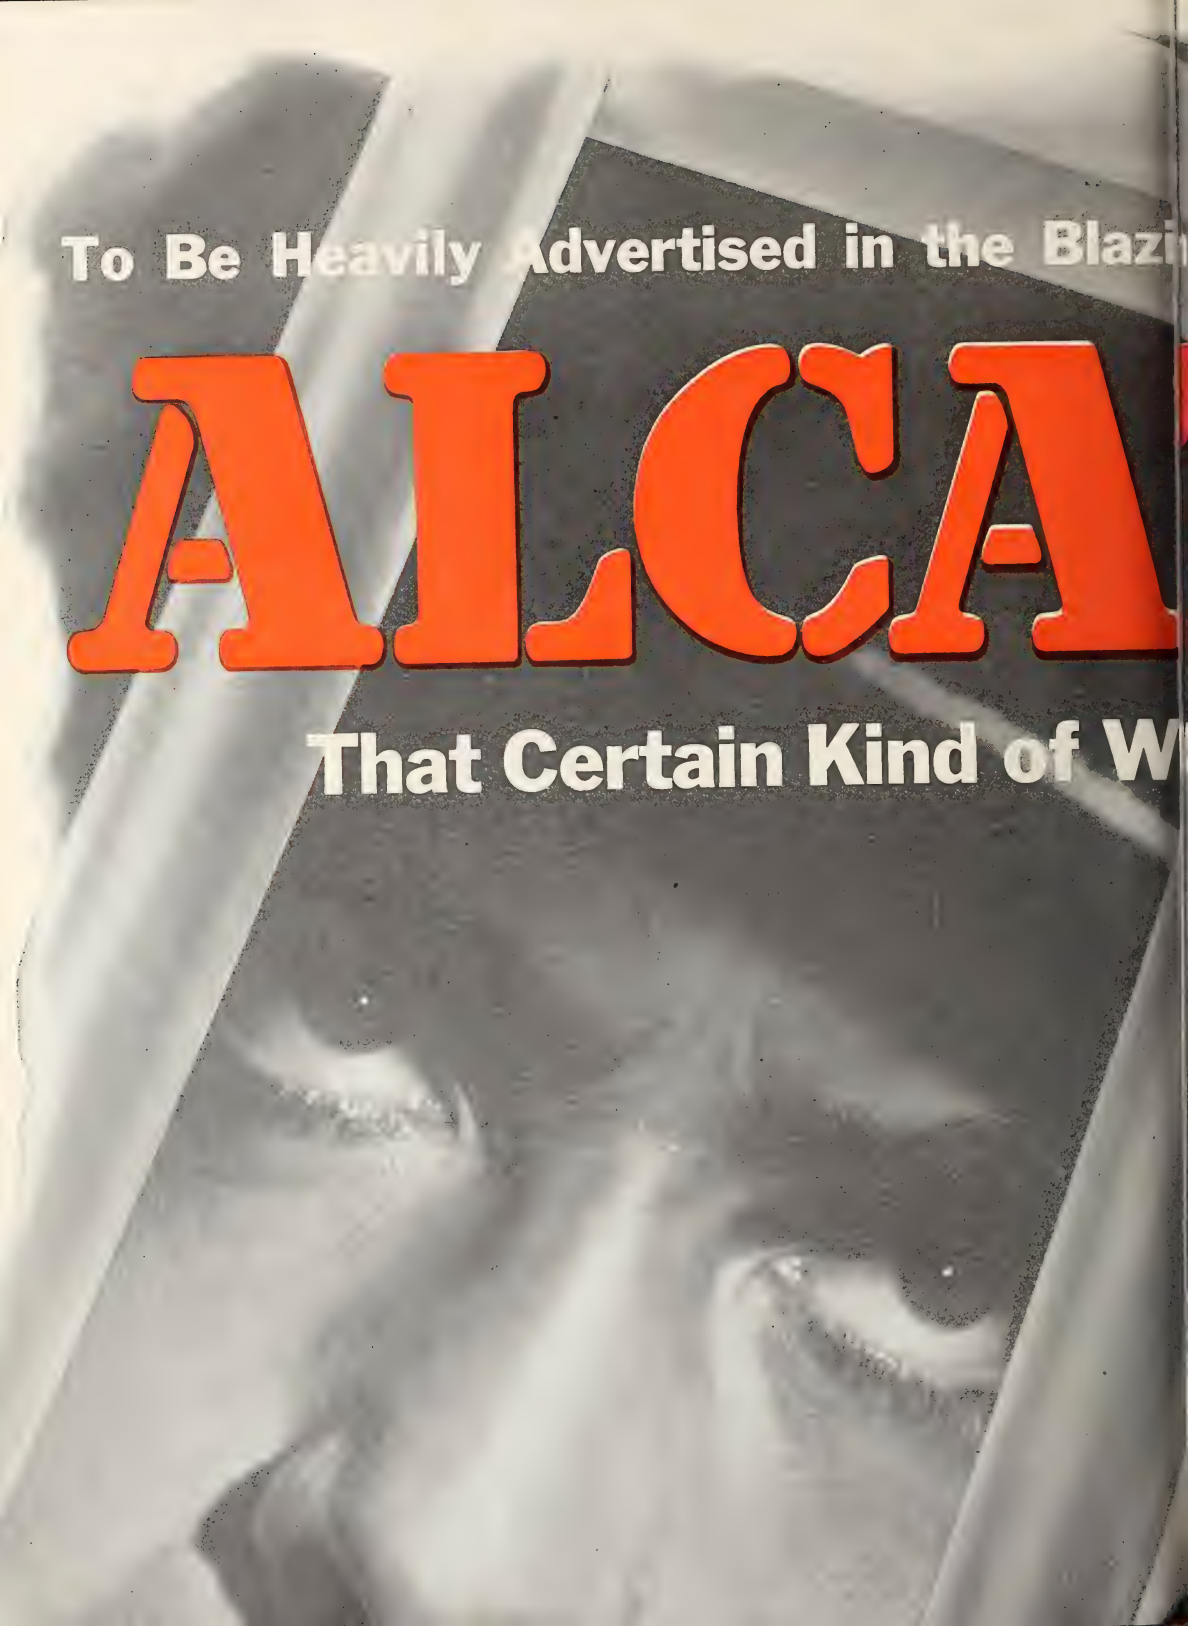
Instead of using dishes, silverware and the like as giveaways, Mr. Dixon has inaugurated a policy of awarding a bale of home grown cotton.

The cotton is kept on display in the lobby and is awarded to the person who guesses the closest to the correct weight of the bale.

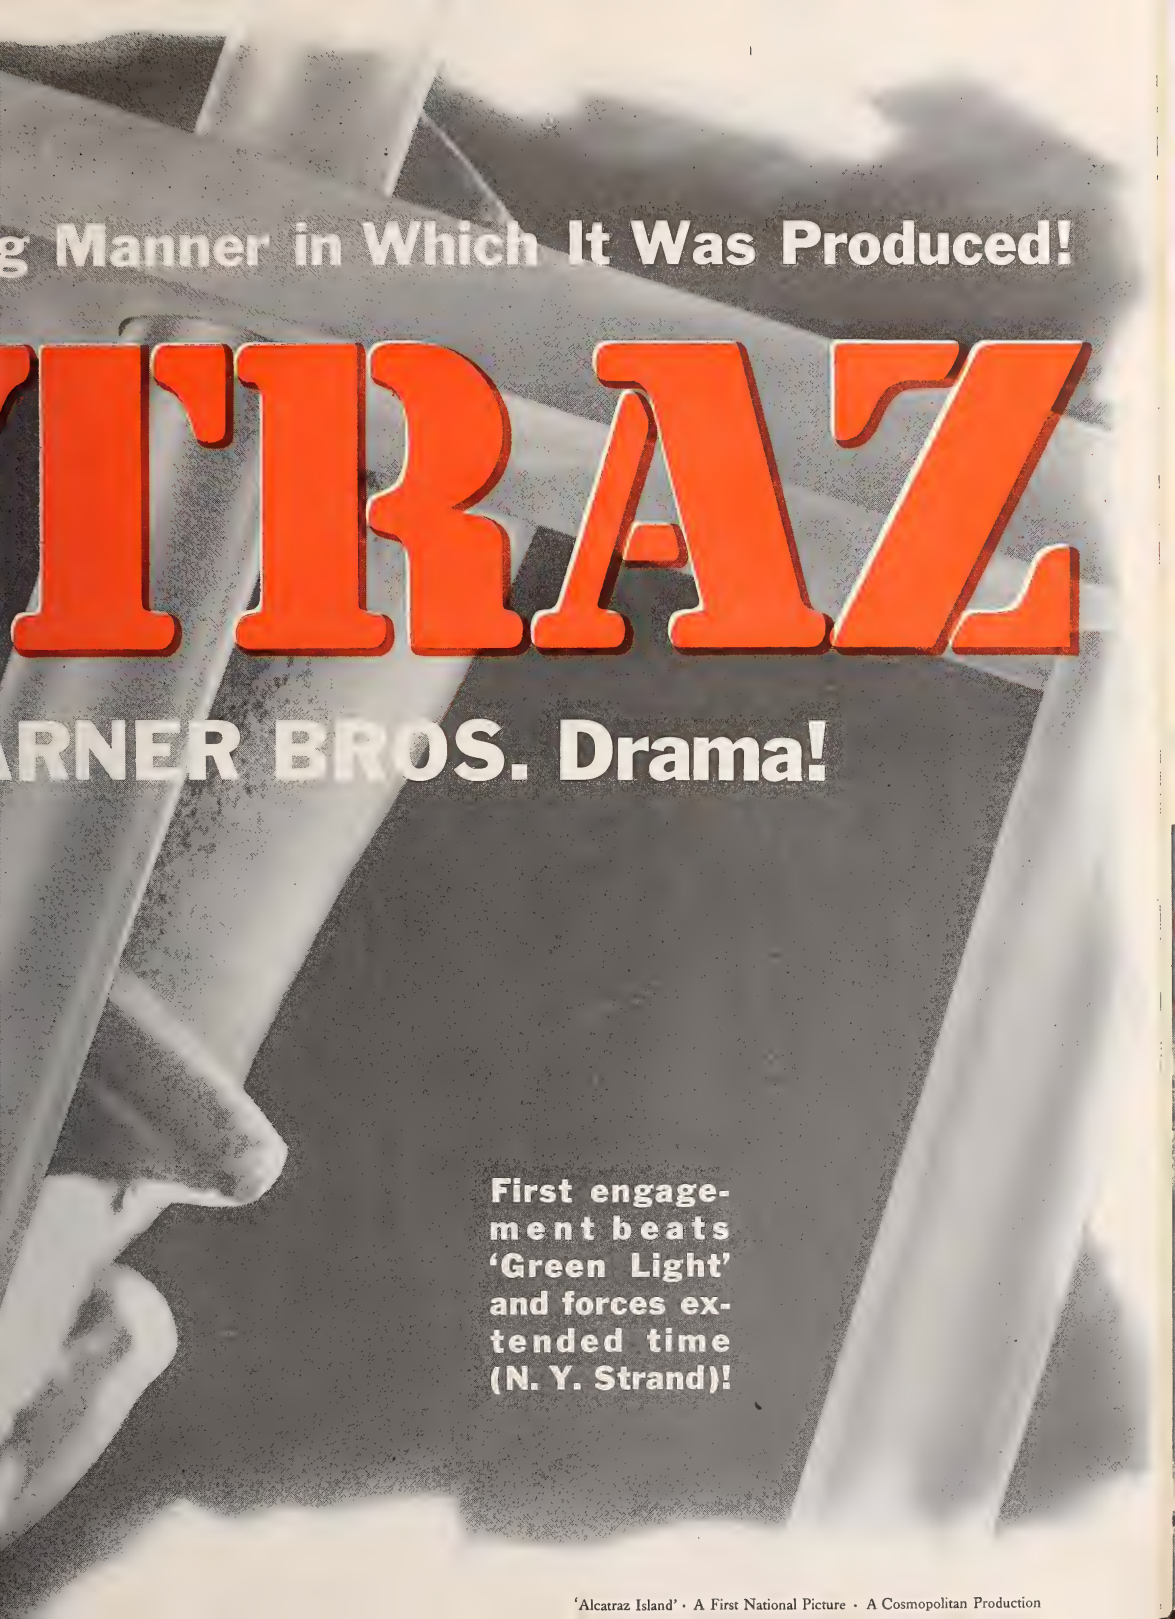
17 YEARS OF THE BROADWAY STAGE

Far from the highly-inflated optimisms heard at the beginning of other seasons, loud wailings of despair are echoing on Broadway over the future of the legitimate theatre—if any. Certainly a glance at The Billboard's annual theatrical index of the status of the stage will, according to surveyors, "bring a chill to the stoutest optimist for the future of the field." The figures appear to hold but little hope—or, at best, only one faint, far ray for a long-coming rebirth. The number of productions has dropped disastrously beneath even the low figure set the previous season. The number of hits has gone down. The figures show a theatre only a fraction as large as it once was—with even that fraction battered by insistent lack of success.

Broadway, in the 1936-37 season, saw a scant 125 plays, nearly half the number of 302 staged in the peak year, 1927—a marked disintegration in a decade. And there were only 24 "hits," ten under last year, and 50 below the 1927 peak, whereas the percentage of failures increased from 68 per cent last year to 76 per cent in 1936-37.



Indicating the extent which the Broadway stage has served as a source of material for Hollywood, The Billboard estimates that during the past 17 years, the New York legitimate theatre has seen 3,945 productions, 3,110 of them dramatic and 835 musical.



Forty-five theatres were used for stage plays on Broadway in 1937, a drop of one under the low established the previous season, and representing the fifth consecutive season to establish a new low.

Producing offices operating in 1937 dropped 19 under the 108 of 1936.

Billboard reviews the stage of Broadway over a 17-year period, statistically, as follows:

NEBRASKA HITS CHANCE GAMES; FINES ARE LEVIED

State Supreme Court at Lincoln Holds Bank Night Illegal; Arrests Are Made in Detroit

Legal skirmishes over the operation of chance games were heard in scattered parts of the country this week, as proponents of the practice took under study a recent Nebraska supreme court decision that Bank Night contains all the elements of chance and lottery.

Another blow to advocates of giveaways was delivered in Detroit when three exhibitors were fined $20 each on charges of violating the lottery laws by conducting Screeno games in their theatres. And a third setback was suffered at Rocky Mount, Virginia, where a county circuit court granted a preliminary injunction restraining a theatre from making Bank Night awards for 30 days.

The Nebraska ruling, handed down in Lincoln, affirmed a lower court decision against Beatrice Theatre Corporation, a Fox West Coast affiliate which operates a theatre at Beatrice. As a result of the court's findings, William H. Wright, attorney for the Omaha Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, declared the next step by the theatres would be the filing of a motion for a rehearing of the case. As for a similar case pending in Omaha, Mr. Wright said: "We can go on with the fight if the ruling is based on facts which differ in the two cases. But if it is a broad, sweeping opinion it would decide the Omaha case also."

State's Attorney General Hunter instituted the Beatrice case last April and it was tried before Fred Messmore, district judge, who since has been elevated to the supreme court bench. Because of his previous participation in the case, Mr. Messmore did not take part in ruling on the appeal.

The Detroit convictions were chalked up against Burton W. London, Lincoln theatre; Melvin Doerflier, Courtesy theatre, and Clare Winnie, Dix theatre. When he imposed the fines, Thomas F. Maher, judge, upheld the prosecution's contention that the purpose of the game was to attract patrons, whose payments for admission constituted a consideration under the law.

A. H. Hopkins, Franklin County circuit court judge in Virginia, granted the temporary injunction, which had been asked for by C. C. Lee, commonwealth's attorney, and was directed against the English Theatre Corporation.

Grosses Decline

Coincident with these developments came an assertion from C. C. Ezell, sales manager for Affiliated Enterprises, owners of Bank Night, that grosses have dropped from 40 to 45 per cent in states where chance games have been banned. He likened the operation of chance games in theatres to the giving away of premiums to stimulate trade in other lines of business.

Meanwhile, the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York has continued its drive to discontinue chance games in all theatres in New York City by December 1st. In its official publication, "The Independent," the ITOA announced that the movement "has made remarkable headway with most of the circuits and responsible exhibitors have stated that they approve the plan fully."

Although previously the number of theatres reported as having pledged themselves for the abolition of games was the only information released, the ITOA published a list of 77 theatres that had signed pledge cards.

The cards state:

"I hereby pledge myself to abolish giveaways in my theatres on or before December 1st, 1937, if that action is taken by all other theatres in New York City."

KRO and Loew Endorse Move

Messages of congratulation for starting the movement were received by the ITOA from Nate J. Blumberg, RKO theatre executive, and Charles C. Moskowitz, Loew's theatre head. Mr. Blumberg said:

"The project is a very constructive one, both for the motion picture industry and the individual theatres. The RKO circuit has been opposed to giveaways and games since their inception and will sincerely cooperate to abolish these items from our theatres, provided the action is universal through the theatres in New York City."

Mr. Moskowitz wrote:

"The very minute that all other theatres stop giveaways, games, etc., of all kinds, you may depend upon it that Loew's will do likewise.

"It has always been, and always will be, our firm conviction that theatres should sell entertainment, and entertainment alone."

Evidence, however, that the drive does not hape the support of all New York owners came this week when the Skouras metropolitan circuit placed "Screeno" in its Park Plaza, Crotona and Blendheim theatres, in the Bronx, and the Roosevelt in Flushing, Long Island.

Woman Sues for Award

Charging she did not receive a $500 Bank Night award to which she was entitled, Mrs. R. E. Dorman has filed suit in circuit court, Gainesville, Fla., against Sparks Theatres, Inc. She is asking $1,000 damages on the contention that on the night of September 28th her name was drawn as the winner of the $500 but that when she presented herself, within a reasonable time, the manager refused to pay her.

Albert von Strongtroff, associated with Racine Novelty Company, was free in $500 bail after having been arrested on a charge of violating the state trading stamp law in connection with the sale of Bank Night "guarantee tickets." Mr. Strongtroff's original plan protected a Bank Night winner in the event he was not at the theatre when his name was called, but this system was ruled illegal by the state insurance commission. His latest plan of operation was to provide that a coupon received by a person when he made a 15 cent down payment on any article of Racine Novelty Company, guaranteed the holder $1,000 if his name was called at the theatre. Mr. von Strongtroff will appear before Elmer Goodland, court commissioner.

At Neosho, Mo., a circuit court jury acquitted Hugh Gardner, operator of the Orpheum and Fotosho, on charges of violating the state lottery law by giving five $5 prizes on "dime night."

Plane To Location

Coronet Pictures, producing Buck Jones action pictures for Columbia release, will make use of their recently bought 14-passenger plane in transporting to and from Imperial Valley the personnel working in "West of Broadway."

Major Prepares Six For Paramount Release

Six scripts are being prepared by Major Pictures for Paramount release to follow production of "Every Day's a Holiday," the Mae West vehicle, and "The Badge of Policeman O'Roon," Bing Crosby picture.

They are: "Star of Sahara," an original by Hazel Christine MacDonald; "Two Weeks with Pay," an original by Jesse Lasky, Jr., and Doris Malloy, tentatively set for John Payne and Katherine Kane; "Man in Evening Clothes," from the play by Andre Picard and Yves Mirand, which will have Grant Richards in the leading role; "Call Back Love," story by Rose Franken and William Brown Meloney, to feature four-year-old Kitty Clancy; "Free Women," original by Leonard Q. Ross for Stella Ardler, and "Eight Hours," by Quentin Reynolds, to feature Mady Correll.

Indiana Pool "A" House Opens

The Indiana theatre, Indianapolis, opened Tuesday as the "A" house in the recently effected pool between Monarch Theatres and the Fourth Ave. Amusement Company. The Circle and the Apollo will become second-run houses in the deal. The pooled interests now have Paramount, RKO, 20th Century-Fox, Warners and First National to draw upon. Loew's has Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, United Artists and Columbia.

MGM Fashion Placements

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announced last week that its new fashion features is receiving nation-wide placement. The service, being supplied at present to newspapers in more than 85 key cities, is the work of Pat Reis, secretary to Howard Dietz, under the name Beret.

Blood Stream Filmed in Color

The Biological Photographic Association at its annual meeting held in Rochester, N. Y., disclosed that colored motion pictures of a living blood stream have been made. The pictures, prepared under the direction of Dr. Stafford L. Warren of Strong Memorial Hospital, show blood coursing through capillaries of a rabbit.

California, Illinois Tax Returns

California citizens paid $1,307,267 to the state in entertainment admission taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937. Illinois' sales tax, which includes entertainment levies, netted in excess of $77,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30th.

LIFTING OF JAPAN'S BAN ON FOREIGN FILMS EXPECTED EARLY NEXT YEAR

Change to Single Features Seen and Part Use of Japanese Product in Formerly Exclusively Foreign Houses

by HIROMU TOMINAGA
in Tokyo

The rigid restrictions of film importation, except newsreels, may be lifted by the Ministry of Finance after the beginning of 1938, depending upon the status then of the situation in China.

Nevertheless, there can be no increase of pictures in hand before such action, and it is probable that our first-run theatres showing foreign product exclusively or on mixed programs will have to change from double and triple featuring to a single or double bill due to possible scarcity of films.

Judging from what is now revealed in the exhibition field, particularly relative to first-run playings, there is a possibility that first-runs showing only foreign productions will play Japanese pictures as substitutes.

Despite these developments, there seems to have been no serious effect thus far. Every theatre, whether first-run or in lesser categories, continues to draw a normal number of patrons daily.

The order came as a shock to foreign distributors. On September 21st a representative committee of Jissha Renmei (League of Foreign Film Distributors, constituted of Japanese sales managers of foreign film distributing companies in Tokyo) was called by the Ministry and notified that the Government had decided to give no permit for importation of any motion pictures, except newsreels, until the end of this year. The order was not applied to those importations shipped to Japan by September 4th, provided proper procedures had been taken for application for permit.

Joint Production Movement

One development of the restrictions being placed by the Japanese government is a tendency of Japanese interests to identify themselves with foreign producers to make pictures for universal audiences by joint effort, stepping out beyond "The New Earth" which created a new epoch in the industry of Japan.

Towa Shoji, importer of European films and joint producer of "The New Earth," is reported to be launching production of another international picture in cooperation with a French producing company. Also, Kokko Tobis of Japan, established recently, is said to be planning pictures for export, inviting to Japan Richard August, Wolfzang Bagier and other noted German technicians. Furthermore, a report has reached here from Paris that a French film company is contemplating an invitation to K. Ushahara and S. Okada, Japanese director and artist, for a picture featuring the life of Prince Saionji, the veteran statesman.

FRANCE AND MEXICO TO EXCHANGE FILMS

A reciprocal exchange of films for cultural but not commercial purposes has been arranged between Mexico and France by the Governments of both nations. The plan has been started with the exchanging of the Mexican production, "Judas," and the French film, "Visages de France" ("Faces of France"). These and other pictures concerned in the pact are to be widely exhibited in Mexico and France.

Mexico is organizing the International Distributors Association to further this proposition and invites producers who are interested to join.

More interesting still is the fact that a plan of Twentieth Century-Fox and Shochiku Company to produce an international film featuring Japan's history of civilization is making steady progress towards materialization, since Mr. G. Goodman, Far Eastern representative for Fox, made his visit this spring to Mr. Takejiro Ohtani, president of Shochiku. The amount of investment reported agreed upon is Y500,000 by each company. Mr. Goodman then returned in a hurry to America and a recent cable dispatch from New York said that Mr. Darryl Zanuck is greatly interested in this plan. Mr. Goodman is coming again to Japan this fall with Mr. Walter J. Hutchinson, foreign manager for the Fox home office. The Fox Tokyo office said the theme of the picture will concern the early stage of Japan's Restoration of Meiji, starting with the visit of Commander Harris to Japan to open Shimoda Harbour to commerce with the United States.

Additional Restrictions

Besides the new restriction on importations, foreign films and other import and export commodities are subject to two other forms of emergency legislation, one on exchange control, the other a special consumption tax effective since August 12th and levied 20 per cent ad valorem on specific import commodities.

Items on which the manufacturers and importers are to pay this tax in monthly instalments are musical instruments and parts thereof, cameras and cinematographic projectors and parts thereof, raw and developed motion picture films, phonographs and parts thereof, including records.

Although various constructions have been put on whether the ad valorem levy should include royalty which, in the majority of cases, would be arranged in trade terms of film importations, our taxation authorities have now made it clear that the 20 per cent special consumption tax be assessed on the invoice amount of importations which the custom houses concerned will appraise, taking into consideration various factors which are practicably considered to constitute the price of goods imported, for instance, according to whether it is on C.I.F. or F.O.B. basis, or if it comprises royalty or not.

It goes without saying that the Japanese government considered this levy necessary to help meet the expenditures due to the situation in China.

As for the revised exchange control law now in force, it traces back to 1933, when the Japanese Finance Ministry legislated the first ordinance which replaced two laws covering prevention of capital from fleeing abroad, and the gold embargo of 1931 and 1932.

According to the law as amended in January and July, this year, the monthly amount of free transaction with foreign states (not accompanied by any drawing of exchange) has been limited to Y1,000, instead of Y30,000, available as of July this year. It also provides that it is necessary to get permission of the Finance Minister for any oversea remittance exceeding Y1,000, following acquisition and exercise of license, royalty and industrial properties.

Special need for immediate application of the revised law was seen in the Finance Ministry's report that the trade balance had turned unfavorable, bringing the total excess of import by approximately Y780,000,000 as of August, this year.

Needless to say, foreign film importers and distributors in Japan hereafter will have a heavier burden of taxation as a result. Under the exchange law, they no longer will be able to remit to their foreign consignors so freely as they could in the past, though this legislation is not expected to remain in force indefinitely.

Excessive Importation Cited

How, then, can foreign product hold its own?

As a matter of fact, importations have been too many. Eight leading American film companies are vying with one another. Besides Paramount, MGM, Columbia, Warner, RKO Radio, 20th Century-Fox, United Artists and Universal, two who recently have entered the field are Grand National and Republic. Besides, there are five more foreign film importers and agents: Towa Shoji, a leading company handling European pictures; Sanyei-sha; Empire; Sanwa-Shoji, agent for Gaumont British, and Kokko-Eiga, handling German Tobis product. Thus there doubtless is developing a desperate struggle for profitable existences. With the new restrictions their problem is intensified.

If there should come a time, however, when foreign pictures would show a loss of favor in the Japanese territory, due to legislative restriction, it probably would follow that the Japanese industry would show a drop in receipts as well, perhaps an even greater decline, particularly in the exhibition field.

If only the best pictures are imported, the opportunities to distribute them will then be as good as ever.

Increase in the price of raw film, reported possible, also would reduce the number of Japanese pictures available.

GOLDWYN SAYS HE'LL JOIN ANTI-DUAL FIGHT

Producer Says Strategy Will Be To Make Features Too Long for Double Programs

The "campaign" against double features, born in Nutley, New Jersey, several weeks ago, acquired a new supporter this week when Samuel Goldwyn, producer, announced he is "all for" the movement because of his interest in improving the standards of the industry.

Visiting New York for the first time in more than a year, Mr. Goldwyn was quoted by the press as declaring that elimination of dual bills would materially reduce the number of "B" pictures. His visit east is to discuss his purchase of United Artists with Alexander Korda, of London, on a 50-50 partnership.

Mr. Goldwyn's contribution to the single feature drive, he told a Herald-Tribune interviewer, will be along lines different from those adopted by William R. Clay and George H. Siegel, sponsors of the Anti-Double Feature League of America.

He explained that he already had started to produce motion pictures that would run so long exhibitors will find it virtually impossible to play a second feature on the program. He said the pictures he will produce will run more than two hours.

The anti-dual league, meanwhile, has scored its first victory. After several days of picketing the Franklin Theatre in their home town of Nutley, the two crusaders announced that J. Hamilton Cherry, manager, had consented to play single features three days of each week.

Impetus was given the drive by the Century Circuit, which operates 29 theatres in Long Island, when its president, A. H. Schwartz, ordered an experiment which may result in a single feature policy for all the circuit's houses. The policy is being tried in the Fantasy theatre, Rockville, and to date attendance has been described as "good," though at the same time Mr. Schwartz said grosses had not increased.

Further support of the league came from The Home News, Bronx daily newspaper, which carried an editorial discussing double features, saying:

"The assertion frequently is made that purveyors of entertainment, including those in the motion picture industry, give the public what it wants. It would be more correct to say that they give the public what they think it wants. And there is evidence to show that they have not always been clear in their thinking on the subject."

The editorial warned that if "two feature addicts" do not attend single feature programs and advocates of the one picture policy do not make up the lost patronage, theatres may be expected to resume dual bills. "There is nothing nutty, we think, about this league which started in Nutley," added the writer.

In Oklahoma City double bills are finding favor. Todd Ferguson, manager of the Standard theatre, said attendance has increased since two feature programs have been presented on Fridays and Saturdays. A similar policy has been adopted by another Oklahoma City house, the Plaza.

However, in North Kansas City, Missouri, a poll conducted in the Armour resulted in a vote of 70 per cent in favor of a single feature policy. The Armour had been showing only one feature and is continuing the policy. At the Rialto, St. Joseph, Missouri, a survey brought identical results and twin features have been dropped except occasionally on weekends.

Fox Movietone 20 Years Old

Fox-Twentieth Century's Movietone News this week reaches its 20th year, the present reel growing out of the old Fox Weekly and Fox News, started in 1917 by Courtland Smith for William Fox and his Fox Film Corporation. Subsequently, Mr. Smith left the Fox reel to head up Pathe News, in which position he was succeeded, last summer, by Frederick Ullman.

Franklin Roosevelt and Daniel C. Roper, United States Secretary of Commerce, this week wrote Truman Talley, present chief of Fox Movietone, on the occasion of the 20th anniversary.

"The years which have passed since the inception of Movietone News have witnessed not only the pioneer period of a new medium of intelligence, but have seen that medium brought to a high degree of perfection," said the President.

Secretary Roper declared that, "Nothing in educational history and development of our country has been more significant and more constructive in entertaining and informing the public."

Talent Hunt Planned

Incorporation papers were being drafted this week for a talent placement bureau of which Maillard Kesslere, photographer, will be art director. Offices are to be established at 1560 Broadway, New York, and in Hollywood. The organization is sponsored by a group of New York artists and advertising men, it was announced, and its first move will be to undertake a talent hunt.

Loew To Tour South America

Arthur Loew, vice-president of Loew's, Inc., and in charge of the foreign activities of the company, leaves January 1st for a tour of South America. Mr. Loew also plans to visit South Africa, India and probably Australia. Sam Berger, traveling representative, is now in Johannesburg, South Africa, for a few weeks.

Davide Calcagni, president of the Integrity Film Corporation, New York, this week purchased the sole rights in the United States of the new version of "Saint Therese, the Little Flower," produced in Paris by the De Koster Film Company.

Film Courses Start At Two Colleges

The first of a series of ten foreign films sponsored by the Fine Arts Department of the College of William and Mary was shown last week at the Williamsburg Theatre, Williamsburg, Va. The pictures are a part of the program planned by the Fine Arts Department to present plays, operettas, musicales, campus sings and art exhibits throughout the year.

Dartmouth College started the experiment of developing motion picture script writing with the arrival this week in Hanover, N. H., of Walter Wanger, '15, producer. He will promote instruction in this field as a memorial to the late Irving Thalberg. The project will be carried on in upper-class courses of the English department under direction of Professor William B. Pressey, who will be assisted by writers, directors, actors, actresses, producers, censors, camera men and editors sent from Hollywood by Mr. Wanger.

GN Plans Annual "Frolics"

Grand National plans to produce a "Campus Frolic" musical every year. David Diamond is producing the first, "Campus Frolics of 1938," with Evelyn Daw and James Newill in the cast. The balance of the cast will be completed upon the return of Edward L. Alperson, president, to the coast. Grand National has closed a deal with Chandhri Film Service, with offices in Lahore, Bombay and Calcutta, for the distribution of its product in those territories.

Lewis Leaving RKO

Al Lewis, RKO Radio producer, is resigning with completion of the cutting of "She's Got That Swing," his latest production. Following a vacation Mr. Lewis plans to return to stage production in New York, possibly with his former partner, Max Gordon.

Salesmen Plan Party

The Motion Picture Associates, Inc., New York, formerly known as the Motion Picture Salesmen, will hold their 18th annual charity Thanksgiving Frolic on November 20th in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor. Morris Sanders is chairman of the arrangements committee.

Rosoff Joins Garrison

Peter Rosoff, formerly with GB, has joined Garrison Films, as promotion, sales and distribution head of instructional films. A short subject on conditioned reflexes, made with the cooperation of Pavlov, Nobel prize winner, is scheduled for early release.

Tone and MGM Sign

Franchot Tone was signed to a long term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer last week in Hollywood. Tone is now working in "The Four Marys"' in which Richard Thorpe is directing a cast including Myrna Loy and Rosalind Russell, for MGM.

Scott Named Taplinger Aide

W. Burt Scott, for eight years executive secretary to Jack Warner, this week in Hollywood was named assistant to Robert Taplinger, head of studio and exhibitor contracts for Warner Brothers.

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 90

Bluebook School Question No. 90 was: (A) Explain the difference between variable density and variable area sound track recording and explain what raises and lowers volume with respect to the recording itself. (B) What does a photo-cell "see" and why would not the human eye see the same thing were it in the same position?

Because of inability to examine all the papers sent in on this question, credits are dispensed with. J. K. Robinson and R. E. Bullard answer Section A as follows:

"By processes, the details of which it seems unnecessary to explain, in recording the variable density sound track, an extremely thin line of light is made to be constantly incident upon a moving negative film. This line extends entirely across the width of the sound track area. The intensity of this line of light, or its width, is made to vary exactly in accordance with every variation in the sound waves by which the light producing element is actuated. It then follows that since the negative film coating of emulsion develops out in variable density exactly in accordance with the amount or value of its exposure to light, in the positive print there will be a series of lines across (horizontally as the film runs) the sound track, the density of which will vary exactly as the sound wave each such line represents varied, disregarding those losses inherent in all man-made processes.

"While we have perhaps not expressed our ideas very well, we believe our brother students will understand what we are attempting to express.

"Having then a sound track of variable density as viewed in its length exposed to the scanning beam of a projector, which is approximately a duplicate of the thin line of light before mentioned, it follows that as the sound track passes through this light line, a varying amount of light will pass through and on to the photo-electric cell, and those variations will be exactly in proportion to the variations in density of the sound track. In other words, as the film moves downward through the scanning beam, the latter will be affected alike at each point clear across the entire width of the sound track. Hence the amount of sound received by the photo-cell will vary as does the density of the sound track from point to point, viewed in its length, each point being considered as an entire width of the track.

"The variable area sound track accomplishes similar results, but in a very different manner. The effect upon a loudspeaker diaphram is in exact proportion to the quantity of light reaching the P. E. cell during each succeeding instant of scanning. In the variable area sound track a portion of its width is so exposed to the scanning beam that, when developed out, it is wholly transparent—so far as celluloid and emulsion may be said to be wholly transparent. The remainder of the width of the track, when developed, out, is wholly opaque. In other words, the width of the recording scanning beam is varied, instead of its density as viewed in the other direction. Examining the two types it may be readily understood that the variation in either density or area (width) might be so managed that precisely the same amount of total light would be passed through to the P.E. cell, and that is exactly what happens. The amount of light incident upon the P.E. cell will of course vary from point to point precisely as the width of the transparent part of the sound track varies. And, harking back, the width of the transparent portion varies precisely as the frequency of the sound waves incident upon the light controlling element of the recording instrument varied.

As a result we find the variable area sound track to be called that because the opaque and transparent areas thereof vary, the variations being in the form of horizontally placed peaks and hollows. The variable density sound track is so called for the reason that its density varies, the variations of each type of track being such that precisely (precisely in theory, at least) the same variations of light reach the photocell."

(B) L. H. Kelley, a Nevada projectionist, says, "In the case of a theatre sound reproducing system, the photocell 'sees' light intensity varied a great many times a second, depending upon frequency of the sounds recorded. If the frequency of the recorded sound be, say, 6,000 cycles, then the P.E. cell will see light variations at that speed per second and will create a 6,000-cycle ripple in the direct current producer.

"The human eye would not be able to distinguish light fluctuations at such speed because of its 'persistence of vision.' It would merely register the varying intensity of the light as a steady illumination at medium density."

M. and J. Devoy explain the matter thus: "The photocell 'sees' each and every difference in intensity in the scanning beam of light, and since that intensity varies as the density of the variable density or the area of the variable area sound track alters transmission thereof, and since the active element of the P. E. cell is affected by the light intensity only while each intensity is present thereon, as measured in millionths of a second, I believe we may fairly say it 'sees' every cycle of the sound frequency as expressed in light.

"The human eye cannot distinguish light variations nearly so fast, due to the fact that each light impression remains impressed upon active elements of the eye for the fraction of a second after the impression has been replaced by another. This is known as 'persistence of vision.' Were the human eye located as is the P.E. cell opening, it would see a strip of light that would increase and decrease in intensity somewhat as various sections of the sound track of varying density passed, but it would see none of the rapidly recurring individual sound cycle impressions. At least that is our understanding of the matter, though we can find nothing in our text books that answers the question directly. We therefore have tried to reason the matter out from our limited knowledge of the action of P.E. cells and the element of persistence of vision as applies to the human eye."

To Test Electric Power by Air Again

Another test in the transmission of electric power by wireless will be made within the week by John Roberts, inventor of the idea. The test will be made from the John C. Roberts Laboratories, near New Castle, Del., to the farm of J. Wirt Willis, near Glasgow, a distance of 16 miles.

The power will be transmitted to the farm to operate a tractor and illumine 100 electric bulbs.

Unemployment Act Upheld

All firms, including theatres, that employ three or more persons are subject to the provisions of Wisconsin's unemployment compensation act, which was recently upheld by Alvin C. Reis, circuit judge, in an action brought by the state to compel a Madison manufacturer to make his contribution as required by the law.

The sale of the Audubon Theatre and office building at 165th Street and Broadway, New York, for $650,000 by the Broadway and 165th St. Realty Company, a Fox Theatres Corporation subsidiary, to the Audubon Amusement Company, Inc., has been approved by United States Circuit Judge Martin T. Manton sitting in the United States district court last week.

Western Electric Starts Infringement Action

Western Electric Company, Inc., and Radio Corporation of America have filed suit in the federal court of the southern district of California against C. J. Richter, Inc., of Los Angeles, charging infringement of the DeForest oscillator patents in the manufacture of short wave electro-diathermic equipment.

A hearing is to be held November 1st.

Lawyers for Paramount Trustee Seek $215,000

An application for an allowance of $215,000 for services in connection with the proposed $2,150,000 settlement of two actions against former officers and directors of Paramount has been filed by Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, counsel for the Paramount trustee, Charles D. Hilles.

The petition was filed with Alfred C. Coxe, federal judge in New York, who previously allowed the law firm $50,000 for services in the action. Mr. Hilles has filed a petition for an allowance of $7,500.

The proposed settlement is before the court for its approval.

Freddie's Parents Start Suit Against Aunt

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Bartholomew, parents of Freddie Bartholomew, have instituted action in Los Angeles to set aside the boy actor's adoption by his aunt, Miss Myllicent Bartholomew, on the grounds of deception.

They charge Miss Bartholomew gave them a written agreement that they could have their son back any time they wanted him.

Revell Named Defendant In Infringement Case

Charles McCord has included Harry Revel, songwriter, as an additional defendant in his $50,000 copyright infringement suit brought in United States district court, New York, against Twentieth Century-Fox and the Robbins Music Corporation.

The plaintiff charges infringement of his song, "I'll Always Remember Ronkonkoma," in the song, "Good Night, My Love," which was used in the picture "Stowaway."

Montague Contracts For $1,000,000 Job

Laverne Moore, better known in Hollywood as John Montague, has signed a seven year contract with Everett Crosby, brother of Bing Crosby, under which he will receive $1,000,000 as a motion picture actor, radio entertainer and professional golfer, according to an Associated Press dispatch from Hollywood.

News of the contract was released immediately after Mr. Moore was acquitted in Elizabethtown, New York, of a seven-year-old charge of first degree robbery. The contract was signed before Mr. Moore was taken from Hollywood to face trial in New York, according to the announcement which came from Paramount studios.

Moses Reis Dead; Had Stage Circuit

Moses Reis, owner several years ago of one of the largest circuits of legitimate theatres in the country, died Saturday in New York after a short illness. Mr. Reis was 87.

At the peak of his career Mr. Reis owned 128 theatres in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio. With the advent of motion pictures and the resultant competition Mr. Reis sold out to Loew's and other circuits.

Sam and Lee Shubert, the producers, started their careers in the employ of Mr. Reis.

Mr. Reis began his connection with the theatre as a player in an orchestra. Some 50 years ago he opened one theatre in Bradford, Pa., gradually buying others as his success grew.

Mr. Reis' affairs will be carried on by Charles C. Reis, who was house manager for the late S. L. Rothafel ("Roxy") at the Rialto, Rivoli, Strand and Capitol theatres on Broadway.

$600,000 Suit Filed On Raw Stock Deal

A $600,000 suit against Universal Pictures Corporation, Eastman Kodak, Consolidated Film Industries, Carl Laemmle, Maurice Fleckels, J. E. Brulatour, Inc., and Jules E. Brulatour, instituted in New York supreme court by John D. Tippett, Inc., was revealed Wednesday when Jules Brulatour filed a motion to set aside a notice of examination before trial which had been served him.

The plaintiff contended that the defendants conspired to induce Universal to break a five-year contract made in 1932 under which Tippett was to supply raw film stock to Universal. It was charged that late in 1932 Eastman Kodak offered Universal a $1,000,000 loan and Consolidated offered a $500,000 loan if the contract were broken. The plaintiff also claimed that Universal requested a $450,000 loan from it, and that the contract was broken when the loan was refused. A hearing on Mr. Brulatour's motion will be held next Thursday.

Motion Made to Dismiss Case

Samuel Goldwyn, Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., Eddie Cantor and United Artists will file a motion for dismissal of a $1,000,000 plagiarism suit brought against them in United States district court by Mort Eisman, Clara Deller and Robert Louis Shayon. A hearing will be held on November 26th. The plaintiffs charge infringement of their story, "Oh Shah" in "Roman Scandals."

WB Sues for $1,000,000

Warner Brothers has instituted a $1,000,000 damage action against the National Screen Service in New York State supreme court, charging the defendant made trailers using the Warner name.

Movie Life Sued by Life

Time, Inc., publishers of the magazine, Life, is seeking $25,000 from Movie Life for alleged infringement of Life's trademark. The action is in United States district court, New York.

OBITUARIES

Reginald C. Barker

Reginald Charles Barker, 55, died in Los Angeles last week. Mr. Barker's first association with motion pictures occurred in 1913 when he started directing for Ince, which was followed by directorial assignments with Triangle, Universal, Metro, Fox, Goldwyn, Tiffany, MGM, First National and Artclass. He directed William S. Hart in the latter's first picture. In recent years Mr. Barker has been identified with the writing of western stories.

Harry Noble

Harry Noble, former Educational Pictures representative in New Haven, Conn., for 15 years, died there last week.

J. E. Dobbins

J. E. Dobbins, 52, who operated the Roanoke Rapids theatre at Roanoke Rapids, N. C., for many years, died recently. He had been in ill health for some time.

Salvatore Lenge

Salvatore Lenge, veteran Kansas City theatre orchestra musician, died last week at his home following a stroke.

Herbert Schulman

Herbert Schulman, 27, manager of the Mayfair theatre, Philadelphia, died there last week of pneumonia.

Clinton J. Hecht

Clinton James Hecht, former actor, known on the stage as Clint Nixon, died last week in Hollywood. Mr. Hecht was 31.

Rites for Plane Victims

Funeral services were held in New York last weekend for James Pergola, Pathe News cameraman, and William H. Pitt, news editor of Pathe, who were killed in the airplane crash near Evanston, Wyo.

MGM Files General Denial

A general denial to a $250,000 infringement suit brought by Philip T. Clancy, author, has been filed in United States district court, New York, by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Robert Pirosh, the defendants. Mr. Clancy claims his play, "Nuts to You," was plagiarized in "A Day at the Races."

Temporary Injunction Refused

The New York supreme court has refused to issue a temporary injunction, restraining the exhibition of the short subject "I Want to Be a Boarder" by Seiden Sound System, Inc. The injunction was sought by Leo Fuchs and Yetta Zwerling, who claim the short was made from extra sequences in which they appeared for the feature picture, "I Want to Be a Mother."

Arrivals on the Ile de France Tuesday included Alexander Korda, Maurice Silverstone, Herman Maier, Sam E. Morris, Phil Reisman, Jack Cohn, William Powell, Madeleine Carroll, King Vidor, Mrs. Vidor, Barney Glazer, Julien Duvivier, Erik Charell, Ludwig Charell, Marcel Hellman and Mirelle Ballin.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS REPLY WITH DEMAND FOR FLAT RENTAL PLAN

Recent Distributors' Decision to Supply "A" Product on Percentage Terms Only Is Red Flag to the Theatremen

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

The rentals controversy in England has taken on still another new phase.

When the Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association advised theatre men to continue to book both "A" and "B" films on flat rates if they previously traded on those terms, the exhibitor organization set up direct opposition to the policy, announced by the Kinematograph Renters Society, that in future distributors would classify all features as "A" or "B" and supply the "A" product on percentage terms only.

Discussion in the CEA Council largely was concerned with the fact that, in its new "A" policy, the KRS was nominally concerned with restriction of overlong program and in particular with the use of two "A" films in such bills. It was asserted that, with exhibitors even more concerned than distributors to limit the "double 'A' " program, the KRS had chosen a method of meeting the problem which tended to split exhibitor opinion and to allow rental rates to be raised generally.

A point made in the debate was that it would have been possible to deal with the long program evil by making a rule that two "A" films never should be played together. Also suggested in various exhibitor quarters is that the percentage rule should have been made applicable only in the case of such billings. These comments emphasized two things: that exhibitors were willing to cooperate with distributors in controlling program length, but that they wanted the problem handled separately from the permanent problem of rentals.

Major A. J. Gale, leader of the campaign on rentals, told the Council that there would be a conference with the circuits. "If the circuits join us," he said, "we can act as a united front and can tackle any propaganda which is going to mean an increase in film prices. . . . The KRS are out to bleed you. They have inferred that they are going to increase prices in America and we have to stop that happening here, by organization."

Major Gale's reference to prise-raising in America primarily refers to the campaign to increase admissions on your side, about which we have heard from various visitors from New York and the Coast. Suggestions of a similar procedure in England, where theatre prices are substantially higher than in the States, were vigorously opposed by General Secretary Fuller of the CEA in first announcing that what the exhibitor wanted was that less money should go from the box-office to distributors rather than that more should come from patrons.

Comparison of American and British rentals also shows a much higher scale in this country than in the United States. The British program costs on an average 40 per cent of receipts. From such information as we have had from visiting executives, it seems that the American exhibitor's flat rates work out at rather less than half of this.

A British exhibitor comment on this circumstance is that in America the American distributor apparently wishes to recoup his increased production costs by a greater levy on the public, leaving the exhibitor his present profit, while in England he wants to draw extra money at the expense of the exhibitor. It is, of course, a statement from one point of view, and it leaves out of consideration the attempts to apply percentage in America, of which we have heard something, but it gives a picture of our present controversies.

Until the KRS answers the CEA's "no change" ultimatum in reply to its own "all percentage" ultimatum with a third ultimatum (the frequency, on both sides, of these pronunciomentoes suggests that a new word, Proximatum, should be coined for exclusive Wardour Street use), the position is that "All 'A' films on percentage only" remains official distributors' policy. Of course, designed to kill doubling of top features, the policy of itself will do no such thing.

Percentage, on one feature or two, can work out to an actual rental lower than any probable flat price. (There are instances, it may be said in passing, where distributors have been out of pocket for carriage and prints on percentage contracts.) All the KRS policy does do is to standardize percentage as the booking practice of the British trade.

Films Bill Presented

Eustace Stanley, president of the Board of Trade, presented the Cinematograph Bill, providing new quota requirements, to the house of Commons this week and the text was read formally for the first time.

With the exhibitors' ruling body chiefly concerned with the problem of rental prices, an equally important matter has been considered by one of its committees, that concerned with the same new Films Bill. It is understood that

"SPANISH EARTH" BANNED IN BRITAIN

The British Board of Film Censors on Friday banned the propaganda picture, "The Spanish Earth." The film was produced by Joris Ivens with commentary and narration by Ernest Hemingway, American novelist.

The order banning the picture was issued just as delegates to the British Congress of the International Peace Campaign arrived at Central Hall, Westminster, for the picture's first showing in Great Britain.

WARNERS SET TEDDINGTON PLANS

the draft of the association's final statement for the Board of Trade has been completed. It has not been published because, as previously reported, there are still hopes that a joint CEA-Film Group policy may shape after Film Group has considered the CEA suggestions and conferred with that organization.

With agreement already established, in principle, on opposition to the double quota and in advocacy of an official, instead of trade, administering body, there are still many points of difference between exhibitors and producers.

The CEA adheres to its demand for a viewing clause, which the Film Group opposes.

It wants a lower quota, stepped in favour of exhibitors. The Film Group wants the exhibitors' quota increased.

Other points favored by the producers, which may win acceptance by exhibitors are:

Quarterly instead of annual compliance with quota demands. This, it is said, would prevent the release and exhibition of British films en masse in the summer and spread the native product evenly through the year, including the seasons of big takings.

The quota percentage to be based on imported films instead of on the distributor's complete program.

The second suggestion is designed to cover the case of a British distributor handling chiefly the less expensive type of British films. Such a concern might have a program consisting entirely of films costing less than the statutory £15,000; such subjects rank for exhibitor's quota but not for the (distributor's) quota cover for American films. If such a company buys American pictures, it will be required under the present proposals to acquire British films, costing a minimum £15,000 each, in such statutory percentage relation to its total output as may be stipulated in the Bill. The situation created would therefore be that £15,000 British films would, indirectly, be demanded to cover British films costing less than that amount.

The new basis suggested would make "minimum" British coverage necessary only in relation to the American films acquired. As a working example, with four American pictures, such a company, on a 20 per cent quota basis, would want one £15,000 British film. It could handle 12 or more less expensive British films. On the "output" basis, it would be asked for two or three £15,000 pictures. The complexities created by quotas, and by the difference between distributors' and exhibitors' quotas, are well illustrated by this suggestion.

The Double Quota Issue

The essential point of agreement between the CEA and the Film Group is their opposition to the provision that a picture costing £45,000 shall rank double for quota.

Their reasons are interesting. It is argued that such a provision must logically, sooner or later, be extended on an arithmetical basis, and that this would seriously reduce the number of British films. This is clever in a controversial sense. The "arithmetical" argument is that advanced by the KRS for the American interests, and it is logically unassailable. Instead of attempting to assail it, exhibitors and producers are going to make it an argument for their own case, with the advantage that it will support their other plea of "American domination of British production" under the conditions proposed under new legislation.

In knowledgable London quarters, it is thought many sections of the House of Commons will be receptive to this argument as also to the request for an official commission to administer the new Act. Some go so far as to indicate the certainty that a commission will be named.

The Films Bill will be introduced in late November. In the meantime invitations to address meetings of members of Parliament in a committee room of the House of Commons have been addressed to all the trade associations by the British Films Advancement Council, presided over by Lord Strabolgi and now, it is stated, including 86 members in its Parliamentary section.

The BFAC, it already has been recorded, stands for the special brand of reciprocity invented by Mr. Isidore Ostrer, under which American companies would be required to spend on independently made British films a percentage of their receipts in England. It is therefore not surprising that the KRS has refused its invitation. The CEA is considering the matter but is thought unlikely to accept. Labor unions will go along.

Warners will make two or three large pictures for world release at the Teddington Studios, Jack L. Warner said before sailing on the Queen Mary Wednesday. The stories will be selected from the Hollywood schedule and may be "George and Margaret," "The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse" and "Blonde White."

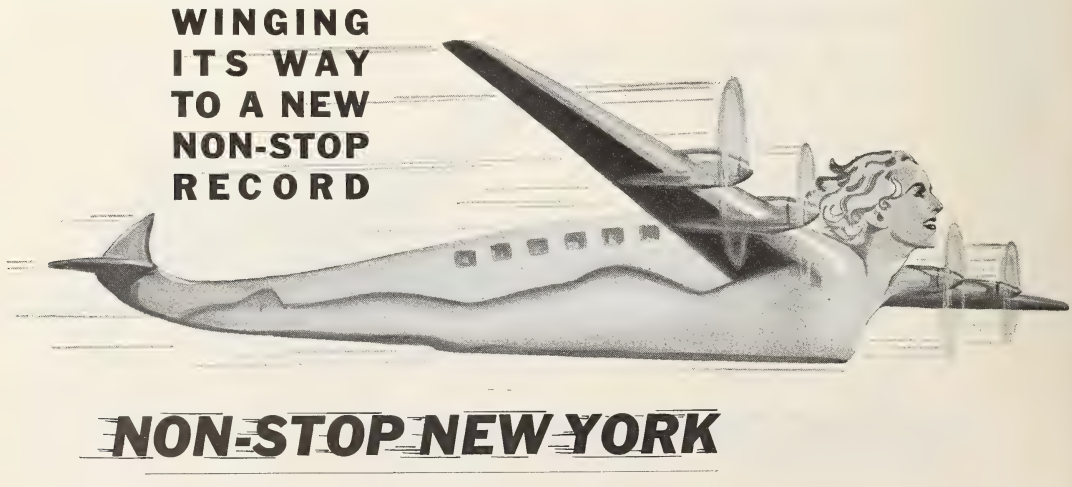
The producer conferred with Leslie Howard and said afterwards that he would make a British picture with him this year, if a story can be agreed upon.

Irving Asher, managing director for Warners' production here, will sail November 17 to confer in the United States on star castings. Lloyd Bacon definitely will direct one in England.

The company will not import technicians; Mr. Warner said the British staff and equipment equals Hollywood's.

Mr. Asher will arrange United States distribution for several current British-made films. Of five submitted, "The Perfect Crime," "Mayfair," "Melody" and "You Live and Learn" have been accepted for American showing and will be played by the Warner theatres.

The cost of next year's output is estimated at from £300,000 to £400,000.



Warner said color would be used in 10 per cent of the output and that this probably would be raised to 25 per cent in a few years.

Filmgoers' League Proposed

Kenneth Nyman, CEA official, suggested the formation of a Filmgoers' League, drawing upon the 20,000,000 regular patrons who attended British film theatres for the purpose of improving film standards and fighting the cost proposals in the impending Films Act.

The suggestion came in the form of a lecture at Golder's Green, when Mr. Nyman attacked the proposed quota on the ground it would reduce the number of films and make British films, British-American.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

WHEN YOU'RE IN LOVE: Grace Moore, Cary Grant—Did not please anyone. Considered by all a poor production.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

Crescent

UNDER STRANGE FLAGS: Tom Keene, Luana Walters—Tom, you let the fellow who played Pancho Villa steal the picture from you. But, it's a honey, even if you did. Doubled this picture with "Renfrew of the Royal Mounted," and what a sweet combination it was! Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 15-16.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

First National

CONFESSION: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—Very ordinary. Story poor. Played October 13-14. Running time, 85 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Oregon. Local patronage.

MR. DODD TAKES THE AIR: Kenny Baker, Jane Wyman—Did a fair business on Family Night and the last night of the serial which was partly instrumental in drawing any extra business. A good little picture for any but your best nights, with enough entertainment to satisfy. Running time, 85 minutes. Played October 4-5.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PENROD AND SAM: Billy Mauch, Frank Craven, Spring Byington—Good kiddies' picture. Saturday night crowd well entertained. Not much for the town folks. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 7.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

PRINCE AND THE PAUPER, THE: Mauch Twins, Errol Flynn—Warners evidently spent a lot of money on this one and it is pretty good, but a very poor grosser in a small town.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

SAN QUENTIN: Pat O'Brien, Humphrey Bogart—A small action picture that deals with prison life. Almost everyone liked this picture. Business very good. Running time, 70 minutes.—Gordon Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SAN QUENTIN: Pat O'Brien, Humphrey Bogart—Grand entertainment for my class of patrons. Very much enjoyed by all. Play it in any spot. Running time, 7 reels. Played September 30.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

Grand National

HEADIN' FOR THE RIO GRANDE: Tex Ritter, Eleanor Stewart—These Ritter westerns are getting better as time goes on. The photography and sound in this feature was very good. Ritter's singing is getting better. He will soon rank with the best of western stars. Running time, 60 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Indiana. Small town patronage.

RENFREW OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED: Jimmy Newill, Carol Hughes—Here's one that will surprise you. Eddie Cantor, so I was told, said this week over the radio that a Mountie story with a singing star looked to him like it was a bit far fetched. But after he saw "Renfrew" he changed his mind. I want to thank you in these columns, Eddie, for the favorable comments you passed upon this subject. We stepped right out and took advantage of your remarks. Running time, 61 minutes. Played October 15-16.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A DAY AT THE RACES: Marx Bros.—Good entertainment for a lot of people. Some don't care for them. Played October 3-5. Running time, 108 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Oregon. Local patronage.

Rockefeller Center, New York

BAD GUY: Bruce Cabot, Virginia Grey—Plenty good picture with a lot of action and swell for the other half of that double bill, or good for your bargain night. Not big enough for your best nights but will satisfy the ordinary show crowd in a small town. Running time, 69 minutes. Played October 9.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BIG CITY: Spencer Tracy, Luise Rainer—A good picture but it didn't draw any more than average business and after this year's hike, the profits were scarcer than an old maid's baby, the theme of this picture. We tried to sell it but it must have been the title, because Spencer Tracy usually does all right. It's better than the average but not too good. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 10-12.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1938: Robert Taylor, Eleanor Powell—A very good musical with a good story and plenty of comedy that didn't click here. In fact, none of the Broadway Melodys have ever done exceptional business here. Neither does Eleanor Powell mean a thing. It's a picture that you can be proud of but I don't think small towners will wax enthusiastic over it. Running time, 110 minutes. Played October 13-15.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FAMILY AFFAIR, A: Lionel Barrymore, Cecilia Parker, Eric Linden—Excellent production that did a good business and they all came out with that Chesterfieldian look (it satisfied). Played October 5.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GOOD EARTH, THE: Paul Muni, Luise Rainer—It didn't do any outstanding business and it didn't please my patrons. Guess they've seen too much hardship and grasshoppers in their own everyday life to enjoy it in a picture. Some great bits of acting and Metro didn't spare the horses on expensive settings, and then it was tinted. If you don't think that sets a picture off just take a look at the next one you show.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MY DEAR MISS ALDRICH: Edna May Oliver, Maureen O'Sullivan, Walter Pidgeon—A good picture that did average Sunday business. Only picture I could get for this date and it satisfied enough to silence the complaints. Had some excellent short subjects and got by nicely. Nothing to be afraid of and the newspaper story is good. Running time, 76 minutes. Played October 3.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PARNELL: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Edna May Oliver—Good picture, but not so much at the box office. Played October 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

TOPPER: Constance Bennett, Cary Grant, Roland Young—There's plenty of fun and the picture is different but get them in for the first reel or it don't mean a thing. Drew just about average business and got plenty of laughs, so that spells a lot of satisfaction. Played September 13-14.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WAY OUT WEST: Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy—The best yet from this pair of nuts. Played October 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Paramount

EASY LIVING: Jean Arthur, Edward Arnold—A very funny picture that pleased a small crowd on the first rainy Saturday we have had since way last spring. A few giggles, then some good old belly laughs, the kind that tell you they are enjoying your show. Good for any spot but I couldn't get it right where I wanted it. Running time, 85 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FORLORN RIVER: Larry Crabbe, June Martel—A good western with plenty of action and shoot-'em-up in large quantities, but just the stuff for the chewers and spitters on Saturday night. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 9.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HIGH, WIDE AND HANDSOME: Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott—We hit big snowstorm, rain and intense fog with this swell and well produced special which nicked the gross but we received scores of favorable comments and the picture is there and will satisfy any day you play it. Running time, 115 minutes. —E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa. General patronage.

HOTEL HAYWIRE: Leo Carrillo, Mary Carlisle—Nice little comedy enjoyed very much by a bargain night audience which turned out in extra numbers.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Marx Bros.—Still plenty good and a good print. Good time to play this during football season.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Alabama. General patronage.

I MET HIM IN PARIS: Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas, Robert Young—A very good comedy type picture that did not do so well here, possibly because it rained all day the Sunday we played it.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Martha Raye, Bob Burns—Three cheers to Paramount for this one. They liked it, and, oh boy, the business this will do. National Screen should also be complimented on their trailer, which was better than a lot of shorts we have played. —Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Bob Burns, Martha Raye, Rufe Davis—This has what it takes. Swellelegant. Played October 8, 1937.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Bob Burns, Martha Raye—Fine picture. Drew lots better than anything in a long time.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Alabama. General patronage.

NIGHT OF MYSTERY: Roscoe Karns, Ruth Coleman—Everything happens here and it is just the stuff the double bills crave to balance the program. We used this with a western and it gave the big hat boys a night of thrills. Running time, 80 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE: William Boyd, George Hayes—I only played this one night and these Hopalong Cassidys are good enough to play two days in most spots. My patrons like them. They are well produced and, while they don't break any records, the pictures gross average or better. The only class of pictures that we buy from Paramount that are worth the film rental. Running time, 72 minutes. Played October 3.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

OUTCAST, THE: Warren William, Karen Morley —Pretty slow tempo and a poor grosser.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

RUSTLERS' VALLEY: William Boyd, George Hayes—I have yet to play a poor Hopalong Cassidy western and they draw average or better. They usually have a good story, cast and direction, with excellent photography, and people who don't like the horse operas will come to see these. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 18.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RUSTLERS' VALLEY: William Boyd, George Hayes—A natural with us. Everybody happy. Play it if you like westerns for your situation.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SOPHIE LANG GOES WEST: Gertrude Michael, Larry Crabbe—Only suitable for a double feature. Running time, 60 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa. General patronage.

SOULS AT SEA: Gary Cooper, George Raft—What a picture. It is a very gruesome subject but how it was played. Raft has been out too long. Let's see more of him. All in all it comes within a short step of "Captains Courageous" and that is going some. Play it for all it is worth and that is saying a lot. Running time, 90 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Indiana. Small town patronage.

TURN OFF THE MOON: Eleanore Whitney, Johnny Downs, Charlie Ruggles—A very enjoyable musical program that proved to be real entertainment. Business good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WAIKIKI WEDDING: Bing Crosby, Martha Raye, Bob Burns, Shirley Ross—A good picture that pleased everyone and did very well at the box office.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

Republic

ROUND-UP TIME IN TEXAS: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—This Autry is neither about a round-up nor about Texas; it's about diamonds and Africa. Notwithstanding all the good reports I have read about these Autrys, I find they will not get the young couples and girls in and hence do not hold up on Friday of a Friday-Saturday run, although this is not a spot where any western goes over very well.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

UNDERCOVER MAN: Johnny Mack Brown—Fine western star, fair western.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Alabama. General patronage.

RKO Radio

MAKE A WISH: Bobby Breen, Basil Rathbone—An excellent little picture with a small little star. Business good. Running time, 74 minutes.—Gordon Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

—STANLEY BENSON,
Rossville Theatre,
Rossville, Ill.

MEET THE MISSUS: Helen Broderick, Victor Moore—Very good picture that was much liked. Action and comedy that held the attention of our patrons from beginning to end.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SATURDAY'S HEROES: Van Heflin, Marian Marsh—Pretty good football picture that fell flat at the box office. It seems as if the old folks despise football pictures. No more for me for some time to come. Running time, 70 minutes.—Gordon Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SUPER SLEUTH: Jack Oakie, Ann Sothern—Full of action and comedy. Was greatly liked by our patrons. Action and comedy all through and very interesting. Played October 2.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

BORNEO: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson.—Long dragged out travelogue that they walked out on. Running time, 75 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea—Our patrons aren't lovers of musicals so we only enjoyed normal business. Personally liked it very much.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea, Walter Brennan, Walter Catlett—Perfect film fare for the average film fan. It has practically everything that makes a box office smash, good acting, tense situations, music, dancing, romance and comedy. Walter Brennan as Newt Holley comes through with a performance that eclipses the acting of Barbara Stanwyck and Joel McCrea. Walter Catlett and Katherine DeMille also add their bit to making this one of the season's finest achievements. The Hall Johnson's Choir's rendition of "St. Louis Blues" is a masterpiece. Running time, 95 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, New Jersey. Prison patronage.

DOCTOR BULL (Reissue): Will Rogers, Marian Nixon—These Will Rogers reissues are getting us a little extra money on weekends.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

GREAT HOSPITAL MYSTERY, THE: Sally Blane, Thomas Beck—About on par with other mystery stories and fair entertainment for the second half of your weekend double bill. Running time, 56 minutes. Played October 16.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED OUT WEST: Paul Kelly, Judith Allen—Poor picture. So far we have played four "Harold Bell Wright" and not a one was any good. Running time, 58 minutes.—Gordon Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

KING GEORGE VI CORONATION: Color Special —The only time that I felt like I had been robbed without a gun in my ribs was when a salesman forced me to buy this thing at a feature price. Please, mister, give me my money back—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT COLLEGE: Ritz Brothers, Gloria Stuart—It's a laugh provoking knockout and you'll not be caring about profits while the show is on, but I venture to say that it will do a lot of business where these boys are known. We didn't do much but maybe played it too hot, and then it seems that business isn't all that the producers promised after we had a crop. Played October 6-8.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOVE UNDER FIRE: Loretta Young, Don Ameche —A very good picture and this Don Ameche is getting to mean something at the box office. The story is right up to the minute and we tied it in with the headlines to put it over nicely. Book it and you won't be sorry at the business done. Played September 12.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ONE MILE FROM HEAVEN: Claire Trevor, Sally Blane, Bill Robinson—Well liked on Pal Night. Played October 13.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

SEVENTH HEAVEN: Simone Simon, James Stewart—An excellent picture enjoyed by everyone who saw it. Liked so well some came to see it again the second night, which is unusual. Every character did a fine piece of work. Good Sunday-Monday-Tuesday business. A picture deserving of your best playing time. Running time, 102 minutes.—Frank Ross, Majestic Theatre, Joliet, Ill. General patronage.

SLAVE SHIP: Wallace Beery, Warner Baxter—Another Fox picture that didn't gross expenses. Too gruesome for the ladies, I guess, and that means that the men stay at home, too. A wonderful picture with some excellent scenic shots, a fine cast and good directing, but it just didn't jell. Running time, 92 minutes. Played September 27-28.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SLAVE SHIP: Wallace Beery, Warner Baxter—Not so hot. Not a special by about $60.00. Played October 8-9. Running time, 92 minutes.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Oregon. Local patronage.

SLAVE SHIP: Wallace Beery, Warner Baxter—This is generally rated fairly high but I do not consider it above an average picture. Some may. Good spots in it and quite a lot of action. Played September 25.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

THINK FAST, MR. MOTO: Peter Lorre, Virginia Field—Nice programer that will please in any spot. Well staged, good story and comedy. Extended runs? No. Running time, 65 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

THIS IS MY AFFAIR: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Taylor, Victor McLaglen—First and middle of this one was full of action and comedy. Toward the middle the picture slowed up and a great deal of it was quite dark. Why do the producers have such dark scenes that you can not really see much of anything. Dark scenes are no good.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

WAKE UP AND LIVE: Walter Winchell, Ben Bernie, Alice Faye, Jack Haley—Good picture and fair grosser. Winchell's chatter was a little too fast for our non-microphonic to register clearly, so I hope they slow him down on the next one.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

WEE WILLIE WINKIE: Shirley Temple, Victor McLaglen—A swell picture even without Shirley Temple, but it didn't draw enough to cover expenses, but we liked it and paid Fox for the privilege of looking at it. Maybe it would have drawn better at some other time, but her last picture didn't, so am inclined to think that the little lady is slipping and about to go into a big slide. Running time, 97 minutes. Played September 29-30.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WIFE, DOCTOR AND NURSE: Loretta Young, Warner Baxter—Here's one that will do your heart good. Give it extended runs and sit back and listen to box office click. In any spot, grand picture.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

WIFE, DOCTOR AND NURSE: Warner Baxter, Loretta Young, Virginia Bruce—If this isn't up among the first ten best, then it will be in a runner-up position. A really worthwhile picture that will stand up on your best days. We only played it one day but did a very good business and know that it would have done better for two or three days. Book it and boost it; you won't be sorry.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

United Artists

DODSWORTH: Walter Huston, Ruth Chatterton—I finally got around to play this picture and it did about the business I expected of it. Very little.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

ELEPHANT BOY: Native Cast—This English-made picture was liked by some who enjoy jungle pictures. It did not have much of a plot and was only an average grosser.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

GARDEN OF ALLAH, THE: Marlene Dietrich, Charles Boyer—Same report as on "Dodsworth."—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

STELLA DALLAS: Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles, Anne Shirley—Musicials may come and musicals may go, but pictures like "Stella Dallas" will go on forever. Any favorable comments I might add to what has already been said by the boys would only be superfluous. Samuel Goldwyn, I salute you. Running time, 104 minutes. October 17.—Harry M. Palmer, Temple Court Theatre, Washington, Ind. General patronage.

YOU ONLY LIVE ONCE: Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda—This picture failed to do business and received much adverse criticism. Would recommend it. Story is not what our people like.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

MY MAN GODFREY: William Powell, Carole Lombard—I went back and picked this one up because I had seen it and I knew it was good. The picture did a very good business and satisfied, even drew in patrons who had seen it before. Hope Universal can make some more as good this year. If you haven't played it, get it some way and give your patrons a treat.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

OH, DOCTOR!: Edward Everett Horton—Very good comedy. Fair draw on bargain nights.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Alabama. General patronage.

ROAD BACK, THE: John King, Richard Cromwell, "Slim" Summerville, Andy Devine—A great picture; one everyone should see, but don't want to. Poor at the box office. Think the reason is because our people don't want anything with war in it, even though it preaches against war. Played October 7-9.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

WINGS OVER HONOLULU: Wendy Barrie, Ray Milland—We would have gone to town with this one had we not struck our first snowstorm and bad weather. Give us more airplane pictures and we will make money with them. Running time, 78 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

BENGAL TIGER, THE: Barton MacLane, June Travis—This old picture did not draw very well on a Saturday, although it was good and enjoyed by those who like circus pictures.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN: George Brent, Beverly Roberts—This picture will still do business and make some money if it can be bought right.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

KID GALAHAD: Edward G. Robinson, Bette Davis, Wayne Morris, Humphrey Bogart—Acting of stars good. Story good. No draw here. Played September 30-October 2.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

KID GALAHAD: Edward G. Robinson, Bette Davis—This picture pleased those who came. Probably one reason business was so poor was that Warner's trailer was so poor, for although this picture is primarily a fight picture, they tried to make you believe in the trailer that it was to be a gangster picture with Edward G. Robinson, the usual hard-boiled, half-pint tuffy.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

SINGING MARINE, THE: Dick Powell, Doris Weston—Played this straight percentage and sure glad I did. This boy has slipped plenty in this town and Warner's musicals have all had so much of the same in them that they are hard to sell. Would have lost plenty on this with a big guarantee, so use your own judgment. Running time, 105 minutes. Played September 15-17.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SINGING MARINE, THE: Dick Powell, Doris Weston—The best Dick Powell picture for some time. Doris Weston well liked. A much better team than the previous pictures. Played October 10-12.—Mrs. O. A. Jensen, Silver Hill Theatre, Oshkosh, Neb. Small town patronage.

SINGING MARINE, THE: Dick Powell, Doris Weston—Well liked and drew pretty well.—Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Ill. General patronage.

VARSITY SHOW: Dick Powell, Fred Waring and Orchestra—A try-to-be-big picture that was cold. Lacked audience appeal. Got by on extended run with small gross and pleased generally. They cannot walk out on this one. It's a good production. Running time, 120 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

Short Features

Educational

FARMER ALFALFA IN TRAILER LIFE: Terry-Toons—It wasn't so hot, but the kids like cartoons, so we give them one on most every show.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FUN'S FUN: Jefferson Machamer and His Gags and Gals—A good little two reeler, a little different from the average. Jefferson Machamer draws his specialty, "Beautiful Girls," and interwoven throughout are some good specialties in the song and comedy line. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, New Jersey. Prison patronage.

KIKO'S CLEANING DAY: Terry-Toons—Just another cartoon and that is complimenting it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOVE IN ARMS: Two-Reel Comedies—It is a good comedy and will satisfy.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

POT LUCK: Song and Comedy Hits—Fair.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RED HOT MUSIC: Terry-Toons—A good Terry-Toon featuring Kiko the Kankaroo. A broadcasting cartoon band gets so "hot" they burn the studio up. Runnng time, 7 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, New Jersey. Prison patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BOSKO AND THE CANNIBALS: Harman-Ising—Very good colored cartoon. I think they are as good as any on the market and the recording is perfect.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DEXTERITY: Pete Smith Specialties—Very interesting. Worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FLORAL JAPAN: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—FitzPatrick Travel Talks are the best of anybody's. The coloring in this short was exceptional and was enjoyed by all. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

GLIMPSES OF PERU: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—A very good traveltalk and the color is swell. It's a dandy trip for a very nominal sum.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

NIGHT 'N GALES: Our Gang—My patrons like these comedies and they most always satisfy. I think Metro has some good shorts, but can't brag too much on their features.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

OLYMPIC SKI CHAMPIONS: Pete Smith Specialties—Well, they've had everybody but the popcorn boy on skiis this summer. Now he's gone and made him a pair and is waiting for a snow.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ROAMIN' HOLIDAY: Our Gang—These MGM

COMFORT: THE GREATEST STAR OF THEM ALL

shorts are very good. Enjoyed by adults and children. This one was extra good. Running time, 10 minutes. —A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

SOAK THE POOR: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—These "Crime Doesn't Pay" series are very good and will sure bolster up a weak feature, of which there are plenty regardless of the promises.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SPORTS ON ICE: Pete Smith Specialties—A good sport reel, but we've seen Sonja skate before. Those tobogganists take the cake and the camera sure got some shots of their spills. I'd say play it cause they'll like it plenty.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SPORTS ON ICE: Pete Smith Specialties—This is the finest sport reel we have run in a long time. It shows the winter Olympic sports of last season's games and is a knockout. The run of the four-man sled race is as exciting as anything we have ever seen. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

WAYWARD PUPS: Harman-Ising—A dandy colored cartoon and these are on a par with the rest, including Mickey Mouse.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?: M-G-M Miniatures—Very good. Play it. That's "what we think."—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Paramount

BLUE VELVET MUSIC: Headliners—A good band act and it will satisfy.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BLUE VELVET MUSIC: Headliners—A very good orchestra number.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

DING DONG DOGGIE: Betty Boop Cartoons—Betty Boop Cartoons are surpassing their last season in makeup. In fact, Betty Boop is getting better and Popeye is getting worse. Good cartoons for the kids. Running time, seven minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

HOSPITALITY: Popeye the Sailor—Our patrons like Popeye and these cartoons are usually very funny and this is no exception.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

IMPRACTICAL JOKER, THE: Betty Boop Cartoons—Good enough Betty Boop cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

KING SOCCER: Grantland Rice Sportlights—It is a fast game and this Sportlight throws plenty of light on the subject. A good addition to your program. I only wish the features were as good as the short subjects and priced accordingly.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

KNOCK, KNOCK, WHO'S THERE?: Headliners—Don't laugh because we played this so late, but it was so old that it revived pleasant memories and is really a good short.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT CLUB: Popeye the Sailor—A good cartoon and Popeye certainly does his stuff with his can of spinach as the big help. They please, but should at the price.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

NOBODY HOME: Paragraphics—Good short subject.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ON THE NOSE: Grantland Rice Sportlights—If you like dogs, this will make you see every show and I know it satisfied plenty of my customers.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PANELESS WINDOW WASHER, THE: Popeye the Sailor—This is certainly a funny Popeye cartoon and worth a top spot on your best nights.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIALS: These usually have some subjects that are very interesting and are swell to start the show.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PUDGY TAKES A BOW-WOW: Betty Boop Cartoons—Very good Betty Boop Cartoon comedy.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM OF THE GAME: Grantland Rice Sportlights—These Grantland Rice Sportlights are all very good and they please most patrons.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SAILOR SHORTY: Paragraphics—The kids get a kick out of these monkey comedies and we like to satisfy them. These do it and there's nothing more to say.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

NEW REPORTERS FROM ILLINOIS

From Illinois come two new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week. They are:

Stanley Benson, Rossville Theatre, Rossville, Illinois.

Frank Ross, Majestic Theatre, Joliet, Illinois.

Returning to the reportorial staff is Mayme P. Musselman of the Princess theatre at Lincoln, Kansas, after an absence since the first of the year.

TWILIGHT ON THE TRAIL: Screen Songs—This one is all right. A good musical addition to a program.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHERE SNOW IS KING: Paragraphics—Well, we finally got those ski jumpers over that mountain. It seems like every company has tried it all summer, because all we've been getting lately is these guys sliding down the mountain.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century - Fox

BONE BENDER PARADE: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—An excellent short subject and worth a good spot on anybody's program.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SKI PARADE, THE: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Oh, Boy! Them same guys are sliding down that same mountain and how thrilling.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

CAN'T THINK OF IT: Ken Murray, Oswald—A comedy without any laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

CHECK YOUR CASH: Vitaphone Novelties—These Vitaphone Novelties are very good and this one better than the rest. Play it any day in the week. Very interesting and novel. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

CRADLE OF CIVILIZATION: Colortour Adventures—Very good colored reel. Running time, 1 reel.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

EMIL COLEMAN AND HIS BAND: Melody Masters—Very good entertainment. What a chance to give rural movie goers some real entertainment if they would play popular music. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

GHOST TO GHOST HOOKUP, A: Radio Ramblers—Very poor entertainment.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

I WANNA BE A SAILOR: Merrie Melodies—These cartoons are getting better and better as time goes on. This was very good as the coloring and story is much better than the earlier issues. Running time, 10 minutes.--A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

JACQUES FRAY AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—These Melody bands are made on split recording and do not go over at all on our machines. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

MAIL AND FEMALE: Ken Murray—Very poor. Running time, 2 reels.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

MAIL AND FEMALE: Broadway Brevities—Our audience ate this up. One of the outstanding comedies of the year.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MOVIE MANIA: Broadway Brevities—A very funny comedy with Dave Apollon going to town. Played this and "Sunny Round-up" on the same program with a weak feature, but made a good program. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

NICKEL LOWDOWN: Charles Kemper—A good single vaudeville reel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PEARL OF THE PACIFIC: Colortour Adventure—We cannot recommend this too highly for any situation. You may rest assured, when booking this subject, you're giving your audience a real treat.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Can.

PICTORIAL REVIEW, No. 1: This is the first Vitagraph pictorial we have run and if they all are as good as this one we have no kicks. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

PLAY STREET: Cherry and June Preisser, Duke McHale—A swell short. The Preisser Sisters, Duke McHale and others all add their bit to make this a laughable, singable, danceable musical. Will pep up any program. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

PLAY STREET: Preisser Sisters—Very entertaining Broadway Brevity. This series is always good. Running time, 21 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

POETS OF THE ORGAN: Mr. & Mrs. Jesse Crawford—A fine reel with the Crawfords playing the pipe organ. Exceptional.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PORKY'S ROMANCE: Looney Tunes—Porky cartoons are not in a class with the balance of product turned out by this company. This one is as poor as the balance of the series. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind.

PORKY OF THE NORTH WOODS: Looney Tunes—It is a plenty good cartoon and the kids like them, so we will book all we can get bought.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RIMAC ORCHESTRA, THE: Melody Masters—Good, but doesn't have very wide appeal. South American music. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn.

SUNDAY ROUND-UP, THE: Broadway Brevities—Very pretty, with some swell cowboy singing. You won't go wrong dating this one in with any feature. This will hold up.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SWEET SIOUX: Merrie Melodies—These Merrie Melodies cartoons are very good. This one with the touch of football and the Martha Raye episode is exceptionally good. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE RIMAC ORCHESTRA IN A MUSICAL JOURNEY TO SOUTH AMERICA: Melody Masters—They changed costumes and setting with the music to fit the country and it was a swell musical novelty band act.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Serials

Universal

WILD WEST DAYS: John Mack Brown—On Chapter Five and going strong. No dull moments and plenty of action and little cutback on following chapters.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa. General patronage.

Republic

PAINTED STALLION, THE: Ray Corrigan, Hoot Gibson—A good serial that held up well through the run. It seems like a western serial can get the job done better and I guess they don't have to fake so much action.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Nine Chorines Signed

Nine girls in the dance ensemble of Paramount's "Double or Nothing" have been given six-month contracts by the company and will be trained for dramatic roles. The girls are Norah Gale, Alma Ross, Joyce Mathews, Carol Parker, Louise Seidel, Marie Burton, Harriette Hadeen, Dorothy White and Lola Jensen.

Dunlap in New York

Scott R. Dunlap, vice-president in charge of production for Monogram, is in New York for conferences with W. Ray Johnston, president, regarding story material and production schedule for the 1938-39 season.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

Participation in Outside Activities

Just gather yourself a group of representative showmen and it's a cinch to start an old time political argument on how much a manager should participate in activities directly outside the theatre. One side will immediately hold that the manager should be regarded as a prime mover in civic drives and other meritorious local movements, since projects having to do with the progress of a community concern the box-office as much as any other enterprise. The same side will be positive that membership in lunch clubs, participation in fraternal affairs and socializing with the city's keymen places the theatreman in a position to call upon local leaders for cooperation in putting over campaigns; that these contacts are highly important in maintaining and strengthening the theatre's goodwill and general standing.

The dissenters will proclaim and as decidedly that the responsibility of day-in-and-day-out physical management requires the closest attention of the theatreman, allowing little time for shouldering any considerable part of duties attendant upon outside doings, worthy though they may be. Further, points out the other side, merchant tieups, newspaper contests and other cooperative exploitations should be mutually beneficial and as such are to be sold strictly on their merits without the necessity of bringing in the personal element. Thus, time away from the theatre, if any, is to be devoted solely to the consummation of such tieins and other duties of operation. In the final analysis the other side refuses to become overly impressed with the necessity of goodwill building, preferring to attract the public through the strength of their programs, rather than the community standing of the manager.

It's a merry free-for-all and in your chairman's opinion, neither side may claim complete victory. If every manager everywhere could be depended upon to rate himself accordingly, there would be little room for argument. Where the theatreman has enough savvy, experience and balance to know just how much time and effort to give without encroaching upon the duties he is paid for, one finds a situation satisfactory to his superiors and his townspeople. There have been and there are instances of theatremen who combine both jobs in a manner that brings unusual commendation. In the recent mails is reported one, for example, that deserves immediate mention.

For many years, Round Tabler Joe LaRose has been a conspicuous figure in Detroit's theatre and civic life, most recently at the Eastown Theatre, from where he has reported campaigns to these pages. Taking over operation of the local Roosevelt Theatre, his employers, Messrs. Wisper and Wetsman, fell in readily with the proposal of the neighborhood's prominents and leading newspaper to mark the occasion with an official welcome to LaRose, as the new manager. The event inaugurated a business-boosting campaign with a giant street parade and other civic divertissements. It was a week of high festivity and as a result the theatre's new operators received a flying start in gaining the goodwill of the community. The merchants, too, must have benefited and it all revolved around the smiling Joe whose activities on behalf of city as well as theatre were so signally and profitably honored.

Obviously, every manager does not have the opportunities nor the background to spread his wings so widely over community and theatre. But since the advantages of outside contacts are not to be brushed aside lightly it should be good business to encourage favorably situated theatremen to look upon such civic endeavors as a means to and in bringing in greater grosses.

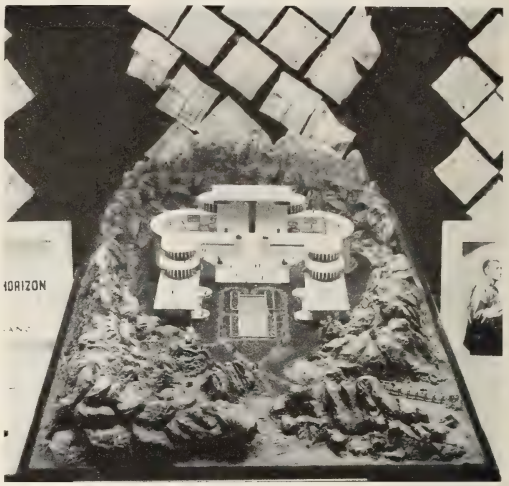
IT'S NOT BEING DONE THESE DAYS

From a keen-eyed scout down in the Southland, a note anent our recent "Witness for the Defense" editorial. "You've started something," he writes. "The boys down here are actually beginning to admit that grosses may be larger when pictures are SOLD."

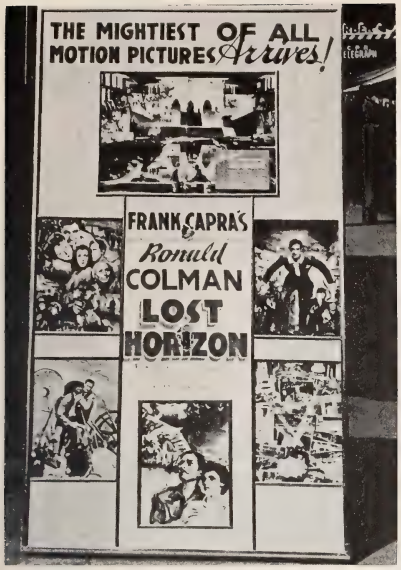
The theatreman who sits back and leaves it all to his bookings to bring in the money is much like the optimistic diner who ordered seafood, figuring to pay for his meal with the pearl he expected to find in the oysters.

A. Mike Pogge



Included among the September First Mention winners for an effective job of work on "Devil Is Driving," Manager E. Wm. Sparr put together a lot of slants for his date at the Voge, East Chicago, Ind. Top street stunt was promotion of strategically placed billboard, lettered by devil in costume and described in full elsewhere in this section.

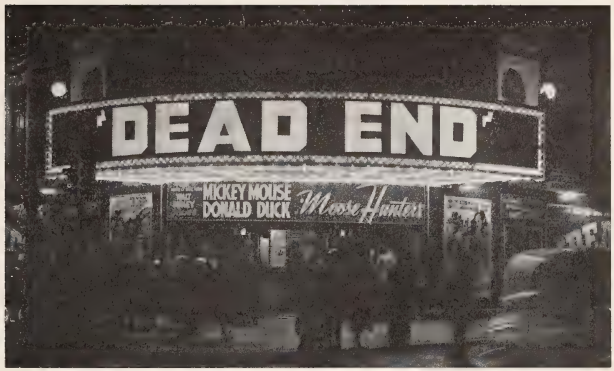
Folks who caught Miss Miami going over 20 miles per hour in the fancy Cord promoted by Manager Austin Moon, earned tickets to see "Double or Nothing" at the Colony, Miami Beach. Above shot showing the girl passing over the ducats to local traffic officer was deemed of sufficient news value to be planted in the local dailies.



The far-reaching influence of Hollywood on fashion is indicated by display arranged with smart London shop for tiein executed by Edmund Quarry on "Woman Chases Man" at the Pavilion, in the British metropolis. Blowups of Miriam Hopkins and theatre card made up the center of the exhibit with reproductions of gowns worn by the star in the picture tied in to the showing.

Round Table in Pictures

Promotion of Chinese merchandise was the occasion for the co-operation arranged with leading department store by Manager Leo Young, on "Lost Horizon," at the Strand, Portland, Me. Miniature of the famed Shangri-La set was planted as a centerpiece for a handkerchief display. Further details of Young's First Mention campaign will be found elsewhere in this section.



Bannered boat made all the Havana beaches for exploitation on "La Mujer Marcada" (Marked Woman) for date at the Encanto and Riviera theatres. Campaign was handled by Warner branch manager, Basilio de Armas.

Window displays at American Airlines ticket offices were planted for date on "Something to Sing About" at the New York Globe. Tiein was made with enlargements showing Cagney travelling in one of the liners. . . . To right is pictured front at the Queen's Theatre, Hong Kong, China, arranged by Manager Terry C. W. Leung for "Stowaway." Display included animated figures representing Temple and boys in opening scene, figures moving to Chinese music. Exhibit was illuminated at night.

Effective was A-board display made up by Manager C. T. Spencer, Capitol, Hamilton, Can., for "Lost Horizon," all art taken from press book. Colors, blue and white, pictures framed with silver moulding. . . . Largest letters used on a marquee in Philadelphia, four feet high, were said to be those at the Aldine, for date on "Dead End." Lighted with orange-amber lamps, sign could be seen from a distance of four blocks.

QUICK REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Premiere

For the southwestern premiere of "Stella Dallas" at the Interstate Palace, Dallas, Tex., Walter Henshel in advance planted tinted blowup life-size cutout of Barbara Stanwyck dressed in chiffon dress leaning against table in foyer. Concealed fans played on the cutout, keeping the costume in almost constant motion, creating in effect an animation.

Celebrities attending the opening included Mayor George Spregue, who made an address of welcome over p.a. system set up in front. Band Leader Phil Harris and ballet girls from the Pan-American Exposition, members of the local Gold Star Mothers and others also attended. Newsreel camera set up in front of theatre recorded the vent and photographers from all newspapers were present.

Local girl dressed in costume worn by the star in making the picture visited hotel lobbies, drug stores, cafes and department stores during peak hours distributing cards reading, "See me at the Palace; signed, Stella Dallas."

Three Stooges

In a nationwide campaign with Pillsbury's grocery store outlets, Columbia is tying in "The Three Stooges" comedies with national newspaper, radio advertising and premiums together with a special kiddie matinee plan of presentation in theatres. One of the features is a toy known as the "Three Stooges moving picture machine," for giveaway distribution to lucky ticket holders.

Chauffeur Critic

Jack Simons, Loew's Poli, Hartford, Conn. for "Big City" arranged with movie critic of the Times to permit a taxicab driver to act as critic for the paper. Driver gave it a good review and paper additional story on the stunt.

CHAMP. MAKES P. A. FOR BENEFIT SHOW

Coincident with his return to Omaha, Johnny Goodman, amateur golf champion, was prevailed upon by Bill Miskell of the Orpheum to make a personal appearance during "Topper" engagement in connection with a benefit show to aid the Bee-News milk fund. As a result, reports Ted Emerson, paper front-paged the story, with follow-ups on editorial, sports and theatre pages.

Teaser Ads

Running in advance of "Mountain Music," Charles Gibson, Gibson Theatre, Greenville, Mich., ran teaser ads in local dailies with copy reading "Lost—a memory. If found, please return to Gibson Theatre. If I don't find out who I am, I won't know whether I'm married to Martha Raye or not." Bazooka contest was held at matinee with prizes going to winners, and for marquee Gibson used large cutouts of Raye and Burns with caption "The bride and groom of 'Waikiki Wedding' go honeymooning in Arkansas."

Dancing Schools

To usher in "Gangway" at the Lafayette Theatre, Buffalo, Manager George McKenna and publicist Dick Walsh circularized all dancing schools and teachers of the city suggesting a matinee party for pupils in order to observe the new steps as introduced by Jessie Matthews. Newspaper space included layout in the Buffalo Times showing series of dancing poses of the star, fashion and art layout plus half page in roto section of Sunday Courier Express, and radio announcements were made daily.

Candid Shots

Traffic stopper for "Topper" was used by Bill Miskell, Orpheum, Omaha, with masked girl in bathing suit placed in window of leading store taking candid shots of individuals in crowds that gathered. Pictures were developed and posted on board in same window with copy to effect that all those who identified themselves would receive guest tickets to the show. Window was also dressed with photos and displays from the picture.

Remote Control

Ghosts walked into Santa Barbara recently and trekked their phantom way to a mike planted in the lobby of the Granada by Bill Hendricks for stunt on "Topper." Promptly at 7:30 when all good ghosts are supposed to walk, footmen assisted invisible premiere guests—Hollywood stars—from their cars and escorted them to the mike where a more "solidified" person acted as emsee.

Announcer introduced the "invisible stars" to the assembled crowd, the "spirits" acknowledging the greetings by remote control, voices supplied by local boys and girls selected to impersonate the guests. Among the celebrities who attended the premiere (in spirit) were Mae West, Greta Garbo, Bing Crosby, Robert Taylor, Clark Gable, et al. Stunt was advertised by Hendricks as a "Spookywood Premier" listing the stars that would appear in spirit and papers ran stories on the opening.

Model Hostesses

Cocktail party for critics and advance showing of "Toast of New York" ushered in the date at the RKO Palace, Columbus, with Johnnie Barcroft, publicist, promoting twelve department store models to act as hostess at the shindig. One of the girls was chosen as "The Toast of Columbus" to make personal appearances at night clubs where she was introduced by the bandleaders. All bands were supplied with orchestrations, music stores with counter displays and radio street reporter based his questions for the day on the picture.

Theatre party for old folks from the county home was sponsored by the theatre in conjunction with the Columbus Dispatch and brought additional newspaper space. Four times daily announcements were made at national Air Show "You are now seeing the toast of the nation's flyers, see etc." and hydrogen-filled balloons carrying ducats were released.

Philatelics

Ray Bell, publicist Loew's Theatres, Washington, D. C., passes along the tip that National Stamp Week is to be observed November 15th to 20th. Ray has arranged for a display of stamps by the Washington Collectors' Club, which will notify its membership of the exhibit in the Capitol Lobby. Doubtless there are stamp clubs in each city or enough people interested in philately to sponsor such an exhibit locally.

CIVIC HEADS FOUND COOPERATIVE BY SEPTEMBER "FIRSTS" WINNERS

World Premiere and Safety Week Campaigns Endorsed by Local Community Officials; Unusual Newspaper Publicity Obtained

In addition to the two First Mention certificates awarded in the Quigley September Competitions for campaigns on feature attractions the same honor was also voted for an entry on a short subject "Pigskin Champions," put over by Manager V. G. Geisel, Orpheum, Green Bay, Wis. It was particularly appropriate that the world premiere of the picture be put on in Green Bay since this is the home of the famed Packers, around which the Pete Smith subject was built. With this arranged some months back, Geisel went to work to build up as much interest in the showing for the September date.

Not the least of the exploitation was built around Pete Smith, whose personal contact with the coach and players during the making of the picture was utilized for local and state publicity. Geisel arranged for Smith to forward letters and send personal letters to officers of the Packer organization, newspapers, etc., which landed space in many Wisconsin papers.

The local press of course cooperated enthusiastically, the publicity including a number of page one shots taken from scene stills of the picture showing the players in action. Special trailer was used over two-week period prior to the opening of picture, in addition a snipe news flash was inserted into the regular newsreels prior to the opening.

Man-on-Street Broadcast

Window displays were installed weeks in advance and special lobby display was also used, as was a marquee valance advertising the production. Local radio station in its "Man-on-the-street" broadcast interviewed Packer players and advertised the picture. Arrangements were made with the Packer officials to have the stars make personal appearances at the theatre for the premiere and at other situations nearby after the picture was showing.

Publicity stories appearing in the Green Bay Gazette were later sent to weekly and other daily newspapers in the trading areas. Window displays advertising the team and the short subject were installed in sporting goods stores and other business houses and signs and banners used on street cars and buses.

City Cooperates with Sparr For "Devil" Safety Campaign

The exploitation possibilities in the safety angles on "Devil Is Driving" were so utilized by Manager E. William Sparr for his date at the Voge, East Chicago, Ind., on a campaign put over with the full cooperation of civic authorities, lunch clubs, American Legion Posts, Safety Council, etc. Sparr arranged with the Mayor to proclaim a safety week during the time the picture was to be shown and in addition to the traffic drive merchants were also enlisted for special sales days.

The widespread aid given the theatreman enabled him to cover the city with placards on telephone poles, stop lights, etc., and follow this up with bumper strips carrying the title. Cards were also tacked around schools, post offices, railroad intersections, and even the churches were prevailed upon to aid the good cause. So that the motorists could not miss the general idea, the authorities allowed Sparr to stencil dangerous traffic corners with three-foot caution letters followed by the title. To make sure the entire town would know about the date, Sparr had three girls working ahead, house-to-house, to obtain testimonials.

The advantages of the safety drive were also employed by the theatreman to promote one of the best locations in the downtown area for a bulletin board. Sparr arranged for a sign company to spot and cut in the letters on the board which had originally been scaled by the theatre sign artist. Then the snapper for the stunt was to have a local sign man dressed in "devil" costume finish the board. This took three days and of course attracted all the attention Sparr hoped for.

Sparr also tied into all the publicity of the national Soapbox Derby by naming a similar local event after the Mayor and having each entrant wear a devil's mask. And of course the street parade to emphasize tiein was not neglected. Bannered autos, boys carrying theatre signs, representation by Boy Scout patrols and others were included. Another ingenious stunt by Sparr was his ability to convince the city council of the benefits of a loud speaker to be used by traffic officer at downtown corner. Officer used the mike to call individual attention to traffic regulations while plugging the picture.

The tiein with local merchants was called a "Devil Hunt" and took the form of a lucky number contest. Numbered heralds were distributed widely, the heralds also carrying the names of cooperating merchants. Patrons were instructed to visit the stores listed and look for the same number in windows, on counters, etc., of the stores. Those who were successful received prizes. Heralds were passed out around town by a boy dressed in devil's costume.

In the theatre, Sparr had electrical shadow box with cutout letters extending length of screen and lighted during breaks, trailer showings, etc. Tiein windows were secured, free rides to the theatre promoted from auto dealers and local garage promoted to haul bannered wrecked car about town.

CHATHAM MANAGES NEW GRIFFITH HOUSE

Newly opened Varsity Theatre built by the Griffiths Circuit in Norman, Okla., was inaugurated with smart twelve-page souvenir program by Lew Chatham who will handle the new spot in addition to supervision of the Sooner and University Theatres of the same circuit.

Program cover shows front of theatre with inside pages carrying policy, equipment and operating stories together with photos of L. C. and H. J. Griffith, C. B. Ackers, Chatham and others of the personnel. Lew promoted a number of outside ads which helped to underwrite the cost.

Young's "Lost Horizon" Campaign Secures Strong Publicity Support

Favorable and extensive publicity including an editorial on the picture marked the cooperation secured by Leo Young for his date on "Lost Horizon" at the Strand, Portland, Maine. In addition to the usual art, stories, reviews, etc. Young was able to plant photos showing the Shangri-La exhibit in local windows. He also projected the date into a weekly strip which awarded guest tickets to local readers whose pictures were carried. Leo arranged so that photos also carried some pertinent balloon copy on the picture. Also listed was a candid camera strip showing Frank Capra in action and a full page magazine story which carried the theatre credits.

In addition to the newspaper tieins Young secured a number of co-op ads and also managed to inject a refreshing slant in his classified tiein. Offering theatre tickets for return of lost articles, newspaper not only ran box tying the theatre and date, but also included the title and theatre in every individual lost and found ad.

Electrically-operated mimeograph machine in operation in lobby was reported by Young to have done a good job of attracting attention. Local office supply company supplied machine and operator in advance, operator making up different bulletins from time to time which were distributed at the theatre and about town. Stunt was thought unusual enough for newspapers to run cut showing it in action.

Floyd Wesp First In Warner Drive

The 11-week summer drive for theatre receipts and net profits among Warner Theatres in Jimmy Coston's zone, including all houses in Chicago, Wisconsin and Northern Indiana, closed with Floyd Wesp, manager of the Rialto in Racine, Wis., copping first prize of $150. Wesp is new in that zone, having formerly managed the Warner and Stanley in Atlantic City, N. J.

Second prize money of $100 was annexed by H. Thornton of the Metropolitan, Chicago, with third place also going to a Chicago manager, Waldon Ryan of the Hamilton. His reward was $75.

Other winners included Elmer Hoge, Mirth, Milwaukee; Steve Fitzgerald, Cosmo, Chicago; Marlow Connor, Globe, Chicago; Richard Barry, Capitol, Chicago; Bud Erickson, Ogden, Chicago, and Harvey Kny, Rex, Sheboygan, Wis.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Harris Stages Parade

Harry B. Harris, Exchange Kinema, Lincoln, England, entertained the Mayor, City Sheriff and other prominent citizens on opening day of "O.H.M.S." (released here as "You're in the Army Now"). Detachments of officers and men from nearby regiments paraded with their band from drill hall through main streets to theatre where buglers heralded their approach. Tieup was also made with R. A. F., which paraded searchlight lorry throughout the city, decorated with army posters and theatre material reading "See us in," etc., etc. Unit took position outside theatre and as dusk approached picked up planes which had been arranged to fly over.

Gooch Uses Spin Idea For "Make Way" Contest

Spinning wheel contest was one of the stunts used by Francis Gooch, Columbia Theatre, Bath, Maine, for "Make Way for Tomorrow." Wheel was planted in lobby, object being to spin the pointer and if it stopped at a photo of Victor Moore, guest tickets were awarded. Another lobby stunt was a 40 by 60 with reviews from New York and Portland papers as well as camera shots of the different players leaving the preview at the coast.

Through tieup with the "Y" messages were planted on all bulletin boards tying in picture title and stressing necessity of preparing oneself physically for "tomorrow." Local grocer also cooperated, devoting entire window to foodstuffs and copy reading "Make way for tomorrow, stock up today, unexpected guests might drop in." For street stunt, Francis dropped 20 pocketbooks containing picture plug with message for finder to drop them again to fool others, and druggist also aided with one-sheet posters advising all to make way for tomorrow and clear all nameless, useless bottles in medicine chests.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Japanese Postoffice Tiein

To launch the showing for "Make Way for Tomorrow" in Japan, the Paramount organization worked on the insurance possibilities as a tiein and secured cooperation on this angle from the post-office department, which controls all life insurance in Japan. Picture was publicized in official insurance magazine, the executive also putting out illustrated pamphlet endorsing the picture. In addition, attraction was given citation by the Minister of Education.

Patrons Vote for 'Usher of the Year'

To identify in the public mind the importance of his house personnel and also to encourage the utmost cooperation in the operation of the theatres, Gene Basle of Kane Theatres in Kane, Pa., recently completed a voting contest among patrons and theatre staff to select "the usher of the year" among the personnel at the Temple Theatre. Winner received engraved silver loving cup and three-day all-expense trip to Cleveland, the trip also being given to the runner-up.

Contest was based 70 per cent on patrons' vote, 20 on theatre staff vote and 10 on written examination of good theatre practice. After Basle arranged all the preliminaries, the rest of the contest was left to the staff with the doorman in charge. So popularly did the idea go over that during the three weeks of the drive it was necessary to reprint three orders of the voting ballots.

The voting was conducted in the usual manner and the examination comprising nine questions was limited to two hours. Entrants were required to outline ushers' manual, locate fire exits and extinguishers, give answers to four hypothetical questions concerning operation, name coming attractions, identify various display terms, etc.

Total cost, reports Gene, was time and postage. Hotel accommodations and bus transportation were both promoted as were special trailers from Filmack. Local paper contacted Central Press in Cleveland for photos of the winner and runner-up in uniforms at the Exposition, which were used locally.

Papers, Magazines Cooperate To Plug "Atlantic Flight"

Activities in favor of Monogram's "Atlantic Flight" have been completed recently, top newspaper tiein with New York Daily Mirror winning strong campaign in advance special showing for local Junior Birdmen at Loew's Ziegfeld. Party was first of the series of similar screenings to be held for Junior Birdmen organizations in the 16 cities where Hearst newspapers are published.

Magazine tiein announced by Lou Lifton, Monogram ad head, has been made with Young America to sponsor four-week Atlantic Flight Essay contest. Publication plugged tiein with display ads in conjunction with contest, readers invited to submit essays of 100 words on contributions of Dick Merrill to commercial aviation through his flight to Europe.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Novelty Gag

To publicize "Mr. Dodd Takes the Air," Leo Shuppert, Paramount, Cushing, Okla., distributed small paper bags from which was showing bright yellow piece of paper with bold letters "it's in the bag." On extracting sheet which measured approximately three inches in width by 23 inches in length, cut of stars, cast, playdates, etc., were also included.

LOEW NEW ENGLAND DIVISION ADS

Represented previously in the Round Table individual adman series, Erle Wright, advertising director, Loew's New England theatres, reports another group of displays, of various types and sizes, used in the division.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures announced by the home offices of the distributing companies.

When a production is reviewed in Hollywood, the running time is as officially given by the West Coast studio of the company at the time of the review, and this fact is denoted by an asterisk(*) immediately preceding the number. As soon as the home office has established the running time for national release, any change from the studio figure is made and the asterisk is removed.

Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions may cause variations from the announced and published figures; repairs to the film may be another reason.

J C JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Wayne, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We came over here expecting to call on our old friend Elmer Gaily and were told that he had gone to attend the funeral of one of his sisters. We were sorry to learn of this and we know that he will have the sympathy of the exhibitors as well as the HERALD staff.

P. L. March owns and operates Wayne's two theatres, also two at La Mars, two at Haywarden, Iowa, and two at Vermillion, South Dakota. Mr. March attributes much of his success to his constant reading of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. He regards it a necessity to the successful operation of a theatre. That's why he has been a long-time reader of it.

Mr. I. R. Adams of the Rialto theatre at Nelson, Nebraska, was surprised when we called. He said we hadn't called on him for six or seven years and he was about to get sore about it, but he is all right now. We had a very pleasant visit with him. He didn't show any violence when we called, and seemed to be pretty well satisfied when we renewed his subscription to the HERALD for him. It is funny how a subscription to the HERALD does remove the desire to shoot a Vagabond Colyumnist.

Last week we said something about Hastings, but we forgot to mention that Hastings is where Bill Hay, who has been the radio announcer for Amos 'n' Andy for a number of years, got his start in broadcasting, and look where Bill is now. Then Jack Pershing used to play marbles with the boys in Lincoln, and now Jack wears several stripes on his coat. U. S. Grant used to operate a tannery in Galena, Illinois, if our history is correct, and Abe Lincoln used to split rails to build a corral for the Holsteins before they called him to Washington. We saw the home in Marietta, Ohio, where his mother used to make "Hell and Mariar" Dawes wash his neck and ears before he went to school. As we remember our early reading of the textbooks back in the Wade school house in Indiana, one of them had something like this, "Great oaks from little acorns grow," and this causes us to wonder sometimes if we might not some day sprout and grow into a basswood sapling.

But speaking of oaks reminds us that we drove through a town called Oak the other day, and if they have more than a hundred and fifty people a lot of 'em must have been down to the creek fishing. Oak had the distinction at one time of being the smallest town in the world to have a broadcasting station, and we guess it was, but it has been moved to St. Joseph, Missouri, and now the people of Oak have to depend upon the papers for information about gasoline, face powder, soap and tires. Oak has this to be thankful for, however: she don't have to listen to any jazz music. When we move from here we want to go to Oak.

Bob Livingston still operates the Capitol theatre in Lincoln. When we first knew Bob he had his office on a bicycle wrack out in front of his theatre. Bob says he had his office out there so long that he became familiar enough with the Lincoln dogs to call them by their first name. We told Bob that there was a crying need on the government's "shelterbelt" for every able bodied dog in town. When we stood out in front of Bob's theatre we could see the dome on the capitol building and a feeling of pride came over us when we recalled that there was a fifteen-million-dollar structure on which the state didn't owe a nickel, not even a cent. And we recalled also that the state isn't paying interest on long term bonds and she is not issuing refunding bonds because she has no bonds to be refunded. We may be called "Bugeaters," but if you have a bill against the state, present it and get your money. Avis Rutherford has been secretary to Bob for several years. We called her "Miss Rutherford," but she corrected us and said that she had a husband and a couple of lovely children. Doggone the doggone luck, anyhow.

Mr. Frasier was remodeling the Joyo theatre in Havelock when we called. He now has both theatres in Havelock and is the official purveyor of amusements for that entire community. Lincoln might be a better town if Havelock wasn't quite so close to her, and Havelock might have been a better town if the Burlington railroad hadn't moved part of its shop force away, but anyhow Havelock folk don't have to go away to see a good show.

George Monroe has the competition of seven theatres in Lincoln. This would make it pretty tough on anybody, but George is pretty tough himself, as the other theatres have learned. We had a nice visit with him, but not nearly as long as we would have liked.

Whenever we see a girl with red barn paint on her lips, cheeks and fingernails, it is pretty conclusive evidence that her mother washes the dinner dishes and does the other housework while she gets a chew of gum and tunes in a jazz orchestra and lights a cigaret. Our grandmothers used to knit stockings and mittens for the children and make sauerkraut and sassage for the old folk, but then, you know, they were "old fogies."

We just received a nice, long letter from our old friend Joe Hewitt of Robinson, Illinois. The sorry part of it was that he had been sick for a year and came near having to pass out of the show business. His hope was that he could continue for three more years and leave a record of 35 years in the business. Good old Joe! We hope he does, for he's the prince of good fellows.

When any of us common herd make an income over our living expenses we are required to pay an income tax, but the parasites holding down desks in Washington for Uncle Sam are not required to pay a tax. If old lady "Justice" ever gets her dander up and goes on the warpath with a rolling pin, she's just going to knockhel out of everything. You just see'f she don't.

We just received a check from U. A. Christensen of the Urbana theatre at Lost Nation and a request that we send him the HERALD, and another one from Allan Banks of the Remsen theatre at Remsen, Iowa. Thanks, boys, you betcha we'll have this done right away.
